START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER Andover, MA 01810

August 1994

Camera Operator: John Sullivan

MASTER

NEGATIVE NUMBER: BSO-56-064

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholar-ship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 64

Volumes 103-104

BSO, Pops, Tanglewood

1960-1961

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 103

BSO
Pops

1960 - 1961

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

NATIONAL Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
56-032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
56-033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
56-034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
56-036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
56-041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
56-042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

Boston Symphony Orchestra

1960-1961

OCTOBER	PAGE
Pre-season	1
Open Rehearsals	6
Boston I	7
Boston II	15
Wellesley Concert	20
Boston III	21
Midwestern Tour	26
Rochester
Syracuse
Corning
Columbus
Detroit
Ann Arbor

NOVEMBER
Pension Fund Concert - Richter-	34
Boston IV	39
Boston V	43
Paderewski Centennial Medallion Presentation	49
Boston VI	51
Transatlantic Broadcast	52
Providence	59
Boston VII	60
New York I - 75th Anniversary Concert	64
New Haven
Washington
Brooklyn

Boston XVII	156
Tuesday VI ---- Joseph Silverstein --	156
Boston XVIII	162

DECEMBER

Boston VIII 80
LORIN MAAZEL

Boston IX 88
LORIN MAAZEL

Boston X 96

Boston XI 102

JANUARY

New York II 106
Rye
Brooklyn

Boston XII 116

Inauguration Concert Invitation 121

Boston XIII 122

Tuesday V ---- Roger Shermont -- 128

Boston XIV 130

FEBRUARY

Boston XV 134
ERIC LEINSDORF

Boston XVI 138
ERIC LEINSDORF

New York III ---- Leinsdorf -- 144
Storrs
New London
Washington
Brooklyn

Providence ---- Leinsdorf -- 152

Boston XVII 156

Tuesday VI ---- Joseph Silverstein -- 156

Boston XVIII 162

MARCH

New York IV 168
Northampton
New Haven
Philadelphia
Brooklyn

Boston XIX 178
THOMAS SCHIPPERS

Boston XX 180

APRIL

Boston XXI --- Dr. Davidson Memorial --- 186

New York V 194
Hartford
Baltimore
Brooklyn

Boston XXII 206
RICHARD BURGIN

Mr. Cabot's Dinner for Orchestra and Trustees 209

Boston XXIII 210

Tuesday IX ---- Noah Bielski ---- 214

Munch Retirement --- Leinsdorf Announcement --- 222

New Monday Series 231

Organ Recitals 244

Recordings 256

Y outh Concerts 262

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

MASSACHUSETTS

BOSTON

By Cyrus Durgin

Boston Symphony, 251 Huntington Ave. Music director: Charles Munch. Associate conductor: Richard Burgin. Manager: Thomas D. Perry Jr. Symphony Hall, 2,613. Twenty-four pairs of subscription concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings; six subscription concerts on Sunday afternoons; nine subscription concerts on Tuesday evenings; six subscription concerts at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Tuesday evenings. one concert at Kresge Auditorium; one week tour of cities in Midwest; concerts in Providence, R. I.; five tours of one week each in New York and other cities. Series of nine open rehearsals. Symphony Hall, Wed. and Thurs. evenings. Pension fund concert, Sviatoslav Richter, soloist, Symphony Hall, Nov. 1.

Boston Pops Orchestra, 251 Huntington Ave. Conductor: Arthur Fiedler. Assistant conductor: Harry Ellis Dickson. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Symphony Hall 2,613. Concerts on weekday evenings and some Sunday afternoons and evenings, in May and June. Another orchestra, called the Boston Pops Touring Orchestra, gives concerts in the winter, in various cities under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Esplanade Concerts. Auspices: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Conductors: Arthur Fiedler, Harry Ellis Dickson, and guests. Manager: Thomas D. Perry, Jr. Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade. Evening concerts (and three on Wednesday mornings for children) for three weeks in July and August.

Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Conductors: Charles Munch and guests. Six weekend series of concerts by chamber orchestra and the full Boston Symphony, in July and August. The Festival also includes student events of the Berkshire Music Center, and concerts sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation, for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

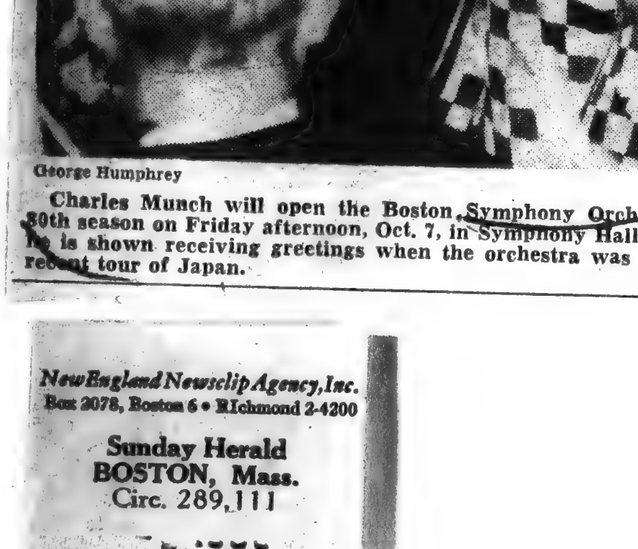
NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
SEP 30 1960

2

George Humphrey

Charles Munch will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, in Symphony Hall. Here he is shown receiving greetings when the orchestra was on its recent tour of Japan.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 2 1960



CHARLES MUNCH, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses with Roger Voisin, the orchestra's principal trumpet, plans for the orchestra's 80's season, which opens Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 1 1960

Boston Symphony Readies Its 80th Se

Munch Announces Roster of Guests

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 80th season at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, at 2:15. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Dr. Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time, and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky, and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

★ ★ ★

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

★ ★ ★

For the opening concerts (Friday-Saturday, Oct. 7-8) Dr. Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc. The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will complete the program.

This program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 11 (8:30), as the first of the orchestra's nine Tuesday evening concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
OCT 2 1960

Boston Symphony to Open Season Friday

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Oct. 1 — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall next Friday at 2:15 p. m. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Doctor Munch, who will return from a European holiday to his Milton residence this Monday to prepare the orchestra for its extensive season, has authorized announcement of the several series to be presented, the tour schedule, and the guest artists to be heard.

The orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: Twenty four Friday matinee programs (Oct. 7-April 28) will be repeated Saturday evenings (Oct. 8-April 29) plus nine Tuesday evening concerts (Oct. 11-April 25) and six Sunday afternoon programs (Nov. 13-April 16). Ten orchestral rehearsals (Oct. 20-April 27) will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the orchestra's pension institution. A gala pension fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater (Oct. 18-April 18), its 78th consecutive season in Providence, (Nov. 22-March 28), and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

The 15 concerts in New York will be given in three series of five each: Wednesday evenings (Nov. 30-April 5) and Saturday afternoons (Dec. 3-April 8) at Carnegie Hall, Manhattan, and five Friday evenings at the Brooklyn Academy of Music (Dec. 2-April 7).

Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington during the 1960-61 season and one concert will be given in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor, Mich., Baltimore, Md., Columbus, Ohio, Corning, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., Hartford, Conn., New London, Conn., Northampton, Philadelphia, Pa., Rochester, N. Y., Rye, N. Y., Storrs, Conn., Syracuse, N. Y., Wellesley and Worcester.

Charles Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

For the opening concerts next Friday and Saturday, Dr. Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the "Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra" by Poulenc. The "Ballet in Three Deals," "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7" will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday and Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Oct. 11 at 8:30 p. m. as the first of the orchestra's nine Tuesday evening concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 2 1960

Munch Begins Symphony 80th Season on Friday

CHARLES MUNCH will begin the 80th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon. This picture of him by Constantine Manos is one which will appear in Manos' book "Portrait of a Symphony," to be published next month.

Charles Munch will begin the 80th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2:15 in Symphony Hall. His opening program will consist of Poulenc's Concerto in one movement for Organ, Strings, and Timpani, with Berj Zamkochian as soloist; Stravinsky's "Card Game," and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven.

Notable events of the season will include appearances as guest conductors of Lorin Maazel, young American who once studied at the Berkshire Music Center; Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Assn., and Thomas Schippers. Maazel and Leinsdorf will be appearing for the first time with this orchestra.

Associate conductor Richard Burgin will officiate several times during the season.

Among the new soloists will be pianists Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky, the team of Janine Reading and Henry Piette; violinists Jacob Krachmalnick and Jaime Laredo. Soloists of former seasons, who will return are pianists Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis, violinists Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng.

★ ★ ★

The program of Poulenc, Stravinsky and Beethoven will be given again, of course, Saturday night at 8:30, Oct. 8, and will also constitute the first program of the Symphony Hall series of nine Tuesday evening concerts, Oct. 11.

The usual two series of 24 Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are scheduled, together with six on Sunday afternoons; six at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, five in Providence, R.I., and five weekly tours to New York and other cities. The annual Midwest tour will occur during the week of Oct. 24. There will be a gala pension fund concert in Boston.

The orchestra's schedule of Open Rehearsals has been expanded to 10, and will begin Oct. 20.

Charles Munch will return to his Milton residence tomorrow to enter his 12th year as music director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
SEP 30 1960

2

George Humphrey

Charles Munch will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, in Symphony Hall. Here he is shown receiving greetings when the orchestra was on its recent tour of Japan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 2 1960

CHARLES MUNCH, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses with Roger Voisin, the orchestra's principal trumpet, plans for the orchestra's 80's season, which opens Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 1 1960

Boston Symphony Readies Its 80th Season

Munch Announces Roster of Guests

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 80th season at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, at 2:15. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Dr. Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time, and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky, and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

* * *

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

* * *

For the opening concerts (Friday-Saturday, Oct. 7-8) Dr. Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc. The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will complete the program.

This program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 11 (8:30), as the first of the orchestra's nine Tuesday evening concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
OCT 2 1960

Boston Symphony to Open Season Friday

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Oct. 1 — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall next Friday at 2:15 p. m. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Doctor Munch, who will return from a European holiday to his Milton residence this Monday to prepare the orchestra for its extensive season, has authorized announcement of the several series to be presented, the tour schedule, and the guest artists to be heard.

The orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: Twenty four Friday matinee programs (Oct. 7-April 28) will be repeated Saturday evenings (Oct. 8-April 29) plus nine Tuesday evening concerts (Oct. 11-April 25) and six Sunday afternoon programs (Nov. 13-April 16). Ten orchestral rehearsals (Oct. 20-April 27) will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the orchestra's pension institution. A gala pension fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater (Oct. 13-April 18), its 78th consecutive season in Providence, (Nov. 22-March 28), and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

The 15 concerts in New York will be given in three series of five each: Wednesday evenings (Nov. 30-April 5) and Saturday afternoons (Dec. 3-April 8) at Carnegie Hall, Manhattan, and five Friday evenings at the Brooklyn Academy of Music (Dec. 2-April 7).

Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington during the 1960-61 season and one concert will be given in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor, Mich., Baltimore, Md., Columbus, Ohio, Corning, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., Hartford, Conn., New London, Conn., Northampton, Philadelphia, Pa., Rochester, N. Y., Rye, N. Y., Storrs, Conn., Syracuse, N. Y., Wellesley and Worcester.

Charles Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

For the opening concerts next Friday and Saturday, Dr. Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the "Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra" by Poulenc. The "Ballet in Three Deals," "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7" will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday and Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Oct. 11 at 8:30 p. m. as the first of the orchestra's nine Tuesday evening concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 2 1960

Munch Begins Symphony 80th Season on Friday

Section II THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, OCT. 2, 1960

Symphony Starts 80th Year Friday;

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 6 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY BEGINS 80th SEASON FRIDAY WITH MUNCH

World - Renowned Orchestra Resumes Concert Series At Symphony Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 2:15 p.m. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the Orchestra's Music Director, will conduct.

Doctor Munch, who will return from a European holiday to his Milton (Mass.) residence on October 3 to prepare the Orchestra for its extensive season, has authorized announcement of the several series to be presented, the tour schedule, and the guest artists to be heard.

The Orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: 24 Friday matinee programs (October 7 - April 28) will be repeated on Saturday evenings (October 8 - April 29) plus nine Tuesday evening concerts (October 11 - April 25) and six Sunday afternoon programs (November 13 - April 16. Ten orchestral rehearsals (October 20 - April 27) will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the Orchestra's Pension Institution. A gala Pension Fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the Orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre (October 18 - April 18), its 78th consecutive season in Providence (R.I.) (November 22 - March 28), and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

The 15 concerts in New York will be given in three series of five each: Wednesday evenings (November 30 - April 5) and Saturday afternoons (December 3 - April 8) at Carnegie Hall, Manhattan, and five Friday evenings at the Brooklyn Academy of Music (December 2 - April 7).

Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington during the 1960-61 season and one concert will be given in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor (Mich.), Baltimore (Md.), Columbus (Ohio), Corning (N.Y.), Detroit (Mich.), Hartford (Conn.), New London (Conn.), Northampton (Mass.), Philadelphia (Penna.), Rochester (N.Y.), Rye (N.Y.), Storrs (Conn.), Syracuse (N.Y.), Wellesley (Mass.) and Worcester (Mass.).

Continued on Page Seven

Boston Symphony

Continued from Page One

Charles Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the Orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the Orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the Orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

For the opening concerts (Friday - Saturday, Oct 7 - 8) Doctor Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc. The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes", by Igor Stravinsky and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday - Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, October 11 (8:30), as the first of the Orchestra's nine Tuesday Evening Concerts.

The complete programs:

Fri., Oct 7, 2:15; Sat., Oct. 8, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch conducting: Tuesday, October 11, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch conducting:

Poulenc, Concerto (in one movement) for Organ and String Orchestra, with Timpani (Berj Zamkochian); Stravinsky, "Jeu de Cartes" (Ballet in Three Deals); Beethoven, Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Announces Plans

Charles Munch, who has returned from a European holiday to his Milton residence to prepare the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its extensive season, has authorized announcement of the several series to be presented, the tour schedule, and the guest artists to be heard.

The Orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: 24 Friday matinee programs will be repeated on Saturday evenings. There will be nine Tuesday evening concerts and six Sunday afternoon programs. Ten orchestral rehearsals will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the orchestra's pension fund. A gala pension fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre starting Oct. 18, its 78th consecutive season in Providence starting Nov. 22, and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington and one concert in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor, Mich., Baltimore, Md., Columbus, Ohio, Corning, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., Hartford, Conn., New London, Conn., Northampton, Philadelphia, Penna., Rochester, N. Y., Rye, N. Y., Storrs, Conn., Syracuse, N. Y., Wellesley, and Worcester.

Munch has invited several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers will make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis will return as guest pianists.

Two violinists making their first appearance with the orchestra this season are Jacob Krachmalnick, and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY–SIXTY-ONE

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 7, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 8, at 8:30 o'clock

POULENC . . . . . Concerto (in one movement) for Organ and String Orchestra, with Timpani

STRAVINSKY . . . "Jeu de Cartes" ("Card Game," Ballet in Three Deals)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

SOLOIST
BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
SEP 30 1960

4

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Society Awaits 'Day of Days,' Opening of Friday Symphony

THE DAY OF DAYS for Boston society during the winter season is Friday. That's when the Symphony concerts are held in Symphony Hall. To be sure, there are concerts Saturday and Tuesday nights, too, but the Friday afternoons are both Society with a capital S and Culture with a capital C. As a matter of fact, one never speaks of them as Symphony concerts, but simply, "Symphony."

Friday Symphony is the place to go to see the real Boston, for tickets are treasured and handed down to posterity, along with family portraits and silver. And families have sat in the same seats for generations.

To be a true Symphony patron one must be a "Friend" of the orchestra. This means contributing to the orchestra's annual deficit as well as being a regular subsriber to the concerts. Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who founded Symphony in 1881, made up this deficit himself, but he was finally persuaded to share this privilege with others of Boston's best.

The orchestra will open its 80th season, Friday, Oct. 7, Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as music director, will conduct. The Boston organist, Berj Zamkochian, will be guest artist in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc, and The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Boston's favorite Beethoven's 7th Symphony, will complete the program.

Rain or shine, Boston society will be there, promptly at 2:1[illegible], when the concert begins. As early as 1:30, traffic becomes denser outside Symphony Hall and all the subway cars are filled with passengers heading for Symphony. If it rains, umbrellas and galoshes appear with raincoats of all kinds.

A pleasant day brings out furs and finery. If tickets are forgotten, it's no tragedy. Most of the subcribers have been marching towards the same seats for many years and no usher would dare to stop them. For in spite of world wars and depressions, the Boston legend of Symphony goes on and on.

* * *

Invitations Mailed for Ballet

BRIGHT RED INVITATIONS have been mailed by the Ladies Committee of the Institute of Contemporary Art to the Boston premiere of the Ballet Espanol Ximenez-Vagas, at Symphony Hall, Friday evening, Dec. 2, at 8:30. The colorful announcement match the mood of this exciting young Spanish dance company, starring two of Europe's most fiery dance personalities, Roberto Ximenez and Manolo Vargas, and their group of 14 dancers, Flamenco singers and guitarists. The Ballet Espanol, embarking on its first grand tour of the United States, combines both theater and dance in an unusual program.

Mrs. John L. Gardner and Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding are co-chairmen of this festive evening, which will be the first benefit for the Institute of Contemporary Art since it moved to the new modern gallery on Soldiers Field Road. Mrs. George A. Parson is chairman of the Ladies Committee, and among others helping with the benefit are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mrs. O. Kelley Anderson, Mrs. Richard Bailey, Mrs. T. Berry Brazelton, Mrs. Arthur H. Brooks, Mrs. Charles C. Cunningham, Mrs. Walter Channing, Mrs. Harris Fahneestock, Mrs. Richard Grandin, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Samuel Wakeman, Mrs. Philip Walker and Mrs. David Wilder.

* * *

Benfield Wedding Reception Oct. 7

A BELATED WEDDING RECEPTION will be given at the Concord Country Club, Friday evening, Oct. 7, by Mr. and Mrs. Harding U. Greene of Concord for their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Andrew Benfield. The Benfields were married in June just 48 hours after their engagement was announced and have been in Europe all summer, returning the first of September. The reception will begin at 9 o'clock and there'll be dancing to Ruby Newman's orchestra until midnight.

Mrs. Benfield is the former Anstis Greene. She was graduated from Concord Academy and attended Vassar College and Boston University. She made her debut in the 1957-58 season. Her husband, son of the A. E. Benfields of Carlisle, prepared at Phillips Exeter Academy and the Gunery School for Boston University. Among those giving dinner parties before the reception are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Jansen, Jr., of Dedham and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Kraetzer, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. Seymour Archibald, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Leo W. Mortenson, all of Concord.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562
OCT 13 1960

Around The South Shore With Kay

The opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra season is always an occasion. There wasn't an empty seat on Friday afternoon when I arrived, almost late because of parking difficulties, and they had run out of programs. The great audience rose and applauded Dr Munch when he walked to the podium, and the orchestra responded with a superb performance of the Beethoven 7th We have the finest orchestra in the world in Boston, and there are always "rush" seats at the Friday after noon concerts, not so many tho as there were, when I was a music student, then the entire second balcony was unreserved, and we would sit for hours on the steps, waiting for the doors to open.

* * *

SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES
D. 88,831 S. 110,214
OCT 7 1960

CALLING CARD

A CONGENIAL GROUP seen dining at La Sands Western Hills Saturday evening included Marie and Gen Carmody, Mrs. Paul McBride, Bess Beene, and her sister, Mrs. Joseph Holland of Atlanta, Ga., the inspiration for the party.

□ □ □ □

OVERJOYED AT THE NEWS that their son, David, is coming home for an unexpected 20-day leave from his duties with the U.S. Navy, are Nell and William Hamilton. In spite of the fact that David's letters have been postmarked from such glamorous places as Ville Franche, Nice, and Cannes on the world-renowned playground of the French Riviera, David is no doubt as excited as his parents at exchanging French glamour for the hometown kind.

□ □ □ □

TODAY IN BOSTON will take place the first "Friday Symphony," opening its 80th season, with Charles Munch conducting for the 12th consecutive year. Of it, a Boston newspaper says "the Friday afternoons are both Society with a capital S and Culture with a capital C.—In spite of wars and depressions, the Boston legend of Symphony goes on and on." Perhaps the Shreveport Symphony Society, which has trebled its general membership in this, its 13th year, is starting a similar legend in the south. The Shreveport Symphony season opens Oct. 18-19 with Jaime Laredo, the young Bolivian violinist who recently won the coveted Queen Elizabeth of Belgium Prize competition, and again this year, two operas, "Aida" and "Tosca" will be staged, cast and directed by members of the Symphony's own Repertory company. John Shenaut is musical director and R. J. Thoman, president.

□ □ □ □

FALL VACATIONISTS are Altie and Bill Russell, who flew Saturday to New York and were in London in the morning. They will have three glorious weeks in the British Isles and some play-going in New York before flying home to Smackover, Ark. In the meantime, grandmother, Altie Irwin, is going over to Smackover to keep an eagle eye on the children.

□ □ □ □

HOST AT A NOVEL PARTY Tuesday at LSU was Epsilon of Kappa Delta, the oldest sorority on the campus. Its honoree was Delta Kappa chapter of Zeta Alpha, the youngest sorority on the campus, just celebrating its first anniversary. The honor guests were given name tags in the form of baby rattlers and games were played in the Nelson Memorial Center, gaily decorated with streamers in the Zeta colors of turquoise and white and balloons of all shapes and sizes. Afterwards, the Zetas were presented a silver ashtray for their room.

KITTANNING, PA.
LEADER-TIMES
D. 10,802
OCT 20 1960

Couple's Son-in-law In Boston Symphony

Mr. and Mrs. James McClelland of North McKean St., Kittanning, received word yesterday that their son-in-law, Joseph Pietropaolo of Boston, auditioned for the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was selected to play with the orchestra.

Mr. Pietropaolo and his wife, the former Mary Ann McClelland, were in Rome, Italy, last year, where Mr. Pietropaolo studied music under a Fulbright scholarship.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 10 1960

New Symphony Players

The 80th season of the Boston Symphony finds two new members in the ensemble. They are Raymond Sird and Julius Schulman, violinists.

Previously, Mr. Schulman had been concertmaster of the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony, and Mr. Sird its assistant concertmaster. Service with the National Symphony in Washington, D.C., and the Cleveland Orchestra preceded Mr. Sird's term in New Orleans.

The most recent post of Mr. Schulman has been that of concertmaster of the Little Orchestra of New York. Both musicians were trained in Philadelphia — Mr. Sird at the New School of Music, as a pupil of Jascha Brodsky, and Mr. Schulman at the Curtis Institute, as a pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. The men fill the vacancies left by retiring veteran members Melvin Bryant and Saverio Messina.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
OCT 23 1960

Seats for Boston Concerts Were Once Auctioned Off

BOSTON AP) — As the Boston Symphony Orchestra threw open its fifty-rehearsal of the current season to the public the other night, old timers recalled that once, long ago, a seat for a symphony rehearsal brought $380.

For a time early in the history of the famous orchestra which this year is observing its 80th anniversary, some seats were auctioned off. In those days, what have become the Friday afternoon concerts, were known as rehearsals for the regular Saturday night concerts. And seat purchasers knew that the director might halt the orchestra in the middle of a number. Some seats sold for as little as 25 cents.

Nevertheless, before the auctioning was halted, prized seats at times brought as much as $100 and $150 each and once a favored end seat went for $380. And for one Saturday evening concert, a pair of seats sold for $500 each.

A limited number of second-balcony tickets are still available Friday afternoon for rush-line purchase at 60 cents, thus maintaining a venerable tradition.

Open rehearsals now are conducted on certain Thursday nights because seats for regular Friday and Saturday concerts, sold by subscriptions, are unavailable to students and other music lovers. Under pressures from students, the rehearsals were opened in 1959 by director Charles Munch. Those attending hear a talk about the music to be played and the concert rehearsal, for $2.

Worcester Sunday Telegr

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
SEP 30 1960

A

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Society Awaits 'Day of Days,' Opening of Friday Symphony

THE DAY OF DAYS for Boston society during the winter season is Friday. That's when the Symphony concerts are held in Symphony Hall. To be sure, there are concerts Saturday and Tuesday nights, too, but the Friday afternoons are both Society with a capital S and Culture with a capital C. As a matter of fact, one never speaks of them as Symphony concerts, but simply, "Symphony."

Friday Symphony is the place to go to see the real Boston, for tickets are treasured and handed down to posterity, along with family portraits and silver. And families have sat in the same seats for generations.

To be a true Symphony patron one must be a "Friend" of the orchestra. This means contributing to the orchestra's annual deficit as well as being a regular subsriber to the concerts. Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who founded Symphony in 1881, made up this deficit himself, but he was finally persuaded to share this privilege with others of Boston's best.

The orchestra will open its 80th season, Friday, Oct. 7, Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as music director, will conduct. The Boston organist, Berj Zamkochian, will be guest artist in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc, and The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Boston's favorite Beethoven's 7th Symphony, will complete the program.

Rain or shine, Boston society will be there, promptly at 2:11, when the concert begins. As early as 1:30, traffic becomes denser outside Symphony Hall and all the subway cars are filled with passengers heading for Symphony. If it rains, umbrellas and galoshes appear with raincoats of all kinds.

A pleasant day brings out furs and finery. If tickets are forgotten, it's no tragedy. Most of the subcribers have been marching towards the same seats for many years and no usher would dare to stop them. For in spite of world wars and depressions, the Boston legend of Symphony goes on and on.

* * *

Invitations Mailed for Ballet

BRIGHT RED INVITATIONS have been mailed by the Ladies Committee of the Institute of Contemporary Art to the Boston premiere of the Ballet Espanol Ximenez-Vagas, at Symphony Hall, Friday evening, Dec. 2, at 8:30. The colorful announcement match the mood of this exciting young Spanish dance company, starring two of Europe's most fiery dance personalities, Roberto Ximenez and Manolo Vargas, and their group of 14 dancers, Flamenco singers and guitarists. The Ballet Espanol, embarking on its first grand tour of the United States, combines both theater and dance in an unusual program.

Mrs. John L. Gardner and Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding are co-chairmen of this festive evening, which will be the first benefit for the Institute of Contemporary Art since it moved to the new modern gallery on Soldiers Field Road. Mrs. George A. Parson is chairman of the Ladies Committee, and among others helping with the benefit are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mrs. O. Kelley Anderson, Mrs. Richard Bailey, Mrs. T. Berry Brazelton, Mrs. Arthur H. Brooks, Mrs. Charles C. Cunningham, Mrs. Walter Channing, Mrs. Harris Fahneestock, Mrs. Richard Grandin, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Samuel Wakeman, Mrs. Philip Walker and Mrs. David Wilder.

* * *

Benfield Wedding Reception Oct. 7

A BELATED WEDDING RECEPTION will be given at the Concord Country Club, Friday evening, Oct. 7, by Mr. and Mrs. Harding U. Greene of Concord for their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Andrew Benfield. The Benfields were married in June just 48 hours after their engagement was announced and have been in Europe all summer, returning the first of September. The reception will begin at 9 o'clock and there'll be dancing to Ruby Newman's orchestra until midnight.

Mrs. Benfield is the former Anstis Greene. She was graduated from Concord Academy and attended Vassar College and Boston University. She made her debut in the 1957-58 season. Her husband, son of the A. E. Benfields of Carlisle, prepared at Phillips Exeter Academy and the Gunery School for Boston

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
OCT 23 1960

Seats for Boston Concerts Were Once Auctioned Off

BOSTON AP) — As the Boston Symphony Orchestra threw open its fifty-rehearsal of the current season to the public the other night, old timers recalled that once, long ago, a seat for a symphony rehearsal brought $380.

For a time early in the history of the famous orchestra which this year is observing its 80th anniversary, some seats were auctioned off. In those days, what have become the Friday afternoon concerts, were known as rehearsals for the regular Saturday night concerts. And seat purchasers knew that the director might halt the orchestra in the middle of a number. Some seats sold for as little as 25 cents.

Nevertheless, before the auctioning was halted, prized seats at times brought as much as $100 and $150 each and once a favored end seat went for $380. And for one Saturday evening concert, a pair of seats sold for $560 each.

A limited number of second-balcony tickets are still available Friday afternoon for rush-line purchase at 60 cents, thus maintaining a venerable tradition.

Open rehearsals now are conducted on certain Thursday nights because seats for regular Friday and Saturday concerts, sold by subscriptions, are unavailable to students and other music lovers. Under pressures from students, the rehearsals were opened in 1950 by director Charles Munch. Those attending hear a talk about the music to be played and the concert rehearsal, for $2.

Worcester Sunday Telegr

Herald 10/8/60

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Fashionable High Hats Missing As Symphony Opens 80th Year

HIGH HATS, so fashionable this fall, were not worn by most of the ladies at the opening of Symphony, yesterday afternoon. One of the regular subscribers confided to us before the concert that she was afraid high hats would block her view of the orchestra.

But—for Symphony, at least—Boston women are clinging to their flower clusters and wispy veils. There were a few exceptions, one of them being Mrs. Jasper Whiting, who wore with her tailored suit a high purple hat banded with rose, and Mrs. Isabella Grandin, whose black and white turban rose high.

October provided its best "bright blue weather" for the opening of Symphony's 80th season and every seat in Symphony Hall was filled. Friends greeted friends after the long summer vacation and caught up on news of the latest grandchildren. Many mothers and daughters attended together. With Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer was her daughter, Mrs. Charles G. Mixter, Jr., and Mrs. Alexander Steinert was accompanied by Mrs. Samuel J. Newman.

There were many bright colors in the crowd. Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk wore a royal purple suit trimmed with gray fox. Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard's electric blue tweed matched her feather hat. Mrs. Edward B. Simmons, up from Marion, wore yellow with a tiny hat of yellow mimosa.

Among others at the opening were Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck, Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Mrs. Ronald T. Lyman, Mrs. Augustus W. Soule, Mrs. Harold H. Blanchard, Mrs. David Edwards, Mrs. S. Bruce Black, Mrs. Gilbert King, Mr. and Mrs. E. Raymond Corey, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Judith Winslow, Mrs. Charles Toppan and Catherine Mary Donovan.

* * *

...Flock Little to Lecture in Salem

University. Among those giving dinner parties before the reception are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Jansen, Jr., of Dedham and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Kraetzer, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. Seymour Archibald, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Leo W. Mortenson, all of Concord.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562
OCT 13 1960

Around The South Shore With Kay

The opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra season is always an occasion. There wasn't an empty seat on Friday afternoon when I arrived, almost late because of parking difficulties, and they had run out of programs. The great audience rose and applauded Dr Munch when he walked to the podium, and the orchestra responded with a superb performance of the Beethoven 7th We have the finest orchestra in the world in Boston, and there are always "rush" seats at the Friday afternoon concerts, not so many tho as there were, when I was a music student, then the entire second balcony was unreserved, and we would sit for hours on the steps, waiting for the doors to open.

KITTANNING, PA.
LEADER-TIMES
D. 10,802
OCT 20 1960

Couple's Son-in-law In Boston Symphony

Mr. and Mrs. James McClelland of North McKean St., Kittanning, received word yesterday that their son-in-law, Joseph Pietropaolo of Boston, auditioned for the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was selected to play with the orchestra.

Mr. Pietropaolo and his wife, the former Mary Ann McClelland, were in Rome, Italy, last year, where Mr. Pietropaolo studied music under a Fulbright scholarship.

SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES
D. 88,831 S. 110,214
OCT 7 1960

CALLING CARD

A CONGENIAL GROUP seen dining at La Sands Western Hills Saturday evening included Marie and Gen Carmody, Mrs. Paul McBride, Bess Beene, and her sister, Mrs. Joseph Holland of Atlanta, Ga., the inspiration for the party.

□ □ □ □

OVERJOYED AT THE NEWS that their son, David, is coming home for an unexpected 20-day leave from his duties with the U.S. Navy, are Nell and William Hamilton. In spite of the fact that David's letters have been postmarked from such glamorous places as Ville Franche, Nice, and Cannes on the world-renowned playground of the French Riviera, David is no doubt as excited as his parents at exchanging French glamour for the hometown kind.

□ □ □ □

TODAY IN BOSTON will take place the first "Friday Symphony," opening its 80th season, with Charles Munch conducting for the 12th consecutive year. Of it, a Boston newspaper says "the Friday afternoons are both Society with a capital S and Culture with a capital C.—In spite of wars and depressions, the Boston legend of Symphony goes on and on." Perhaps the Shreveport Symphony Society, which has trebled its general membership in this, its 13th year, is starting a similar legend in the south. The Shreveport Symphony season opens Oct. 18-19 with Jaime Laredo, the young Bolivian violinist who recently won the coveted Queen Elizabeth of Belgium Prize competition, and again this year, two operas, "Aida" and "Tosca" will be staged, cast and directed by members of the Symphony's own Repertory company. John Shenaut is musical director and R. J. Thoman, president.

□ □ □ □

FALL VACATIONISTS are Altie and Bill Russell, who flew Saturday to New York and were in London in the morning. They will have three glorious weeks in the British Isles and some play-going in New York before flying home to Smackover, Ark. In the meantime, grandmother, Altie Irwin, is going over to Smackover to keep an eagle eye on the children.

□ □ □ □

HOST AT A NOVEL PARTY Tuesday at LSU was Epsilon of Kappa Delta, the oldest sorority on the campus. Its honoree was Delta Kappa chapter of Zeta Alpha, the youngest sorority on the campus, just celebrating its first anniversary. The honor guests were given name tags in the form of baby rattlers and games were played in the Nelson Memorial Center, gaily decorated with streamers in the Zeta colors of turquoise and white and balloons of all shapes and sizes. Afterwards, the Zetas were presented a silver ashtray for their room.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 10 1960

New Symphony Players

The 80th season of the Boston Symphony finds two new members in the ensemble. They are Raymond Sird and Julius Schulman, violinists.

Previously, Mr. Schulman had been concertmaster of the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony, and Mr. Sird its assistant concertmaster. Service with the National Symphony in Washington, D.C., and the Cleveland Orchestra preceded Mr. Sird's term in New Orleans.

The most recent post of Mr. Schulman has been that of concertmaster of the Little Orchestra of New York. Both musicians were trained in Philadelphia — Mr. Sird at the New School of Music, as a pupil of Jascha Brodsky, and Mr. Schulman at the Curtis Institute, as a pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. The men fill the vacancies left by retiring veteran members Melvin Bryant and Saverio Messina.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1960

Boston Symphony

Charles Munch opened the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season at Symphony Hall, Boston, Oct. 7. Munch, beginning his twelfth season as the orchestra's Music Director, has a number of interesting works on the roster. Scheduled are world premieres of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony, an untitled orchestra work by Samuel Barber, and "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, in which Adele Addison will participate. Florent Schmitt's Symphony, which had its world premiere at Strasbourg, June 15, 1958, Charles Munch conducting, will receive its first American performance by the Boston Symphony this season. Another contemporary work to be performed is William Walton's Second Symphony. Walton's, "Belshazzar's Feast," last performed by the Orchestra in 1933, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. Other choral works scheduled for the coming season include Faure's Requiem, with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (complete) and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

In addition to Associate Conductor, Richard Burgin, guest conductors will include the young American Lorin Maazel, and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association, both of whom will be appearing with the Boston Symphony for the first time, and Thomas Schippers who will make a return visit. Sviatoslav Richter, eminent Soviet pianist, will make his first Boston appearance at a Pension Fund Concert. Other piano soloists who will make their first appearances with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Two violinists will make their first appearances with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

This season, the Boston Symphony will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge, its 78th consecutive season in Providence, and its 75th consecutive season in New York (reports on this last in future issues).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
OCT 16 1960

Premieres Are Scheduled By Symphony Orchestra

Charles Munch Announces Boston Program Including Adele Addison in 'Gloria'

BOSTON—Charles Munch, beginning his 12th season as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, has announced two world premieres, two American premieres, and several choral works to be performed during the season at Symphony Hall, Boston.

World Premieres

The world premieres will be "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, in which soprano Adele Addison will participate, and an untitled orchestral work by Samuel Barker.

Scheduled for first performance in this country is the Second Symphony by William Walton, introduced in London last summer, and the symphony by Florent Schmitt which had its world premiere, under the direction of Mr. Munch, at Strasbourg in 1958.

William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast," last performed by the orchestra in 1933, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. Other choral works scheduled for the 80th season include Faure's Requiem, to be performed in Holy Week with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (complete) and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

Several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, have been invited to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jack Krachmalnick and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition. Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will also be heard.

The orchestra's winter season will include four Boston series: 24 Friday matinees, 24 Saturday evenings concerts, nine concerts on Tuesday evenings and six Sunday matinees. Ten of the orchestra's Boston rehearsals will be opened to the public, proceeds to benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund, to accommodate those unable to attend the regular concerts, all of which have been sold out by season subscription. The orchestra will also present a Pension Fund Concert in which Sviatslov Richter will make his first Boston appearance, Nov. 1.

The orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater, its 78th consecutive season in Providence and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City. Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington one concert will be given in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor (Mich.), Baltimore (Md.), Columbus (Ohio), Corning (N. Y.), Detroit (Mich.), Hartford, New London (Conn.), Northampton, Philadelphia, Rochester (N. Y.), Storrs (Conn.), Syracuse (N. Y.), Wellesley and Worcester.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
NOV 1960

Boston Symphony Leads Off Season in the Hub

■ Not the least aspect of the Hub in revolution, are its musical circles, and this season promises as steady a whirl as any we remember. Charles Munch has announced tentative plans for the Boston Symphony season. Guest artists include conductors Lorin Maazel, Erich Leinsdorf, Thomas Schippers, on a return visit as guest conductor. New pianists to Boston will be Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky, and the French duo pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette; Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis will appear as reinvited guests. Among violinists, Symphony Hall listeners will hear Jacob Krachmalnick, Jaime Laredo (the young Bolivian who was winner of the Queen Elizabeth prize), Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng.

Particular excitement centers in the Boston premieres to come: Sir William Walton's Second Symphony, Florent Schmitt's Symphony, Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos, the world premiere of Poulenc's "Gloria," just a little overdue for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, for which it was commissioned. Again we will have Munch's splendid readings of the Fauré "Requiem," Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, and Berlioz's "Romeo," the latter two with the assistance of the New England Conservatory Chorus.

For those listeners who favor ballast on the side of modern music, the first concert with Poulenc's granitic Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, had Berj Zamkochlian as soloist. The music piles a thunderhead of dissonance over deeply hidden pedal tones, which seems to reduce the orchestral sound to color for a sea of sound. The combination, tricky at best, shows a deft ear for balance, and in spite of its decibel content, was handled with warm nuance and strikingly clean delineation.

Next followed a concert suite based on Stravinsky's ballet "Jeu de Cartes" which sounds quite fresh after nearly a quarter of a century. The performance had not reached the stage of polished acuity needed to single out the separate lines of this choreography, but the composer's pungent orchestration gives it zest.

The concert closed with Dr. Munch's Beethoven Seventh; while it was opulent indeed, and majestic, it missed the bumptious unceremony that makes it come alive. Because of this barely perceptible relaxation of drive, the Scherzo became a parade of postures, instead of a dionysiac dance.

For the second program, Munch announced Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B Flat Major, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Jacob Krachmalnik as soloist. On the same concert appeared Piston's "New England Sketches," tintypes, rather, for their pale coloring and inert effect render them little more interesting than when they were heard last year at their premiere in the Worcester Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427

World Premieres

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces two world premieres for its current season, on dates to be announced.

They are "Gloria," by the French composer, Francis Poulenc, in which soprano Adele Addison will participate — and an untitled orchestral work by Samuel Barber. Both compositions were commissioned by the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 8 - 1960

Eightieth Symphony Season Opens

4-60

Munch's Plans Include Major Premières

By Harold Rogers

During the past season or two there has been considerable discussion, and no little criticism, of what has been termed the unimaginative programing policies prevailing at Symphony Hall. Yet one has only to examine the record of Charles Munch's 11 seasons with the Boston Symphony to see that he has given us a generous helping of new works—too generous for some timid souls.

On the other side of the ledger, Dr. Munch, like most conductors in the world today, has been caught in the trap set by the recording companies. The discmakers are primarily interested in "the basic 50" masterworks that continue to sell; and symphony subscribers, like guinea pigs, are given an oversized dose of them while the orchestra rehearses (yes, even at its concerts) for its recording sessions.

Thus conductor, orchestra, and audience are caught in a pattern that spells comfort for the conservative, tedium for the adventurous, and anguish for the jaded.

♪ ♪ ♪

Well, the Boston Symphony's 80th season opened yesterday afternoon; and since full programs are never announced in advance for the year, we have no way of knowing how the notes will fly. There are two paths a conductor can take—the one that leads to a pleasant round of mediocrity, the other that sends listeners from the hall either angry or delighted, but stimulated. For my part, I hope that Dr. Munch takes the latter, but then critics traditionally choose the unpopular course.

Judging by Dr. Munch's opening program, one might say that he has made a good start, what with Poulenc and Stravinsky in the first half of the program—Poulenc's Organ Concerto, and Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Both works hold up remarkably well as the years go by. Poulenc, of course, held a sober face for this one (one can't, after all, wink too broadly while dealing with a pipe organ and a symphony orchestra). And Berj Zamkochian's work at the console was strong, clean, accurate, and somerly registered. It all came off very well.

♪ ♪ ♪

The Stravinsky, on the other hand, is full of winks—some of them not too sly—when he quotes from Ravel's "La Valse," for instance, or from Rossini's Overture to "The Barber of Seville." It sparkles as it limps its elliptical way, just off-beat enough to surprise and just conventional enough to entertain. The orchestra wandered through it with a slightly wayward air; perhaps it is still too soon for the musicians, or their conductor, to feel the harness of discipline.

Dr. Munch concluded with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; and there are no two ways about it—Beethoven is de rigueur for opening concerts.

Yesterday Dr. Munch disclosed a few of his plans for the season, and it must be admitted that they promise much of interest, even something of excitement. He will conduct the United States première of Sir William Walton's new Second Symphony; what may be the first American performance of Florent Schmitt's Symphony; Martinů's Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reading and Henry Piette, a French team; the world première of Poulenc's "Gloria" (commissioned for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary), with Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica; the Fauré Requiem, with the Harvard-Radcliffe singers; and Ravel's "Daphnis" and Berlioz's "Romeo" with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Richard Burgin will conduct Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast," with the Chorus pro Musica.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 7 1960

Boston Symphony Opens 80th Season

The Boston Symphony opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall today at 2:15 p. m., with Charles Munch beginning his 12th year as the orchestra's music

The orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: 24 Friday matinee programs (tomorrow through Apr. 28) will be repeated on Saturday evenings (tomorrow-Apr. 29), plus nine Tuesday evening concerts (Oct. 11-Apr. 25) and six Sunday afternoon programs (Sun.-Apr. 16).

Ten orchestral rehearsals (Oct. 20-Apr. 27) will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the orchestra's Pension Institution. A gala Pension Fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater (Oct. 18-Apr. 18), its 79th consecutive season in Providence (Nov. 22-Mar. 28) and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
NOV 1960

American conductor Robert Feist is permanently engaged on the staff of the Freilichts-Buehne am Roten Tor in Augsburg, Germany, where he has successfully conducted Italian repertoire works including "Falstaff," "Masked Ball," "Il Tabarro," "Gianni Schicchi," "Rigoletto," and this season will lead "Tosca," "Madama Butterfly," "Don Carlos," "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann" there. . . .

The Boston Symphony this season will give the world premieres of a "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, with Adele Addison as soloist, and another work by Samuel Barber as yet untitled; among guest batonists will be Lorin Maazel, young American conductor; Erich Leinsdorf and Thomas Schippers. . .

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1960

Boston Symphony

Charles Munch opened the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season at Symphony Hall, Boston, Oct. 7. Munch, beginning his twelfth season as the orchestra's Music Director, has a number of interesting works on the roster. Scheduled are world premieres of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony, an untitled orchestra work by Samuel Barber, and "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, in which Adele Addison will participate. Florent Schmitt's Symphony, which had its world premiere at Strasbourg, June 15, 1958, Charles Munch conducting, will receive its first American performance by the Boston Symphony this season. Another contemporary work to be performed is William Walton's Second Symphony. Walton's, "Belshazzar's Feast," last performed by the Orchestra in 1933, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. Other choral works scheduled for the coming season include Faure's Requiem, with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (complete) and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

In addition to Associate Conductor, Richard Burgin, guest conductors will include the young American Lorin Maazel, and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association, both of whom will be appearing with the Boston Symphony for the first time, and Thomas Schippers who will make a return visit. Sviatoslav Richter, eminent Soviet pianist, will make his first Boston appearance at a Pension Fund Concert. Other piano soloists who will make their first appearances with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette. Two violinists will make their first appearances with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition.

This season, the Boston Symphony will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge, its 78th consecutive season in Providence, and its 75th consecutive season in New York (reports on this last in future issues).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
OCT 16 1960

Premieres Are Scheduled By Symphony Orchestra

Charles Munch Announces Boston Program Including Adele Addison in 'Gloria'

BOSTON—Charles Munch, beginning his 12th season as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, has announced two world premieres, two American premieres, and several choral works to be performed during the season at Symphony Hall, Boston.

World Premieres

The world premieres will be "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, in which soprano Adele Addison will participate, and an untitled orchestral work by Samuel Barker.

Scheduled for first performance in this country is the Second Symphony by William Walton, introduced in London last summer, and the symphony by Florent Schmitt which had its world premiere, under the direction of Mr. Munch, at Strasbourg in 1958.

William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast," last performed by the orchestra in 1933, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. Other choral works scheduled for the 80th season include Faure's Requiem, to be performed in Holy Week with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (complete) and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

Several conductors, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, have been invited to be guests during the season. The young American conductor Lorin Maazel, a former conducting pupil at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time and Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association has also been invited to make his first appearance with the orchestra. Thomas Schippers has been invited to make a return visit as guest conductor.

Piano soloists who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra this season include Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky and the duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette; Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis have been invited to return as guest pianists.

Two violinists will make their first appearance with the orchestra this season: Jacob Krachmalnick and Jaime Laredo, who was the 1959 winner of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition; Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng will [illegible]

The orchestra's winter season will [illegible] Boston series: 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evening concerts, nine concerts on Tuesday evenings and six Sunday matinees. Ten of the orchestra's Boston rehearsals will be opened to the public, proceeds to benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund, to accommodate those unable to attend the regular concerts, all of which have been sold out by season subscription. The orchestra will also present a Pension Fund Concert in which Sviatislov Richter will make his first Boston appearance, Nov. 1.

The orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater, its 78th consecutive season in Providence and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City. Two concerts will be given in New Haven and in Washington one concert will be given in each of the following cities: Ann Arbor (Mich.), Baltimore (Md.), Columbus (Ohio), Corning (N. Y.), Detroit (Mich.), Hartford, New London (Conn.), Northampton, Philadelphia, Rochester (N. Y.), Storrs (Conn.), Syracuse (N. Y.), Wellesley and Worcester.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427

World Premieres

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces two world premieres for its current season, on dates to be announced.

They are "Gloria," by the French composer, Francis Poulenc, in which soprano Adele Addison will participate — and an untitled orchestral work by Samuel Barber. Both compositions were commissioned by the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 8 - 1960

Eighteth Symphony Season Opens

Munch's Plans Include Major Premières

By Harold Rogers

During the past season or two there has been considerable discussion, and no little criticism, of what has been termed the unimaginative programing policies prevailing at Symphony Hall. Yet one has only to examine the record of Charles Munch's 11 seasons with the Boston Symphony to see that he has given us a generous helping of new works—too generous for some timid souls.

On the other side of the ledger, Dr. Munch, like most conductors in the world today, has been caught in the trap set by the recording companies. The discmakers are primarily interested in "the basic 50" masterworks that continue to sell; and symphony subscribers, like guinea pigs, are given an oversized dose of them while the orchestra rehearses (yes, even at its concerts) for its recording sessions.

Thus conductor, orchestra, and audience are caught in a pattern that spells comfort for the conservative, tedium for the adventurous, and anguish for the jaded.

♪ ♪ ♪

Well, the Boston Symphony's 80th season opened yesterday afternoon; and since full programs are never announced in advance for the year, we have no way of knowing how the notes will fly. There are two paths a conductor can take—the one that leads to a pleasant round of mediocrity, the other that sends listeners from the hall either angry or delighted, but stimulated. For my part, I hope that Dr. Munch takes the latter, but then critics traditionally choose the unpopular course.

Judging by Dr. Munch's opening program, one might say that he has made a good start, what with Poulenc and Stravinsky in the first half of the program—Poulenc's Organ Concerto, and Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Both works hold up remarkably well as the years go by. Poulenc, of course, held a sober face for this one (one can't, after all, wink too broadly while dealing with a pipe organ and a symphony orchestra). And Berj Zamkochian's work at the console was strong, clean, accurate, and somerly registered. It all came off very well.

♪ ♪ ♪

The Stravinsky, on the other hand, is full of winks—some of them not too sly—when he quotes from Ravel's "La Valse," for instance, or from Rossini's Overture to "The Barber of Seville." It sparkles as it limps its elliptical way, just off-beat enough to surprise and just conventional enough to entertain. The orchestra wandered through it with a slightly wayward air; perhaps it is still too soon for the musicians, or their conductor, to feel the harness of discipline.

Dr. Munch concluded with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; and there are no two ways about it—Beethoven is de rigueur for opening concerts.

Yesterday Dr. Munch disclosed a few of his plans for the season, and it must be admitted that they promise much of interest, even something of excitement. He will conduct the United States première of Sir William Walton's new Second Symphony; what may be the first American performance of Florent Schmitt's Symphony; Martinů's Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reading and Henry Piette, a French team; the world première of Poulenc's "Gloria" (commissioned for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary), with Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica; the Fauré Requiem, with the Harvard-Radcliffe singers; and Ravel's "Daphnis" and Berlioz's "Romeo" with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Richard Burgin will conduct Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast," with the Chorus pro Musica.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 7 1960

Boston Symphony Opens 80th Season

The Boston Symphony opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall today at 2:15 p. m., with Charles Munch beginning his 12th year as the orchestra's music

The orchestra will present four series in Symphony Hall: 24 Friday matinee programs (tomorrow through Apr. 28) will be repeated on Saturday evenings (tomorrow-Apr. 29) plus nine Tuesday evening concerts (Oct. 11-Apr. 25) and six Sunday afternoon programs (Sun.-Apr. 16).

Ten orchestral rehearsals (Oct. 20-Apr. 27) will be opened to the public, the proceeds to benefit the orchestra's Pension Institution. A gala Pension Fund concert is also scheduled.

In addition to the four series in Boston, the orchestra will present its 79th consecutive year of concerts in Cambridge at Harvard University's Sanders Theater (Oct. 18-Apr. 18), its 79th consecutive season in Providence (Nov. 22-Mar. 28) and its 75th consecutive year of concerts in New York City.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 30,700
NOV 1960

Boston Symphony Leads Off Season in the Hub

■ Not the least aspect [illegible] the Hub in revolution, are its [illegible] circles, and this season promises [illegible] dy a whirl as any we remember. [illegible] arles Munch has announced tentative plans for the Boston Symphony season. Guest artists include conductors Lorin Maazel, Erich Leinsdorf, Thomas Schippers, on a return visit as guest conductor. New pianists to Boston will be Monique Haas, Alexander Uninsky, and the French duo pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette; Eugene Istomin and Byron Janis will appear as reinvited guests. Among violinists, Symphony Hall listeners will hear Jacob Krachmalnick, Jaime Laredo (the young Bolivian who was winner of the Queen Elizabeth prize), Leonid Kogan and Henryk Szeryng.

Particular excitement centers in the Boston premieres to come: Sir William Walton's Second Symphony, Florent Schmitt's Symphony, Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos, the world premiere of Poulenc's "Gloria," just a little overdue for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, for which it was commissioned. Again we will have Munch's splendid readings of the Fauré "Requiem," Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, and Berlioz's "Romeo," the latter two with the assistance of the New England Conservatory Chorus.

For those listeners who favor ballast on the side of modern music, the first concert with Poulenc's granitic Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, had Berj Zamkochlian as soloist. The music piles a thunderhead of dissonance over deeply hidden pedal tones, which seem to reduce the orchestral sound to color for a sea of sound. The combination, tricky at best, shows a deft ear for balance, and in spite of its decibel content was handled with warm nuance and strikingly clean delineation.

Next followed a concert suite based on Stravinsky's ballet "Jeu de Cartes" which sounds quite fresh after nearly a quarter of a century. The performance had not reached the stage of polished acuity needed to single out the separate lines of this choreography, but the composer's pungent orchestration gives it zest.

The concert closed with Dr. Munch's Beethoven Seventh; while it was opulent indeed, and majestic, it missed the bumptious unceremony that makes it come alive. Because of this barely perceptible relaxation of drive, the Scherzo became a parade of postures, instead of a dionysiac dance.

For the second program, Munch announced Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B Flat Major, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Jacob Krachmalnik as soloist. On the same concert appeared Piston's "New England Sketches," tintypes, rather, for their pale coloring and inert effect render them little more interesting than when they were heard last year at their premiere in the Worcester Festival.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 30,700
NOV 1960

American conductor Robert Feist is permanently engaged on the staff of the Freilichts-Buehne am Roten Tor in Augsburg, Germany, where he has successfully conducted Italian repertoire works including "Falstaff," "Masked Ball," "Il Tabarro," "Gianni Schicchi," "Rigoletto," and this season will lead "Tosca," "Madama Butterfly," "Don Carlos," "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann" there. . . .

The Boston Symphony this season will give the world premieres of a "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, with Adele Addison as soloist, and another work by Samuel Barber as yet untitled; among guest batonists will be Lorin Maazel, young American conductor; Erich Leinsdorf and Thomas Schippers. . .

6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
SEP 24 1960

Music

Symphony Rehearsals To Be Open to Public

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the public during the orchestra's 1960-61 season. Dr. Charles Munch has increased the number of open rehearsals from seven to 10 for the coming season.

He will conduct a majority of the rehearsals includ the first rehearsal on Thursday, Oct 20. Subsequent open rehearsals will be held on Thursday, Nov. 17; Thursday, Dec. 8; Wednesday, Feb. 23; Thursday, March 2,; Thursday, March 16; Wednesday, March 29; Thursday, April 13; and Thursday, April 27. Programs will start at 7:30 o'clock.

Charles Munch

Dr. Munch inaugurated the popular series in 1951-1952, his second season as the orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the orchestra. The rehearsals also offer the public a medium whereby many more people can see and hear the famed orchestra.

The All Souls Church Women's Alliance will open the season with a tea Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. A voice recital will be offered by Mrs. Louis Vaniotis, soprano, assisted by Wilfred Kershaw, organist of All Souls church.

The opening meeting of the Greater-Lowell Choral society attracted a large turnout. The affair which was more in the form of a night of get-together and a means of welcoming new members, did however, produce plans for a season long list of events that should be most welcome to the concert-loving public of the community.

The talented young piano prodigy Lorin Hollander will apear in the opening concert of the current Community series in Lowell, Sunday, Oct. 9; and the internationally acclaimed Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo on Sunday, April 9. In addition to an equally exciting third attraction not yet announced, and a bonus children's concert will be available at no extra charge to children of all the members.

The Dallas Civic Opera company, one of the early starters each season, and an organization of major standing, will observe its 1960 season from Nov.4, to the 23rd. Two European imports are being airlifted for the season.

"Daughter of the Regiment" and Handel's "Alcina," the latter an American premiere, will share the spotlight with two new productions of "Don Giovanni" and "Madame Butterfly."

General Manager Lawrence Kelly and artistic director, Nicola Rescigno, have announced the roster of artists scheduled to apear with the young company, now in its fourth season. American debuts will be enjoyed by Joan Sutherland, spectacular new diva of European opera; mezzo soprano, Monica Sinclair, Handel specialist of London's Covent Garden and Luigi Alva, new tenor discovery of La Scala and the Edinburgh festival.

Making their first appearances with the Dallas company will be Blanche Thebom, Elizabeth Schwartzkopf, Leyla Gencer, Regina Sarfaty, Joan Marie Moynagh, Eberhard Waechter, John Reardon and Mario Palermo. The latter is well known in Lowell having appeared here as a leading tenor in productions of Verdi's "La Traviata" "Carmen" and "Faust." Returning with the company will be Eugenia Ratti, Gianni Raimondi, Giuselle Taddei and Nicola Zaccaria.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
SEP 23 1960

Open Re... At the Symphony

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be open to the public during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number of open rehearsals from seven to ten.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
SEP 24 1960

Add Open Musicals

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has increased the number of Open Rehearsals from seven to 10 for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Dr. Munch will conduct a majority of rehearsals, including the first rehearsal on Thursday, Oct. 20. Subsequent Open Rehearsals will be held on the following Thursdays at 7:30 p. m.:

Nov. 17, Dec. 8, Feb. 8 and 23, Mar. 2, 16 and 29, and Apr. 13 and 27.

Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p. m.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the popular series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With many of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, Dr. Munch felt many students were unable to "see" the Orchestra during their years of study in Boston.

Stephen Dimmock, Boss.
Monitor 10/1/60

Symphony Rehearsals

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the public during the orchestra's 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number of Open Rehearsals from seven to ten for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Dr. Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first on Oct. 20 (Thurs.). Subsequent rehearsals will be held on Nov. 17 (Thurs.), Dec. 8 (Thurs.), Feb. 8 (Wed.) and 23 (Thurs.), March 2 (Thurs.), 16 (Thurs.) and 29 (Wed.), April 13 (Thurs.) and 27 (Thurs.). Season tickets $15. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Series tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall Box Office. The series sale will continue until Oct. 13.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
SEP 29 1960

Munch Expands Open Rehearsals For New Season

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the pubic during the Orchestra's 1960-61 season Charles Munch has increased the number of Open Rehearsals from seven to ten for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals includng the first rehearsal on October 20. Subsequent Open Rehearsals will be held on November 17, December 8, February 8, and 23, March 2, 16, and 29, April 13, and 27. Season tickets for the ten rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony

BEACON HILL TIMES

Munch Expands

Continued from Page One

Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's Music Director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, Doctor Munch felt many students were unable to "see" the Orchestra during their years of study in Boston. The Open Rehearsals not only provide this opportunity but they also give the public and students an opportunity to observe the Orchestra in final preparation for the week-end concerts.

Series tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall Box Office. The series scale will continue until October 13.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 1 1960

Symphony Rehearsals

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the public during the orchestra's 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number of Open Rehearsals from seven to ten for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Dr. Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first on Oct. 20 (Thurs.). Subsequent rehearsals will be held on Nov. 17 (Thurs.), Dec. 8 (Thurs.), Feb. 8 (Wed.) and 23 (Thurs.), March 2 (Thurs.), 16 (Thurs.) and 29 (Wed.), April 13 (Thurs.) and 27 (Thurs.). Season tickets $15. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Series tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall Box Office. The series sale will continue until Oct. 13.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
D. 30,216
OCT 7 1960

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 185,448 S. 216,567
OCT 30 1960

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
OCT 7 1960

80TH SYMPHONY SEASON

BOSTON, Oct. 6 (UPI).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 80th season tomorrow, the 12th under the baton of Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
SEP 27 1960

Ten Rehearsals To Be Open

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be open to the public during the orchestra's 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number by three in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Dr. Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Oct. 20. Others will be Nov. 17, Dec. 8, Feb. 8 and 23, March 2, 16 and 29, April 13 and 27.

Season tickets for the 10 rehearsals are $15. Seats are unreserved, any seat in Symphony Hall being available to those on hand when the doors open at 6:45. Rehearsals start at 7:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
SEP 25 1960

Ten Open Rehearsals For Symphony Season

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the public during the Orchestra's 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number of Open Rehearsals in response to heavy public demand for season tickets. Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first rehearsal on October 20. Others will be held on November 17, December 8, February 8 and 23, March 2, 16 and 29, April 13 and 27. Season tickets for the ten rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's Music Director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to "see" the Orchestra during their years of study in Boston.

Series tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall Box Office. The series sale will continue until October 13.

Herald 9/25/60

Ten Open Rehearsals For Symphony Season

Ten Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsals will be opened to the public during the Orchestra's 1960-61 season. Charles Munch has increased the number of Open Rehearsals in response to heavy public demand for season tickets. Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first rehearsal on October 20. Others will be held on November 17, December 8, February 8 and 23, March 2, 16 and 29, April 13 and 27. Season tickets for the ten rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's Music Director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to "see" the Orchestra during their years of study in Boston.

Series tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall Box Office. The series sale will continue until October 13.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 223,559 S. 650,165
NOV 27 1960

1960

...the Boston Symphony... are open to the public at $15 for the series . . . Detroit has home-made opera this season, the Detroit Opera theater . . . A popular-priced ($1.50 each) series of booklets titled "Listener's Music Library" is being published this fall by Grosset & Dunlap, covering such things as musical terms, biographies, opera plots, musical anecdotes, jazz.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
OCT 8 - 1960

Munch Conducts Opening Of Symphony 80th Season

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the opening concert of the 80th season. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Poulenc: Concerto for Organ and Strings, With Timpani (Berj Zamjochian, organist); Stravinsky: "Card Game"; Beethoven: Sevent Symphony.

By CYRUS DURGIN

A little beyond 2:15 yesterday afternoon, Charles Munch strode vigorously upon the stage at Symphony Hall, bowed, smiled, ascended the conductor's stand, and began the 80th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At that moment, fo rthose of us who subsist in part upon music, Life began again.

We have a charming tradition in Boston, which is that the audience, following by a split-second the lead of the Orchestra, always rises to greet the conductor at his first appearance of a season. Dr. Munch accepted the tribute but, looking fit, rested and happy, took not a moment longer than necessary to do it graciously. He is not a man who revels in adultation.

He began his own 12th season as music director with an afternoon of music-making of exceptionally good quality even for these virtuosi. There is always a slight magical shock in the first sound of the Boston Symphony after a period when one has not heard it; the magic of intense beauty of sound and the shock of power and majesty.

These qualities, according to the nature of the music, were consistent, yesterday. Indeed, there was a finesse in Dr. Munch's conducting, his care for nuances, delicacy of balance, for speed and the sheer loveliness of sonority, that he has not always shown. If this is an omen, we are embarked upon a notably fine season.

It is customary not to introduce new music at the beginning of a season. The three works which made the program, according were more or less repertory pieces, though the first number, Poulenc's Concerto for Organ and Strings, With Timpani, had not been performed here since 1949. The long interval had served only to freshen the music and quicken one's response to it.

Since Poulenc is exceedingly French and clever, this work is in its way a tour de force of the uses of massed strings, the organ and percussive color of the drums. Some of the solo organ part reminds you of the ways of Bach, other of Poulenc's distant musical ancestor, Cesar Franck.

Some of it is rapt and meditative, other fast, vivacious, highly rhythmic, even jocose. It is all vital, passionate and exhilarating. There are places which caused me to reflect what a wonderful piece this would have been for the organists who used to play for silent films—everything from l'amour to a rousing chase!

Stravinsky's jewelled dro lery, also a work of enormous cleverness and real genius of orchestration, went as well. To be sure, without the danced spectacle, the music alone is a little long for a single joke, but the joke is good.

Mr. Munch in the past has been criticized, and justly, for his furious tempi in Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. All that was changed, yesterday. Each movement went at just the right speed, all was clear and singing. Even the finale, whose increasing frenzy is hard to resist, was not too fast until the last few pages, and no human being could do otherwise with them.

In natural consequence, there was a full-scale ovation for the conductor at concert's end. Just before he left the stage for the last time, as he stood beaming, his hair falling in bangs over his forehead, he touched the cork handle of his baton in the general direction of his heart.

Berj Zamkochian, the organist for the Poulenc Concerto, earlier had received merited applause for his excellent playing.

While much remains the same at these occasions, from year to year, there always are some changes. Two new faces are seen in the second violin section: those of Julius Schulman and Raymond Sird, replacing Messrs. Bryant and Messina, who resigned at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival. One face is missing: violist John Fiasca, who died during the Far East tour. His position has not yet been filled.

Gone are the familiar salmon-pink covers of the program book. Now we have covers of lighter paper stock, done in black, white and gray, but with the familiar design retained. The reason is one of economy in printing costs. To that all Bostonians will murmur Amen.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Haydn's B-flat Symphony, No. 98; Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, in first local performance, and the Cello Concerto of Brahms with Jacob Krachmalnick as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
OCT 8 - 1960

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the first program of the 80th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program will be repeated tonight; and as the opening of the Tuesday evening series, October 11. Berj Zamkochian, organ, was the soloist. The program:

Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra, with Timpani ..... Poulenc
"Jeu de Cartes" (Ballet in Three Deals) ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 ..... Beethoven

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The opening concert of a Symphony season is not usually a strenuous affair. It has the airs and graces of a gathering in which all the guests know each other but are constrained by the very newness of their arrival into small pleasantries and minor flourishes. The opening concert of the Boston Symphony's 80th season yesterday — the 12th of Charles Munch's tenure — followed this bland pattern, but like all such gatherings showed flashes and inklings of lively times ahead.

The intimations lay on this occasion in the playing of the orchestra which, to no one's surprise, exhibited the lustre and rapport of mid-season form. The tone is still dry, crisp and Gallic, definitely that of a French orchestra, but the balance, temper, phrasing, intonation, and the manifold technical qualities of this magnificent instrument, are unimpaired. We say it each year, confounding logic: the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never sounded better.

The 7th Again

The music played yesterday, however, was, in the traditional spirit of opening concerts, reasonably entertaining and innocuous. It consisted of an engaging neobaroque Concerto by Poulenc; a ballet diversion by Stravinsky, and both were pleasant in the literal and pejorative sense of the word. The Beethoven Seventh Symphony cannot be dismissed as inconsiderable, but if missing, oddly, from the repertoire since December, 1957, hardly constitutes the unfamiliar.

Still it was tonic to hear the Seventh again, for like all masterpieces the unsuspected stands ready to be revealed and familiarity can be a bar to perception. The only departure from routine came in the appearance of a soloist for the initial work.

He was Berj Zamkochian whose approach (through a harshly voiced organ) to the Poulenc Concerto was austere, earnest and exactly right. The score itself is a delicate homage to Bach's G minor Fantasy, based on a four note cycle that asserts, weaving through the various voices, a propulsive unity. Despite the spare, linear inspiration of the piece, it does not seem as ascetic as one might anticipate; the pastel texture of the orchestra is fragile, romantic, with the kettledrums adding a muted sonority. The organ role is dignified and expressive. What emerges is a structure shaped in the style of Bach yet contemporary in character. One admires the adroit and fastidious workmanship, though the total effect makes no effort at profound emotion.

Similarly, the Stravinsky Game of Cards does not carry enough weight to conjure up the outline of the ballet to which it is attached. The cleverness, the deftness of the whole idea elicits admiration, and so does the dazzling color of Stravinsky's succinct writing. He has managed to put a round of poker into music. "But they are only cards after all," as Alice might say in Wonderland, and at the close one replaces the counters in their box without regret.

Artistic Risks

After such trifling it was refreshing to feel again the Olympian vigor of Beethoven, the willingness to take artistic risks. Dr. Munch's manner was brisk, intense, and while he hurried the tempti in the final movement causing the master's jocundy to lapse into a touch of hysteria, the style could not be called too exaggerated. I particularly like the taut definition the conductor brought to the allegretto; the reading throughout was idiomatic, firm in line and fervent. Charles Munch gave it strength, but not through titanic climaxes, but by a trim, classical outlook and atmosphere laved in the delicate hues of a Fragonard.

Well, it was pleasant to find Mr. Munch looking so fit as man and artist, and the customary sidelights of the first concert exhibited other glimmers. The programs are now bound in gray, for economy's sake, rather than in orange, which occasioned a few mutterings in my vicinity. The audience provided, save for a few napping exceptions, or dissidents, the usual rising tribute. And two well-minked ladies behind me as I entered, were spiritedly discussing Ted Williams's prospects for the baseball Hall of Fame, even as Mrs. Jack Gardner.

Next weekend Jacob Krachmalnick will make his lebut here in Brahm's Violin Concerto in D; and Dr. Munch will also conduct Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98, and Piston's Three New England Sketches.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 2 1960

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall on Friday at 2:15 p.m., and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the Orchestra's Music Director, has invited the Boston organist, Berj Zamkochian, to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc. The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday-Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, October 11 at 8:30, as the first of the Orchestra's nine Tuesday Evening Concerts.

TODAY

Jordan Hall—Roland Hayes, tenor, opens the recital season at 3::30 p.m. with Reginald Boardman at the piano, in a program to benefit the Cardinal Cushing Rehabilitation Unit of the Holy Ghost Hospital in Cambridge. The list includes Dowland, Purcell, Mozart, Schubert, Wolf, Griffes, Dougherty, Boardman, Cowell, and Mr. Hayes' own arrangement of folksongs, "A Dream of Heaven."

Symphony Hall—Mantovani and his orchestra of 45, at 8:00 p.m. with the British conductor performing a varied list of light music ranging from Johann Strauss to current hits. Program sold out.

M.I.T. Chapel—David Johnsen, in the first of this season's M.I.T. Sunday afternoon series of organ recitals, at 4:00 p.m. All-Bach program includes Concerto in A minor, Six Choral Preludes; Sonata No. 1 in E-flat; Fugue à la Gigue; and Toccata in F. Admission free.

Jewett Center—(Wellesley College)—David Barnett, piano, James Pappoutsakis, flute, and Alfred Zighera, cello, of the music department faculty, open the Wellesley concert season with works by Poulenc, Brahms, Haydn and Weber. 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

Boston University—Dr. Karl Geiringer's "Great Music" series continues at the College of Liberal Arts, with James Houghton in an illustrated lecture, "Handel and his 'Messiah'". 7:15 p.m.

Brookline Library—Richard Kapuscinski, cellist, assisted by Louis Shub, pianist, in sonatas by Beethoven and Brahms, and the Ibert Concerto. Presented by the Brookline Library Music Association, 361 Washington Street, Brookline, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872
OCT 7 1960
SxMF
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,446
OCT 7 1960
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
OCT 8 - 1960
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
OCT 8 - 1960

Boston Symphony Opens 80th Season

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 80th season Friday with a concert of music by Poulenc, Stravinsky and Beethoven.

The opening concert marked the beginning of Charles Munch's 12th year as musical director.

HERALD 10/2/60
Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season of concerts at Symphony Hall on Friday at 2:15 p.m., and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch, who begins his 12th year as the Orchestra's Music Director, has invited the Boston organist, Berj Zamkochian, to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc. The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Igor Stravinsky, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday-Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, October 11 at 8:30, as the first of the Orchestra's nine Tuesday Evening Concerts.

TODAY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

OCT 13 1960

8

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO IN FIRST CONCERT

The opening program was well adapted to launching the orchestra solidly into its eightieth year. The first two pieces were fairly familiar, listenable and interesting modern works; the concluding piece a pillar of the literature whose joys never stale. More the pity, then, that in this, the autumn's first column, I cannot go along very far with the evident satisfaction with which the large majority of the audience greeted this initial assay of the season.

For all its brilliant, technical capacity, tonal splendor and depth of individual talent, the orchestra only too often sounded blarish, unbalanced and at times even imprecise. It was in the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, which comprised the second half of the program, that these shortcomings became really apparent. The blame lies with Mr. Munch and an astonishingly insensitive trumpet section.

Mr. Munch has long had a highly instinctual and individualistic notion of how to proceed with some of these old masterpicces, and that usually consists of quite erratic and to me often illogical tempi, and a measure of indifference to the utmost realization of some of the more poignant moments, as for example in this case, where the second figure of the Allegretto enters for the first time. Why sections are repeated at a different speed from which they are taken the first time, what is gained by such frenzies as that with which he whipped up the Allegro are beyond me, although this is by now more than a thrice-told Symphony Hall tale.

As for the trumpets, Mr. Munch, Mr. Voisin and their charges should glue their ears to tapes of this performance and keep them there until they reapprehend the meaning of playing in tune and of purity of tone. Failing that, the brasses should be put off to one side of the stage rather than at the back facing the audience, or reduced by one-half in such lightly scored works as the Beethoven Seventh, or made to point their bells toward the floor. Anything to save the BSO from sounding like a fireman's band. This tale, too, is more than thrice told, but an instrument of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's quality must unremittingly answer to the most vigorous standards.

Yet in the last analysis the Beethoven Seventh is well beyond such tribulations. Its indomitable propulsiveness and originality, the very magnificence of its elan make it virtually indestructible and a rich experience however often performed.

The concert commenced with Poulenc's Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra with Timpani, with Berj Zamkochian as soloist. Like almost all of Poulenc's music, this concerto is polished, fluent, individualistic, clear and French to its core, though rather more grave and reflective than the works ordinarily associated with this composer. As one might expect, it is exceedingly well-knit and realizes to the utmost the potential of the relatively improbable combination of organ and orchestra.

Mr. Zamkochian, a local product, seemed quite up to the demands of the occasion, though I must confess to something of an inability to distinguish among organists so long, as on this occasion, they posses the technical capacity to play the notes. The ensemble between soloist and orchestra was generally good if not always as taut as it might have been.

The remaining piece was that modern junior-sized classic of Igor Stravinsky, "Jeu de Cartes" (Card Game Ballet in Three Deals). This 1936 work may not be music of the monumentality of the "Orpheus" of the same Stravinsky period, but the sheer lucidity, prodigious prodigality of technical device and ingenuity of programmatic interpolation of this Suite cannot be gainsaid. Mr. Munch was probably more effective here than anywhere else, but I was one of those listeners who could not refrain from comparing the performance with that razor-sharp one of Guido Cantelli eight years ago. That was one for the annals.

The second program this week includes Haydn's Ninety-eighth Symphony, the first Boston performance of Piston's Three New England Sketches and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Jacob Krachmalnick as soloist. Mr. Munch again conducts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

OCT 1 1960

Zamkochian Is First Symphony Soloist

For the opening concerts of the Boston Symphony (Friday-Saturday, Oct. 7-8), Charles Munch has invited the Boston organist Berj Zamkochian to be his guest in a performance of the Concerto for Organ and String Orchestra by Poulenc.

The Ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," by Stravinsky, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will also be heard at these concerts. The Friday-Saturday program will also be given at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 11 (8:30), as the first of the orchestra's nine Tuesday evening concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

OCT 15 1960

MUSIC

The Concert Season this year is indeed off to a rousing start. Within a week we have had three major events: the first of all, a deeply touching and delighting recital by the aging but still incomparable Roland Hayes; the first Symphony program, featuring Berj Zamochian at the organ; and a hearing of Fernando Germani, the renowned organist, at Holy Trinity Church.

Of Roland Hayes it can only be said that here, in handsome and faultlessly garbed person of gentle features and old-world manners under whitest hair is the heart and the soul of an artist and a deeply human person. His art is now cameo-like, though not without climax and intensity; it is the distilled result of a lifetime of study, sensibility, love of God and man, and above all tenderness. The standing audience which greeted his arrival and stayed to cheer were only the small, visible percentage of those whom he has endeared over the years and the many who enjoy his recordings.

We are deeply in Dr. Munch's debt for the daring stroke of opening not merely a concert, but an entire season, with a work for organ—the often admired but equally often silent King of Instruments. We must thank him for letting us hear the ever-fresh, lyric, inventive and diverting Poulenc, whose all too few concerti are not brought to us by many (who has played the Concert Champetre for Harpsichord since Landowska died?)

And Bostonians, particularly those of the Catholic community, must share a deep pride that Berj Zamkochian, organist of St. Theresa, West Roxbury, had the rare privilege and honor of joining Dr. Munch at the very start of a most auspicious season.

We have at least three reasons for assurance that Mr. Zamkochian's position on the program was well-earned: his extensive and highly successful European organ series; his selection by the Orchestra as their official organist; and the recent recording by Victor of the Saint-Saens Third Symphony, reviewed in these columns, now followed by a recording this very week of the Poulenc. It is good to note, too, that with characteristic devotion to his art, the organist chose registrations precisely in keeping with the composer's published directions. One looks forward to the release of the recording with keen interest.

It was unfortunately not possible for your writer to hear Signor Germani's recital, although he has a first-hand report to offer from one of Boston's professional organists. Holy Trinity Church held an encouragingly large audience, and the program, ranging from pre-Bach to the still-living Richard Keyes Biggs, was varied, brilliantly and zestfully played, warm, and exhilarating. Highlights were the Cabanilles Passacaglia 5 and Batalla Imperial, the Biggs work on B-A-C-H, and the closing Reger opus 53 No. 3 Fantasia on 'Hallelujah! Gotts zu Loben Bleibe Mein Seelen Freud' where, at the climax, the full tone of the organ was heard once only, and for that reason was all the more striking.

If the coming season continues to offer such outstanding programs as these three, Boston will be fortunate indeed.

Paul St. George.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

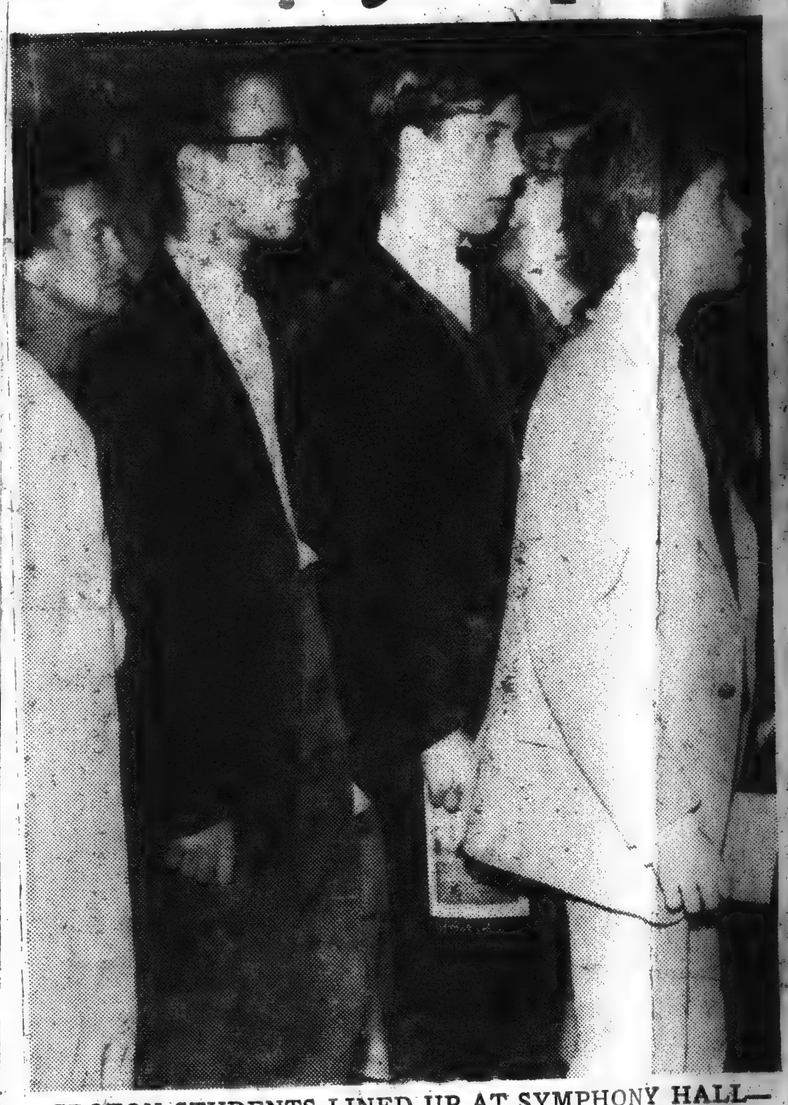
OCT 1 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

OCT 8 - 1960

The Sympho



GROTON STUDENTS LINED UP AT SYMPHONY HALL—Bob Radsch, Edgar Bering and Hoppy Smith.

OPENS SYMPHONY SEASON . . . Berj Zamkochian, organist and choir director of St. Theresa's Church, West Roxbury, and well known Catholic music educator, has been selected to appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening pair of concerts on October 7 and 8. Mr. Zamkochian will play the Poulenc Organ Concerto in G minor. Also included on the program: Beethoven's 7th Symphony, and Jeux Des Cartes of Igor Stravinsky. The photo was taken on the stage of Symphony Hall, Boston.

ny - 80 Years Old - Ever New

THERE IS NOTHING LIKE SYMPHONY, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Mrs. Jasper Whiting agree as they meet for opening of the 80th season.

GLOBE PHOTOS BY PAUL CONNELL

ARRIVING FOR SYMPHONY are Mrs. Fuller Halsey and Mrs. George Bottomley.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

An 80-year-old privilege never once taken for granted is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and if Henry Lee Higginson could have seen the big audience yesterday rise, applauding, as Charles Munch opened the season, he would have considered the time and money he spent back in 1881 well justified.

An honored institution the world around, the Symphony is the most Boston thing there is, and the real "old guard" of musicdom never make engagements for Symphony Friday afternoons.

Students still "rush" for seats, provided under the terms of Mr. Higginson's original request, and they eat their apples and sandwiches standing in line on Symphony Hall steps waiting for the doors to open.

Large hats, no matter how fashionable, have never been worn since the terse requests for their "discontinuance" were made by the management in the late, great Mrs. Jack Gardner's day.

Symphony seats for the Friday "rehearsals" were then sold at auction, and it got so that the ladies outbid and outhatted one another for the seats in her vicinity until no one could see the orchestra.

★ ★ ★

Seats at Symphony Hall are "kept in the family," like the Revere silver and the Copley portraits. The same Lymans and Paines and Sears are down in the big grey office ledgers for the same seats occupied by three different generations of concertgoers.

Mrs. Ronald T. Lyman Jr. had a pretty young daughter with her yesterday, both in slim smart suits, and Mrs. Francis P. Sears, hatless and handsome in her dark suit, had a grandchild with her.

Mrs. Sewall Fessenden and her daughter, Mrs. Karl Riemer, were also among the attractive mothers and daughters, as were Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard and her daughter Ann, Mrs. Alfred Donovan and Catharine Mary Donovan, Mrs. George Putnam and Mrs. Thaddeus Beal, and Mrs. Henry Nickerson and Diana.

According to Friday afternoon tradition, Harvard music students ushered. At tonight's concert Conservatory and B.U. music students will have a turn at this coveted job.

A thoughtfully turned-in ticket yesterday gave a Swedish flier, in Boston for the first time and here only six hours, the chance to hear the orchestra—"the one thing I wish most to do in Boston," Sven Larsen told the sympathetic box office.

Beautifully Polish-born Mrs. Cesare Lombroso, whose children are studying music with the family of a retired Symphony player, was at Symphony yesterday.

OVERJOYED TO GET A TICKET, after waiting for more than an hour, is B.U. music student Francine Zaslow.

Other "adopted" Bostonians in the big familiar audience were Baroness Charles Pampelonne, lovely wife of the French consul general, and decorative, Paris-born Mrs. W. Raymond Kitchel.

Busy Mrs. Richard Thompson was not only greeting friends but asking them to find her three fiddle players and a sewing machine for the upcoming tour of the N.E. Opera Theater.

Here from New Hampshire for the first concert of the season were the Jerry Joneses (Gloria Kent), and in Boston from Marion for the concert was Mrs. Edward B. Simmons. The Hardy Drysdales came from Maine, and the Weld Appletons from Bristol, R.I.

Mrs. George Bottomley (Lydia Fuller) represented her mother, the late, gracious Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, who never missed the opening of Symphony and was much missed yesterday. Others beginning another season of Symphony together—Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson and Mrs. Arthur Bell, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Mrs. Robert Steinert, Mrs. Jasper Whiting, Mrs. Richard Sears, S. Huntington Wolcott and Mrs. Samuel H. Wolcott, Jr., Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mrs. Bayard Warren, Mrs. Charles Mixter Jr., Mrs. R. Willis Leath, Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth, Mrs. James Torbert, Mrs. Leonard Cronkhite, Mrs. Carter Rowe, Miss Jane Megrew, Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, on from luncheon at the Ritz, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Taft, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. William T. Aldrich, Mrs. Robert Boas, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Frederick Parson and her cousin, Mrs. Kidder Fuller, Mrs. Thomas Groom.

AT SYMPHONY'S OPENING, from Marion—Mrs. Edward B. Simmons.

And students of all ages and nationalities joining in one of Boston's most rewarding traditions.

friends with me in this field neutrals. It was generally

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 16 1960

10

INTERMISSION AT SYMPHONY HALL. Many of the Friday afternoon subscribers at the first concert of the 80th season viewed the exhibition of photographs made of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its tour of Australia and the Orient.

A PORTRAIT OF THE FOUNDER of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Henry Higginson, is admired by Mrs. Thomas M. Righter, Jr., of Winchester and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Christopher D. Righter. The portrait is by John Singer Sargent.

Herald Attends The Symphony

The day of days for Boston society during the winter season is Friday. That's when the favorite Symphony concerts are held in Symphony Hall. As a matter of fact, one never speaks of them as Symphony concerts, but simply, "Symphony." Tickets are treasured and handed down to posterity along with the family portraits and silver, and families have sat in the same seats for generations. The orchestra opened its 80th season, Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, when these pictures were taken by George Dixon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 453,664
OCT 16 1960

ATTRACTIVE Mrs. David Wilder of Needham, an ardent music lover, arrived early at Symphony Hall for the recent opening of the 80th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Charles Munch conducted the orchestra for the concert, which began with Poulenc's Concerto.
(Advertiser Photo by Dick Thomson)

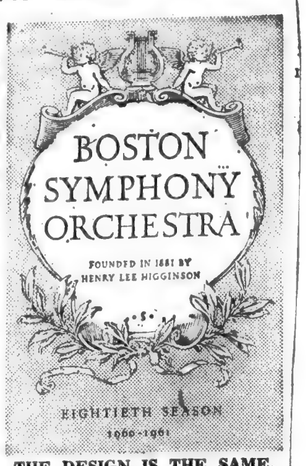
Herald 11/20/60

LETTERS FROM READERS

MUSIC'S THE THING--COVER UNIMPORTANT

To the Editor of The Herald:

Re: the new Symphony program cover. I feel that those who object to the changed cover haven't given it enough thought. It has been changed for reasons of thrift—a good Yankee trait. It should remind us that the management of the orchestra would rather reduce the quality of the program cover than that of the musical performances, but that even so the orchestra needs money.



THE DESIGN IS THE SAME, but the familiar orange cover is gray this year, and the paper is a poorer quality.

Now is the time of the annual appeal of the Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra for funds. Money sent just to bring back the old program cover (as was suggested in this column) is mis-spent. The point of the entire operation at Symphony Hall is superior musical performance, not keeping traditional program covers. No tradition should be maintained at the expense of more important matters.

So, let us hope that 1960, the year of the grey cover, will also be the year that more people became aware of the orchestra's needs and contributed generously —for the sake of music.

LYDIA A. H. SMITH
Concord

Herald 10/20/60

Scuffy's Escapade

To the Editor of The Herald:

This is really a letter to the nameless little boy and the man in the polka dot tie.

Did your little tugboat, Scuffy, get big ideas, climb out of your bathtub, and sail down the river again?

Oct. 1 as we sailed into Boston Inner Harbor what should we see but this little boat being tossed about by wind and wake. She was only fifteen inches long, and not meant for such big things.

So we came alongside and picked her up (our first rescue of another boat at sea, incidentally). We feel we were not a bit too soon, for within minutes two real live tugs began their job of nosing out the Queen Fredrika.

We can't be positive, but we are fairly certain we heard a sigh of relief from the little Scuffy as she settled down safely on our fantail.

She is home with us now, apparently quite content. Maybe because we have a little boy and a bathtub, too.

So here she will stay until the day, perhaps, she will get her notions of bigger things again, climb out of our bathtub, and go sailing down the river once more.

HELEN C. HARROW.
Westwood.

Labor Hurts Self

To the Editor of The Herald:

With reference to the letter by Lon Fuller October 2, there is one point that is overlooked by people in general and unionists in particular.

Industry is not in existence to make jobs for workers but to make a fair return on the money invested by the shareholders. On occasion through the unreasonable demands of the workers it has been necessary to pass up declaring dividends. How can a firm hope to attract investors if it is necessary to do that very often?

Then what happens? If they go out of business the workers lose their jobs?

Isn't it about time labor and its leaders realize if they continue making their selfish demands they are blindly working against themselves?

CHARLES H. FISHER.
Newton Highlands.

You can't tell a book by its cover

Symphony Program

To the Editor of The Herald:

I feel that Miss Daniels is right. Let's economize somewhere else. But please return the dignified Symphony program cover.

MRS. JOHN M. HOLLETT
Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

DEC 4 1960

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

City Opera Not Giving Up American Program

By ROSS PARMENTER

COVER: Boston is famous for its resistance to change. The latest demonstration of this conservatism is the number of letters that have been written to Boston newspapers protesting the new cover for the Boston Symphony's program book. The composer Mabel Daniels began the outcry when she wrote asking that the "orange cover, with its artistic design" be restored. Others have joined in pleading for the old cover. "Let's economize somewhere else, but please return the dignified symphony program cover," wrote Mrs. John M. Hollett. The new cover, wrote Winifred H. Johnstone, "was a poor substitute for the familiar orange one." E. A. Jones was especially to the point. "As the Symphony Program," he wrote, "it looks cheap."

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: The four concertos of Hindemith's Kammermusiken, Op. 36, will make up the first program in Town Hall's annual music festival. They will be played by members of the Boston Symphony, led by Eric Simon. Jan. 8, 15, 22 and 29 are the festival dates. . . . Arthur Fiedler will make his operatic debut conducting "Die Fledermaus" for the Boston Opera Group on April 12. . . . Darius Milhaud will conduct the United States première of his "La Tragédie Humaine," for chorus and orchestra, with the San Diego Symphony on Dec. 20. . . . The second General Assembly of the Inter-American Music Center will be held in San Juan, P. R., from Thursday to Dec. 12 . . . On Tuesday, the University of Hartford and the Julius Hartt Musical Foundation will give a testimonial dinner to Moshe Paranov marking his fiftieth anniversary as a practicing musician.

BLANK PAGE

12

BLANK PAGE

19

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 11, at 8:30 o'clock

POULENC . . . . . Concerto (in one movement) for Organ and String Orchestra, with Timpani

STRAVINSKY . . . "Jeu de Cartes" ("Card Game," Ballet in Three Deals)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

SOLOIST
BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Adagio cantabile
III. Minuetto
IV. Finale: Presto; Più moderato

PISTON . . . . . Three New England Sketches

I. Seaside
II. Summer Evening
III. Mountains

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JACOB KRACHMALNICK

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 9 1960

Boston Symphony Programs

Piston Sketches at Symphony

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will be heard for the first times in this city at the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:15 and Saturday evening at 8:30. The work was composed last season on a commission from the Worcester Festival, and has been perfomed in Worcester and Detroit.

Charles Munch will begin the program with Haydn's E-flat Symphony, No. 98, and will conclude it with Brahms' Cello Concerto.

Soloist in Brahms will be Jacob Krachmalnick, who will make first appearances with the Boston Symphony. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was assistant concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as concertmaster in 1951.

Since embarking on a soloist's career, Mr. Krachmalnick has been heard at the Prades Festival under the direction of Pablo Casals; as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland and St. Louis.

Season Highlights

Among the highlights of the new Boston Symphony season will be the world premiere of a Gloria by Poulenc, with the Chorus Pro Musica assisting, and the first performances in America of the Second Symphony by Sir William Walton.

Dr. Munch also will present the Symphony which the late Florent Schmitt composed in 1957, and which Dr. Munch conducted in first performance at Strasbourg June 15, 1958, two months and two days before the composer died at the age of nearly 88.

Due for revival are the Concerto for Two Pianos by the late Bohuslav Martinu, and "Belshazzar's Feast," by Walton. The latter, unheard at these concerts since 1933, will be conducted by Richard Burgin.

Faure's Requiem will be performed during Holy Week with participation of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Dr. Munch also will program the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music of Berlioz, and the complete "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony by Berlioz.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 14 1960

Symphony Premiere

"Three New England Sketches," by Walter Piston, will be given its local premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts tonight at 2:15 p. m. and tomorrow at 8:30 p. m., in Symphony Hall.

Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and Detroit by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony N. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto for these concerts.

Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited by Dr. Munch to make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in the Brahms concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was assistant concert master of the Cleveland Orchestra

Boston Tribune 10/14/60

New Schuman Symphony

William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 will have its first performances in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's home concerts this Friday afternoon and Saturday night under Charles Munch's direction. It was commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 9 1960

George Matthews are featured...

Music Events This Week

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will have its Boston premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday at Symphony Hall. Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto.

Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited to make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in the concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute where he was a student of Efram Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was Assistant Concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as Concertmaster in 1951.

He has been heard at the Prades Festival under Pablo Casals, as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis among others.

TUESDAY

Brackie Hester, baritone, with Robert Bell, piano. New England Hall, 11:00 a.m., sponsored by Music Lovers' Club of Boston. Songs by Handel, Schubert, Chausson, Wm. Boardman, Bonds. Piano pieces by Liszt, Debussy.

WEDNESDAY

Dave Brubeck Quartet, Kresge Auditorium (M.I.T.) 8:30 p.m., sponsored by the M.I.T. Choral Society. All seats reserved. Information, UN 4-6900, Ext. 2920.

FRIDAY

Van Cliburn, pianist, Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m., first event in the Boston University Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Liszt Sonata, Barber Sonata, Rachmaninoff Sonata No. 2. Completely sold out.

SATURDAY

Josh White, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m., opening concert in the Folklore Concert Series presented by M.A. Greenhill. Ballads and other forms made known by Mrs. White in previous appearances together with material new to his programs.

CINEMA

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
OCT 14 1960

At Symphony

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston has its Boston premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night in Symphony Hall. The work was commissioned for the Worcester Festival.

Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto. Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick, former concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his debut here in the Brahms Concerto.

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 11, at 8:30 o'clock

POULENC . . . . . Concerto (in one movement) for Organ and String Orchestra, with Timpani

STRAVINSKY . . . "Jeu de Cartes" ("Card Game," Ballet in Three Deals)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

SOLOIST
BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Adagio cantabile
III. Minuetto
IV. Finale: Presto; Più moderato

PISTON . . . . . Three New England Sketches

I. Seaside
II. Summer Evening
III. Mountains

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JACOB KRACHMALNICK

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 9 1960

Boston Symphony Programs

Piston Sketches at Symphony

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will be heard for the first times in this city at the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:15 and Saturday evening at 8:30. The work was composed last season on a commission from the Worcester Festival, and has been perfomed in Worcester and Detroit.

Charles Munch will begin the program with Haydn's E-flat Symphony, No. 98, and will conclude it with Brahms' Cello Concerto.

Soloist in Brahms will be Jacob Krachmalnick, who will make first appearances with the Boston Symphony. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was assistant concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as concertmaster in 1951.

Since embarking on a soloist's career, Mr. Krachmalnick has been heard at the Prades Festival under the direction of Pablo Casals; as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland and St. Louis.

Season Highlights

Among the highlights of the new Boston Symphony season will be the world premiere of a Gloria by Poulenc, with the Chorus Pro Musica assisting, and the first performances in America of the Second Symphony by Sir William Walton.

Dr. Munch also will present the Symphony which the late Florent Schmitt composed in 1957, and which Dr. Munch conducted in first performance at Strasbourg June 15, 1958, two months and two days before the composer died at the age of nearly 88.

Due for revival are the Concerto for Two Pianos by the late Bohuslav Martinu, and "Belshazzar's Feast," by Walton. The latter, unheard at these concerts since 1938, will be conducted by Richard Burgin.

Faure's Requiem will be performed during Holy Week with participation of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Dr. Munch also will program the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music of Berlioz, and the complete "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony by Berlioz.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 14 1960

Symphony Premiere

"Three New England Sketches," by Walter Piston will be given its local premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts tonight at 2:15 p. m. and tomorrow at 8:30 p. m., in Symphony Hall.

Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and Detroit by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony N. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto for these concerts.

Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited by Dr. Munch to make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in the Brahms concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was assistant concert master of the Cleveland Orchestra

Tribune 10/14/60

New Schuman Symphony

William Schuman's Symphony No. 9 will have its first performances in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's home concerts this Friday afternoon and Saturday night under Charles Munch's direction. It was commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 9 1960

George Matthews are soloists.

Music Events This Week

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will have its Boston premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday at Symphony Hall. Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto.

Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited to make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in the concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was Assistant Concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as Concertmaster in 1951.

He has been heard at the Prades Festival under Pablo Casals, as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis among others.

TUESDAY

Francis Hester, baritone, with Robert Bell, piano, New England Hall, 11:00 a.m., sponsored by Music Lovers' Club of Boston. Songs by Handel, Schubert, Chausson, Wm. Boardman, Bonds. Piano pieces by Liszt, Debussy.

WEDNESDAY

Dave Brubeck Quartet, Kresge Auditorium (M.I.T.) 8:30 p.m., sponsored by the M.I.T. Choral Society. All seats reserved. Information: UN 4-6900, Ext. 2920.

FRIDAY

Van Cliburn, pianist, Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m., first event in the Boston Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Liszt Sonata, Barber Sonata, Rachmaniloff Sonata No. 2. Completely sold out.

SATURDAY

Josh White, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m., opening concert in the Folklore Concert Series presented by M.A. Greenhill. Ballads and other forms made known by Mrs. White in previous appearances together with material new to his programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
OCT 14 1960

At Symphony

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston has its Boston premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night in Symphony Hall. The work was commissioned for the Worcester Festival.

Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto. Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick, former concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his debut here in the Brahms Concerto.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

OCT 15 1960

New England Sketches By Piston at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the second program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Haydn: Symphony in B-flat, No. 98; Walter Piston: Three New England Sketches (first time in Boston); Brahms: Violin Concerto. Jacob Krachmalnick soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

It was quite unsteadying, when Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony announced first local performance of new music by Walter Piston, to find the composer terming it Three New England Sketches. Then this hitherto blameless gentleman, as "absolute" a composer as you could wish or find, went further and subtitled the movements "Seaside," "Summer Evening" and "Mountains." What were he and we coming to? Old-fashioned program music? Gracious! The very foundations of modern music were threatened!

As it proves, however, alarm was needless. Mr. Piston states firmly in the program notes: "The Sketches are not intended as descriptive or representational tone painting . . ." He does reserve a free man's right to maintain that "these programmatic titles serve in a broad sense to tell the source of the impressions, reminiscences, even dreams, that pervaded the otherwise musical thoughts of one New England composer.

Well and good. No Congressional investigation is required, even though, at the outset of "Seaside" there is a hushed roll upon a suspended cymbal which, from Debussy to Benjamin Britten, has by common consent indicated salt water. We may believe Piston, even though the string trills which introduce "Summer Evening" suggest graphically the joyous dining sound of mosquitoes.

What Piston has produced are three symphonic movements healthy with a free play of rhythm, muscular in the effect of lively melodies in counterpoint, and well-built, with small but sturdy skeletons of musical structure fleshed out by fascinating and expert instrumentation.

"Mountains" is "big" music, with the giant tread of kettledrums beneath the powerful strings, which recalls what Brahms did at the beginning of his C minor Symphony, part of which had a certain Alpine association. There is, I think, a fine fugue, or at least a fugato, in the movement.

The New England Sketches are thoroughly enjoyable, and this listener looks forward to hearing them again. Piston came on stage, at performance's end, and bowed happily to an audience not only enthusiastic but excited. That is rare at first performances of new pieces these days.

Jacob Krachmalnick is a violin soloist new to this city. A pupil of Zimbalist and now a man seemingly in his early 30s, Krachmalnick gave a very creditable performance of Brahms' D major Concerto, one which sang and enjoyed a fine musical continuity. Indeed this aspect of continuity was wholly remarkable in the cadenza, which emerged not as fiddler's technical joy, but much more as an unaccompanied extension of the musical thought of the entire movement.

Krachmalnick has a clear, penetrating if not big tone, the finger dexterity to make pitch almost unfailingly exact, and a bowing arm remarkably controlled. He is an excellent player, though there was little evidence of impressive musical personality. He was cordially received.

Dr. Munch and the orchestra accompanied him well, though the texture of the finale was a little course, and the woodwind introduction to the slow movement, marked no louder than piano through all its course, was at the least forte. Piston's score, with its large battery of percussion, seemed to have an excellent performance. Haydn went vivaciously, if with a rather dry string resonance. This may be heresy, but the B-flat, No. 98, seems to be dull Haydn, if that is possible.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct first performance of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony; Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, and the D minor Symphony of Cesar Franck.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

OCT 11 1960

Symphony Friends

Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers and members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been invited by Henry B. Cabot, the Orchestra's president, to attend the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Friends, to be held at Symphony Hall Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in a private concert for those attending. The orchestra's trustees will be host at tea, to be served in the upper foyer at Symphony Hall following the musical program.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

OCT 15 1960

Music

Boston Symphony Scores In New England Sketches

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Highlight of yesterday's program by the Boston Symphony orchestra, was a performance of Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches." Dr. Charles Munch conducted, and also programmed the "Symphony in B flat" by Haydn, and the "D major Violin Concerto" by Brahms. The soloist in the concerto was Jacob Krachmalnick.

The composer was present for the "Sketches," and was the recipient of a warm response to his work. This composition, that is neither a symphony nor a study in any form, is in three parts, namely, Seaside, Summer Evening, and Mountains. As expected of music by Piston, there is the usual wealth of dissonant chords, but somehow in this work, it all leads up to some of the most sound music that can be found on the entire modern scene.

Cornell MacNeil

Not often in present day composition is the listener treated to many passages of violin writing that seem as pure classic as any music ever created. In parts, there are some excellent violin passages, full of pure sound, and splendidly written for the strings. Though there is a great difference between strings and percussion, one has to recognize certain percussion parts that are in their own right, excellent examples of writing for the individual instrument.

Jacob Krachmalnick is a responsible type of musician. He has been partially affected by this age of limitless technical endeavor in playing, but beneath this, is a pleasant warmth and feeling for the interpretive side of music. He is to be congratulated that his command possesses such feeling, something more often reserved for the mature and experienced playing artist.

HE DOES NOT PRODUCE a large tonal volume, neither is his styling always imaginitive, but he does however, transmit a sincerity of purpose that is a most welcome experience. His performance was most acceptable, and he proved that despite the fact that the Brahms is one of the real big concerti, and not yet within his best capabilities, he is an accomplished and sensitive violinist, one that has both musicianship, and taste in his work. It would be pleasant to hear him at a later date, and in a composition lighter, and more given to melodic pattern.

The Moses Greeley Parker lecture series will present, as the first program of the year, "The Ballet Story," Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the Little theater, at Lowell State college. Featured artist will be the famous dancer, lecturer and authority on modern day ballet, Anne Wilson. The event is quite different from most programs concerned with the field of the dance. There is an originality and informality to the setting, that should provide those attending a most pleasant afternoon of "back stage" visiting with ballet.

Victor Bergamini, formerly of this city, and a protege of the late Charles Husband, is making a marked success of his musical career. He is presently appearing with name bands, both as a member of the group, and as a specialist in some of the modern-styled arrangements for drums in Florida's leading vacation centers.

JOAN DeWEESE, MITCH RYAN, Jo Ann LeCompte and Henry Sutton are sharing the spotlight in a star-studded cast of thespians who are presenting "A Streetcar Named Desire." The group is a member of the New England edition of an off Broadway company, the Charles Playhouse players.

Cornell MacNeil, the brilliant young American baritone, who scored a brilliant success in Europe during the past summer operatic season, will head a notable cast of singing stars in the opening night performance of Verdi's "Nabucco," which will open the Metropolitan Opera season in New York on Monday evening, Oct. 24. Rosalind Elias, of this city, will share the evening's glory with Mr. MacNeil. This will mark her third first night performance since she joined the world famed opera company.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

OCT 15 1960

15

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the second program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon. Jacob Krachmalnick, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98 ..... Haydn
Three New England Sketches .... Piston
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77 Brahms

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Three contemporary works, one composed in 1959, another in 1878, and third in 1791, made yesterday's symphony concert one of singular charm and beauty. The program had the amplitude and richness in which everything seems fresh, pertinent and meaningful — and Jacob Krachmalnick, a young American violin virtuoso who, in his Boston debut, gave a splendid account of the Brahms Violin Concerto.

Literally, the only modern work, of course, was Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," commissioned for the Worcester Festival last autumn. I found it a good-natured, small-scale tribute to the composer's home terrain, overtly pictorial and describing in sound some of the emotional responses evoked by the New England landscape.

It isn't a profound piece and it doesn't assert much passionate identification with the soil, or any similar philosophical or psychological message. Rather, these are exactly what Mr. Piston intends them to be, sketches, executed with the nimbleness and economy of stroke encountered in Oriental scrolls.

In Three Parts

The score is divided into three parts and the titles are self-explanatory: "The Sea," "Summer Evening" and "Mountains." The impression received by the listener is not supposed to be that, necessarily, of the composer since (Mr. Piston apologizes in the program book) "all extra-musical ideas except those of the most elementary sort must arise from one's personal background and experience."

Granted the truth of this credo, the first movement of the music surging with the shimmer of cymbals and the ripple of woodwinds, made me think of the solid might of the New England ocean seething about a rocky shingle; the second of a drowsy, hushed twilight murmurous with insects; and the final movement, of the ascending, powerful slopes of fir-covered hills.

I'm sorry, but that's the way the music struck me, given the titles, and even without these one would probably get a similar glimmer. Telling someone that music must always be listened to as pure form, recalls Nevill Cardus's retort: "(it's) the equivalent of telling the young lover that he should look at the starlit sky qua astronomy, or at his beloved qua anatomy."

The anatomical report, however, is favorable. The work is solidly constructed around a handful of brief mottos offering little in the way of melodic inspiration, but which are constructed with ingenuity and skill. The orchestration is notable for spareness and lightly-applied color. The style is one of contemplative polyphony.

Robust, Vigorous

In short, a gracious minor contribution, and Mr. Piston, appeared on stage for the Boston premiere, looking robust and vigorous amid the applause; in his retirement, the BSO's "court composer" as much as ever.

Mr. Krachmalnick's interpretation of the Brahms Concerto showed us a soloist of distinguished character. A tall, stocky man with a curly shock of black hair, he treated the work with a lyrical, rapturous regard for its grave and yet vivacious nature. His approach was less intense than that of Christian Ferras who last did the work here; the flowing, songful line of Brahms was emphasized.

Although he was performing on a Guanerius of 1741, his tone was not overly-lush, but it was big, warm and noble. It goes without saying that the artist possesses the attributes of technic, the double stopping and bow needed for first-rate performance; more germane is the fact that Mr. Krachmalnick, whose background lies in the orchestra, should stand out with vivid identity as a solo performer.

Heroic Qualities

His projection of the heroic qualities of the opening second subject, the fanciful rapturous musing of the adagio, and the hastening tzigane rhythms of the finale, caught Brahms's wonderful balance between the thoughtful and sensuous superbly. And the balance of soloist and orchestra was excellent, too.

Haydn's No. 98 (Salomon No. 4) proved an uncommon delight, revealing the master's venturesome subtlety from the use of the dominant major ninth in the allegro to the solo violin contrasts of the finale. As sheer experiment, the work underscores Haydn as one of the most inventive composers of the pantheon, yet it is not without the deepest feeling and solemnity in the adagio, the irresistible and infectious gaiety of boundless melodic contrast. The appalling thing is that 98 has only been done three times within the current century here; the Boston Symphony has yet, indeed, to play Haydn's "Miracle" Symphony.

Next week, Dr. Munch has scheduled the first performance of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7; Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Moniter (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 15 1960

Two Debuts and a Première at Symphony Hall

9-60

Spotlight on Cliburn, Krachmalnick, Piston

By Harold Rogers

Yesterday was a day of firsts. Van Cliburn gave his first Boston recital last night in Symphony Hall; Jacob Krachmalnick made his Boston Debut as violin soloist with the Boston Symphony in the afternoon; and Charles Munch conducted the Boston première of Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches." There were some triumphs; some tears.

Mr. Cliburn's recital was largely an event of triumphs. His program made no concessions either to popular taste or to the pressures of management, which is no small triumph in itself; but when one's name is big enough to fill the hall, the problems of programing fade into nothing.

He therefore sailed into three mighty sonatas—the Liszt B minor, the Barber E-flat minor, the Rachmaninoff B-flat minor—and came through with almost no scars: a few wrong notes, not so "heavenly," one might say, as was said of Anton Rubinstein's, but close to celestial.

Mr. Cliburn is truly a little lower than the angels as an interpreter; he has the communicative gift that few artists of his age possess, Glenn Gould excepted; he digs deep into the substance of the music and it comes forth almost pure gold.

Though at times he tended to beat the piano to get his big effects, thus losing his poetry, in the Liszt sonata he soared remarkably high during the pianissimo passages. Perhaps in a few more years his mountain peaks will be as emotionally impressive as his valleys, though he later made the Rachmaninoff grand enough in sound and almost as trenchant in emotion.

He must be commended, too, for including a contemporary work on his program—a daring venture that few romantics of Cliburn's temperament are willing to essay. True, the Barber sonata has its romantic moods, yet not without a certain harmonic acidity. He has a flair for the moderns; it is to be hoped that he will continue to cultivate them.

His extras concluded with Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12, a magnificent piece of bombast, if there ever was one, but nothing better to end with. Applause was excited and prolonged.

* * *

At the Boston Symphony's concert yesterday afternoon Mr. Krachmalnick made his entrance in the Brahms Violin Concerto with a certain élan; then quickly lapsed into indistinct detail and clouded tone, emerging only on occasion. His performance was uncompelling, even uninteresting. Though only minor inaccuracies were to be noted (plus one major one in the cadenza), he never got below the surface of the music, hence never into the heart.

The first Boston performance of Mr. Piston's "Three New England Sketches," on the other hand, was an exciting success. Writing with the masterful touch that now characterizes his output, he has produced a triptych of tone paintings—Seaside. Summer Evening, and Mountains—that is a marvel of latter-day impressionism.

* * *

This is an impressionism that can hardly be equated with Debussy or Ravel, or even with Roussel. One might say that Mr. Piston took up where Roussel left off, added an American accent, and succeeded in giving us the sentiment of New England without sentimentality—especially that sentimental view of New England which MacDowell was wont to wallow in.

Mr. Piston's seaside is a peaceful one—shimmering with zephyrs, of course, but without breakers. His summer evening is filled with singing insects, fireflies perhaps, breezes and moonlight. His mountains are granitic, majestic, aspiring, and ranging, rising up on fugal foundations.

Dr. Munch's traversal was suave or intense, as the mood required; and Mr. Piston was on hand to bow to the vigorous applause. Dr. Munch opened this concert with a gentlemanly performance of Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98 (the fourth of the London series). There was elegance in every bar, especially in Richard Burgin's brief solos.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
OCT 8 - 1960

Jacob Krachmalnick

Piston 'Sketches' To Be Played In Boston

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will have its Boston première at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 14 at 2:15 and Oct. 15 at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and Detroit by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B-flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto.

Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited by Dr. Munch to make his debut with the Boston Symphony as guest in the Brahms concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efrem Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was assistant concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as concertmaster in 1951. Since embarking on a soloist's career Mr. Krachmalnick has been heard at the Prades Festival under the direction of Pablo Casals, as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam, and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland, and St. Louis.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
OCT 12 1960

Symphony Friends Meet Tomorrow

Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers and members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been invited by Henry B. Cabot, the Orchestra's President, to attend the 27th Annual Meeting of the Friends to be held at Symphony Hall, tomorrow at 4 p.m.

Charles Munch will conduct the Orchestra in a private concert. The Orchestra's Trustees will be host at tea to be served in the upper foyer at Symphony Hall following the musical program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 13 1960

Boston Symphony To Premiere 3 New Piston Pieces

"Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston will have its Boston premiere at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday, Saturday (October 14, 2:15; October 15, 8:30, Symphony Hall). Composed last season on commission for the Worcester Festival, the work has been performed in Worcester and Detroit by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony No. 98 in B flat major and the Brahms Violin Concerto for these concerts.

Violinist Jacob Krachmalnick has been invited by Doctor Munch to make his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest of Brahms concerto. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music where he was a student of Efram Zimbalist, Mr. Krachmalnick was Assistant Concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as Concertmaster in 1951. Since embarking on a soloist's career Mr. Krachmalnick has been heard at the Prades Festival under the direction of Pablo Casals, as soloist with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam and as guest with many orchestras in this country including those of Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis among others.

Boston Symphony
Continued from Page One

The complete program:

Friday aft., Oct. 14, 2:15; Sat. eve., Oct. 15, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Charles Munch conducting:

Haydn, Symphony in B flat major, No. 98; Piston, Three New England Sketches; Brahms Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77 (Jacob Krachmalnick).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

OCT 13 1960

SMART SET . . . . . By ROSE WALSH

Friends Aiding Symphony

Money can never buy the joy that the Boston Symphony Orchestra brings to music-lovers the world over, but if we want to keep our great Orchestra giving forth that music, a deficit of $250,000 must be overcome.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees of Boston Symphony met at luncheon Tuesday afternoon with members of the Council of The Friends of B. S. O. at Symphony Hall.

He had this to tell them, "the total cost for the year to keep the Boston Symphony playing amounted to $2,225,832. The Orchestra's earned income — totaling $1,883,176 from ticket sales, receipts from recordings, and fees for the use of Symphony Hall — cannot cover it.

"This leaves a gross deficit of $342,656 which must, in large part, be met by the generosity of The Friends."

What to do about it? Members of the Council of Friends, serving as solicitors, will seek support from subscribers, music lovers, business and industry, as well as other sources, in their effort to make up a large proportion of the $342,656.

This afternoon subscribers and members of The Friends have been invited by Cabot to attend the 27th annual meeting to be held at Symphony Hall. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in a private concert following which the trustees will be hosts at a tea to be served in the upper foyer.

Listed [illegible] Council of

AMONG THOSE ATTENDING special rehearsal-luncheon for Council of Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, l. to r., Mrs. Paul Bernat, Chestnut Hill; Mrs. Robert F. Bradford, Cambridge; Henry B. Cabot, president, Symphony trustees' board; Richard C. Paine, Chestnut Hill.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

OCT 12 1960

Friends of Symphony Plan Annual Meeting

Members of the Council of The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra met for a special rehearsal and luncheon yesterday at Symphony Hall, before the annual meeting of The Friends tomorrow afternoon.

* * *

The purpose of the meeting, called by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is serving this year as chairman of the Friends campaign to enroll new members, was to make final plans for tomorrow's full meeting and to finish organization of the campaign in support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Friends, which is an informal organization composed of those who have contributed toward the orchestra's support, this year seeks $250,000 to meet the annual deficit.

* * *

Mr. Cabot explained that the total cost for the year to keep the Boston Symphony playing amounted to $2,225,832. The Orchestra's earned income cannot cover this, amounting to $1,883,176 from such income as ticket sales, receipts from recordings, fees for the use of Symphony Hall. This leaves a gross deficit of $342,656, which must, in large part, be met by the generosity of The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

Members of the Council of Friends will seek support from subscribers, music lovers, business and industry and other sources in their effort to make up a large proportion of the deficit.

Members of the Council of Friends include: Thomas B. Adams, Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. Oakes I. Ames, Sherwin C. Badger, Talcott N. Banks, Jr., Judge Jennie Loitman Barron, Mrs. Paul Bernat, Mrs. Allen D. Bliss, Mrs. Robert W. Boas, Mrs. Robert Fiske Bradford, Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, Mrs. Stedman Buttrick, Jr., Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot, Norman L. Cahners, Mrs. Louis Curtis, Jr., Philip Eiseman, Mrs. Wallace Falvey, the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Jr., Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Reginald Gray, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., Francis W. Hatch, Richard R. Higgins and Harold D. Hodgkinson.

* * *

Also, Kenneth L. Isaacs, Henry A. Laughlin, Edward F. MacNichol, Henry H. Meyer, Jr., Alan R. Morse, John T. Noonan, Richard C. Paine, Mrs. Augustin H. Parker, Jr., the Rev. Palfrey Perkins, Dr. Lewis Perry, Herbert W. Pratt, Sidney R. Rabb, Mrs. Mayo Adams Shattuck, Alan A. Smith, Roger P. Sonnabend, Charles H. Stockton, Edward A. Taft, John L. Thorndike, Mrs. Benjamin C. Tilghman, Jr., Benjamin A. Trustman, Lewis H. Weinstein, Raymond S. Wilkins and Oliver Wolcott.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

OCT 14 1960

$250,000 Set As Symphony Friends Goal

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been asked to contribute a total of $250,000 to meet the Orchestra deficit for the season. This figure was stated by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra's trustees, at the 27th annual meeting of the Friends in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon.

"The Orchestra spends $2 million each year, of which $1½ million goes for salaries, and the remainder for all other expenses. It earns about 90% in revenues from ticket sales, broadcasting and some other sources. So we have to ask the public to give us about 10%, or from $200,000 to $250,000.

"Last year," continued Cabot, "we asked for contributions of $250,000 and we received $255,000 from 4500 persons. That is a far cry from the time—as recent as the 1920s—when one person was contributing the entire deficit, or the 1930s, when a few people were doing it. We want to keep the same number of Friends who make large contributions, and at the same time to broaden the base of our contributors by finding more people who are able to give smaller amounts. No matter how small the amount, the healthier will be our support."

Cabot announced that an additional week of concerts will be played at next Summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

After the business portion of the meeting was concluded, Charles Munch and the Orchestra gave a private short concert consisting of the last two movements of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. The trustees were hosts at tea in the upper foyer of Symphony Hall.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,882
OCT 20 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens 1960 Wellesley Concert Series

A handsomely appreciative audience Monday evening heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the 1960 Wellesley Concert series with a compact program of Haydn, Stravinsky and Beethoven.

The world-famed organization almost overflowed Wellesley College's Alumnae Hall stage so that Conductor Charles Munch barely had room for his small platform.

Adding to the occasion and interest for the concert series subscribers was the hall's new decor, completed during the summer.

Mr. Munch opened the program with Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98, lending the orchestra's full disciplined interpretive powers in a skillfully restrained manner.

It was difficult for Beethoven devotees to balance their enthusiasms when the orchestra played Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes" (game of cards) since this number vied extravagantly with the later Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

"Jeu de Cartes," composed in 1936, was first heard in 1937 at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York for the American Ballet. As a concert piece, for which the score is used unaltered, it was presented by the Philadelphia Symphony the following year, and in Boston in 1939, conducted by the composer. Since then it has been heard less than half a dozen times.

It was obvious that Mr. Munch thoroughly enjoyed "the Seventh," which is well known for its section of "unbuttoned" Beethoven in the finale, because he discarded his score and gave full attention to his task, which at times approaches almost histrionic proportions.

The audience was delighted, and recalled him four times while he mopped his brow and swiped his famous shock of grey hair away from his eyes.

The concert series, next presentation will be November 30, when the Menuhin-Doktor Duo, viola and piano, will appear. David Barnett is manager of the series. Subscriptions are available, and information can be obtained at the concert office in the lobby of Alumnae Hall, or at CE 5-0320. Hours when the office is open are listed in an advertisment in The Townsman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,500
SEP 22 1960

Dr. Charles Munch

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT WELLESLEY

The Wellesley Concert Committee proudly announces that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the '60-'61 series on October 17 in Alumnae Hall at the College. The other three concerts as planned are Nov. 30, Miss Menuhin viola and Mr. Doktor piano; on February 14, Nicolo Henriot-Sweitzer, the French pianist and on April 12, Maureen Forrester, contralto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
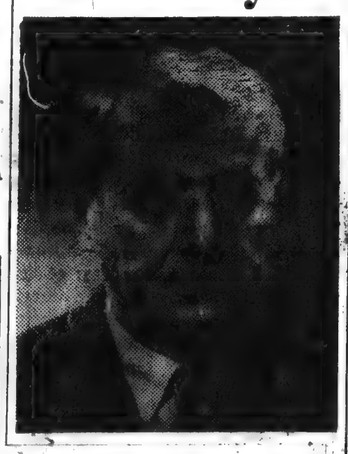
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,448
SEP 22 1960

Boston Symphony Opens Wellesley Concert Series



For the first time in several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a Wellesley Concert series on October 17 in the newly renovated Alumnae Hall. The orchestra will be directed by the talented baton of Charles Munch.

On Nov. 30, the Menuhin-Doktor Duo will present music for piano and viola. Miss Menuhin "touched with the same order of genius that marks her illustrious musical family," and Mr. Doktor, "truly comparable to Kreisler in his best years," make a superlative musical combination.

Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, the French pianist is featured in the third concert on Feb. 14. Well - known in this area through her appearances with the Boston Symphony. Mme. Henriot - Schweitzer is a dynamic, vital performer.

The concluding concert, on April 12, will be given by the Canadian contralto, Maureen Forrester. Not yet 30, Miss Forrester is firmly on the way to international stardom. During the past season, she appeared at Carnegie Hall with the Philadelphia, Cleveland and Philharmonic Orchestras, bringing to 23 the number of her appearances with the Philharmonic in four consecutive seasons. Featured at the Stratford, Ontario, and Edinburgh Festivals, she has been hailed in Madrid, Berlin, and London.

The Concert Office is now open and subscriptions may be obtained there or by telephone or mail.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,011
OCT 6- 1960

Boston Symphony In Wellesley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the coming Wellesley Concert Series on October 17 at Alumnae Hall. Three concerts will follow the opening date, these to feature artists making their first appearances in Wellesley.

On November 30, February 14 and April 12 the Symphony will again visit Wellesley with extraordinary concerts which will be greatly appreciated by music lovers in this area.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Wayland Enterprise
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 400
OCT 6- 1960

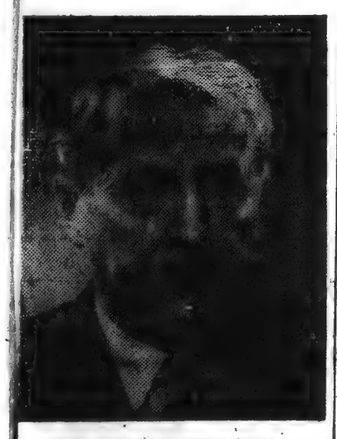
Boston Symphony In Wellesley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the coming Wellesley Concert Series on October 17 at Alumnae Hall. Three concerts will follow the opening date, these to feature artists making their first appearances in Wellesley.

On November 30, February 14 and April 12 the Symphony will again visit Wellesley with extraordinary concerts which will be greatly appreciated by music lovers in this area.

ncy, Inc.
nd 2-4200
Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,423
SEP 22 1960

Boston Symphony Opens Wellesley Concert Series



CHARLES MUNCH

For the first time in several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a Wellesley Concert series on October 17 in the newly renovated Alumnae Hall. The orchestra will be directed by the talented baton of Charles Munch.

On Nov. 30, the Menuhin-Doktor Duo will present music for piano and viola. Miss Menuhin "touched with the same order of genius that marks her illustrious musical family," and Mr. Doktor, "truly comparable to Kreisler in his best years," make a superlative musical combination.

Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, the French pianist is featured in the third concert on Feb. 14. Well - known in this area through her appearances with the Boston Symphony. Mme. Henriot - Schweitzer is a dynamic, vital performer.

The concluding concert, on April 12, will be given by the Canadian contralto, Maureen Forrester. Not yet 30, Miss Forrester is firmly on the way to international stardom. During the past season, she appeared at Carnegie Hall with the Philadelphia, Cleveland and Philharmonic Orchestras, bringing to 23 the number of her appearances with the Philharmonic in four consecutive seasons. Featured at the Stratford, Ontario, and Edinburgh Festivals, she has been hailed in Madrid, Berlin, and London.

The Concert Office is now open and subscriptions may be obtained there or by telephone or mail.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,882
OCT 13 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, Conductor, will open the 1960-61 Wellesley Concert Series at Alumnae Hall on Monday, October 17, at 8 p.m. The program will be: Symphony No. 98 by Haydn, Jeu de Cartes by Stravinsky, and Symphony No. 7 by Beethoven. Although the balcony is sold out, remaining seats in the orchestra may be secured by telephoning the Concert Office, Wellesley College.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,882
OCT 20 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens 1960 Wellesley Concert Series

A handsomely appreciative audience Monday evening heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the 1960 Wellesley Concert series with a compact program of Haydn, Stravinsky and Beethoven.

The world-famed organization almost overflowed Wellesley College's Alumnae Hall stage so that Conductor Charles Munch barely had room for his small platform.

Adding to the occasion and interest for the concert series subscribers was the hall's new decor, completed during the summer.

Mr. Munch opened the program with Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 98, lending the orchestra's full disciplined interpretive powers in a skillfully restrained manner.

It was difficult for Beethoven devotees to balance their enthusiasms when the orchestra played Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes" (game of cards) since this number vied extravagantly with the later Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

"Jeu de Cartes," composed in 1936, was first heard in 1937 at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York for the American Ballet. As a concert piece, for which the score is used unaltered, it was presented by the Philadelphia Symphony the following year, and in Boston in 1939, conducted by the composer. Since then it has been heard less than half a dozen times.

It was obvious that Mr. Munch thoroughly enjoyed "the Seventh," which is well known for its section of "unbuttoned" Beethoven in the finale, because he discarded his score and gave full attention to his task, which at times approaches almost histrionic proportions.

The audience was delighted, and recalled him four times while he mopped his brow and swiped his famous shock of grey hair away from his eyes.

The concert series, next presentation will be November 30, when the Menuhin-Doktor Duo, viola and piano, will appear. David Barnett is manager of the series. Subscriptions are available, and information can be obtained at the concert office in the lobby of Alumnae Hall, or at CE 5-0320. Hours when the office is open are listed in an advertisment in The Townsman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 9,448
SEP 22 1960

Boston Symphony Opens Wellesley Concert Series

For the first time in several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a Wellesley Concert series on October 17 in the newly renovated Alumnae Hall. The orchestra will be directed by the talented baton of Charles Munch.

On Nov. 30, the Menuhin-Doktor Duo will present music for piano and viola. Miss Menuhin "touched with the same order of genius that marks her illustrious musical family," and Mr. Doktor, "truly comparable to Kreisler in his best years," make a superlative musical combination.

Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, the French pianist is featured in the third concert on Feb. 14. Well-known in this area through her appearances with the Boston Symphony, Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer is a dynamic, vital performer.

The concluding concert, on April 12, will be given by the Canadian contralto, Maureen Forrester. Not yet 30, Miss Forrester is firmly on the way to international stardom. During the past season, she appeared at Carnegie Hall with the Philadelphia, Cleveland and Philharmonic Orchestras, bringing to 23 the number of her appearances with the Philharmonic in four consecutive seasons. Featured at the Stratford, Ontario, and Edinburgh Festivals, she has been hailed in Madrid, Berlin, and London.

The Concert Office is now open and subscriptions may be obtained there or by telephone or mail.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,011
OCT 6- 1960

Boston Symphony In Wellesley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the coming Wellesley Concert Series on October 17 at Alumnae Hall. Three concerts will follow the opening date, these to feature artists making their first appearances in Wellesley.

On November 30, February 14 and April 12 the Symphony will again visit Wellesley with extraordinary concerts which will be greatly appreciated by music lovers in this area.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Wayland Enterprise
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 400
OCT 6- 1960

Boston Symphony In Wellesley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the coming Wellesley Concert Series on October 17 at Alumnae Hall. Three concerts will follow the opening date, these to feature artists making their first appearances in Wellesley.

On November 30, February 14 and April 12 the Symphony will again visit Wellesley with extraordinary concerts which will be greatly appreciated by music lovers in this area.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,500
SEP 22 1960

Dr. Charles Munch

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT WELLESLEY

The Wellesley Concert Committee proudly announces that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the '60-'61 series on October 17 in Alumnae Hall at the College. The other three concerts as planned are Nov. 30, Miss Menuhin viola and Mr. Doktor piano; on February 14, Nicolo Henriot-Sweitzer, the French pianist and on April 12, Maureen Forrester, contralto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,423
SEP 22 1960

Boston Symphony Opens Wellesley Concert Series

CHARLES MUNCH

For the first time in several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a Wellesley Concert series on October 17 in the newly renovated Alumnae Hall. The orchestra will be directed by the talented baton of Charles Munch.

On Nov. 30, the Menuhin-Doktor Duo will present music for piano and viola. Miss Menuhin "touched with the same order of genius that marks her illustrious musical family," and Mr. Doktor, "truly comparable to Kreisler in his best years," make a superlative musical combination.

Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, the French pianist is featured in the third concert on Feb. 14. Well-known in this area through her appearances with the Boston Symphony, Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer is a dynamic, vital performer.

The concluding concert, on April 12, will be given by the Canadian contralto, Maureen Forrester. Not yet 30, Miss Forrester is firmly on the way to international stardom. During the past season, she appeared at Carnegie Hall with the Philadelphia, Cleveland and Philharmonic Orchestras, bringing to 23 the number of her appearances with the Philharmonic in four consecutive seasons. Featured at the Stratford, Ontario, and Edinburgh Festivals, she has been hailed in Madrid, Berlin, and London.

The Concert Office is now open and subscriptions may be obtained there or by telephone or mail.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,882
OCT 13 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, Conductor, will open the 1960-61 Wellesley Concert Series at Alumnae Hall on Monday, October 17, at 8 p.m. The program will be: Symphony No. 98 by Haydn, Jeu de Cartes by Stravinsky, and Symphony No. 7 by Beethoven. Although the balcony is sold out, remaining seats in the orchestra may be secured by telephoning the Concert Office, Wellesley College.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Lenscraft Photo

William Schuman, Charles Munch, and Mrs. Schuman after the Boston Symphony gave the premiere of Mr. Schuman's Seventh Symphony

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
OCT 16 1960

Ford Works Have Premiere

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

In March, 1959, the Ford Foundation made grants of $5,000 each to ten prominent concert artists, who were called upon to commission ten composers for works to be performed by them with ten American orchestras. By an unplanned coincidence, the first works resulting from this project to be heard in public will both have their premieres this Thursday evening. The New York Philharmonic, under Leonard Bernstein, will introduce Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" for soprano and orchestra that night in Carnegie Hall with Adele Addison, who commissioned it, as the soloist, while the Atlanta Symphony will offer Vittorio Giannini's "The Medead" under Henry Sopkin's direction in Georgia's capital with Irene Jordan as the soprano soloist.

The Philharmonic will play another work commissioned through this project, Ben Weber's Piano Concerto, on March 23, 24, 25 and 26 with William Masselos as the soloist. The Ford Foundation's total outlay under this plan is $130,000, which includes the cost of the commissions and the extra rehearsal time needed by the orchestras for preparing the new works. Each one will be played by three of the orchestras taking part in this plan during this season or the next; the Giannini work will also be heard in San Francisco and Detroit.

• • •

Schools in Merger

The Mannes College of Music and the Chatham Square Music School have been consolidated and will both operate in the college's present building at 157 E. 74th St., with a combined board of trustees. While the corporate name of the combined corporation will be that of the Mannes College, both schools will be autonomous and continue their present functions. The merger will strengthen their financial position and allow them to provide greater artistic and educational services.

The Mannes College, originally known as the David Mannes Music School, was founded by the late David and Clara Mannes in 1916, and became a degree granting institution under Leopold Mannes' presidency in 1953. Its present enrollment is more than 600 students. The Chatham Square School was incorporated under Samuel Chotzinoff's direction in 1937, and trains talented students for professional careers on a free scholarship basis.

• • •

New Schuman Symphony

William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 will have its first performances in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's home concerts this Friday afternoon and Saturday night under Charles Munch's direction. It was commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Meanwhile the San Antonio Symphony, under Victor Alessandro, has named Mr. Schuman as Composer of the Year for this season, when its programs will include eight performances of four of his works.

• • •

Durante Project

Jimmy Durante may appear as a pianist with several orchestras next season, if plans now under discussion between the noted comedian and the Columbia Artists Management are carried through. According to this project, Mr. Durante would provide both straight piano playing and instrumental and verbal humor in benefit concerts.

Boston Symphony Premieres 7th Symphony by Schuman

■ Of the Boston Symphony we expect the best of the old and the new, and this season promises both in about equal measure. The premiere of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony was worth waiting for (it had been commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary five years ago). The music is both lean and lusty, altogether "American" in its dynamism and brass component. But Schuman clearly understands that volume must serve rhetoric, and he handles his forces convincingly.

Other weekend concerts of annual interest are these assigned to the Symphony's assistant conductor and concertmaster, Richard Burgin. This year, Mr. Burgin coupled Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite with Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" in a concert that crackled with excitement. Assisting was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The chief event of the concert season so far, was the appearance here of Sviatoslav Richter as soloist for two concertos for the annual Pension Fund Concert. The big man with the air of benign humility made it clear that he was glad to be on hand to help personally the orchestra which, by its spying him out on its tour of Soviet Russia, was primary in pressing for his tour here (the negotiations were accomplished ultimately by Sol Hurok).

To his performance of Beethoven's First Concerto he applied a scrutiny of note-placement, of nuance and piquant detail, of upbeat and slurring that completely articulated the brisk sections and gave the slow movement a sustained and lofty calm. More revelations came with Brahms Second Concerto, in which Richter's mixture of leopard's pounce and sudden caress made a charged excitement difficult to match. He converted the Symphony men to his audience, too.

Music Courier Dec 1960

21

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART.....Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

SCHUMAN.....Symphony No. 7

I. Largo assai
II. Vigoroso
III. Cantabile intensamente
IV. Scherzando brioso

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK.....*Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[137]

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
OCT 20 1960

Composer and Educator, Schuman Thrives on Work

By CYRUS DURGIN

William Schuman is a composer who creates upon rationed time. He has no complaint that he cannot spend all his waking hours writing upon manuscript paper. As such, he is a distinct rarity.

Schuman, recently turned 50, is further unusual in that he successfully combines a creative career with one as president of the Juilliard School of Music in New York City. He enjoys it all.

"You ask me if my administrative work cramps my own composition. Let me put it this way. I am now beginning my 16th year at Juilliard. In the past 15 years I have written my Sixth and now Seventh Symphony, an opera 'The Mighty Casey', a piano concerto and a work for violin, also the piece called Credendum. Those are the works I recall off-hand.

"Perhaps I might have written more if I hadn't had the job at Juilliard, but I doubt it.

"After all, that seems a fairly reasonable production of music. I have done both jobs, and liked them; I've accepted commissions and delivered the compositions—perhaps not on time, but I've delivered them"

One such is Schuman's Seventh Symphony which, commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation for the 75th Anniversary season of the Orchestra five years ago, was completed last May Tomorrow afternoon and Saturday night at Symphony Hall, Dr. Charles Munch will conduct its first two performances.

"It is a smaller work than the Sixth Symphony," explained Schuman, who has come to Boston for the rehearsals and premiere of the Seventh. "Smaller, that is, in the sense that it is shorter. It does use a very big orchestra, however. There are four movements, of which the first and second and the third and fourth are played without pause They run into each other. As I can estimate it now, it is quite unlike the Sixth, which was a big brooding work. The Seventh ends with a lively, rythmic finale.

"I wrote it as I have written all my work for years past. The first three hours of every day I try to devote to myself. I try, do not always succeed, but usually do. I am up before eight, and have breakfasted and taken a walk by nine, when I sit down at my desk. There I work until 11.

"Then I drive into New York from Westchester County, where I live—it takes about half an hour—and I work in my office at Juilliard until 6, 6:30 or all evening if I have to.

"I really enjoy all this. I like running the school as much as writing music, and to me they are not different careers, but parts of one career. I wouldn't want to spend my life in one room writing all the time. It is my temperament to have a public occupation as an educator as well as a private creative one.

"At Juilliard just now, we are looking forward to the construction of our unit at Lincoln Center—you know, the big project where the New York Philharmonic and Metropolitan Opera also will be. Everything has to be finished by 1964, in time for the next New York World's Fair.

"We are quite excited over it, although it will mean a substantial change of policy. Juilliard today has an enrollment of between 1600 and 1700 students, preparatory and advanced. The plan is to curtail the enrollment, and run a school which will educate the cream of performing talent in this country.

To that end we shall have a dance and a drama department in addition to the musical departments we now have.

The preparatory division will not be cast to the winds, but we want to find another agency to take it over.

"Juilliard will then become a true conservatory of all the performing arts, for the best talents."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Lenscraft Photo
William Schuman, Charles Munch, and Mrs. Schuman after the Boston Symphony gave the premiere of Mr. Schuman's Seventh Symphony

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,121
OCT 16 1960

Ford Works Have Premiere

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

In March, 1959, the Ford Foundation made grants of $5,000 each to ten prominent concert artists, who were called upon to commission ten composers for works to be performed by them with ten American orchestras. By an unplanned coincidence, the first works resulting from this project to be heard in public will both have their premieres this Thursday evening. The New York Philharmonic, under Leonard Bernstein, will introduce Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" for soprano and orchestra that night in Carnegie Hall with Adele Addison, who commissioned it, as the soloist, while the Atlanta Symphony will offer Vittorio Giannini's "The Medead", under Henry Sopkin's direction in Georgia's capital with Irene Jordan as the soprano soloist.

The Philharmonic will play another work commissioned through this project, Ben Weber's Piano Concerto, on March 23, 24, 25 and 26 with William Masselos as the soloist. The Ford Foundation's total outlay under this plan is $130,000, which includes the cost of the commissions and the extra rehearsal time needed by the orchestras for preparing the new works. Each one will be played by three of the orchestras taking part in this plan during this season or the next; the Giannini work will also be heard in San Francisco and Detroit.

• • •

Schools in Merger

The Mannes College of Music and the Chatham Square Music School have been consolidated and will both operate in the college's present building at 157 E. 74th St., with a combined board of trustees. While the corporate name of the combined corporation will be that of the Mannes College, both schools will be autonomous and continue their present functions. The merger will strengthen their financial position and allow them to provide greater artistic and educational services.

The Mannes College, originally known as the David Mannes Music School, was founded by the late David and Clara Mannes in 1916, and became a degree granting institution under Leopold Mannes' presidency in 1953. Its present enrollment is more than 600 students. The Chatham Square School was incorporated under Samuel Chotzinoff's direction in 1937, and trains talented students for professional careers on a free scholarship basis.

• • •

New Schuman Symphony

William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 will have its first performances in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's home concerts this Friday afternoon and Saturday night under Charles Munch's direction. It was commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

Meanwhile the San Antonio Symphony, under Victor Alessandro, has named Mr. Schuman as Composer of the Year for this season, when its programs will include eight performances of four of his works.

• • •

Durante Project

Jimmy Durante may appear as a pianist with several orchestras next season, if plans now under discussion between the noted comedian and the Columbia Artists Management are carried through. According to this project, Mr. Durante would provide both straight piano playing and instrumental and verbal humor in benefit concerts.

Boston Symphony Premieres 7th Symphony by Schuman

■ Of the Boston Symphony we expect the best of the old and the new, and this season promises both in about equal measure. The premiere of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony was worth waiting for (it had been commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary five years ago). The music is both lean and lusty, altogether "American" in its dynamism and brass component. But Schuman clearly understands that volume must serve rhetoric, and he handles his forces convincingly.

Other weekend concerts of annual interest are these assigned to the Symphony's assistant conductor and concertmaster, Richard Burgin. This year, Mr. Burgin coupled Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite with Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" in a concert that crackled with excitement. Assisting was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The chief event of the concert season so far, was the appearance here of Sviatoslav Richter as soloist for two concertos for the annual Pension Fund Concert. The big man with the air of benign humility made it clear that he was glad to be on hand to help personally the orchestra which, by its spying him out on its tour of Soviet Russia, was primary in pressing for his tour here (the negotiations were accomplished ultimately by Sol Hurok).

To his performance of Beethoven's First Concerto he applied a scrutiny of note-placement, of nuance and piquant detail, of upbeat and slurring that completely articulated the brisk sections and gave the slow movement a sustained and lofty calm. More revelations came with Brahms Second Concerto, in which Richter's mixture of leopard's pounce and sudden caress made a charged excitement difficult to match. He converted the Symphony men to his audience, too.

Music Courier Dec. 1960

21

EIGHTIETH SEASON • • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

SCHUMAN ..... Symphony No. 7

I. Largo assai
II. Vigoroso
III. Cantabile intensamente
IV. Scherzando brioso

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[157]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
OCT 20 1960

Composer and Educator, Schuman Thrives on Work

By CYRUS DURGIN

William Schuman is a composer who creates upon rationed time. He has no complaint that he cannot spend all his waking hours writing upon manuscript paper. As such, he is a distinct rarity.

Schuman, recently turned 50, is further unusual in that he successfully combines a creative career with one as president of the Juilliard School of Music in New York City. He enjoys it all.

"You ask me if my administrative work cramps my own composition. Let me put it this way. I am now beginning my 16th year at Juilliard. In the past 15 years I have written my Sixth and now Seventh Symphony, an opera 'The Mighty Casey', a piano concerto and a work for violin, also the piece called Credendum. Those are the works I recall off-hand.

"Perhaps I might have written more if I hadn't had the job at Juilliard, but I doubt it.

"After all, that seems a fairly reasonable production of music I have done both jobs, and liked them; I've accepted commissions and delivered the compositions—perhaps not on time, but I've delivered them."

One such is Schuman's Seventh Symphony which, commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation for the 75th Anniversary season of the Orchestra, five years ago, was completed last May. Tomorrow afternoon and Saturday night at Symphony Hall, Dr. Charles Munch will conduct its first two performances.

"It is a smaller work than the Sixth Symphony," explained Schuman, who has come to Boston for the rehearsals and premiere of the Seventh. "Smaller, that is, in the sense that it is shorter. It does use a very big orchestra, however. There are four movements, of which the first and second and the third and fourth are played without pause. They run into each other. As I can estimate it now, it is quite unlike the Sixth, which was a big brooding work. The Seventh ends with a lively, rythmic finale.

"I wrote it as I have written all my work for years past. The first three hours of every day I try to devote to myself. I try, do not always succeed, but usually do. I am up before eight, and have breakfasted and taken a walk by nine, when I sit down at my desk. There I work until 11.

"Then I drive into New York from Westchester County, where I live—it takes about half an hour—and I work in my office at Juilliard until 6, 6:30 or all evening if I have to.

"I really enjoy all this. I like running the school as much as writing music, and to me they are not different careers, but parts of one career. I wouldn't want to spend my life in one room writing all the time. It is my temperament to have a public occupation as an educator as well as a private creative one.

"At Juilliard just now, we are looking forward to the construction of our unit at Lincoln Center—you know, the big project where the New York Philharmonic and Metropolitan Opera also will be. Everything has to be finished by 1964, in time for the next New York World's Fair.

"We are quite excited over it, although it will mean a substantial change of policy. Juilliard today has an enrollment of between 1600 and 1700 students, preparatory and advanced. The plan is to curtail the enrollment, and run a school which will educate the cream of performing talent in this country.

To that end we shall have a dance and a drama department in addition to the musical departments we now have.

The preparatory division will not be cast to the winds, but we want to find another agency to take it over.

"Juilliard will then become a true conservatory of all the performing arts, for the best talents."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Boston

Schuman's Seventh Symphony Premiered

William Schuman is an exceedingly busy musician. He composes on rationed time each morning except Sundays, which means that sometimes a commissioned work arrives late. His Symphony No. 7, jointly commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its 75th Anniversary season, and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, arrived five years late. It has proved worth waiting for. Charles Munch conducted the first performance anywhere at the Symphony Hall concerts of Oct. 21 and 22, with the composer in attendance.

The type of composition which Schuman's new work represents is surely one aspect of the music of our future.

This is true in two senses. First, the work embodies a logical extension of harmonic and structural freedoms pioneered early in this century. Second, and more important to the public, its texture of sound requires ears that can accommodate dissonance resulting from almost constant use of at least two keys at the same time.

One's first general impressions of the Schuman Seventh are of a work that is mature and intellectually cool; highly organized by a technical master. It is very individual, and could not be confused with any other contemporary music that I know. Even its play of dissonance is personal, consisting less of harmony derived from two or more keys at once, than of a counterpoint of

(Continued on page 18)

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

OCT 16 1960

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30. President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned jointly by the orchestra and by the Koussevitsky Foundation to compose his Symphony for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary season. Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled.

The Orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when it makes its first tour of the season. Doctor Munch will conduct in Rochester, N. Y., Syracuse, N. Y., Corning, N. Y., Columbus, Ohio, Detroit, Mich. and Ann Arbor, Mich.

Doctor Munch will conduct the orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theater on Tuesday, at 8:30 P.M. in Haydn's Symphony No. 98, Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. On Thursday evening, the first Open Rehearsal, to benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund, will be held at Symphony Hall at 8:30 p.m.

TODAY

The New York Pro Musica Motet Choir and Wind Ensemble, Noah Greenberg, director, Jordan Hall, 3:30. First event in the Mason Music Foundation series this season. Program includes Isaac, Des Prez, Willaert and a Mass by Obrecht. Admission free, but by ticket.

Julian Bream, guitarist and lutenist, 4:30 p.m., to open the Castle Hill Candlelight Concert series in Ipswich. Tickets at Castle Hill Foundation.

Maple Street Choir, William McGowan, conductor, Vesper Service, 4:30 p.m., in the Old North Church, works by Pachelbel, Franck, Ahle and Brahms. Assisting are Dorothy Jenkins, soprano, Arthur Higgins, trumpet and Mrs. Richard Waitt, organ. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

Dr. Karl Geiringer's "Great Music" Series continues at the Boston University College of Liberal Arts, (Room 12.) Lecture illustrated with music, 7:15 p.m.

SATURDAY

Brookline Youth Concert, with Harry Dickson conducting an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in 10th anniversary concert, Roberts Auditorium, Brookline High School, 2:00 p.m. Works by Virginia Gieser, Bach, McDonald, Prokofieff. The Dennison Puppeteers assist in "Peter and the Wolf," with Augustus Zanzig as narrator.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

OCT 21 1960

At Symphony

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night in Symphony Hall.

Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled for these concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

OCT 16 1960

Schuman Symphony No. 7

Charles Munch will conduct first performances anywhere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the Symphony Hall concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30. The work is a belated completion of a commission for the Orchestra's 75th Anniversary season by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The program will include Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and the D Minor Symphony by Cesar Franck.

Dr. Munch and the Orchestra will open the Sanders Theater, Cambridge, series Tuesday evening, with Haydn's B-flat Symphony, No. 98; Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven.

The Boston Symphony will be away next week upon the annual mid-Western tour. Upon its return to Symphony Hall, Nov. 4 and 5, Richard Burgin will conduct. His program will consist of "Belshazzar's Feast" by Walton (a work unheard at these concerts since 1933), the First Symphony of Beethoven, and Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin."

This Thursday evening the first Open Rehearsal, to benefit the Orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 7:30.

(Continued from page 16)

two keys sounding against each other. There is a subtle difference.

Among the four movements, the first and second, third and fourth run together. The first is largo and has the greater weight of sound and idea (perhaps the only remnant here of German symphonic tradition). The second is a kind of scherzo. The third, cantabile intensamente, is an extended and passionate slow song, the key-against-key counterpoint still prevailing. The last movement is even more of a scherzo than the second; it is more free and fascinating, both rhythmically and in the spectrum of instrumental colors.

The colors of the first three movements result from the massing of instruments rather than from individual contrast. They are, however, relieved by solo passages, notably a remarkable duet for clarinet and bass clarinet at the end of the second movement.

The first two and the last movements may be said to generate heat, not warmth—the caloric heat of motion and harmonic friction rather than the warming glow which, groping for a word, we call emotional. All the way, the orchestra is large. In the end movements, it is huge with percussion.

Schuman's Seventh Symphony stood midway on a program that began with Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and ended with the D minor of Franck. Both were played with fine, rich vigor and sensitivity.

Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches", commissioned by the Detroit Symphony and played there and at the Worcester, Mass., Festival of 1959, received first Boston hearings Oct. 14 and 15. There is nothing intentionally descriptive, much less programmatic about Mr. Piston's excellent music. However, he reserves the right of a free man to maintain that the three subtitles, "Seaside", "Summer Evening" and "Mountains", "serve in a broad sense to tell the source of the impressions, reminiscences, even dreams, that pervaded the otherwise musical thoughts of one New England composer."

That is fair enough, even though "Seaside" begins in a coloristic manner, including a hushed roll on a suspended cymbal which at least from Debussy to Benjamin Britten, has indicated salt water. We need not believe, either, that the string trills which open "Summer Evening" are the joyous dining sound of mosquitoes.

Piston has produced three symphonic movements that are healthy with the free play of rhythm, muscular in the effect of their lively contrapuntal melodies, and well-built, with small, sturdy skeletons of musical structure fleshed out by fascinating and expert instrumentation.

"Mountains" is big music, with the giant tread of kettledrums beneath the powerful strings. There is a fine fugue, or at least a fugato, in the movement. The "New England Sketches" are thoroughly enjoyable, and this listener looks forward to hearing them again.

As an opening piece for these concerts, Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony gave us Haydn's B-flat Symphony, No. 98, which strikes me as dull Haydn (if there is such a thing!). To conclude, there was Brahms's Violin Concerto, with a soloist new to us—Jacob Krachmalnick. Once a student at the Berkshire Music Center, and a pupil of Zimbalist, Krachmalnick is a very good executant, with notably controlled bowing, accurate pitch and a penetrating if not especially large tone. He did not impress me, however, as an unusual musical personality. But the sense of musical continuity with which he invested the cadenza was exceptional. The cadenza emerged not just as fiddler's technical joy, but as an unaccompanied extension of the musical thought of the movement.

Dr. Munch chose a relatively conservative and substantial list for the earlier concerts which began the Orchestra's 80th season on Oct. 7 and 8. Stravinsky's "Card Game" began, followed by Poulenc's Concerto for Organ and Strings with Berj Zamkochian at the console, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. The Beethoven was done more excellently by Munch than I have heard it before.

Boris Goldovsky and his New England Opera Theatre left on a two months' tour with Mozart's "Don Giovanni" after giving a pair of trial performances at Jordan Hall on Oct. 13 and 14. The company will be known on the road as the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre.

Partially alternate casts were employed here, since eventualities of illness must be considered. The one I heard was, without exception, exceedingly good. Still, there were two singers who led all the rest: Marguerite Willauer as Donna Anna, and Spiro Malas in the role of Leporello. Miss Willauer's voice has increased in size and luster, and she sang her two arias in a real Mozartean glory. Mr. Malas, said to be a comparative operatic beginner, has a talent that is broad and deep, both musically and in acting.

Ronald Holgate as the wicked Don; Marguerite Gignac as Donna Elvira; Jeanette Scovotti, who made a lovely Zerlina and sang like an angel; James Wainner as Don Ottavio, whose part he sang with virile resonance and excellent style; Sherrill Milnes as Masetto; Lucien Olivier as the Commendatore and Justino Diaz as the voice of The Statute (Goldovsky believes two voices are best for these parts), all contributed to the pleasure. Mr. Goldovsky conducted.

Van Cliburn gave his first solo concert in Boston. This sold-out event, which even filled as many stage seats as were permitted, opened the 1960-61 Boston University Celebrity Series at Symphony Hall on Oct. 14. Three works made up the program: Liszt's B minor Sonata; the Sonata in E-flat minor, Op. 26, by Samuel Barber; and Rachmaninoff's Sonata No. 2. The last two were rarities in this city.

All told, the evening was one of virtuosity rather than poetry. The outward aspects were dazzling, however, and had Cliburn asked his public to stand on their heads I am sure that would have followed.

He began with a fancily harmonized and rhythmically mannered performance of The Star Spangled Banner. Times probably have changed but, nevertheless, perhaps he ought to be warned. Not so many years ago, police were on hand in Symphony Hall when a sour Stravinsky harmonization of the national anthem was threatened.

The New York Pro Musica Motet Choir and Wind Ensemble gave a concert in Jordan Hall Oct. 16, beginning a new season of free concerts presented by the Mason Music Foundation. It was sheer delight. Noah Greenberg devoted the afternoon to music by the Flemish masters: Isaac, Josquin Des Pres, Willaert and Obrecht.

Roland Hayes gave a concert in Jordan Hall on Oct. 2 as a benefit for the Cardinal Cushing Rehabilitation Center at Holy Ghost Hospital. On this occasion, Reginald Boardman was again a dedicated and sensitive accompanist.

—Cyrus Durgin

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 24 1960

Symphony Premiere

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned jointly by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and the orchestra to compose his Seventh Symphony for the orchestra's 75th anniversary season. Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled for these concerts.

The orchestra will be absent next week when it makes its first tour of the season. Dr. Munch will conduct the concerts on tour.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

OCT 22 1960

Schuman Symphony No. 7 Given Premiere by Munch

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday–Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Mozart: "Jupiter" Symphony; William Schuman: Symphony No. 7 (first performance); Franck: Symphony in D minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Between the comfortable and familiar pleasures of Mozart and Franck, at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday, came the first performance of what I daresay will prove a notable: the Symphony No. 7 by William Schuman.

This is a work of stature and power, though at the moment hard listening and not likely to win friends immediately. Yet it was rather well received, and the composer bowed happily from the stage.

During its course I kept thinking of what Richard Wagner called his own work: "the music of the future." For our own time, the type of composition which Schuman's new work represents is surely one aspect of the music of our future.

This is true in two senses, one, that it is a logical extension of harmonic and structural freedoms pioneered early in this Century; two, and more importantly for the public, that its texture of sound requires ears that can accommodate the phenomenon of dissonance resulting from the almost constant use of at least two keys at the same time.

Dissonance, so-called, is much more readily assimilated now than 50 years ago, according to its kind and degree, but we have yet a long way to go. Not that I would wish to discourage Schuman (impossible, fortunately!) by suggesting a half-Century will be required for his Seventh Symphony to make its way, but listeners of even 25 years hence will find it much more quickly comprehensible and enjoyable. By that time their ears, to quote Charles Ives' useful verb, will be "stretched."

For the moment, one can state only general impressions of a work mature and intellectually cool, highly organized by a technical master.

It is very individual, and could not be confused with any other contemporary music that I know. Even its play of dissonance is personal, less harmony derived from two or more keys at once, than a counterpoint of two keys sounding against each other. There is a subtle difference.

The four movements, of which first and second, third and fourth run into each other may be briefly described. The first is slow and has the greater weight of sound and idea (perhaps the only remnant here of German symphonic tradition); the second, vigoroso, is a kind of scherzo; the third, cantabile intensamente is an extended and passionate slow song, the key-against-key counterpoint still prevailing the last is even more a scherzo than the second, and it is more free and fascinating, rythmically and in the spectrum of instrumental colors.

The colors of the first three movements result from massed instruments rather than individual contrast though they are relieved by some solo passages, most notably the remarkable duet for clarinet and bass clarinet at the end of the second.

The first two and the last may be said to generate heat not warmth—the caloric heat of motion and harmonic friction, not that warming glow which we, groping for a word call emotional. All the way the orchestra is large, and in the end movements huge with percussion.

There is not enough space remaining to report fully the fine, sensitive quality of Dr. Munch's conducting yesterday and the Orchestra's responsive excellence. He was intent upon preserving a clean balance of sections, both in Mozart and Franck. He successfully strove to keep the volume to the level indicated in the scores. The Mozart and Franck finales were fast, but they were clear, rich and cohesive. The orchestral sound from first to last, was gorgeous. The concert, for me at least, was wholly a joy.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The concerts on Nov. 4 and 5 will be conducted by Richard Burgin, and will bring Beethoven's First Symphony; Bartok's Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin," and "Belshazzar's Feast," by Walton.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SENT-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Boston

Schuman's Seventh Symphony Premiered

William Schuman is an exceedingly busy musician. He composes on rationed time each morning except Sundays, which means that sometimes a commissioned work arrives late. His Symphony No. 7, jointly commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its 75th Anniversary season, and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, arrived five years late. It has proved worth waiting for. Charles Munch conducted the first performance anywhere at the Symphony Hall concerts of Oct. 21 and 22, with the composer in attendance.

The type of composition which Schuman's new work represents is surely one aspect of the music of our future.

This is true in two senses. First, the work embodies a logical extension of harmonic and structural freedoms pioneered early in this century. Second, and more important to the public, its texture of sound requires ears that can accommodate dissonance resulting from almost constant use of at least two keys at the same time.

One's first general impressions of the Schuman Seventh are of a work that is mature and intellectually cool; highly organized by a technical master. It is very individual, and could not be confused with any other contemporary music that I know. Even its play of dissonance is personal, consisting less of harmony derived from two or more keys at once, than of a counterpoint of

(Continued on page 18)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 16 1960

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30. President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned jointly by the orchestra and by the Koussevitsky Foundation to compose his Symphony for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary season. Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled.

The Orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when it makes its first tour of the season. Doctor Munch will conduct in Rochester, N. Y., Syracuse, N. Y., Corning, N. Y., Columbus, Ohio, Detroit, Mich. and Ann Arbor, Mich.

Doctor Munch will conduct the orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theater on Tuesday, at 8:30 P.M. in Haydn's Symphony No. 98, Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. On Thursday evening, the first Open Rehearsal, to benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund, will be held at Symphony Hall at 8:30 p.m.

TODAY

The New York Pro-Musica Motet Choir and Wind Ensemble, Noah Greenberg, director, Jordan Hall, 3:30. First event in the Mason Music Foundation series this season. Program includes Isaac, Des Prez, Willaert and a Mass by Obrecht. Admission free, but by ticket.

Julian Bream, guitarist and lutenist, 4:30 p.m., for the Castle Hill Candlelight Concert Series in Ipswich. Tickets at Castle Hill Foundation.

Maple Street Choir, William McGowan, conductor, Vesper Service, 4:30 p.m., in the Old North Church, works by Pachelbel, Franck, Ahle and Brahms. Assisting are Dorothy Jenkins, soprano, Arthur Higgins, trumpet and Mrs. Richard Walitt, organ. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

Dr. Karl Geiringer's "Great Music" Series continues at the Boston University College of Liberal Arts, (Room 12.) Lecture illustrated with music. 7:15 p.m.

SATURDAY

Brookline Youth Concert, with Harry Dickson conducting an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in 10th anniversary concert, Roberts Auditorium, Brookline High School, 2:00 p.m. Works by Virginia Glaser, Bach, McDonald, Prokofieff. The Dennison Puppeteers assist in "Peter and the Wolf," with Augustus Zanzig as narrator.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
OCT 21 1960

At Symphony

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night in Symphony Hall.

Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled for [illegible] concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 16 1960

Schuman Symphony No. 7

Charles Munch will conduct first performances anywhere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the Symphony Hall concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30. The work is a belated completion of a commission for the Orchestra's 75th Anniversary season by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The program will include Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and the D Minor Symphony by Cesar Franck.

Dr. Munch and the Orchestra will open the Sanders Theater, Cambridge, series Tuesday evening, with Haydn's B-flat Symphony, No. 98; Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, and the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven.

The Boston Symphony will be away next week upon the annual mid-Western tour. Upon its return to Symphony Hall, Nov. 4 and 5, Richard Burgin will conduct. His program will consist of "Belshazzar's Feast" by Walton, (a work unheard at these concerts since 1933), the First Symphony of Beethoven, and Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin."

This Thursday evening the first Open Rehearsal, to benefit the Orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 7:30.

(Continued from page 16)

two keys sounding against each other. There is a subtle difference.

Among the four movements, the first and second, third and fourth run together. The first is largo and has the greater weight of sound and idea (perhaps the only remnant here of German symphonic tradition). The second is a kind of scherzo. The third, cantabile intensamente, is an extended and passionate slow song, the key-against-key counterpoint still prevailing. The last movement is even more of a scherzo than the second; it is more free and fascinating, both rhythmically and in the spectrum of instrumental colors.

The colors of the first three movements result from the massing of instruments rather than from individual contrast. They are, however, relieved by solo passages, notably a remarkable duet for clarinet and bass clarinet at the end of the second movement.

The first two and the last movements may be said to generate heat, not warmth—the caloric heat of motion and harmonic friction rather than the warming glow which, groping for a word, we call emotional. All the way, the orchestra is large. In the end movements, it is huge with percussion.

Schuman's Seventh Symphony stood midway on a program that began with Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and ended with the D minor of Franck. Both were played with fine, rich vigor and sensitivity.

Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches", commissioned by the Detroit Symphony and played there and at the Worcester, Mass., Festival of 1959, received first Boston hearings Oct. 14 and 15. There is nothing intentionally descriptive, much less programmatic about Mr. Piston's excellent music. However, he reserves the right of a free man to maintain that the three subtitles, "Seaside", "Summer Evening" and "Mountains", "serve in a broad sense to tell the source of the impressions, reminiscences, even dreams, that pervaded the otherwise musical thoughts of one New England composer."

That is fair enough, even though "Seaside" begins in a coloristic manner, including a hushed roll on a suspended cymbal which at least from Debussy to Benjamin Britten, has indicated salt water. We need not believe, either, that the string trills which open "Summer Evening" are the joyous dining sound of mosquitoes.

Piston has produced three symphonic movements that are healthy with the free play of rhythm, muscular in the effect of their lively contrapuntal melodies, and well-built, with small, sturdy skeletons of musical structure fleshed out by fascinating and expert instrumentation.

"Mountains" is big music, with the giant tread of kettledrums beneath the powerful strings. There is a fine fugue, or at least a fugato, in the movement. The "New England Sketches" are thoroughly enjoyable, and this listener looks forward to hearing them again.

As an opening piece for these concerts, Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony gave us Haydn's B-flat Symphony, No. 98, which strikes me as dull Haydn (if there is such a thing!). To conclude, there was Brahms's Violin Concerto, with a soloist new to us—Jacob Krachmalnick. Once a student at the Berkshire Music Center, and a pupil of Zimbalist, Krachmalnick is a very good executant, with notably controlled bowing, accurate pitch and a penetrating if not especially large tone. He did not impress me, however, as an unusual musical personality. But the sense of musical continuity with which he invested the cadenza was exceptional. The cadenza emerged not just as fiddler's technical joy, but as an unaccompanied extension of the musical thought of the movement.

Dr. Munch chose a relatively conservative and substantial list for the earlier concerts which began the Orchestra's 80th season on Oct. 7 and 8. Stravinsky's "Card Game" began, followed by Poulenc's Concerto for Organ and Strings with Berj Zamkochian at the console, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. The Beethoven was done more excellently by Munch than I have heard it before.

Boris Goldovsky and his New England Opera Theatre left on a two months' tour with Mozart's "Don Giovanni" after giving a pair of trial performances at Jordan Hall on Oct. 13 and 14. The company will be known on the road as the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre.

Partially alternate casts were employed here, since eventualities of illness must be considered. The one I heard was, without exception, exceedingly good. Still, there were two singers who led all the rest: Marguerite Willauer as Donna Anna, and Spiro Malas in the role of Leporello. Miss Willauer's voice has increased in size and luster, and she sang her two arias in real Mozartean glory. Mr. Malas, said to be a comparative operatic beginner, has a talent that is broad and deep, both musically and in acting.

Ronald Holgate as the wicked Don; Marguerite Gignac as Donna Elvira; Jeanette Scovotti, who made a lovely Zerlina and sang like an angel; James Wainner as Don Ottavio, whose part he sang with virile resonance and excellent style; Sherrill Milnes as Masetto; Lucien Olivier as the Commendatore and Justino Diaz as the voice of The Statute (Goldovsky believes two voices are best for these parts), all contributed to the pleasure. Mr. Goldovsky conducted.

Van Cliburn gave his first solo concert in Boston. This sold-out event, which even filled as many stage seats as were permitted, opened the 1960-61 Boston University Celebrity Series at Symphony Hall on Oct. 14. Three works made up the program: Liszt's B minor Sonata; the Sonata in E-flat minor, Op. 26, by Samuel Barber; and Rachmaninoff's Sonata No. 2. The last two were rarities in this city.

All told, the evening was one of virtuosity rather than poetry. The outward aspects were dazzling, however, and had Cliburn asked his public to stand on their heads I am sure that would have followed.

He began with a fancily harmonized and rhythmically mannered performance of The Star Spangled Banner. Times probably have changed but, nevertheless, perhaps he ought to be warned. Not so many years ago, police were on hand in Symphony Hall when a sour Stravinsky harmonization of the national anthem was threatened.

The New York Pro Musica Motet Choir and Wind Ensemble gave a concert in Jordan Hall Oct. 16, beginning a new season of free concerts presented by the Mason Music Foundation. It was sheer delight. Noah Greenberg devoted the afternoon to music by the Flemish masters: Isaac, Josquin Des Pres, Willaert and Obrecht.

Roland Hayes gave a concert in Jordan Hall on Oct. 2 as a benefit for the Cardinal Cushing Rehabilitation Center at Holy Ghost Hospital. On this occasion, Reginald Boardman was again a dedicated and sensitive accompanist.

—Cyrus Durgin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
OCT 24 1960

Symphony Premiere

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned jointly by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and the orchestra to compose his Seventh Symphony for the orchestra's 75th anniversary season. Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled for these concerts.

The orchestra will be absent next week when it makes its first tour of the season. Dr. Munch will conduct the concerts on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750
OCT 22 1960

Schuman Symphony No. 7 Given Premiere by Munch

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Mozart: "Jupiter" Symphony; William Schuman: Symphony No. 7 (first performance); Franck: Symphony in D minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Between the comfortable and familiar pleasures of Mozart and Franck, at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday, came the first performance of what I daresay will prove a notable: the Symphony No. 7 by William Schuman.

This is a work of stature and power, though at the moment hard listening and not likely to win friends immediately. Yet it was rather well received, and the composer bowed happily from the stage.

During its course I kept thinking of what Richard Wagner called his own work: "the music of the future." For our own time, the type of composition which Schuman's new work represents is surely one aspect of the music of our future.

This is true in two senses, one, that it is a logical extension of harmonic and structural freedoms pioneered early in this Century; two, and more importantly for the public, that its texture of sound requires ears that can accommodate the phenomenon of dissonance resulting from the almost constant use of at least two keys at the same time.

Dissonance, so-called, is much more readily assimilated now than 50 years ago, according to its kind and degree, but we have yet a long way to go. Not that I would wish to discourage Schuman (impossible, fortunately!) by suggesting a half-Century will be required for his Seventh Symphony to make its way, but listeners of even 25 years hence will find it much more quickly comprehensible and enjoyable. By that time their ears, to quote Charles Ives' useful verb, will be "stretched."

For the moment, one can state only general impressions of a work mature and intellectually cool, highly organized by a technical master.

It is very individual, and could not be confused with any other contemporary music that I know. Even its play of dissonance is personal, less harmony derived from two or more keys at once, than a counterpoint of two keys sounding against each other. There is a subtle difference.

The four movements, of which first and second, third and fourth run into each other may be briefly described. The first is slow and has the greater weight of sound and idea (perhaps the only remnant here of German symphonic tradition); the second, vigoroso, is a kind of scherzo; the third, cantabile intensamente is an extended and passionate slow song, the key-against-key counterpoint still prevailing; the last is even more a scherzo than the second, and it is more free and fascinating, rythmically and in the spectrum of instrumental colors.

The colors of the first three movements result from massed instruments, rather than individual contrast, though they are relieved by some solo passages, most notably the remarkable duet for clarinet and bass clarinet at the end of the second.

The first two and the last may be said to generate heat, not warmth—the caloric heat of motion and harmonic friction, not that warming glow which we, groping for a word, call emotional. All the way the orchestra is large, and in the end movements huge with percussion.

There is not enough space remaining to report fully the fine, sensitive quality of Dr. Munch's conducting yesterday and the Orchestra's responsive excellence. He was intent upon preserving a clean balance of sections, both in Mozart and Franck. He successfully strove to keep the volume to the level indicated in the scores. The Mozart and Franck finales were fast, but they were clear, rich and cohesive. The orchestral sound from first to last, was gorgeous. The concert, for me at least, was wholly a joy.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The concerts of Nov. 4 and 5 will be conducted by Richard Burgin, and will bring Beethoven's First Symphony; Bartok's Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin," and "Belshazzar's Feast," by Walton.

23

-Schuman Symphony in World Première

Munch Conducts Composer's Seventh

By Harold Rogers

There aren't many composers nowadays who can drive even one listener from Symphony Hall; music lovers are generally hardy enough, or curious enough, or inured enough to hang on till the double bar. But yesterday afternoon William Schuman drove a listener from her seat while the final movement of his new symphony was reaching its climax. She was sitting only two rows in front of him, and I daresay he accepted the gesture as a kind of compliment.

This pièce de résistance was Mr. Schuman's Seventh Symphony, the world première of which has been five years late in arriving. It was commissioned by the Serge Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in celebration of the orchestra's 75th anniversary, now five years gone by. But it was worth waiting for.

Charles Munch sandwiched it between Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and the Franck D minor, cushion enough for the rigors of Mr. Schuman's virile score. The beauty of his Seventh is that it is as carefully organized as the Mozart, though to an entirely different end, of course. As Mozart enjoyed himself while tossing a theme from choir to choir, so does Mr. Schuman, even if meanwhile his players are involved in a scrimmage of dissonance.

In this work Mr. Schuman (who is president of the Juilliard School of Music in New York) has written, as usual, with clear intelligence and muscular drive. And his music, too, has an American stamp, yet without obvious folklorish devices. The time has gone by when Americans had to reach out to Indians, or cowboys, or square dances, or Negros, or the Pennsylvania Dutch for inspiration. It is now possible for a composer to write absolute American music. Mr. Schuman does it consistently.

His first movement opens with a mood of nocturnal contemplation, evolving into a sense of longing that becomes more intense, even fiery. It reaches its climax with strong brassy statements, after which it returns to calmer aspiration and a strange kind of fragmentation in solo statements. Then in the second movement come bursts of anger—as if he were crying havoc—which lapse into fretful anxiety.

For his third section he gives us a song, something like a threnody that weeps gently. If the listener feels at first that he has reached a resting place, he soon finds himself caught in the flow of an inexorable tension, though not without tenderness.

The final part is a dynamic dance, roaring in sound and vital in rhythm. This heady excitement is muted on occasion by the intrusion of an odd little waltz, the theme of which is held onto and developed into a ranging chorale of glory.

At this point Mr. Schuman lost his one listener, after which his symphony came crashing to a close in a sunburst of sound. Both he and Dr. Munch, who had discharged the conducting assignment with élan, were roundly applauded, not without a few brave bravos.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
OCT 16 1960

Symphony Pl

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Oct. 15 — Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7" at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts next Friday at 2:15 p. m. and next Saturday at 8:30 p. m. President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned by the orchestra and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation to compose his "Seventh Symphony" for the orchestra's 75th anniversary season. Mozart's "Symphony No. 41" and the "Symphony in D Minor" by Franck are also scheduled for these concerts.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when it makes it first tour of the season. Doctor Munch will conduct the concerts on tour; cities to be visited include: Rochester, Syracuse and Corning, all in New York; Columbus, Ohio; Detroit, Mich., and Ann Arbor, Mich.

The orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts on Nov. 4 and Nov. 5. His program will include the first performance since 1933 by this orchestra of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" plus Beethoven's "Symphony No. 1" and "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theater on Tuesday a 8:30 p. m. in a program of Haydn's "Symphony No. 98," Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7." On Thursday night the first open rehearsal, to benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will be held at Symphony Hall at 7:30.

Lowell Eve. Sun 10/22/60

Music

World Premier of Schuman's Symphony

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Dr. Charles Munch at the first open rehearsal of the season by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted the world premiere of William Schuman's "Symphony No. 7." Remaining portions of the program included Mozart's "Jupiter" and Franck's "Symphony in D minor."

Eugenio Fernandi

William Schuman who is one of this country's leading composers and president of Juilliard school of music was commissioned to compose his Seventh Symphony for the Boston Symphony's 25th anniversary.

As in past experiences with the composer's music, we found it born imaginative and interesting. Possibly the modern trend is advancing up on American listeners, and enabling them to listen to new composition with an expectency and composure.

However, Mr. Schuman's latest creation is somewhat problematic in its early measures. Always waiting for a melodic pattern to break out, the listener is led up to the brink many times, but somehow the melodic idea is never fulfilled.

There are some tremendous percussion parts, speedy tours around the individual instrumental sections, all splendidly assembled, and at time some quite interesting string passages. With his customery wisdom Dr. Munch refused to dally at any length of time in certain parts that came through rather uneven, but stressed his ideas with a simplicity of effort.

This symphony is difficult to understand at first hearing and thus forces the listener to reserve judgment other than a brief outline of what we have mentioned.

The remaining portions of the rehearsal provided some fine results. Of the two other symphonies listed, the Franck fared the better. There was precision in technique and the rhythmical pattern unfolded superbly.

The Jupiter is a great favorite with symphonic students, but in its charm and easy acceptance there is an undercurrent of performing pitfalls. Many times orchestras are inclined to take this music in stride, while being assured that all will end well. On this occasion it was possible to detect here and there spots where the cadence fell short.

However, one must concede that these things happen, making even the finest of orchestras somewhat under the weather in their endeavors. At the rehearsal the orchestra ran along this line for a time, but to their credit they caught fire in the latter moments of this symphony resulting in the usual performance of excellency.

A Festival of Music will be presented at Ye Olde Yellow Meeting house, Dracut, tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Appearing in the program will be St. Paul's Methodist church youth choir, Anna Roth Large, director; Frank L. Orrell, tenor; Phyllis Kirsch, pianist, and Howard I. Large, organist. The soloists selected from the youth choir will be Dawn Cameron, Gwendolyn Talbot, Elaine Talbot, David Talbot and Donna Hinckley.

Eugenio Fernandi, tenor, will sing the role of Ismaele in the production of Verdi's "Nabucco" which will open the 76th season of the Metropolitan Opera company, on Monday evening in New York. This performance will mark the initial appearance of the opera at the Metropolitan.

Eugenio Fernandi who is a front rank artist will share honors with such noted singers as Cornell MacNeil Leonie Rusanek, Rosalind Elias, Cesare Siepe, Bonaldo Giaiotti, Paul Franke and Carlotta Ordassy.

RALD, SATURDAY, OCT. 22, 1960 MT

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the third program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 41 in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551 ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 7 ..... Schuman
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It is not fashionable these days to condemn new music. History has created a modern listener who, lest time prove him a fool, exists in a state of comfortable tolerance. At such a listener is William Schuman's Seventh Symphony, which had its world premiere with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, aimed.

I would like to be able to say this morning that Schuman's Seventh is a voice in the wilderness, a modern masterpiece. Or that the composer has made a howling error. I should like to be positive and categorical. I found, however, much to admire in the work, and much more to dislike; and underneath these conflicting impressions, one firm conviction—that Mr. Schuman's Symphony will never find its way into the basic repertoire.

For this is essentially a score without an audience. Other composers may hail the rhythmic ingenuity, complex texture and assymetrical originality of the form. The public may respond to the dynamic and propulsive vigor of certain passages. But in the end the Seventh substitutes cleverness for inspiration; the coterie of professional composers for a broad universality of emotion.

Exciting, Inventive

The first three movements, for me, were devoid of interest, but I thought the fourth brilliant, exciting, and inventive in its use of rhythms swinging from the bar lines like a flock of agile acrobats. There is nothing in American music today quite like William Schuman's rhythmic sense; there is too much of the mechanistic tension-and-relaxation pattern of the opening sections.

The Seventh Symphony's movements are marked "Largo assai," "Vigoroso," "Cantabile intensamente," and "Scherzando brioso," and these are played with only a scant pause between the first and second pair. The atmosphere of the largo is lugubrious, that of the "Virgoroso," dissonant and totally indefinite, the cantabile densely colored for strings, and the scherzando, finally catching fire, blazing with a sonorous exuberance. It all sounds as if Mr. Schuman were commissioned to "write a piece of 25 minutes' duration" for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is precisely what happened. The work is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

On the positive side, the instrumentation is handled adroitly and the composer makes his points without recourse to exotic sound effects. The rhythms, vigor, influenced by jazz yet wholly unique, carries the themes along. Obviously Mr. Schuman sought to obtain a proclamative strength, as the choral nature of his writing indicates. Instead of this, he conveys the flashy hopping from one idea to another; the ideas seem hardly worthwhile, but the hopes are impressive.

The composer, a rubicund and smiling man in his early 50's, was brought onstage amid moderate applause. Few present were caught napping by History and, in view of the final movement, I was among them. Trotting out the critical cliche that everything should be clarified on re-hearing, will, however, be avoided. Dr. Munch might take us up on it.

Felicity of Phrase

The "Jupiter" Symphony of Mozart and Franck's D minor exhibited Charles Munch at his best and at his worst in the rest of the program. The former was a brilliant performance. The conductor lavished rare warmth and tenderness on a reading that also had the grave balance and proportion of classic form. Dr. Munch is growing yearly as a Mozart interpreter; and this performace, at once so exquisite in detail and lofty in conception, disclosed a soaring felicity of phrase and spirit. This non-sentimental and yet touching interpretation of Mozart's wondrous masterpiece seemed perfection itself.

The reading of the Franck, in the sphere of French music where the conductor ordinarily excels, was no less than abominable. It was noisy, febrile, seeking theatrical climaxes in a work that survives during a more sophisticated symphonic age for the delicacy and refinement of its mystical vision. The D minor's naive and upward groping for the stars was treated as chase music. The only element lacking was a rainbow-colored mighty Wurlitzer on a rising platform. Thank heavens for Dr. Munch's fine-grained Mozart.

Next week the Symphony is on tour, returning Nov. 4-5 with Richard Burgin conducting. Alfred Nash Patterson will conduct the Chorus Pro Musica in Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast," Donald Gramm soloist. Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite, Op. 19, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 are also scheduled.

PASTE OVER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 20 1960

New Symphony Gets 1st Trial Here Tomorrow

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts tomorrow at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. President of New York's Juilliard School of Music, Mr. Schuman was commissioned by the Orchestra and the Goussevitzky Music Foundation to compose his Seventh Symphony for the son. Mozart's Symphony No. 41 and the Symphony in D minor by Franck are also scheduled for these concerts.

Continued on Page Three

The Orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when it makes its first tour of the season. Doctor Munch will conduct the concerts on tour; cities to be visited include: Rochester N. Y.), Syracuse (N. Y.), Corning (N.Y.), Columbus (Ohio). Detroit (Mich.), and Ann Arbor (Mich.).

The Orchestra's Associate Conductor, Richard Burgin, will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday (Nov. 4) and Saturday (Nov. 5). His program will include the first performance since 1933 by this Orchestra of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" plus Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and "The Miraculou Mandarin" by Bartok.

Charles Munch will conduct the Orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre on Tuesday, October 18, at 8:30, in a program of Haydn's Symphony No. 98, Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. On Thursday evening (Oct. 20) the first Open Rehearsal, to benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund, will be held at Symphony Hall at 7:30.

The complete programs:

Tues., Oct. 18, 8:30, Sanders Theatre, Munch conducting: Haydn, Symphony in B flat major, No. 98; Piston, Three New England Skefches; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7.

Fri., Oct. 21, 2:15; Sat., Oct. 22, 8:30, Symphony Hall, Munch cond.: Mozart, Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551; Schuman, Symphony 7; Franck, Symphony in D minor.

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 23 1960

Symphony On Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be away this week on its annual tour of cities in the midwest. The next regular Symphony Hall concerts, Nov. 4 and 5, will be conducted by Richard Burgin, concert master and associate conductor.

He will revive William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" with baritone Donald Gramm as soloist. The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, will participate. The program will include Beethoven's First Symphony and the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin."

The same pieces will be performed at the Orchestra's second concert in the Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall, also to be conducted by Mr. Burgin, Nov. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 23 1960

Symphony on Tour This Week Return for Gala Concert

Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist who has just arrived in his country for his first extended tour outside the Iron Curtain nations, will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's next concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Richter will perform both the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor at the Pension Fund concert on Tuesday, Nov. 1.

This week the orchestra is making its annual mid-western fall tour and will be heard in Rochester, Syracuse, Corning, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor. Associate Conductor Richard Burgin will conduct at Symphony Hall Friday, Nov. 4, and Saturday, Nov. 5, in a program which will include a revival of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." Donald Gramm, baritone, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate. Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bela Bartok are also scheduled. Mr. Burgin will repeat this program on Tuesday evening, Nov. 8, as the second concert of the Tuesday evening series.

Mr. Munch will introduce the French pianist, Monique Haas, to subscribers of the orchestra's concerts of Friday-Saturday, Nov. 11-12, when she performs concertos by Mozart and Ravel.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 126,214
OCT 25 1960

IN ORCHESTRAL SPLENDOR

Bostonians Triumph

By A. J. WARNER

The annual visit of the Boston Symphony is always an occasion of the first magnitude in our musical year. Last night in the Eastman Theater it was something more, as the concert became, by the magnificence of the playing, Charles Munch conducting, the apotheosis of orchestral splendor.

The audience was carried to the heights of enthusiasm, as beauty of tone marched with music that was of the essence of beauty.

• • •

MR. MUNCH'S PROGRAM was inspirational, consisting of two of the most glorious symphonies in the literature of music, with a fascinating work by the young American composer, Norman Dello Joio, Variations, Chaconne and Finale, coming in between.

The concert opened with an exquisite performance of Mozart's last symphony, No. 41 in C Major, K. 551, called the "Jupiter."

It was all a sheer delight, with its strenuous syncopations and the "sighing chromatic descents" in the minuet bringing enchanting evidence of Mozart's concern with the sun whose child he has been called—"Mozart, Child of the Sun"—and here one heard him as he is, with all his transparency. Only the final movement, it has been said, may be considered as being Jovial, if the adjective is accepted in its "original sense of godlike," there being in the music, as Eric Blom points out, no suggestion of "Jupiter, the Bringer of Jollity", for what Mozart gives us is "an awareness of the wonders of divine creation."

• • •

THE NORMAN DELLO JOIO score finds its basis in a liturgical theme, which is derived from the Kyrie in the Gregorian Missa de Angelis.

It is immensely ingenious and arresting, bespeaking the fact that the composer's lineage, which is Italian, is also musical.

Norman Dello Joio's first teacher was his father, a composer and organist. He studied organ with Pietro Yon and entered the Institute of Musical Art, studying organ and piano with Gaston Dethier, and later at the Juilliard Graduate School. The playing of the Variations, Chaconne and Finale was dazzlingly brilliant and brought out all of its compelling virtuosity.

• • •

LASTLY there was given one of the most electrifying proclamations of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, in A Major, within the memory of this listener. "One of my most important," the composer himself called it. Certainly no one who heard it last night will dispute this estimate, for there was more than mastery in Mr. Munch's inspired interpretation, with his sense of tempi and climax representing the genius of a superlative musician. The orchestra responded in kind, and the result was unforgettable. What music, and what grandeur of conception, with its irresistible rhythmic swing!

Concert of Splendor Rochester Democrat & Chronicle 10/24/60

Boston Symphony Acclaimed

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE

THE BOSTON Symphony, patrician orchestra that it is, received the sort of welcome to which it is accustomed at the Eastman last night. An audience that filled almost every seat gave it the tribute of reverent silence while it was playing, recalled Conductor Charles Munch many times after each number and gave him a final prolonged standing demonstration at the end.

All this was in accord with tradition, even as the orchestra itself lived up to the standard which for more than 80 years has made it one of the world's finest. Last night Dr. Munch had it playing two old symphonies that are eternally new and beautiful, and one work by the modern American composer, Norman Dello Joio, that showed, if any proof were needed, that the orchestra moves ahead with the times. In everything the marvelous balance, from top to bottom and from side to side, of all the sections of the orchestra was an outstanding distinction.

* * *

ORCHESTRA and conductor gave the impression of having played the Mozart "Jupiter" Symphony and the Beethoven Seventh so many times that every detail was familiar. Dr. Munch leads, he does not drive. His directions are decisive, yet self effacing. He identifies himself with the music, without distracting gymnastics. Yet one feels that this orchestra knows its way, with very little need for coaching, at least in the older music.

The Mozart was a masterwork of embroidered details. Dr. Munch has his own ideas about it, as for example some unusually prolonged phrases, which one usually hears more briskly delivered. Yet one is perfectly willing to accept his way in the stirring results achieved. And whether it is some sonorous massed effect, or some little figure in woodwinds or strings, there the technical resources are at hand.

Norman Dello Poio, one of our most original American composers, wrote his Variations, Chaconne and Finale in 1948 and won the New York Music Critics Circle Award that year. It shows the composer's masterly use of instrumentation in three contrasted movements; which begins with a suggestion of Gregorian chant and ends with some lively syncopation that seemed to use the most exciting part of the work.

The Beethoven Seventh Symphony, which ended the program, seems at every new performance to be the apex of rhythmic charm and melodic freshness. We imagine it would poll a heavy vote in any contest for the most popular of all symphonies. We liked particularly the orchestra's stately performance of the exotic march theme and the swift pace of the sparkling dance theme in the third movement.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 124,339 S. 181,487
OCT 23 1960

SCANNING THE SCORES

With HARVEY SOUTHGATE

Boston Symphony Here Tomorrow;

Mozart, Beethoven on Program

ROCHESTER'S music season is to be well blessed with famous visiting orchestras. Tomorrow night the Boston Symphony, under its distinguished conductor Charles Munch, comes to the Eastman Theater, first of four on the season's schedule. Next Saturday the Israel Symphony will make its first Rochester appearance, at the Eastman, and later in the season we are to have the Warsaw Orchestra, brought by the Schumann Memorial Foundation, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

A visit by the Boston Symphony is always a high point of the season. The concert tomorrow falls close to the 79th anniversary of the orchestra, which was founded by Henry Lee Higginson and first presented to the public on Oct. 22, 1881. Sir George Henschel was the first conductor.

Charles Munch, who took over the conductor's post in 1949, was born in Alsace, studied violin in his youth, taught that instrument at the Strasbourg Conservatory and made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony in 1946. Among his distinguished predecessors were Pierre Monteux, still active at 85, and the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Two Eastman School of Music graduates hold important positions with the orchestra. Doriot Anthony, former pupil of Joseph Mariano, is first flutist. Henry Freeman, a former member of the Rochester Philharmonic, is a member of the string bass section.

After a last minute change announced earlier in the week, Dr. Munch settled on a program for Rochester that will consist of the "Jupiter" Symphony of Mozart; Variations, Chaconne and Finale by Norman Dello Joio, important American composer, and the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, one of the sunniest of the Beethoven list.

DR. CHARLES MUNCH
. . . two symphonies listed

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 126,214
OCT 24 1960

Munch, Boston Orchestra Here Tonight

The famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Civic Music Association's 1960-61 Artists Series with a concert tonight at 8:15 in Eastman Theater.

Charles Munch will conduct a program consisting of two symphonies from the standard repertory — Mozart's "Jupiter" (No. 41) and Beethoven's No. 7—plus a contempory work, Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale."

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 124,339 S. 181,487
OCT 25 1960

Concert of Splendor

Boston Symphony Acclaimed

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE

THE BOSTON Symphony, patrician orchestra that it is, received the sort of welcome to which it is accustomed at the Eastman last night. An audience that filled almost every seat gave it the tribute of reverent silence while it was playing, recalled Conductor Charles Munch many times after each number and gave him a final prolonged standing demonstration at the end.

All this was in accord with tradition, even as the orchestra itself lived up to the standard which for more than 80 years has made it one of the world's finest. Last night Dr. Munch had it playing two old symphonies that are eternally new and beautiful, and one work by the modern American composer, Norman Dello Joio, that showed, if any proof were needed, that the orchestra moves ahead with the times. In everything the marvelous balance, from top to bottom and from side to side, of all the sections of the orchestra was an outstanding distinction.

* * *

ORCHESTRA and conductor gave the impression of having played the Mozart "Jupiter" Symphony and the Beethoven Seventh so many times that every detail was familiar. Dr. Munch leads, he does not drive. His directions are decisive, yet self effacing. He identifies himself with the music, without distracting gymnastics. Yet one feels that this orchestra knows its way, with very little need for coaching, at least in the older music.

The Mozart was a masterwork of embroidered details. Dr. Munch has his own ideas about it, as for example some unusually prolonged phrases, which one usually hears more briskly delivered. Yet one is perfectly willing to accept his way in the stirring results achieved. And whether it is some sonorous massed effect, or some little figure in woodwinds or strings, there the technical resources are at hand.

Norman Dello Poio, one of our most original American composers, wrote his Variations, Chaconne and Finale in 1948 and won the New York Music Critics Circle Award that year. It shows the composer's masterly use of instrumentation in three contrasted movements, which begins with a suggestion of Gregorian chant and ends with some lively syncopation that seemed to use the most exciting part of the work.

The Beethoven Seventh Symphony, which ended the program, seems at every new performance to be the apex of rhythmic charm and melodic freshness. We imagine it would poll a heavy vote in any contest for the most popular of all symphonies. We liked particularly the orchestra's stately performance of the exotic march theme and the swift pace of the sparkling dance theme in the third movement.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-JOURNAL
D. 128,778
OCT 24 1960

Boston Symphony Here Tomorrow

The music of Mozart, Stravinsky and Beethoven will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:15 p.m. tomorrow in Lincoln Auditorium for Famous Artists Series.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 41 as the opening number. Following will be "Jeu de Cartes" by Stravinsky.

Closing number will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215
OCT 23 1960

Boston Symphony to Appear In Concert Tuesday Night

Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in Mozart's Symphony No. 41 for the opening number of their concert for Famous Artists Series at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday in Lincoln Auditorium.

Second selection is the Stravinsky ballet in Three Deals, "Jeu de Cartes," which was included in the program which opened Boston's 80th season earlier this fall in its home Symphony Hall.

Anther number from its opening performance, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, concludes the Syracuse concert.

This spring the orchestra toured Japan and other Far Eastern countries. The overseas visits have been throughout Europe, including Moscow and Leningrad, and to South America.

Famous Artists' next event on its series is the concert of pianist Eugene Istomin, who appeared with the Boston Symphony this summer at Tanglewood. He plays Nov. 3 in Lincoln.

The young man's parents, both of whom were musicians, fled Russia during the revolution.

SRO Crowd Hears Boston Symphony

By Sidney Sukoenig

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, played before a sold-out Famous Artists Series audience in Lincoln Auditorium last evening. Besides, there was an overflow audience of several hundred, including a bus-load from Cazenovia Junior College, seated on the stage.

When Munch, the tall, distinguished-looking, gray-haired conductor first appeared, he was obviously delighted with the size and enthusiasm of the crowd. Still beaming, and without benefit of a score, he turned to lead his men with broad sweeps in the opening staple, Mozart's "Jupiter". The famous classic was presented with appealing charm and gaiety. Delicate filigree passages were heard with transparent clarity. In the dynamic Finale, it became evident why the nickname, "Jupiter" has been given the work. Here was Mozart vigorously anticipating the mighty Beethoven, and with tremendous effect!

The only unfamiliar item on the program was Stravinsky's "The Card Game", a Ballet in Three "Deals". It was composed for a premiere at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1936 by the American Ballet, with choreography by Balanchine.

The piece revealed the well-known sly, sophisticated Stravinsky wit and expert workmanship featuring a variety of tricky rhythmic devices and scalpel-sharp orchestration. The only thing lacking was genuine inspiration.

How can we compare this rather sterile effort to his early "Firebird" or "Rites of Spring"? Original ideas and color seem to have eluded him here. Humorous quotations of familiar bits from Rossini's "Barber of Seville" found us wondering what they were doing so far from home. We hope the composer knows.

With perfect poise the first viola player nochantly changed instruments with a colleague after a string suddenly snapped at the very opening of the ballet. And soon he was playing a short solo on the borrowed instrument.

These artists from Boston are certainly flexible.

The program closed with Beethoven's magnificent "Seventh Symphony", called "The Apotheosis of the Dance". Here the composer seems unable to withhold expressing his limitless joy at being alive. And the tragic feeling of the Allegretto, an excellent contrast, proved irresistibly moving for the nth time. Such is genius!

This reviewer assumes the tonal balance of the Boston Symphony was again up to its usual standards. From where he sat, on the left side, he heard mostly strings. When will Syracuse have an adequate auditorium for such events?

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 98,096 S. 103,053
OCT 26 1960

Capacity Audience Greets Boston Symphony Warmly

An audience that overflowed onto the stage of Lincoln Auditorium gave the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor, a warm and enthusiastic ovation after its last night's concert.

Probably the most famous American orchestra, it upholds its long and honorable tradition with unfailing excellence in all departments. If its pre-eminence is questioned by such "bands" as those of Chicago or Cleveland, it is only because these have risen to top standards of late: while, of course, Philadelphia and New York's have always been its close competitors.

Two great symphonies made up the bulk of the program; Mozart's "Jupiter" and Beethoven's Seventh.

As a relief between this "Jungfrau" and "Matterhorn," Mr. Munch chose something of a rarity of Stravinsky's, the ballet suite "Jeu De Cartes." Stravinsky, like Picasso, has the gift of making almost anything interesting, with his inexhaustible ingenuity of coloration and surprise, but without benefit of whatever it is that the dancers convey in the theater, the music alone seems not to deserve the expensive preparation and effort of a great orchestra. It is clever, but not clever enough to conceal its rather thin basic invention. It's author gives us hints of other authors and then imitates himself not quite successfully.

The Mozart was highly gratifying, although some of the glorious polphony of the final movement lacked the precision our spoiled ears have come to expect; and certain of the melodic passages had more of elegance than warmth.

In the Beethoven, the nobly tragic Second Movement was superbly played. The Scherro, despite the virtuosity of its main section, was a little marred by the lagging tempo of its trio, wherin what was probably intended to be sentiment verged on sentimentality.

Mr. Munch took the last movement in a variety of tempos, any one of which might have been convincing if sustained. But the rubatos introduced an element of willfulness that robbed the movement of its heroic straightforwardness; particularly in that Csardas-like passage, wherein impetuosity was suddenly made into coyness.

Nevertheless, these reservations apply only to an event that deserves to be appraised on the very highest level and will doubtless stimulate little agreement in an audience that expressed itself with such great enthusiasm. Mr. Munch is justly celebrated for his Berlioz readings. We hope he will favor us with one of these on his next visit.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-JOURNAL
D. 128,778
OCT 26 1960

SRO Crowd Hears Boston Symphony

By Sidney Sukoenig

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, played before a sold-out Famous Artists Series audience in Lincoln Auditorium, last evening. Besides, there was an overflow audience of several hundred, including a bus-load from Cazenovia Junior College, seated on the stage.

When Munch, the tall, distinguished-looking, gray-haired conductor first appeared, he was obviously delighted with the size and enthusiasm of the crowd. Still beaming, and without benefit of a score, he turned to lead his men with broad sweeps in the opening staple, Mozart's "Jupiter". The famous classic was presented with appealing charm and gaiety. Delicate filigree passages were heard with transparent clarity. In the dynamic Finale, it became evident why the nickname, "Jupiter" has been given the work. Here was Mozart vigorously anticipating the mighty Beethoven, and with tremendous effect!

The only unfamiliar item on the program was Stravinsky's "The Card Game", a Ballet in Three "Deals". It was composed for a premiere at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1936 by the American Ballet, with choreography by Balanchine.

The piece revealed the well-known sly, sophisticated Stravinsky wit and expert workmanship featuring a variety of tricky rhythmic devices and scalpel-sharp orchestration. The only thing lacking was genuine inspiration.

How can we compare this rather sterile effort to his early "Firebird" or "Rites of Spring"? Original ideas and color seem to have eluded him here. Humorous quotations of familiar bits from Rossini's "Barber of Seville" found us wondering what they were doing so far from home. We hope the composer knows.

With perfect poise the first viola player nochantly changed instruments with a colleague after a string suddenly snapped at the very opening of the ballet. And soon he was playing a short solo on the borrowed instrument.

These artists from Boston are certainly flexible.

The program closed with Beethoven's magnificent "Seventh Symphony", called "The Apotheosis of the Dance". Here the composer seems unable to withhold expressing his limitless joy at being alive. And the tragic feeling of the Allegretto, an excellent contrast, proved irresistibly moving for the nth time. Such is genius!

This reviewer assumes the tonal balance of the Boston Symphony was again up to its usual standards. From where he sat, on the left side, he heard mostly strings. When will Syracuse have an adequate auditorium for such events?

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 98,096 S. 103,053
OCT 23 1960

MUNCH — Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, was bred in the great musical traditions of two countries, France and Germany. He was born and grew up in Strasbourg. His father was a staunch Alsatian with a name derived from the German Monch, meaning Monk. His mother, Celestine Simon, was of pure French blood, the daughter of a Protestant minister in Paris. Munch was appointed music director of the orchestra in 1949. The Boston Symphony concert, sponsored by Famous Artists, is Tuesday in Lincoln auditorium.

CORNING LEADER Corning, N. Y. Thurs., October 27, 1960

Music: Like Grand Pipe Organ

By BOB LYON

An audience which packed the Glass Center auditorium Wednesday night thrilled to a new musical experience for this community—a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of an all-classical program.

The concert opened the Civic Music season here.

For generations the Boston Orchestra ruled without challenge in the musical world of America. And even when Leopold Stokowski's mighty Philadelphia assumed the crown 40 years ago, the Boston continued to share the throne. Wednesday's performance was evidence enough that the latter organization, under the baton of Charles Munch, continues to occupy the regal position along with the Philadelphia of Stokowski's successor, Eugene Ormandy. Within two years fortunate Glass Center audiences have heard them both.

Dr. Munch's programming Wednesday evening was classical in the sense of form and restraint:

The Program

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch conductor, at the Glass Center.
Symphony No. 41 in C Major ("Jupiter") K. 551 . . Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.
"Jeu de Cartes" ("Card Game"), Ballet in Three Deals .... Igor Stravinsky.
Symphony in D Minor ... Cesar Franck.

the Cesar Franck symphony, the last and greatest symphony of Mozart, and a not too frequently heard ballet by the neo classicist Igor Stravinsky.

Like that of Brahms, the music of Franck was a distillation of classic purity in a period of — often faddist — romanticism. Because it was not understood, his Symphony in D Minor was in early days called muddy and stifling. But Dr. Munch performed it with an orchestral eloquence and clarity of tone which defined every element of the music — tracing the fragments of theme moving in or emerging from the murky depths of the orchestra, etching the rich modulations of the harmony.

Dr. Munch plays upon the varied colors of the orchestra as though it were a tremendous and sensitive pipe organ. (The fact that the harmonies of the Franck work are often organ-like, is merely incidental to this observation.) His climaxes are effortless, and he always holds enough power in reserve to meet the needs of the still bigger climaxes to come.

GREETS CONDUCTOR—Mrs. James D. Jones, president of the Corning Civic Music Association, holds informal chat with Dr. Charles Munch before Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Glass Center.

Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony No. 41 in C major was played with warmth and joy. The slow movement was a singing body of sound which the conductor appeared to be able to move as a unified whole with the tip of his baton. Dr. Munch conducts with economy of motion —almost lethargic at times — but he became impassioned in the noble fourth movement with its glorious affirmation and its brilliantly varied and inverted fugal scale figures.

The spare and lean neo-classicism of the Stravinsky "Jeu de Cartes" ballet was intensified by the Gallic objectivity of this French conductor's approach. Its typical internal rhythmic irregularities and its harmonic and instrumental innovations were interesting, but few in the audience could pick out the individual "cards" as Stravinsky shuffles and deals them.

Watching an authoritative orchestra conductor, this reviewer has often been reminded of a learned professor of literature, commanding a vast organization of knowledge, understanding its intellectual and emotional content, and bringing it to vigorous life for the understanding of a fascinated class. This was never more true than Wednesday evening.

By the force of his personality and understanding — by an almost telepathic communication, rather than by a frantically waving stick — Dr. Munch induces the musicians to bring out every implication of the music.

He has an obvious respect for the composers he interprets. Inspired by his example, the orchestra takes its work seriously. No part of the concert was marred by levity. The musicians never smirked, never bandied any secret joke between them. This, unfortunately, is more than can be said of some otherwise great orchestras.

The audience took the concert seriously too. There was a tremendous ovation at its close, and a tired Dr. Munch was forced to return to the podium many times. Let us hope he returns again in the nearest possible future.

CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
D. 13,859

OCT 25 1960

Orchestra To Offer Symphonies, Ballet

Symphonies by Mozart and Cesar Franck and a ballet by Igor Stravinsky will compose the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it opens the Civic Music concert season here Wednesday evening.

The concert will be at 8:30 at the Glass Center. As previously announced, it is not permitted to save seats for late comers, and persons who place coats or other objects on seats for this purpose will be asked to remove them.

Mrs. James D. Jones, Civic Music president, said today that the Fulton St. entrance to the Glass Center will be open for use by persons wishing to sit in the balcony during the concert.

Conductor Charles Munch will open the program with Mozart's Symphony No. 41 in C major. This work, which has been dubbed "The Jupiter," was the final one which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life.

The Mozart symphony will be followed by Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes" ("Card game") ballet in "three deals." The first deal includes introduction, pas d'action, dance of the joker, and little waltz. In the second are introduction, march, variations of the four queens, and variation of the jack of hearts and coda. The third deal consists of introduction, waltz-minuet, presto (combat between the spades and hearts), and final dance (triumph of hearts.) The music is played without interruption.

After an intermission the orchestra will close the program with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor. The symphony, which has been termed "the most enduring monument of Franck's genius," received its first performance some 20 months before his death.

CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
D. 13,859

OCT 21 1960

Boston Orchestra To Open Civic Music Season Here Wednesday

The Boston Orchestra, one of the great symphonic organizations of the world, will open the Corning and Painted Post Civic Music Association's season next Wednesday evening at the Glass Center. The concert, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is scheduled for 8:30.

The Boston Orchestra is celebrating its 80th season this year, having been organized in 1881. It holds a two-year seniority over the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam and is junior to the pioneer orchestras of London, Leipzig, Vienna, and Paris.

In 1936 the orchestra was invited to participate in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., in the Berkshires. The festival was then a modest two-year old affair. In the following winter the Tanglewood estate, on which Nathaniel Hawthorne had written some of his most famous works, was offered to the orchestra as a gift. Its 210 acres of lawn and meadow, with hemlocks, elms, pines, and birches, and a mountain view little changed since Hawthorne described it, has been the home of the Berkshire Festival ever since. Upwards of 200,000 visitors now attend the concerts in the six-weeks seasons.

Another achievement for which the Boston Orchestra organization is famous is the series of "pops concerts"-which began in 1885. Conducted by Arthur Fiedler, these concerts use about 80 of the Boston Orchestra's 104 instrumentalists.

The orchestra was formed in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson of Boston, who had been a music student in Vienna. He spent his fortune on the project, giving 37 years of his life to it. The first concert was held October 22, 1881, with George Henschel, a young German conductor, on the podium.

The orchestra flourished under a succession of German conductors, who made it the finest in the nation, if not in the entire world. This policy was changed in World War I, when its German conductor, Karl Muck, and many of its best musicians, were interned as enemy aliens. A French conductor and French musicians were hired in their places.

After the Armistice the orchestra became a community-supported, rather than a privately-supported organization. Its conductors since then have been Henri Rebaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch. All except the Russian Koussevitzky have been French.

CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
D. 13 859

OCT 24 1960

Conductor Of Boston Symphony, Here Wednesday, Began Study Of Medicine

Dr. Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday evening at the Glass Center, is a Frenchman who was born in Alsace in 1891 under the imperial German flag.

The orchestra's concert here, scheduled for 8:30, will open the Civic Music Season. Members were reminded today that no one is permitted to save seats for late-comers — by placing coats over seats or otherwise.

Munch, who was born and grew up in Strassburg, is the personification of the double German-French culture of Alsace. His father was a staunch Alsatian with a name derived from the German Munch, meaning "Monk." His mother was of pure French blood, the daughter of a Protestant minister in Paris.

A member of a musical family, Munch had begun the study of the violin but went to Paris to study medicine. Soon he was devoting full time to his instrument under the instruction of Lucien Capet.

Returning to Strassburg, he was drafted into the German army in 1914 because of his German citizenship. He served with the imperial German forces until Verdun, where he was wounded. After the war he resumed musical studies with Carl Flesch in Berlin and became a first violinist in the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipzig.

DR. CHARLES MUNCH

Disturbed by the rise of Nazism in 1932, he left Leipzig and went to France, where he began a conducting career. During this decade he was observed by Virgil Thomson, New York Herald Tribune music critic, who predicted that Munch would one day succeed Serge Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Orchestra. With the influence of the New York critic, this took place 15 years later.

Meanwhile, however, Munch remained in Paris, continuing to conduct during the German occupation in World War II. Although he has been criticized for this, he has explained that he felt he could serve best by remaining at his post and "doing what he knew best how to do." The propriety of his decision has been questioned by persons of other nationalities, but he has retained the support of the French in this matter.

In 1946 he conducted the Boston Orchestra as a guest, and in the spring of 1948 was engaged as the successor of Koussevitzky upon the latter's retirement. While serving as the orchestra's music director and principal conductor, he also conducts leading orchestras in France, Austria, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Czechoslovakia, Israel, and Greece.

In May, 1952, he took the Boston Orchestra on its first European tour, opening in Paris and including his native Strassburg (now ceded to France with its name changed to Strasbourg). The second European tour, in 1956, included the first visit of a western orchestra to Russia, where Dr. Munch conducted concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 182,830 S. 243,249
OCT 2 1960

CHARLES MUNCH WIELDS BATON
Boston Symphony First on Symphony Club Series

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278
OCT 28 1960

Munch, Bostonians Give Spirited Performance

Music by three composers, representing three centuries, three musical eras and three nationalities, qualified last night's program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as well-rounded.

This was the first concert in the 37th season of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio, and Veterans Memorial appeared better than three-quarters filled for the event.

Conductor Charles Munch, looking slim, trim and fit, made it clear with his first two beats that there would be nothing sluggish about this performance. From the way the Jupiter Symphony (No. 41 in C major 1788) started out, it seemed that Munch and the Bostonians were about to break the four-minute Mozart.

THEY SLACKENED a bit, however, and proceeded to give full measure of interpretive care to the classical composition. Mozart always seems to rattle a bit in our over-sized hall, no matter how well played. Other than that, it was quite satisfactory.

Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale (1947-48) is one of the most rewarding modern compositions an orchestra can play —or an audience hear. This talented New Yorker used a plain — almost austere — liturgical theme as the basis for a set of variations which exploit the orchestra's wide range of tonal colors.

Munch and the orchestra seemed to enjoy playing the Della Joio. They spaced it well, articulated the design, and developed the individual character of each variation.

BORN IN BELGIUM but claimed by France, Cesar Franck created almost an apotheosis of Romanticism in his D minor Symphony, which came toward the close of that era. Today it continues to be one of the most compelling emotional experiences in orchestral literature.

That certainly was the case last night. The Frenchman Munch didn't miss an accent or an embellishment. If moments in the third movement suggested "Across The Field," it was simply because each composition is heck-bent on stirring up its listeners.

And we were stirred. The Boston Symphony is a superlative ensemble, and Munch seems to conducting better than ever this season.

—NORMAN NADEL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 182,830 S. 243,249
OCT 26 1960

Orchestra Concert Thursday

The Columbus concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday evening at 8:30 at Veterans' Memorial, opening event for the Symphony Club of Central Ohio, comes in the midst of a week's tour just after the first Boston concerts of the orchestra's 80th season.

Conductor Charles Munch and his musicians will be traveling by special train, playing in Corning, N.Y., Wednesday evening, and leaving Columbus after the concert here for a Friday engagement in Detroit.

The program for Thursday lists Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" by the American composer, Norman Dello Joio, and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tickets are at the Symphony Club boxoffice, Summers' Music Store, 114 E. Broad St., and Zeisler's Record Shop, 1677 W. Lane Ave. They will be available at Veterans' Memorial before the concert. Special rates for students are offered.

29

Columbus Citizen-Journal Oct. 28, 1960

Mostly About Women

A Post-Concert Supper

By CHARLOTTE CURTIS
Citizen-Journal Society Editor

The Symphony Club of Central Ohio inaugurated this season's concert series on Thursday evening with a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a post-concert supper party at the Maramor.

THE OCCASION was an opulent one, especially at the supper party. There were evening gowns with matching theater coats, any number of mutation mink wraps, and an adequate supply of diamonds and rhinestones. And from the looks of the hairdos, it was apparent that most of the ladies had made a pre-concert trip to the beauty parlor.

The concert was held at the Veterans Memorial, and the preliminaries involved a deal of chatting in the lobby. Mrs. Frank W. Bentley, president of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, was there. And so was Mrs. Phillip Knies, president of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio.

There were other top officers too, including Mrs. Robert Schoene, newly-elected vice president in charge of SCCO publicity, and Mrs. James C. Steffan, the lady who took Mrs. Schoene's place at the head of the College Alumnae Division. Mrs. Schoene was in blue. Mrs. Steffan wore black.

MR. AND MRS. Robert Lazarus Jr. and Sr. were in the crowd that came close to filling the 4000-seat auditorium. And not far away were such regulars as Mrs. Marguerite Heer Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Caren, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Cook, Mrs. R. Malcolm Scovil and Miss Mary Brandon.

Mrs. Andrews was in royal blue, Mrs. Caren wore navy, Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Scovil wore scarlet, and Miss Brandon was in a black and aqua print.

Among the more splendid outfits was the cerise satin great coat which Mrs. E. Hewitt Clapham wore. It matched her shoes and her lipstick, and was accented by a choker-strand of small pearls.

MRS. ELEANOR GELPI, past president of the Columbus Symphony group, wore an interesting gown of what appeared to be satin in several shades of gray. And Mrs. Andrews Rogers wore a simple navy faille creation accented by a scarlet satin purse.

Mrs. Rovena Clatworthy, CSO's phenomenally-successful ticket saleswoman, attended the concert with her daughter, Miss Diana Clatworthy. The mother wore an elegant gold brocade theater coat. The daughter was in purple wool.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace P. Williams were there with Mr. William's sister, Miss Elizabeth Rose Williams. Mr. Richard Hamilton was accompanied by Miss Carol Hoffman, and they managed a word or two in the lobby with Dr. and Mrs. William Greenville Pace III.

AMONG OTHERS either at the auditorium or the Maramor were Miss Jean Cavers, Mrs. Francis J. Wright, and all of the Reel family including Dr. and Mrs. Philip Reel and their daughters, Miss Caroline Reel and Mrs. Timothy Johnson. And that's not all, but the list begins to read like the telephone book.

The Edward H. W. Walzs were there. And so were Mrs. Hugh A. Baldwin, Dr. and Mrs. Arleigh D. Richardson III, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Culbreth, Mrs. John H. Hislop and her sister, Mrs. P. Webster Huntington, Mr. Mahonri S. Young, director of the art gallery, Mrs. Joseph Horchow, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. McKee, and I'm sorry I didn't alphabetize the list.

The supper party was all that had been promised ahead of time. The styrafoam violins and fall flowers materialized. And the food —starting with roquefort-stuffed celery, the pate de foie gras, the shrimp and an endless number of pretty little edibles — was excellent.

BOSTON HERE OCT. 27

Observer Describes Conductor's Control

A rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was described so vividly for the Boston Herald last season that the story may prove an enlightening rehearsal for the Columbus audience which will hear the orchestra under Charles Munch at the first concert of the Symphony Club series at Veterans' Memorial, Thursday, October 27, at 8:30.

Wrote reporter Robert Taylor: "Charles Munch, in a gray cloth jacket and slacks, sits before the orchestra on a tall stool. The verb is perhaps inexact, for Dr. Munch actually leans against the stool. When things are going well, he may climb up and sit there humming as he beats time. When the passage goes poorly he descends and raises his hand.

"A NOTICABLE LACK of theatrics distinguishes the conductor's demeanor. One has heard so many stories about temperamental leaders who tear a passion to tatters before their men, that one half expects a rough traversal to be followed by a storm of indignation, with Dr. Munch lurching through the strings to gaff a hapless violinist. In fact, however, Dr. Munch presents his ideas musically. His voice drifts through the violent hush that follows upon a glowing chord, and its tone is reasonable and calm.

"'Slow, fast and slow,' he says. 'Eight bars. Don't forget, more on the beat. Now.' And he holds up his hands and the orchestra seems to greet him with a fantastic cascade of sound until his baton knocks briskly on the stand, the loud rapping turning off the passage as one might turn off a faucet.

"The musicians continue their task, 105 men of varying tastes and origins, yet each in his own right a virtuoso. Dr. Munch, gazing at the score, leans back against the stool, as his humming 'dum-da-da-dum' accompanies the assured beat. He taps his foot, and as he seeks some subtle stress or tone value from one of the choirs, he emphasizes a cue and lays a finger upon his ear. In the various pauses he goes over a point, speaking rapidly in French . . ."

And the result of all this work will be set before the Symphony Club's audience on Oct. 27. Single tickets (as well as tickets for the series) are now at Summers' Music Store, 114 E. Broad St., CA-4-1515, and at Zeisler's in the Lane Shopping Center.

Sharing a pre-concert preview before the Boston Symphony Orchestra played here Thursday are, left to right, Mrs. E. Hewitt Clapham, Mrs. James C. Steffan, Mrs. Jack White and Mrs. Clapham. The concert was held at the Veterans Memorial.—(Photograph by Richard Garrett.)

COLUMBUS, OHIO
HILLTOP RECORD
W. 15,285
OCT 26 1960

Musical Comedy Special Will Feature Danny Kaye

By Charles Rampp

Danny Kaye has signed to star in an hour-long musical comedy special, Sunday, Oct. 30, at 8 p.m. on Channel 10.

His only previous television appearance was in the "Secret World of Danny Kaye," a 90-minute program broadcast on behalf of UNICEF.

In the upcoming special, Kaye will dance, sing and clown in some of the numbers associated with his rise to fame as an international star. He will also perform in many new numbers written by his wife, Sylvia Fine.

Kaye has built up a considerable following, and has taken on the stature of not only one of the leading comedians of today, but also that of interpreter of humor.

He has long been a television "holdout," but has been prominent in motion pictures for the last two decades.

Debbie Reynolds will be presented in a one-hour program of music and comedy, Thursday, Oct. 27, at 9:30 p.m. on Channel 6.

Starring on the show with Debbie will be Walter Brennan of the "Real McCoys," Charlie Ruggles and Carlton Carpenter, all closely associated with the actress in Hollywood films.

Both Brennen and Ruggles have portrayed grandfathers of Miss Reynolds and she will become reunited with them in a special dance number.

Comedian Carl Reiner will be on hand, along with Maestro Nelson Riddle, and Julian "Cannonball" Adderley Quintet.

"One Nation Indivisible," the Bell Telephone Hour program for 9 p.m., Friday, Oct. 28, will present the music of the United States.

County Fair songs from the North, Blues from the South, Broadway show tunes from the East and ballads from the West will be offered, on this program on Channel 4.

The entire company will participate in a group of popular election campaign songs going back to the Civil War period. Starring as host-singer will be Robert Preston. The Dukes of Dixieland will be featured.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," a classic story of French Revolution days will be the premiere production of the Family Classics Series, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 28 and 29, at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 10.

The story centers around an undercover agent, who has the clever disguise of an apparently inocous English nobleman. He transports refugees out of the country, saving potential victims from the guillitine.

He is called the "Scarlet Pimpernel" from a small red flower common in France. Not even his wife knows the secret occupation of the spy, and he runs the risk of losing her, as she feels that he is a coward.

Michael Rennie stars as the Pimpernel with Maureen O'Hara playing Lady Blakeney, his wife. Zachary Scott will portray the villain.

Channel 4 offers a new local health series, "Let's Live," that began on Wednesday, Oct. 19, at 10:10 a.m.

The new weekly program will be produced in cooperation with the Columbus Health Department as a public service to the community.

The Health Department, headed by Dr. Ollie M. Goodlee, Health Commissioner, will work closely with the Columbus Academy of Medicine, and guests on the programs will be doctors, dentists and representatives from various departments of the city, county and state.

Subjects announced for future programs include carbon monoxide poisoning, geriatrics, retarded children, hunting accidents, alcoholism, teenage smoking, care of the teeth, food poisoning, home safety, tuberculosis, baby care and others.

"Money and the Next President," a special telecast on Channel 10, Thursday, Oct. 27, will show the control of our wealth.

Scheduled at 8:30 p.m., the show will concentrate on determining the amount of money spent on public service today. Problems of living with inflation, and of competing successfully with foreign businessmen will be considered.

"Open Classroom" has begun its third year on Channel 4, Saturdays, at 9:30 a.m. This series gives a look inside the schools in this area. It is produced as a public service in cooperation with 11 school systems in and around Columbus.

Public, private, parochial, and county and suburban school systems will be represented. WLW-C's Stan Robinson will moderate the program.

"Leave It To Beaver," and "Music for a Spring Night," both seen on Channel 6, were cited by the Christophers in their annual television awards.

The award citations felt that the programs "exemplified the great potential of television to inform, inspire and entertain." Recipients of the award received a bronze medallion inscribed with the Christopher motto, "Better to light one candle than to curse the darkness."

The first program of the Symphone Club of Central Ohio will be offered Thursday, Oct. 27, at 8:30 at Veteran's Memorial.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart and Frank symphonies, and a contemporary work, the Seventh Symphony" by William Schuman.

Lowell Thomas, Jr., will present his new color motion picture, "Follow the North Star," a family adventure in the Arctic Basin, at Mershon Auditorium, 8 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 1.

The first of the three youth programs to be given this year by the Columbus Symphony Orchestra will be held Oct. 29, at Veterans Memorial, with performances at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

The first program will feature Aaron Copeland's Billy the Kid. Life-size puppets of the Detroit Art Museum Puppet Theatre will be used in a stage presentation with the music.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
RURAL-URBAN NEWS
W. 15,450
OCT 27 1960

COLUMBUS, OHIO
SOUTH SIDE LEADER
W. 18,300
OCT 27 1960

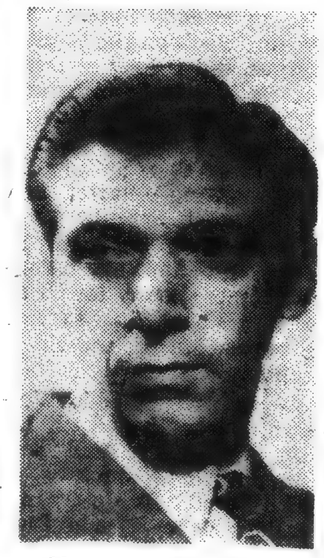
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 182,830 S. 243,249
OCT 16 1960

PROGRAM CHANGE

Dello Joio Work Listed by Munch

A change of mind on the part of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has brought about a change in the program for the first concert of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio, Thursday evening, Oct. 27 at Veterans Memorial.

In place of the William Schuman Symphony, previously announced, Charles Munch will conduct another American work, Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale." Otherwise the program stands as it was, with Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and the Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor.



Norman Dello Joio

DELLO JOIO'S tri-partite work was first performed at a concert of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra under Fritz Reiner in 1948. Mr. Munch has had it in the Boston repertory for several years. In fact he regards it so highly that he programmed it repeatedly on the orchestra's far-eastern tour last spring.

In his opinion, Dello Joio is a contemporary American composer (born in New York City in 1913) who could well represent his country and generation for audiences in Japan, Taiwan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

THE SYMPHONY Club's series will include concerts by the Pittsburgh Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra after the first of the year. Tickets for the season, or for the Boston concert of Oct. 27, are at Summers' Music Store, 114 E. Broad St., and at Zeisler's Record Shop, 1677 W. Lane Ave. There are special rates for students.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278
OCT 27 1960

Show Biz

Boston Symphony Performs Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra habitually "goes on the road" for a week after the third of its 24 pairs of Boston concerts. The tour this year includes Corning, N.Y.; Detroit; Hartford and New London, Conn.; and Northampton, Mass., as well as Columbus.

The local concert, opening the season for the Symphony Club of Central Ohio, is scheduled for 8:30 this evening at Veterans Memorial. Charles Munch will conduct. His program lists the Mozart "Jupiter" Symphony, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" by the American composer, Norman Dello Joio, and Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony.

Tickets are at the Symphony Club's boxoffice at Summers' Music Store, 114 E. Broad-st, and Zeisler's Record Shop, 1677 W. Lane-av. They also will be available at Veterans Memorial before curtain time at 8:30. Special student rates are offered.

DEAN MARTIN has been signed to play the Jason Robard Jr. role in the film version of Lillian Hellman's stage success, "Toys in the Attic." Also scheduled for 1961 shooting by the Mirisch Company is another Hellman play, "The Children's Hour," in which Audrey Hepburn will star.

CAPITOL COLLEGE of Oratory and Music will have its Halloween party and recital Saturday evening at 308 W. Hubbard-av. Pupils to perform are Kevin Berls, Linda Stevens, Joyce Boroski, Judy Seto, Marie Del Cot, Carol Willis, Thelma Lowry, Gladys Powell and Kay Greiner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 182,830 S. 243,249
OCT 28 1960

ON THE RIALTO

SAM WILSON

Dispatch Stage, Screen and Music Editor

Franck D-minor Is Given Fast-track Run by Munch

Thursday night it was the turn of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio to launch its series for the season and the launching was accomplished with considerable of a stir by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, at the Veterans Memorial.

On the program were such repertoire staples as Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony and the Franck D minor Symphony. To add contemporary spice to the concert Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale was listed between the two symphonies.

As things turned out, the performance given the Cesar Franck was the most striking feature of the concert. With his orchestra in top virtuoso form, Mr. Munch elected to present this music in fiery, tautly dramatic fashion and whipped through it at a driving speed and almost militant aggressiveness not commonly associated with the work.

THIS FAST-TRACK workout of the D-minor gave one startling new perspective on its performance potentials, reoriented one's views of its mystical elements, made complacent listening to it wholly impossible. And the brilliant playing of the orchestra was exciting as all get out. Franck was made to be the evening's big novelty.

The Dello Joio work still scored a handsome success. The abounding vitality of the music, the inventiveness of the composer's writing, the dazzling quality of the orchestration make the Variations, Chaconne and Fugue fascinating to hear, and, likely, to hear again. It couldn't be given a more rousing performance than the one accorded it last night.

Mozart's symphony, on the other hand, was not too ideally presented. There was machine-like precision to the orchestra's playing of it but Mr. Munch's hurried treatment of the music lacked flexibility and nuance, was virtually devoid of expressiveness. Mozart doesn't lend himself happily to entry in a musical Preakness.

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
D. 385,908 S. 472,366
OCT 29 1960

Detroiter Is Brought Home by Symphony

By Frank P. Gill
Music Writer

The Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch, gave Detroit a diverting and quite impressive evening of music at Masonic Auditorium and the response from some 4,000 people was large, warm and enthusiastic.

The program, with works from three centuries, merited the acclaim it received, especially the final rousing and impassioned Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, which mirrored the tone and technique of the orchestra at its best.

The program opened with Haydn's strangely serious 98th Symphony—one of the London group—and Munch built it with the right delicacy and care throughout, giving emphasis to the sparse touches of humor in the score.

The novelty of the evening was Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale," based on a liturgical theme of Gregorian chant.

THE WORK IS HIGHLY rhythmical and lushly melodic, flashing with the bright coloration of tonal interplay achieved very effectively in a well-balanced performance. This is a work that, while not Dello Joio's best, could well become a concert favorite and last night's audience received it with eclat.

But the evening, at least to one member of the orchestra, was more than just another concert on tour. It was a return home, however briefly, for a Detroiter with an added reputation and national acclaim.

He was Joseph Silverstein, of the first violin section, who a week ago won the coveted Walter W. Naumberg Foundation award with the largest prize ever offered a string player in this country—$5,000 in cash and another $15,000 in solo appearances and recordings.

Silverstein studied in Detroit first with his father, the late Bernard Silverstein, later with Joseph Gingold, then with Efrem Zimbalist at Curtis Institute and with Mischa Mischakoff.

"I'VE HAD A NUMBER of other teachers, too," Silverstein said, "The men in the orchestra, who are good critics and represent various styles of training, have helped me greatly."

Silverstein is imbued with "team spirit" where the Boston Symphony is concerned and thinks more as a member of a fine ensemble than as an individual artist.

"I feel that what I have done reflects on the orchestra" he said.

Despite his success (last year he placed third in the International Queen Elizabeth contest in Brussels) he still intends to balance off solo playing and teaching with his orchestral duties. His ultimate objective is to be the concertmaster of a leading orchestra.

"Right now I am busy," he said, "with my string quartet, teaching, recitals and other solo appearances. We young violinists have to create large repertoires, since we cannot hope yet to outdo the already accepted performances of top violinists.

"Later we may, but in the meantime we must build from both standard and contemporary sources. There is plenty of music to choose from, much of which could well become very popular."

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
D. 468,540 S. 593,614
OCT 29 1960

Boston Symphony Best in Contemporary Number

By JOSEF MOSSMAN
Detroit News Music Critic

That wondrous musical instrument known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night opened the Masonic Auditorium series of concerts by touring symphony orchestras.

Charles Munch conducted a program which demonstrated that music outside the standard repertory is not unwelcome to the visiting-symphony audience. The crowd of more than 4,000 was heartily delighted with the "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" of Norman Delle Joio, contemporary American composer.

The rest of the program was given over to old favorites, and the audience delighted in those too. They were Beethoven's symphony No. 7 in A and Haydn's symphony No. 98 in B flat.

TOP NUMBER

The Boston tone and precision were at their smoothest in the Beethoven and Haydn works, but it was in the Dello Joio work that the orchestra had its finest achievement of the evening.

The "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" was first played in 1948, but it was new to Detroit. Although based on a theme from the Gregorian Missa de Angelis, its range of moods and effects strayed far from liturgical atmosphere.

The first section was full of effects that had samplings of nearly everything from Berlioz to Stravinsky. The second section was a tumultous, spasmodic torrent of sound, with a dramatic ending as gripping as anything to be heard in a movie mystery thriller.

LENGTHY APPLAUSE

The finale began in a mood that was very close to ragtime. Munch and the orchestra played the work with zest and sympathy, and the applause lasted well into the intermission time.

Beethoven's seventh symphony is the one Wagner called "the apotheosis of the dance." For all the lushness of its many beloved melodies, the symphony's immortality lies in its marvelous rhythmic patterns, and it was the rhythm which Munch stressed.

The Haydn symphony, fourth of the dozen so-called "Salomon" symphonies, was played with incomparable beauty of tone, and its minuet was the essence of elegant grace.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D. 498,912 S. 512,655
OCT 29 1960

3/

Exciting Music Is A Treat

BY J. DORSEY CALLAGHAN
Free Press Music Critic

Charles Munch, one of the few conductors of visiting orchestras to do us the courtesy of presenting an occasional modern work, surpassed himself Friday night in his programming for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Masonic Temple.

Included in the concert, between the Haydn Symphony No. 98 and the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, was the tremendously interesting Variations, Chaconne and Finale by Norman Dello Joio.

* * *

NOT SINCE Munch introduced the Honegger Fifth Symphony here some seasons ago, has an occurrence of comparable excitement been included in the Temple auditorium. We offer him our sincere thanks.

The composer chose a passage from the Gregorian Mass of the Angels for his theme, and retained it in each of the three movements of the work.

The music ranged from the devout religiosity of the original theme, through a set of six highly inventive variations and a frankly secular, if not orgiastic, treatment in the finale.

The theme, however, manhandled in the processes of composition, did not lose sight of its essentially modal character but the nature of the music itself did.

There were passages of thunderous exaltation (Dello Joio uses the full resources of the orchestra) and soaring passages of hymn-like beauty.

* * *

ORCHESTRAL SOUND was always the apparent goal and the sonorities of the orchestra were brought together with exquisite results. The brass chorale near the end was among its outstanding episodes.

By contrast, the two outer symphonies were done with an unfailing sense of the beauties of composition of 150 years ago or so.

The Haydn symphony was shaped by Munch with loving care. Its slow movement was dwelt upon tenderly and with a feeling for the elegance of its period. In the last movement, the ingenious use of the solo violin served to emphasize the special spirit of the Boston stringed choirs.

The Beethoven was, of course, a different matter entirely. The essentially Gallic nature of the conductor came to the fore in the exuberance of the performance so that even the allegretto shared in it to some extent.

It was a program to be remembered for the thoughtfulness that went into its selection and the excellence with which it was performed.

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
D. 385 908 S. 472 366
OCT 23 1960

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Boston Symphony, now celebrating its 80th season, at Masonic Auditorium Friday.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
D. 468,540 S. 593,614
OCT 23 1960

LEADER — Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Masonic Auditorium at 8:20 p.m. Friday, leading off the Masonic concert series by touring symphony orchestras. The Bostonians will play symphonies by Haydn, William Schuman and Beethoven. Other orchestras in the series will be those of Warsaw, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis and Philadelphia.

DETROIT, MICH.
WARRENDALE COURIER
W. 7,983
OCT 27 1960

Famed Group Will Appear Here Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will appear at the Masonic Temple tomorrow at 8:20 p.m., will celebrate its 80th season during 1960-61.

The Orchestra holds a seniority of two years over the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam and is junior to the pioneer orchestras of London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris.

Charles Munch is the music director.

HAZEL PARK, MICH.
NEWS
W. 2,525
OCT 27 1960

80th Season

Charles Munch, will again direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it appears Friday night at the Detroit Masonic Temple.

The Orchestra will celebrate its 80th year during the 1960-61 season. It was formed by Lee Higginson of Boston.

Dr. Munch has been its director since 1949.

Curtain time is 8:20 p.m.

DETROIT, MICH.
LABOR NEWS
W. 27,500
OCT 27 1960

Boston Symphony Here on Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will appear at the Masonic Temple on Friday, Oct. 28 at 8:20 p.m., will celebrate its 80th season during 1960-61.

The orchestra holds a seniority of two years over the Concertgebouw of Amstedam and is junior to the pioneer orchestras of London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris.

The Michigan Daily
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1960

BOSTON:

Munch Exciting

TO THAT essential minority—those who have done any orchestral playing—and to that equally rare group—those who consider the orchestra the most versitile and exceptional of instruments—the Boston Symphony Orchestra is something of an institution.

My personal delight is the lushness of the violas and cellos (or cellos and violas, if your taste runs that way). And last night's concert, although it was not the most imaginative programming, amply bore out this prejudice.

* * *

LET US, AS DR. MUNCH did, save the best for the last, and speak first of Haydn's B-Flat Major symphony. The most telling criticism one could level against his Haydn is that of tempo. In general the entire work was played too fast, but this was the most detrimental in the Adagio cantabile, which Sir Donald Tovey called one of Haydn's "broadest and gravest utterances." Here, as in the opening Adagio, things sounded rushed, and pathos and profundity were quickly, and equally, glossed over. In the finale, however, which immediately calls to mind the finale of the E-Flat Major Quartet (op. 32 no. 2), the vitality of the tempo was both called for (Presto), and in good taste.

The variations, Chaconne and Finale, by Victor Dello Joio, was a rousing, exciting affair, although the outer movements were too much akin to movie music for my taste. The Chaconne, however, which displayed a considerable Hindemith influence, was a first-rate piece of craftsmanship, which was given, along with the rest of the work, a sympathetic reading.

* * *

AND WHAT CAN ONE say of the Franck D minor? To call it a war-horse is commonplace, and yet I would gladly listen to such a "war-horse" when performed as brilliantly and magnificiently as the Boston did last night. The performance was vital and dynamic, and never did Dr. Munch fall into the morass of sentimentality that so many lesser conductors seem to feel is essential to the work.

—David Jordan

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
D. 27,541
OCT 31 1960

Boston Symphony Gets Warm Reception Here

By Wiley Hitchcock

Playing, as usual in Ann Arbor, to a standing-room-only crowd at Hill Auditorium, the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared Saturday evening in a Choral Union concert. An enthusiastic audience heard Charles Munch direct a program of symphonies by Haydn and Franck and the Variations, Chaconne, and Finale by Norman Dello Joio.

The work by Dello Joio, an American now in his forties, was new to Ann Arbor. It proved to be typical of his pleasant amalgam of Italianate lyricism, Hindemithian harmony, and purely American rhythmical shapes—the latter especially notable in the Finale, with its bouncy, jazz-derived syncopations. The other variations (of a Gregorian chant melody) are imaginative character-pieces which depart progressively from the structure and character of the original theme.

I was surprised at intermission to learn that Dello Joio's piece had seemed "far out," "harsh," and "difficult" to some; it seemed very conservative, always euphonious, and quite approachable to me.

Munch opened the concert with Haydn's Symphony No. 98, one of the less-often played of the late, London symphonies. Of the four fine movements, the last, with its concertante dialogue between solo violin and the rest of the orchestra, is a gem. The performance was an elegant one rhythmically, but somehow disturbing sonorously. Perhaps it was the way the Boston group was reduced in numbers to approximate Haydn's orchestra, but the sound that characterized the Haydn symphony was tentative, bottom-light and oddly feathery.

Except for one magnificent blooper from the brass section during the last movement, Franck's Symphony in D Minor was compellingly delivered. Munch's extraordinary gifts as conductor were everywhere apparent; his reading of the time-worn work was flexible and subtle without being sentimental, and each beat and sub-beat were so precisely limned that the orchestra could hardly help responding impeccably and gloriously. Special bouquets are due Louis Speyer, English horn, and flutist Doriot Dwyer for some exquisite solos.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
D. 27,541
NOV 1 1960

Protests Noises During Concert

Editor, The News:

When the University steam boilers dare to run competition to one of the world's great orchestras and one of the world's leading conductors during an exceptional performance a complaint does not seem out of order.

Six times during the Boston Symphony's glorious performance of the Frank Symphony at Hill Auditorium last night the orchestra was joined by a faulty valve on a steam radiator at the left side of the hall.

In spite of this competition Charles Munch conducted the Frank as none in the audience had ever heard it before, even on Boston Symphony recordings—and there were visible waves of disappointment on the rapt faces in the hall each time the hissing valve added its note to the perfect musical evening. Is it too much to ask that the University Musical Society and the managers of Hill Auditorium use enough of the money collected from a full house of Ann Arbor music lovers to check the radiator valves before a performance of last night's magnitude.

Music Lover

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,800
OCT 29 1960

Haydn, Franck To Highlight Symphony Bill

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch, will present a concert at 8:30 p.m. today in Hill Aud.

Works performed will include Haydn's "Symphony No. 98 in B-flat Major;" "Variations Chaconne and Finale" by Norman dello Joio; and Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

Tickets now available are for standing room only. The concert will be broadcast over WUOM-FM, as well as other university stations throughout the state.

This concert, the second in the Choral Union series, marks the ortieth time that this orchestra as appeared in Ann Arbor. It s appeared here annually for ty years.

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS-PRESS
D. 13,449
OCT 26 1960

Second Concert In UM Series

ANN ARBOR — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch music director, will present the second concert in the Choral Union Series at The University of Michigan at 8:30 p.m. this Saturday in Hill Auditorium.

Included in the program will be "Symphony No. 98 in B-flat Major" by Haydn; "Variations Chaconne and Finale" by Norman dells Joio; and "Symphony in D Minor" by Cesar Franck.

This concert will mark the 40th appearance of the Boston Symphony in Ann Arbor, and the 30th consecutive annual visit. Director Munch appeared here first in 1948 with the French National Orchestra.

Tickets are available for standing room only.

YPSILANTI, MICH.
PRESS
D. 6,217
OCT 25 1960

Boston Symphony In Next Concert

ANN ARBOR — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch music director, will present the second concert in the Choral Union Series at The University of Michigan in Hill Auditorium.

Included in the program will be "Symphony No. 98 in B-flat major" by Haydn; "Variations Chaconne and Finale" by Norman dells Joio; and "Symphony in D Minor" by Cesar Franck.

This concert will mark the 40th appearance of the Boston Symphony in Ann Arbor, and the 30th consecutive annual visit. Director Munch appeared here first in 1948 with the French National Orchestra.

BLANK PAGE

Times Nov 15

MOODY PIANIST FROM THE SOVIET

By OSGOOD CARUTHERS

Moscow.

ALL music, all the finest music, rests—like the infant in the arms of Raphael's Madonna—within his skull, which reminds one of domes built by Bramante and Michelangelo."

With this well-mixed and florid metaphor, Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Teofilovich Richter is praised by his noted teacher, Prof. Heinrich Neuhaus of the Moscow Conservatory.

Other such glowing accolades have been strewn in the path of the enigmatic, moody and brilliant artist who will be making his New York debut on Wednesday in Carnegie Hall, playing the first of five concerts there.

Richter's renown in the West stems only from his records

Sviatoslav Richter.

and from the reports of a few Westerners who have heard his concerts in Moscow and elsewhere in the Eastern world. Except for a brief concert visit in Finland last May, Richter's tour of America is his first appearance outside the Iron Curtain.

This is not because of any political choice on the part of the 45-year-old pianist. It is doubtful if his thoughts ever quite get down to the level of partisan politics.

There is hardly a music lover in the Soviet Union who does not hold the view that Sviatoslav Richter is one of the great pianists of our time—perhaps of all time. The mere pedestrian title of "People's Artist Prize" does not reflect the reverence with which Richter's playing is greeted by Moscow music goers.

Richter was born of German parents in the small Ukrainian town of Zhitomar. At an early age, he moved to Odessa, one of the great music centers of Russia. His father was an organist who taught his son the rudiments of music. Richter began showing a profound interest in music, transcribing for the piano a whole mass of musical literature. He was no more than a boy when he became conductor of the Odessa Opera and Ballet Theatre. At the age of 19—virtually self-taught—he gave his first solo concert: a program of Chopin. At the same time he began to compose small pieces.

"I stopped composing just in time," Richter told an interviewer in his Moscow apartment shortly before he departed for his American tour. "I never play any of my own music any more and I won't play any of it during my tour, thank God."

It was in 1937 that Richter began his formal piano training. He went to Moscow and began studying under Professor Neuhaus, a contemporary of Rachmaninoff at the conservatory. "In half a year, Neuhaus freed my hands—really liberated them," Richter declared. "For that reason he is more than a teacher or friend to me."

Manner of Playing

There are times when Richter attacks the piano savagely, his arms bent strangely at his side, his body leaning forward over the keyboard as though he were tearing sound out of the instrument. At other times he leans over backward with his arms outstretched and his head thrown back.

According to Richter, the audience is not a challenge or a thing to be feared. In fact, he indicated to his visitor, he overcomes whatever stage fright might seize an artist before he steps on stage by forgetting the audience completely. "I don't consider the public. My whole interest is my approaching encounter with the composer—with his music."

Richter likes to paint at times during off hours and it is said that had he concentrated on painting he would have become a good artist.

Many of the furnishings in the simply furnished four-room apartment he keeps in the center of Moscow had been put away in preparation for his two-month absence. But an impressionistic still-life by the noted Russian painter, Robert Falk, still hung above the Bechstein concert grand. And on an easel near a smaller Steinway grand, on the other side of the room, stood a handsome Russian ikon of a madonna of the fourteenth or fifteenth century.

Heavy drapes separate this large room from another, where he and his wife, Nina Doloyak, a singer and professor at the conservatory, relax. It was at Richter's almost angry insistence that the conservatory granted his wife leave for the trip to America. Friends say her presence is almost a necessity to him on such an extensive tour. She anticipates his moods, and helps to smooth the rise and fall of emotional cycles that seem to afflict him.

If his mood is really bad, or if he feels that he cannot "approach the composer," he may not play at all. Having been reared in the south, he says, he plays best when it is hot. He feels best when he is in his country house among thick forests along the banks of the Oka River, some distance from Moscow—playing for himself, practicing new programs and relaxing with close friends.

Boston Holiday Music Holds High Excitement

■ In its general excellence, the recent musical scene in Boston has resembled a landscape with a few lonely peaks. A truly rarefied atmosphere ha'oed several concerts: the two piano recitals of Sviatoslav Richter; Vronsky and Babin at two pianos, The Opera Group's "Otello," and Lorin Maazel's later appearance on an elevated podium at Symphony Hall.

The most rampant hunt for expletives followed the two recitals of Richter, the Soviet pianist, who came for two concerti with the Symphony, and stayed two extra evenings. His first recital, composed of Beethoven sonatas, ended with the authentic thrust, and almost the speed, of a rocket in the "Appassionata." Two days later, his second program, ranged to farther outposts of the repertoire, with some lesser-known pieces by Prokofiev; in particular, his Sixth Sonata in A Major, which Richter himself had premiered. There were many encores, and finally the audience took to its feet, stamping him back for fifteen bows.

Another unforgettable amalgam of keyboard and strings came in the two-piano recital of Vronsky and Babin, given for the Boston Morning Musicales. They began with an iridescent reading of Mozart's Sonata in F Major, continued with the Brahms-Haydn Variations, and Debussy's cryptic "Epigraphes antiques," ending with the big waltz from "Eugen Onegin," arranged by Mr. Babin. As in the past, the artists showed a growing, almost gyroscopic sensitivity to dynamic balance and color shadings, that commuted their individual talents to a true musical compound—something rich and rare.

An equally vivid impression was left by the Società Corelli, twelve strings and a pianist, playing in the Mason Music Foundation series. Their youthful vigor and many-layered sonority, in works of the Italian Baroque, made for rare satisfaction.

For its second offering of the season, the Opera Group, under the artistic direction of Sarah Caldwell, gave fresh and exciting performances of Verdi's "Otello," with a cast composed of local professionals and internationally-known leads. Lucine Amara as Desdemona, Leonard del Ferro as Otello, Tito Gobbi as Iago, William Flavin as Cassio, and Louis Sgarro as Roderigo were the visitors, whose talents were coordinated with the others in beautifully directed singing and acting, to make an absorbing evening.

■ Other musical high points came on those evenings when Lorin Maazel ascended the podium at Symphony Hall for two weekends of concerts. At his first program, the young prodigy-grown-prodigious led the men through Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra," with egregious success. On the second, he presented a reposed and reflective reading of Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Afterward came a charged and precise version of Stravinsky's "Le chant du rossignol," followed by Scriabin's "Le poème de l'extase"; the latter wound up in a towering crescendo which revealed swelling sound as almost a naked principle. Most remarkable about Maazel's work is his control—first of the over-all plan of the composition, and then of the musicians who play its strands. It seemed some time since these musicians had exerted themselves so well, and with such resplendent results.

An especially interesting recital was the American debut of the pianist, Boleslaw Woytowicz, professor of piano and composition at the Warsaw Conservatory. He was brought here by Dr. Stanley Nowak, president of the Paderewski Fund, as part of that noted pianist's centennial. The center of attraction was his performance of Paderewski's large Sonata in E-Flat Minor, which compounds overtones of Schumann and opulent Liszt with that of his own shaping intellect, in a moving and epic design. Works of this composer and Chopin made up the program.

The Budapest String Quartet returned for two concerts of monuments of the literature, the environment they have made their naturalized playground through the years. It seemed that their vigor and decision, a hallmark through the years, has taken on new sharpness and concision in attacks and releases, providing the super-thrust that changes a performance from a vehicle to a voyage.

■ Notable was a concert of the Brandeis University Chamber Players, given as part of the Institute for Contemporary Music Series. The program, as contemporary as a nosecone, was flawlessly and absorbingly played. It opened with Elliott Carter's Quartet for flute, oboe, 'cello and harpsichord, recently made available on a Columbia Record. It seemed by far the most viable of the newer works presented, since it basically relies on the power of suggestion for its extension in time.

The same period saw the second concert of Harold Farberman's New Arts Orchestra, assisted by the Dancemakers, with the same daring programming and skillful performance as before. . . The Boston Conservatory featured its artist-in-residence, Serge Conus, in a piano recital of his own compositions, as part of its Fenway Series . . . The New England Conservatory topped off a day of observances with a gala concert of its orchestra and chorus under James Dixon, to signal the dedication of its new Spaulding music library and adjacent dormitory. . . . The Civic Symphony, directed by Paul Cherkassky, presented Nell Novak as soloist in Dvorak's 'Cello Concerto, with pleasing results . . . Across the ice-specked Charles, Victor Manusevitch led his Cambridge Civic Symphony through an interesting program which included a "Symphonic Paraphrase" by Boston's talented young composer, Nicholas Van Slyck. Even the snow, which forgot to confine itself to the peaks, and came tumbling in profusion over everything one night, failed to halt musical climbers with a liking for the quicker metabolisms of the upper air.

ROBERT W. DUMM

Herald 10/30/60

Music Events This Week

According to reports reaching Symphony Hall, Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist now on his first United States tour, has been hailed in New York and Chicago as one of the most exciting pianists of this century. Mr. Richter's first Boston appearance will be in a gala Pension Fund Concert with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on Tuesday. Because of the acclaim which Mr. Richter received in Chicago where he was guest of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and in New York where he is currently performing five sold-out recitals at Carnegie Hall, the demand for tickets to his first Boston appearance has been heavy. A few seats are still available at Symphony Hall Box Office, CO 6-1492.

Mr. Richter will perform two concertos in Boston. The revised program will begin with the Overture to "Prometheus" by Beethoven followed by Beethoven's First Piano Concerto and the Paiano Concerto in B-flat major, No. 2, by Brahms.

Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, will conduct the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Saturday and Tuesday, Nov. 8. His program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, "The Miraculous Mandarin" Suite by Bela Bartok, and William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." Donald Gramm and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conductor, will participate in the Walton oratorio.

TODAY

JAN PEERCE, tenor, assisted by Leo Taubman, pianist, Symphony Hall, 3:30 P.M. presented by Aaron Richmond on B. U. Celebrity Series. Box office open at 7:30 A.M. ... ram of songs and arias by ... ch, Handel, Schubert, ... Verdi, Respighi, ... ter, Verdi and Mascagni.

JULIAN ... lutenist, Jordan Hall, 3:30 P.M. Presented by Aaron Richard on B. U. Celebrity Series. Box office open at 2:00 P.M. Lute music by Dowland, Morley, Johnson, Rossiter, cutting; guitar music by or arranged from Monteverdi, Bach, Mozart, Martin, de Falla, Ravel, Albeniz.

GEORGE FAXON, ... St. Stephen Church, Cohasset, assisted by Douglas Marshall, boy soprano, 4:30 P.M. "Hour of Music" series. Admission free.

Signe Quale Dawson, soprano, Roger Voisin, trumpet, Weston Brannen, organ, Melrose Hall, 4:00 P.M. Bach, Handel, Bruch, Grieg and contemporary music.

MONDAY

LONDON INTIMATE OPERA, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 P.M. Season's first program by the Cambridge Society for Early Music. "Thomas and Sally," Pastoral Opera, by Arne; "Don Quixote," by Purcell.

TUESDAY

Solo and ensemble works for instruments and voices, Jordan Hall, 8:30 P.M. New England Conservatory students Couperin, Purcell, Bach, Faure, Dupar Poulenc, Debussy. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

Marc Pincherle, illustrated lectur Leclair, in "Great Music" series. College of Liberal Arts. Room 7:15 p.m.

THURSDAY

JAN SMETERLIN, pianist, Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented Richmond on B.U. Celebri Program: Beethoven Sonata Brahms-Paganini Variations; Ballade, Mazurkas, Etudes, Scherzo, Andante Spianato Polonaise, all by Chopin. Jordan Hall box office.

FRIDAY

Mozart Festival C Hastings, conductor, violin soloist, Recita land Conservatory, program in a seri include first Amer a Mozart opera. "The Lowland one-act opera by Sundgaard, pres music society, v Chorus and Kenneth McKi 8:00 p.m.

Repeat p Sea," Cohe 8:00 p.m.

Herald 10/14/60

Sviatoslav Richter to Play At BSO Pension Fund Concert

When the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Nov. first, the special concert will mark the 126th program presented by the orchestra to benefit its Pension Institution.

Funds allotted as pensions to former orchestra members include proceeds from the Open Rehearsals held annually at Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood, in addition to the gala Pension Fund concerts by the orchestra and by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. Some income is also derived from private contributions and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Transcription Trust, which is responsible for the delayed broadcasting on tape of the orchestra's concerts to approximately 50 stations across the United States.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular Open Rehearsal series in 1951-52, his second season as the orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. The number of Open Rehearsals has been increased from seven to ten for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals, including the first rehearsal on Thursday. Subsequent Open Rehearsals will be held on Nov. 17, Dec. 8, Feb. 8 and 23, March 2, 16, and 29, April 20 and 27. Season tickets for the ten rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Monitor 10/15/60

Richter Boston Debut

When Sviatoslav Richter, the noted Soviet pianist, makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony on Tuesday night, Nov. 1, he will play the Beethoven Concerto No. 1 in C major, and the Tchaikovsky Concerto in B-flat minor.

This Pension Fund concert will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who will also conduct Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan." Seats are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

...the Telepix Cinema.

Globe 10/16/60

Boston Symphony Pension Fund

When Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday, Nov. 1 at 8:30 p.m., the special concert will mark the 126th program presented by the Orchestra to benefit its pension fund.

A pension fund was discussed by the orchestra's founder, Henry Lee Higginson, in 1881 before the first season of concerts but not established until the orchestra's 22d season. The first such program, given at Symphony Hall Mar. 1, 1903, was advertised as: "A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in aid of its pension fund, assisted by Mme. Antoinette Szumowska who has kindly volunteered."

Funds allotted as pensions to former orchestra members include proceeds from the Open Rehearsals held annually at Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood, in addition to the gala Pension Fund concerts by the orchestra and by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. Some income is also derived from private contributions and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Transcription Trust, which is responsible for the delayed broadcasting on tape of the Orchestra's concerts to approximately 50 stations across the United States.

MOODY PIANIST FROM THE SOVIET

By OSGOOD CARUTHERS

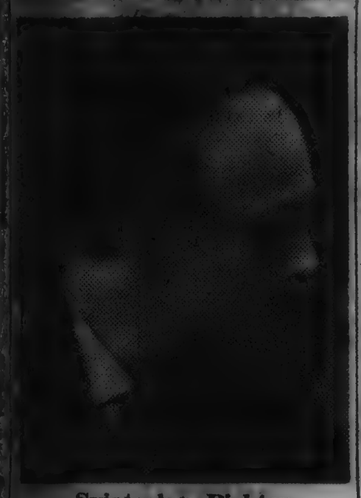
Moscow.

ALL music, all the finest music, rests—like the infant in the arms of Raphael's Madonna — within his skull, which reminds one of domes built by Bramante and Michelangelo."

With this well-mixed and florid metaphor, Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Teofilovich Richter is praised by his noted teacher, Prof. Heinrich Neuhaus of the Moscow Conservatory.

Other such glowing accolades have been strewn in the path of the enigmatic, moody and brilliant artist who will be making his New York debut on Wednesday in Carnegie Hall, playing the first of five concerts there.

Richter's renown in the West stems only from his records



Sviatoslav Richter.

and from the reports of a few Westerners who have heard his concerts in Moscow and elsewhere in the Eastern world. Except for a brief concert visit in Finland last May, Richter's tour of America is his first appearance outside the Iron Curtain.

This is not because of any political choice on the part of the 45-year-old pianist. It is doubtful if his thoughts ever quite get down to the level of partisan politics.

There is hardly a music lover in the Soviet Union who does not hold the view that Sviatoslav Richter is one of the great pianists of our time—perhaps of all time. The mere pedestrian title of "People's Artist Prize" does not reflect the reverence with which Richter's playing is greeted by Moscow music goers.

Richter was born of German parents in the small Ukrainian town of Zhitomar. At an early age, he moved to Odessa, one of the great music centers of Russia. His father was an organist who taught his son the rudiments of music. Richter began showing a profound interest in music, transcribing for the piano a whole mass of musical literature. He was no more than a boy when he became conductor of the Odessa Opera and Ballet Theatre. At the age of 19—virtually self-taught—he gave his first solo concert: a program of Chopin. At the same time he began to compose small pieces.

"I stopped composing just in time," Richter told an interviewer in his Moscow apartment shortly before he departed for his American tour. "I never play any of my own music any more and I won't play any of it during my tour, thank God."

It was in 1937 that Richter began his formal piano training. He went to Moscow and began studying under Professor Neuhaus, a contemporary of Rachmaninoff at the conservatory. "In half a year, Neuhaus freed my hands—really liberated them," Richter declared. "For that reason he is more than a teacher or friend to me."

Manner of Playing

There are times when Richter attacks the piano savagely, his arms bent strangely at his side, his body leaning forward over the keyboard as though he were tearing sound out of the instrument. At other times he leans over backward with his arms outstretched and his head thrown back.

According to Richter, the audience is not a challenge or a thing to be feared. In fact, he indicated to his visitor, he overcomes whatever stage fright might seize an artist before he steps on stage by forgetting the audience completely. "I don't consider the public. My whole interest is my approaching encounter with the composer—with his music."

Richter likes to paint at times during off hours and it is said that had he concentrated on painting he would have become a good artist.

Many of the furnishings in the simply furnished four-room apartment he keeps in the center of Moscow had been put away in preparation for his two-month absence. But an impressionistic still-life by the noted Russian painter, Robert Falk, still hung above the Bechstein concert grand. And on an easel near a smaller Steinway grand, on the other side of the room, stood a handsome Russian ikon of a madonna of the fourteenth or fifteenth century.

Heavy drapes separate this large room from another, where he and his wife, Nina Doloyak, a singer and professor at the conservatory, relax. It was at Richter's almost angry insistence that the conservatory granted his wife leave for the trip to America. Friends say her presence is almost a necessity to him on such an extensive tour. She anticipates his moods, and helps to smooth the rise and fall of emotional cycles that seem to afflict him.

If his mood is really bad, or if he feels that he cannot "approach the composer," he may not play at all. Having been reared in the south, he says, he plays best when it is hot. He feels best when he is in his country house among thick forests along the banks of the Oka River, some distance from Moscow—playing for himself, practicing new programs and relaxing with close friends.

Boston Holiday Music Holds High Excitement

■ In its general excellence, the recent musical scene in Boston has resembled a landscape with a few lonely peaks. A truly rarefied atmosphere ha'oed several concerts: the two piano recitals of Sviatoslav Richter; Vronsky and Babin at two pianos, The Opera Group's "Otello," and Lorin Maazel's later appearance on an elevated podium at Symphony Hall.

The most rampant hunt for expletives followed the two recitals of Richter, the Soviet pianist, who came for two concerti with the Symphony, and stayed two extra evenings. His first recital, composed of Beethoven sonatas, ended with the authentic thrust, and almost the speed, of a rocket in the "Appassionata." Two days later, his second program, ranged to farther outposts of the repertoire, with some lesser-known pieces by Prokofiev; in particular, his Sixth Sonata in A Major, which Richter himself had premiered. There were many encores, and finally the audience took to its feet, stamping him back for fifteen bows.

Another unforgettable amalgam of keyboard and strings came in the two-piano recital of Vronsky and Babin, given for the Boston Morning Musicales. They began with an iridescent reading of Mozart's Sonata in F Major, continued with the Brahms-Haydn Variations, and Debussy's cryptic "Epigraphes antiques," ending with the big waltz from "Eugen Onegin," arranged by Mr. Babin. As in the past, the artists showed a growing, almost gyroscopic sensitivity to dynamic balance and color shadings, that commuted their individual talents to a true musical compound—something rich and rare.

An equally vivid impression was left by the Società Corelli, twelve strings and a pianist, playing in the Mason Music Foundation series. Their youthful vigor and many-layered sonority, in works of the Italian Baroque, made for rare satisfaction.

For its second offering of the season, the Opera Group, under the artistic direction of Sarah Caldwell, gave fresh and exciting performances of Verdi's "Otello," with a cast composed of local professionals and internationally-known leads. Lucine Amara as Desdemona, Leonard Del Ferro as Otello, Tito Gobbi as Iago, William Flavin as Cassio, and Louis Sgarro as Roderigo were the visitors, whose talents were coordinated with the others in beautifully directed singing and acting, to make an absorbing evening.

■ Other musical high points came on those evenings when Lorin Maazel ascended the podium at Symphony Hall for two weekends of concerts. At his first program, the young prodigy-grown-prodigious led the men through Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra," with egregious success. On the second, he presented a reposed and reflective reading of Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Afterward came a charged and precise version of Stravinsky's "Le chant du rossignol," followed by Scriabin's "Le poème de l'extase"; the latter wound up in a towering crescendo which revealed swelling sound as almost a naked principle. Most remarkable about Maazel's music is his control—first of the over-all plan of the composition, and then of the musicians who play its strands. It seemed some time since these musicians had exerted themselves so well, and with such resplendent results.

An especially interesting recital was the American debut of the pianist, Boleslaw Woytowicz, professor of piano and composition at the Warsaw Conservatory. He was brought here by Dr. Stanley Nowak, president of the Paderewski Fund, as part of that noted pianist's centennial. The center of attraction was his performance of Paderewski's large Sonata in E-Flat Minor, which compounds influences of Schumann and opulent Liszt with that of his own shaping intellect in a moving and epic design. Works of this composer and Chopin made up the program.

The Budapest String Quartet returned for two concerts of monuments of the literature, the environment they have made their naturalized playground through the years. It seemed that their vigor and decision, a hallmark through the years, has taken on new sharpness and concision in attacks and releases, providing the added thrust that changes a performance from a vehicle to a voyage.

■ Notable was a concert of the Brandeis University Chamber Players, given as part of the Institute for Contemporary Music Series. The program, as contemporary as a nosecone, was flawlessly and absorbingly played. It opened with Elliott Carter's Quartet for flute, oboe, 'cello and harpsichord, recently made available on a Columbia Record. It seemed by far the most viable of the newer works presented, since it basically relies on the power of suggestion for its extension in time.

The same period saw the second concert of Harold Farberman's New Arts Orchestra, assisted by the Dancemakers, with the same daring programming and skillful performance as before. . . The Boston Conservatory featured its artist-in-residence, Serge Conus, in a piano recital of his own compositions, as part of its Fenway Series. . . The New England Conservatory topped off a day of observances with a gala concert of its orchestra and chorus under James Dixon, to signalize the dedication of its new Spaulding music library and adjacent dormitory. . . The Civic Symphony, directed by Daniel Cherkassky, presented Nell Novak as soloist in Dvorak's Cello Concerto, with pleasing results. . . Charles Victor Brunsvitch led his Cambridge Civic Symphony through an interesting program which included a "Symphonic Paraphrase" by Boston's talented young composer, Nicholas Van Slyck. Even the snow, which forgot to confine itself to the peaks, and came tumbling in profusion over everything one night, failed to halt musical climbers with a liking for the quicker metabolisms of the upper air.

ROBERT W. DUMM

Herald 10/30/60

Music Events This Week

According to reports reaching Symphony Hall, Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist now on his first United States tour, has been hailed in New York and Chicago as one of the most exciting pianists of this century. Mr. Richter's first Boston appearance will be in a gala Pension Fund Concert with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on Tuesday. Because of the acclaim which Mr. Richter received in Chicago where he was guest of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and in New York where he is currently performing five sold-out recitals at Carnegie Hall, the demand for tickets to his first Boston appearance has been heavy. A few seats are still available at Symphony Hall Box Office, CO 6-1492.

Mr. Richter will perform two concertos in Boston. The revised program will begin with the Overture to "Prometheus" by Beethoven followed by Beethoven's First Piano Concerto and the Paiano Concerto in B-flat major, No. 2, by Brahms.

Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, will conduct the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Saturday and Tuesday, Nov. 8. His program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, "The Miraculous Mandarin" Suite by Bela Bartok, and William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." Donald Gramm and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conductor, will participate in the Walton oratorio.

TODAY

JAN PEERCE, tenor, assisted by Leo ... Symphony Hall, 3 ... by Aaron Richard ... U. Celebrity Series. Box office ...

... P.M. ... of songs and arias ... Handel, Schubert, Verdi, Rossini, ... Verdi and ...

JULIAN ... pianist, Jordan Hall, 3:30 P.M. Presented by Aaron Richard as B. U. Celebrity Series. Box office open at 2:00 P.M. Lute music by Dowland, Morley, Johnson, Rossiter, cutting: guitar ... by or arranged from Montevardi, ... Mozart, Martin, de Falla, Ravel, ... Ruiz.

GEORGE FAXON, ... Stephen Church, Cohasset ... by Douglas Marshall, boy ... 4:30 P.M. "Hour of Music" series. Admission free.

Signe Quale Dawson, soprano, Roger Voisin, trumpet, Weston Brannen, organ, Melrose Hall, 4:00 P.M. Bach, Handel, Bruch, Grieg and contemporary music.

MONDAY

LONDON INTIMATE OPERA, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 P.M. Season's first program by the Cambridge Society for Early Music. "Thomas and Sally," Pastoral Opera, by Arne; "Don Quixote," by Purcell.

TUESDAY

Solo and ensemble works for instruments and voices, Jordan Hall, 8:30 P.M. New England Conservatory students. Couperin, Purcell, Bach, Faure, Dupare, Poulenc, Debussy. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

Mario Pincherle, illustrated lecture-Lecture in "Great Music" series. College of Liberal Arts. Room ... 7:15 p.m.

THURSDAY

JAN SMETERLIN, pianist, ... Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented ... Richmond on B.U. Celeb... Programs: Beethoven Sonata, Brahms-Paganini Variations, Ballades, Mazurkas, Etudes, Scherzo, Andante Spianato, Polonaise, all by Chopin. Jordan Hall box office.

FRIDA...

Mozart Festival ... Hastings, conductor ... Violin ... Recital ... and Conservatory ... program ... a ... Mozart ... Lucian ... orchestra ... Symphony ... music society, ... Chorus and ... Kenneth McK... 8:00 p.m.

Repeat ... Con...

Herald 10/14/60

Sviatoslav Richter to Play At BSO Pension Fund Concert

When the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Nov. 1, the special concert will mark the 126th program presented by the orchestra to benefit its Pension Institution.

Funds allotted as pensions to former orchestra members include proceeds from the Open Rehearsals held annually at Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood, in addition to the gala Pension Fund concerts by the orchestra and by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. Some income is also derived from private contributions and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Transcription Trust, which is responsible for the delayed broadcasting on tape of the orchestra's concerts to approximately 50 stations across the United States.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular Open Rehearsal series in 1951-52, his second season as the orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. The number of Open Rehearsals has been increased from seven to ten for the coming season in response to heavy public demand for season tickets.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals, including the first rehearsal on Thursday. Subsequent Open Rehearsals will be held on Nov. 17, Dec. 8, Feb. 8 and 23, March 2, 16, and 29, April 20 and 27. Season tickets for the ten rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved; any seat in Symphony Hall is available to those on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the rehearsal which begins at 7:30.

Monitor 10/15/60

Richter Boston Debut

When Sviatoslav Richter, the noted Soviet pianist, makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony on Tuesday night, Nov. 1, he will play the Beethoven Concerto No. 1 in C major, and the Tchaikovsky Concerto in B-flat minor.

This Pension Fund concert will be under the direction of Charles Munch, who will also conduct Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan." Seats are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

Herald 10/31/60

Boston Symphony Pension Fund

When Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday, Nov. 1 at 8:30 p.m. the special concert will mark the 126th program presented by the Orchestra to benefit its pension fund.

A pension fund was discussed by the orchestra's founder, Henry Lee Higginson, in 1881 before the first season of concerts but not established until the orchestra's 22d season. The first such program, given at Symphony Hall Mar. 1, 1903, was advertised as: "A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in aid of its pension fund, assisted by Mme. Antoinette Szumowska who has kindly volunteered."

Funds allotted as pensions to former orchestra members include proceeds from the Open Rehearsals held annually at Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood, in addition to the gala Pension Fund concerts by the orchestra and by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. Some income is also derived from private contributions and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Transcription Trust, which is responsible for the delayed broadcasting on tape of the Orchestra's concerts to approximately 50 stations across the United States.

Herald 10/30/60

Richter at Pension Fund

Richter's Fame Made by Discs

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It is appropriate to preface a note on a remarkable album of the fall with a reference to Sviatoslav Richter. The adjective frequently applied to this Soviet pianist is "legendary." Most artists attain that status only when they are dead.

Mr. Richter, however, the legend and the man, is appearing Tuesday night as the solo artist at the annual Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He may be, perhaps, a trifle less legendary when he leaves the platform—though it is unlikely in view of his rhapsodic advance criticisms which are certainly no secret to readers of out-of-town newspapers or to the Boston public confronted by massive photographic reproductions of the notices splashed over Symphony Hall's lobby. Perhaps, rather, we shall discover the legend and the man as one.

The point is that Sviatoslav Richter's legend has been created out of the gramophone recording. Whatever his merits may be in live performance, he is known to the American public for his statements on wax. These have ranged from the superlative to the cryptic, usually on Deutsche Grammophon Gesselschaft; and before he arrives in Boston, before he sounds a note, Richter possesses a ready-made audience: it owns evidence declaring him a pianist of world stature.

Fame's Courier

The recording has been the courier of fame. Performers who emerge onto concert programs like a genie released from a loudspeaker box are a recent phenomenon of our musical culture. A close examination of any impresario's list, such as the local Richmond series, reveals the increasing impact of the trend; and I think it a heartening sign. Although splicing and other techniques may create a letter-perfect rendering, even on discs a musician must be an artist to instil marbled perfection with life. The audience discovering a Richter in the kind of music Richter plays is a cultivated audience; but it is interesting to reflect that whereas the reputation of an artist was once the slow accretion of years of touring, it now can be made overnight.

Paderewski, whose centennial will be celebrated here soon, eschewed recording. It was psychologically necessary for him to have a live audience; moreover, methods were crude in his day. John McCormack, on the other hand, loved recording, as his legacy attests. Both followed correct instincts required by their innate artistic development, I am glad to see, though, a time when the cultivated audiences comprise more people than can be crowded within the confines of a theater, and performers are a resolution of Paderewski and McCormack as a matter of course. A technological society has, besides its frailties, many glories; and the gramophone disc is one.

Globe 10/30/60

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Sviatoslav Richter, Soviet pianist who is now on his first United States tour, will make his first Boston appearance in a gala Pension Fund Concert with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. Richter will perform two concertos with the Boston Symphony. The revised program will begin with the Overture to "Prometheus" by Beethoven, followed by Beethoven's First Piano Concerto and the Piano Concerto in B-flat major by Brahms..

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate director, will conduct the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, and Tuesday, Nov. 8, at 8:30. His program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and "The Miraculous Mandarin" Suite by Bela Bartok. The program will conclude with the first Boston Symphony Orchestra performance since 1933 of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." Donald Gramm and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the Walton oratorio.

Monique Haas, the French pianist now making her first visit to the United States, will be Charles Munch's guest at the concerts of Friday-Saturday, Nov. 11-12. Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the orchestra, the Mozart No. 20, which has not appeared on Symphony programs since 1915, and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel, last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major and will conclude it with Milhaud's "Suite Provencale."

THE BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY, NOV. 2, 1960

35

MUSIC

Sviatoslav Richter

Sviatoslav Richter was the piano soloist as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented its 126th Pension Fund Concert last night. The program:

Overture to 'die Geschopfe des Prometheus" Op. 43 ..... Bethoven
Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15 ..... Beethoven
Piano Conerto No. 2, in B flat major, Op. 83 ..... Brahms

By ROBERT TAYLOR

You shall hear no loud praise from me this morning about Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet piano virtuoso, who made his first appearance in Boston at the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night. The playing of this, very probably the world's greatest pianist, needs no endorsement rom Roget's Thesaurus. He is, totally beggaring all description, a giant.

But since we shall have to come to some sort of verbal terms with Richter's genius, let us amend it to no loud initial praise. That was supplied by the capacity audience, whih salvoed and thundered its approval, standing in the aisles, shouting, stamping, volleying bravos and applause. The pianist returned for bow after bow, with Charles Munch, with Samuel Mayes, the 'cello soloist in the Brahms Concerto, alone. The Boston Symphony players struck up a rhythmic clap in the Russian manner, but were quite outnumbered. It was the most electrifying Symphony Hall concert since Pierre Monteux's birthday party last April.

With all the excitement, there remained the cold, unemotional facts at the base of Mr. Richter's hypnotic artistry: the facts of technique. He has, by far, the most evocative touch of any pianist before the public today. Sonorities are not his metier; thers can produce bigger volume, or play scale passages with a more wiry digital attack or toss about massive chunks of bombastic chord.

But who articulates with more refinement, or more subtle color, or exploits the dynamic range of the keyboard with more delicate clarity? Mr. Richter never needs to pound to make effects. Last night he declared in his Beethoven and in his Brahms that heroic structures are no less heroic for being graceful. He seemed incapable of uttering an ugly sound.

Miracle of Insight

And with all the excitement, there remained other facts, too, the poetic facts of interpretation. Here Mr. Richter offers problems t othe critic, for the miracle of his insight is impossible to capture in prose this side of gush. The Brahms, for me the highpoint of the two offered on this occasion, created a lyrical, warm, romantic songfulness that plunged straight to the core of the concerto. Everything was expressive; it was big and it was tender; the passages with the 'cello duet shimmered in the dusky radiance of hushed beauty; the declamatory statements rang out like anvils. In this exquisite account the artist allowed the pianism to take command, eschewing flashy effects and addressing the imagination in the accents of Brahms—a statement soaring on a shining legato arch. I have never heard a better performance of this music.

The Beethoven was no less a phenomenon, though not quite as unique. Mr. Richter observed every dynamic marking closely, but his scrupulous clarity offered a pensive, gentle element too often wanting in the huge work. It was a personality that derived from thorough identification with the score. Again the lyric dimension; again a masterly interpretation.

The orchestra seemed to take fire in the presense of such a magnetic soloist, and I thought the balance Charles Munch preserved all evening was worthy of the occasion. The overture to the "Creatures of Prometheus," went briskly and satisfactorily; but it was Mr. Richter whom one had come to hear—a man slightly under medium height, with a slightly under medium height, with a triangular face, a large head fringed by a fluffy tonsure of red-gold hair, and creativity in his limply held hands. He showed a few physical mannerisms, such as a rocking motion, probably necessary to merge the cold letter and the molten spirit; but they are not distracting. Of course, two works are scarcely an index to any pianist, but Mr. Richter returns in recital here during December.

He was simply, last night, two works or not, the most formidable living exponent of the piano.

THE BOSTON GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1960

Richter Wildly Applauded As Pension Fund Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall, last night, its 126th concert in aid of the pension fund for retired members. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Beethoven: Overture, "The Creatures of Prometheus"; Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major. The soloist was the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, who appeared for the first time in Boston.

By CYRUS DURGIN

It was an historic occasion last night at Symphony Hall as the Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter made his local debut as soloist in two concertos at a pension fund concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When he had finished the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto, wild applause began, and it went on and on and on. In seconds it had assumed the proportions of a full-scale ovation, with cheers and stamping increasing the friendly din.

Time and again Richter, who on stage appears to be a tall, lanky man with sparse brown hair combed over the top of his head, came back to bow. He was insistent, as he had been earlier in the evening, that conductor Charles Munch stand beside him and share the tribute. He walked a few steps to shake the hand of first cellist Samuel Mayes, who had played the lovely, singing solo of Brahms' andante in a Heavenly fashion.

Then Ricter appeared alone, coming from behind the piano, stepping gingerly in front of it and bowing there, then again from behind it, and that time as he went off, almost knocking over the conductor's music stand. (He caught it just in time!)

Still the ovation went on, for few people had left Symphony Hall, and for the most part the audience stood cheering and clapping.

It was all thoroughly deserved. Richter, whose musical prowess had been known a little here through his recordings, had been awaited as a conquering hero, and he proved to be just that. He is a great, great artist, to whom the making of music must be quite as natural as breathing.

Neither Beethoven's C major Concerto, nor the Second of Brahms is the most displayful of piano music in the virtuoso sense, but each is highly demanding in style and clean articulation. Very likely Richter can play as fast and as spectacularly as the best, but this was not the time for fireworks, nor did he venture them.

What he achieved were perhaps the two most nearly perfect performances of these concertos that this chronicler ever had heard. What is more, he fired the orchestra and Dr. Munch—especially in Brahms—to outdo themselves. The result took your breath away.

Richter, slightly nervous in manner and a little like Sarkin, carring his head a bit to one side or the other, seldom straightly vertical, is not at all displayful at the keyboard.

There are no grand gestures, no spectacular crashing or lifting of the arms. His fingers seem always to be covering the keys, and from them emerges a fantastically even and controlled articulation of notes.

His sense of rhythem is flexible to the point of extreme delicacy, his dynamic range both wide and subtly graded. His use of the pedal is fantastically excellent—indeed you are seldom conscious of it.

But above all, above the technic and the surety of phrase and style, is a masterful sense of poetry-in-tones. This blend of qualities naturally spurs one to think of some other great master of the past to whom Richter might be compared. I heard people talking of Josef Hofmann (some of them obviously could not have heard him earlier than had I, and that was late in his career) and perhaps that is a fair comparison.

But most of all, Richter is Richter, a giant of the present time. Fortunately, we shall hear him again soon, when he gives a solo concert at Symphony Hall Dec. 11.

since

Globe 10/23/60

Pianist Richter Pension Fund Soloist, Nov. 1

Sviatoslav Richter, Soviet pianist, recently arrived upon his first visit to the United States, will be soloist in a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to benefit the pension fund, at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 1.

Mr Richter, who then will make his Boston debut, will be heard in Beethoven's C major Concerto, No. 1, and the B-flat minor Concerto by Tchaikovsky. Charles Munch will begin the program with the "Coriolanus" Overture of Beethoven.

35A
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Richter's Extraordinary Boston Debut

OF THINGS TO COME

Devotees of the late Jussi Bjoerling will be heartened by Capitol's intended homage to one of the great tenor voices of the age. The Swedish singer will be featured posthumously in four LP issues scheduled to appear during 1961. Bjoerling's last complete opera set, a stereophonic "Madama Butterfly," with Victoria de los Angeles, Mario Sereni and the Rome Opera forces conducted by Gabriele Santini, will be available Jan. 3, with a single-disk "Highlights" juxtaposed right from the start.

In commendable recognition of the singer's broad list of recorded performances of earlier years, Capitol also will release this month the first of three albums to be entitled "The Beloved Bjoerling," compiling numerous recordings of the years 1937 through 1948. Volume I will be devoted to operatic arias from the famous orchestral sessions conducted by Nils Grevillius. The second and third LPs, due to follow at early intervals, will be of opera and, finally, of Swedish, Italian and English songs. While Capitol already has set its choice of discography for the triple-commemoration, record buyers may still want to flood its Hollywood headquarters with requests for the best of all early Bjoerling recordings, his jubilant performance of Paris' Entrance from "La Belle Hélène," coupled with a rousing aria from Millöcker's "Bettelstudent." Nobody made a better tenor record in the 30s, and one should not have to wait a generation for it to turn up on whatever may be the future equivalent of the LP historical series.

Among currently active musicians, Sviatoslav Richter undoubtedly commands the greatest attention on records. Victor's second American session with the Soviet visitor has Boston's Symphony Hall for its setting, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony as allies for the Beethoven First Concerto; the disk may be on sale before this note appears. But Victor cannot claim exclusivity, since Richter also was set to record with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy for Columbia early in December. The choice of repertoire was still a close secret at press time. One clue may be Richter's performance with the same musicians of the Dvorak Concerto immediately following his first New York recitals; another guess hazards Schumann or Tchaikovsky. One fact is undeniable: whether on Victor, Artia, Columbia, Monitor or Deutsche Grammophone, Richter is currently the best-selling pianist on records.

Another pianist active in recent weeks is Leonard Bernstein, temporarily forsaking his baton to accompany Jennie Tourel in a representative list of his own songs, including the four menus known in cycle as "La Bonne Cuisine" and his five "kid-songs" entitled "I Hate Music."

Although the holidays temporarily stem the monthly wave of new releases, London still has managed to refer to several of its impressive opera sets, with a new series of "Highlights" editions offering excerpts from its stereo "Aïda," the Belgrade Opera productions of "Eugene Onegin," "Pique Dame" and "Prince Igor," and two works presently in the news for their Metropolitan renewal, Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore," and Gluck's "Alcestis." The last-named issue is especially rewarding. London's complete 4-record album derived from a BBC production circa 1955, in which Kirsten Flagstad sang the original Italian version, a more static treatment than her famous 1952 Metropolitan farewell had provided. For the many American collectors who want a memento of the Flagstad Alcestis, the Highlights treatment offers both beautiful music and notable singing in a compact dramatic sequence.

London's offspring in the thrift field, Richmond, is responsible for the month's most impressive renewal of the LP catalogue. For its first departure into album sets, it presents—for the first time on LP—a famous performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," with Kathleen Ferrier. At $1.98 list price per disk, this 3-record album deserves consideration for any library. Other Richmond reprints include excellent 2-record sets of "The Sleeping Beauty" (Anatole Fistoulari and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra) and Karl Münchinger's Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra series of Brandenburg Concertos.

For the confirmed discophile, contentment is ever a distant, even an unlikely, possibility. Give him a complete "Tristan" and he demands the "Ring"; publish all the Beethoven Sonatas and he then wants Scarlatti in toto. The demand is healthy, and is often heeded by the companies. One editor's New Year wishes might include:

"Samson and Delilah," with Rita Gorr, Jon Vickers, and Sir Thomas Beecham.

Any one of Sviatoslav Richter's seven New York recitals, recorded on the scene.

A new recording by Charles Rosen of the Debussy Etudes.

A completely uncut "Lucia di Lammermoor" with Joan Sutherland, and "The Daughter of the Regiment" with Anna Moffo.

Britten's "Spring" Symphony, conducted by the composer.

Verdi's "Macbeth" from Callas and Tito Gobbi, followed by the one role no one yet has proposed for Miss Callas, Fiora in "The Love of Three Kings."

Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder," in the performances to be conducted by Stokowski with the Philadelphia Orchestra early in January.

An extended series by Betty Allen, the most interesting new recitalist among American singers.

Soviet Pianist Wins Ecstatic Acclaim

By Harold Rogers

In a small town high in the Santa Cruz mauntains there used to be a dingy little dance hall that sported an arrogant sign above its door: "The Sweetest Music You'll Ever Hear This Side of Heaven!"

Sheer Western hyperbole, of course. Seldom, in fact, could it be applied to anything heard in our leading music halls; yet last night while I listened to Sviatoslav Richter, this sign came vividly to mind. Could it apply in this instance? Yes, it could. And as the evening progressed, it did.

But to take things as they came. Charles Munch first mounted the Symphony Hall podium to conduct Beethoven's Overture to "The Creatures of Prometheus." It was obvious almost from the outset that the Boston Symphony was playing at a pitch of excitement far above its usual degree.

Everything pointed to an evening of greatness—the kind that looms like a lonely mountain peak as one looks back over the desert of memory. Was not Mr. Richter among us—the greatest Soviet pianist of today? Had he not been appraised by leading critical minds as "one of the great pianists of our century"? Seldom has an artist achieved such fabulous acclaim. Even rarer was the breathless sense of expectation in the audience as it awaited the moment when Mr. Richter would first touch the keyboard.

* * *

After the overture Mr. Richter strode on stage, a tall, large-boned man with red hair stringing back from his huge forehead. With the aplomb of one who knows that he knows, yet with simple humility, he bowed first to the orchestra, then to the audience, and took his seat at the Steinway during a storm of applause. Then Dr. Munch began the long prelude of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 while we awaited the moment of magic.

And when it came, it was more than magic. Were it enchantment, we might have thought him better than he really is. But he was utterly sincere. Here we witnessed that rarest of musical phenomena—a devotion to an ideal so total, so selfless, that the music poured forth as if it were coming straight from the mind of Beethoven himself, as if there were no performer, no keys, hammers, strings, or pedals through which the music had to find its way before touching the hearts of the listeners. The music seemed to generate, in fact within ourselves. There is no higher art of expression than this.

* * *

Mr. Richter is a master of iridescent tone. His range of colors is beyond belief. At times he achieved the tang of a harpsichord; again the notes were rolled in velvet. The music poured from the tips of his fingers like liquid poetry.

For him the piano is not a percussive instrument. He achieves mountainous power with nary a bang. He evokes serenest pianissimos in which every note maintains its quality. He keeps technique completely subordinated to the meaning of the music; in fact, the listener is not likely to be aware of technique at all, unless he should find himself astounded by the velocity, evenness, and clarity of the runs and trills.

In the Beethoven—as in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, which followed—Mr. Richter played phrases as perhaps we have never heard them done before, yet with the ring of rightness. The evening consisted of one revelation after another; but there was no distortion, no dramatizing, no theatrics for their sake alone. The collaboration between Mr. Richter and Dr. Munch was based securely on oneness of thought. The orchestra was as marvelous in its way as Mr. Richter was in his.

* * *

The response to his playing, it almost goes without saying, was instant, vociferous, and prolonged. While taking his bows he was all smiles, actively shaking hands with conductor and concertmaster, almost childlike in his happiness.

Usually it is not possible to give a complete critical appraisal of an artist's work until he is heard in a solo recital. Since concertos are generally intended to be display pieces, some musicians who show off well while playing before an orchestra are quite unequal to the interpretive demands of the recital.

We already know this is not true of Mr. Richter. The poetic lucidity of the Beethoven, as well as the solo portions of the Brahms, in the Andante especially, show beyond all doubt that he is the master of any musical situation.

But those who would like to hear him in recital may do so when he comes to Symphony Hall Sunday night, Dec. 11.

Herald 1/8/61

Trends Evident In Music Season

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The returns for the 1960-61 musical season in Boston are not complete yet, but in this breathing space one may look back at the first half of the season and discern certain developments. Although it's too early to state whether or not this has been a memorable year, trends are evident. Let's look at some of the highlights thus far.

1. RICHTER—The appearance of the Soviet virtuoso in America ignited tumultuous near-idolatry such as performers seldom receive in their lifetime, and certainly no pianist visiting the U.S. since Paderewski. The rather constricted dynamic range of Sviatoslav Richter's recordings had prepared few for the impact of his in-person musicianship.

He gave three concerts here, the first with the Boston Symphony on Nov. 1 being a landmark. His Brahms B-flat major Concerto (which he later recorded with Leinsdorf) received a miraculously expressive reading on this occasion. Later, in early December, he returned in recital, an all-Beethoven sonata program and a mixed bill notable for its distinguished Prokofieff. His impeccably-scaled technique was evident at both recitals, though I have heard the sonata program critized on grounds of his excessive interpretive detachment. Still, Richter's conquest of America marks the season's annals indelibly.

Distinct Differences

2. BOSTON OPERA — The character of the two Boston opera companies, Boris Goldovsky's and Sara Caldwell's, began to assume divergent personalities in 1960: Goldovsky's the more intellectually venturesome and experimental, Miss Caldwell's stronger in production and voices. With the Goldovsky troupe — which this fall gave "Don Giovanni"—the artistic excitement is usually stirred by the remounting of obscure operas or the discovery of new facets in a standard libretto. Although the Boston Opera Group is sorely in need of a ranking conductor, it has scored artistic gains through sumptuous professional voices while remaining within the limits of the popular repertory. The forthcoming productions of NEOT and the Opera Group within the next few weeks should do much to clarify these trends: meanwhile local opera is in the midst of a welcome renaissance.

3. FARBERMAN—Harold Farberman has definitely emerged as the most imaginative personality on the local scene. His formation of the New Arts Orchestra—professional young Boston musicians without a Symphony affiliation—fills a needed gap. You could call Mr. Farberman a kind of new wave in music here, for if his programs have occasionally run the risks of experiment, they have consistently contributed vigor and life. Within a Boston context they create a milieu of ferment and activity, qualities much to be desired when economics have made experiment all but moribund.

Maazel Brilliant

4. HANDEL & HAYDN—I think I detect new signs of life, too, within the Handel and Haydn Society under Dr. Edward Gildea. The two concerts thus far have not been unqualified successes (indeed "The Messiah" was a failure) but have exhibited a daring and freshness commendable in an institution once content to plod the trodden path mechanically. The chorus seems to be in transition from a large powerful mass in the English oratorio tradition, to a more flexible, lighter sound. In the process it has sacrificed something, perhaps too much, in terms of volume, but again we have aesthetic forces at work for real development.

5. MAAZEL—The guest appearances of 30-year-old Lorin Maazel with the Boston Symphony brought forth the most brilliant American conductor of his generation. Apparently there is no style which Mr. Maazel cannot encompass; his work is a harbinger of greatness. Otherwise Symphony has offered few significant occasions. The new music ranging from Schuman's Seventh to Barber's Die Natali has been disappointing. One can, however, point to many excellent performances — Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" with the splendid Chorus Pro Musica, Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, the recent Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseph de Pasquale. The most notable soloists introduced have been the Belgian husband and wife team, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, duo-pianists, and Dr. Munch has demonstrated his capacity as the orchestral accompanist without peer whenever guests turn up. But the contemporary writers have offered slim pickings at best.

...or dynamite."

Herald 10/23/60

Symphony on Tour This Week Return for Gala Concert

Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist who has just arrived in this country for his first extended tour outside the Iron Curtain nations, will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's next concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Richter will perform both the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor at the Pension Fund concert on Tuesday, Nov. 1.

This week the orchestra is making its annual mid-western fall tour and will be heard in Rochester, Syracuse, Corning, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

Associate Conductor Richard Burgin will conduct at Symphony Hall Friday, Nov. 4, and Saturd Nov. 5, in a program which includes a revival of William W ton's "Belshazzar's Feast." D Reid, Gramm, baritone, and Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred N. Patterson, conductor, will participate. Beethoven's Symphony 1 1 and the Suite from the Par mime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," by Bela Bartok are s scheduled. Mr. Burgin will repe this program on Tuesday eveni Nov. 8, as the second concert the Tuesday evening series.

Mr. Munch will introduce t French pianist, Monique Haas, subscribers at the orchestr concerts of Friday-Saturday, No 11-12, when she performs co certos by Mozart and Ravel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
OCT 31 1960

Benefit Concert

Sviatoslav Richter, Soviet pianist now on his first United States tour, will make his first Boston appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night.

The occasion is the gala Pension Fund Concert, for which a few tickets still remain at the box office, CO 6-1492.

With Charles Munch conducting, Mr. Richter will perform Beethoven's First Piano Concerto and the Piano Concerto in B-flat major, No. 2, by Brahms. The program will open with the Overture to "Prometheus" by Beethoven.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Richter's Extraordinary Boston Debut

OF THINGS TO COME

Devotees of the late Jussi Bjoerling will be heartened by Capitol's intended homage to one of the great tenor voices of the age. The Swedish singer will be featured posthumously in four LP issues scheduled to appear during 1961. Bjoerling's last complete opera set, a stereophonic "Madama Butterfly," with Victoria de los Angeles, Mario Sereni and the Rome Opera forces conducted by Gabriele Santini, will be available January 3, with a single-disk "Highlights" juxtaposed right from the start.

In commendable recognition of the singer's broad list of recorded performances of earlier years, Capitol also will release this month the first of three albums to be entitled "The Beloved Bjoerling," compiling numerous recordings of the years 1937 through 1948. Volume I will be devoted to operatic arias from the famous orchestral sessions conducted by Nils Grevillius. The second and third LPs, due to follow at early intervals, will be of opera and, finally, of Swedish, Italian and English songs. While Capitol already has set its choice of discography for the triple-commemoration, record buyers may still want to flood its Hollywood headquarters with requests for the best of all early Bjoerling recordings, his jubilant performance of Paris' Entrance from "La Belle Hélène," coupled with a rousing aria from Millöcker's "Bettelstudent." Nobody made a better tenor record in the 30s, and one should not have to wait a generation for it to turn up on whatever may be the future equivalent of the LP historical series.

Among currently active musicians, Sviatoslav Richter undoubtedly commands the greatest attention on records. Victor's second American session with the Soviet visitor has Boston's Symphony Hall for its setting, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony as allies for the Beethoven First Concerto; the disk may be on sale before this note appears. But Victor cannot claim exclusivity, since Richter also was set to record with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy for Columbia early in December. The choice of repertoire was still a close secret at press time. One clue may be Richter's performance with the same musicians of the Dvorak Concerto immediately following his first New York recitals; another guess hazards Schumann or Tchaikovsky. One fact is undeniable: whether on Victor, Artia, Columbia, Monitor or Deutsche Grammophone, Richter is currently the best-selling pianist on records.

Another pianist active in recent weeks is Leonard Bernstein, temporarily forsaking his baton to accompany Jennie Tourel in a representative list of his own songs, including the four menus known in cycle as "La Bonne Cuisine" and his five "kid-songs" entitled "I Hate Music."

Although the holidays temporarily stem the monthly wave of releases, London still has managed to refurbish several of its impressive opera sets, with a new series of "Highlights" editions offering excerpts from its stereo "Aida," the Belgrade Opera productions of "Eugene Onegin," "Pique Dame" and "Prince Igor," and two works presently in the news for their Metropolitan renewal, Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore," and Gluck's "Alceste." The last-named issue is especially rewarding. London's complete 4-record album derived from a BBC production circa 1955, in which Kirsten Flagstad sang the original Italian version, a more static treatment than her famous 1952 Metropolitan farewell had provided. For the many American collectors who want a memento of the Flagstad Alcestis, the Highlights treatment offers both beautiful music and notable singing in a compact dramatic sequence.

London's offspring in the thrift field, Richmond, is responsible for the month's most impressive renewal of the LP catalogue. For its first departure into album sets, it presents—for the first time on LP—a famous performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," with Kathleen Ferrier. At $1.98 list price per disk, this 3-record album deserves consideration for any library. Other Richmond reprints include excellent 2-record sets of "The Sleeping Beauty" (Anatole Fistoulari and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra) and Karl Münchinger's Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra series of Brandenburg Concertos.

For the confirmed discophile, contentment is ever a distant, even an unlikely, possibility. Give him a complete "Tristan" and he demands the "Ring"; publish all the Beethoven Sonatas and he then wants Scarlatti in toto. The demand is healthy, and is often heeded by the companies. One editor's New Year wishes might include:

"Samson and Delilah," with Gorr, Jon Vickers, and Sir Beecham.

Any one of Sviatoslav Richter's seven New York recitals, recorded on the scene.

A new recording by Charles Rosen of the Debussy Etudes.

A completely uncut "Lucia di Lammermoor" with Joan Sutherland, and "The Daughter of the Regiment" with Anna Moffo.

Britten's "Spring" Symphony, conducted by the composer.

Verdi's "Macbeth" from Callas and Tito Gobbi, followed by the one role no one yet has proposed for Miss Callas, Fiora in "The Love of Three Kings."

Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder," in the performances to be conducted by Stokowski with the Philadelphia Orchestra early in January.

An extended series by Betty Allen, the most interesting new recitalist among American singers.

Soviet Pianist Wins Ecstatic Acclaim

By Harold Rogers

In a small town high in the Santa Cruz mountains there used to be a dingy little dance hall that sported an arrogant sign above its door: "The Sweetest Music You'll Ever Hear This Side of Heaven!"

Sheer Western hyperbole, of course. Seldom, in fact, could it be applied to anything heard in our leading music halls; yet last night while I listened to Sviatoslav Richter, this sign came vividly to mind. Could it apply in this instance? Yes, it could. And as the evening progressed, it did.

But to take things as they came. Charles Munch first mounted the Symphony Hall podium to conduct Beethoven's Overture to "The Creatures of Prometheus." It was obvious almost from the outset that the Boston Symphony was playing at a pitch of excitement far above its usual degree.

Everything pointed to an evening of greatness—the kind that looms like a lonely mountain peak as one looks back over the desert of memory. Was not Mr. Richter among us—the greatest Soviet pianist of today? Had he not been appraised by leading critical minds as "one of the great pianists of our century"? Seldom has an artist achieved such fabulous acclaim. Even rarer was the breathless sense of expectation in the audience as it awaited the moment when Mr. Richter would first touch the keyboard.

* * *

After the overture Mr. Richter strode on stage, a tall, large-boned man with red hair stringing back from his huge forehead. With the aplomb of one who knows that he knows, yet with simple humility, he bowed first to the orchestra, then to the audience, and took his seat at the Steinway during a storm of applause. Then Dr. Munch began the long prelude of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 while we awaited the moment of magic.

And when it came, it was more than magic. Were it enchantment, we might have thought him better than he really is. But he was utterly sincere. Here we witnessed that rarest of musical phenomena—a devotion to an ideal so total, so selfless, that the music poured forth as if it were coming straight from the mind of Beethoven himself, as if there were no performer, no keys, hammers, strings, or pedals through which the music had to find its way before touching the hearts of the listeners. The music seemed to generate, in fact, within ourselves. There is no higher art of expression than this.

* * *

Mr. Richter is a master of iridescent tone. His range of colors is beyond belief. At times he achieved the tang of a harpsichord; again the notes were rolled in velvet. The music poured from the tips of his fingers like liquid poetry.

For him the piano is not a percussive instrument. He achieves mountainous power with nary a bang. He evokes serenest pianissimos in which every note maintains its quality. He keeps technique completely subordinated to the meaning of the music; in fact, the listener is not likely to be aware of technique at all, unless he should find himself astounded by the velocity, evenness, and clarity of the runs and trills.

In the Beethoven—as in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, which followed—Mr. Richter played phrases as perhaps we have never heard them done before, yet with the ring of rightness. The evening consisted of one revelation after another; but there was no distortion, no dramatizing, no theatrics for their sake alone. The collaboration between Mr. Richter and Dr. Munch was based securely on oneness of thought. The orchestra was as marvelous in its way as Mr. Richter was in his.

The response to his playing, it almost goes without saying, was instant, vociferous, and prolonged. While taking his bows he was all smiles, actively shaking hands with conductor and concertmaster, almost childlike in his happiness.

Usually it is not possible to give a complete critical appraisal of an artist's work until he is heard in a solo recital. Since concertos are generally intended to be display pieces, some musicians who show off well while playing before an orchestra are quite unequal to the interpretive demands of the recital.

We already know this is not true of Mr. Richter. The poetic lucidity of the Beethoven, as well as the solo portions of the Brahms, in the Andante especially, show beyond all doubt that he is the master of any musical situation.

But those who would like to hear him in recital may do so when he comes to Symphony Hall Sunday night, Dec. 11.

Trends Evident In Music Season

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The returns for the 1960-61 musical season in Boston are not complete yet, but in this breathing space one may look back at the first half of the season and discern certain developments. Although it's too early to state whether or not this has been a memorable year, trends are evident. Let's look at some of the highlights thus far.

1. RICHTER—The appearance of the Soviet virtuoso in America gaited tumultuous near-idolatry such as performers seldom receive in their lifetime, and certainly no pianist visiting the U.S. since Paderewski. The rather constricted dynamic range of Sviatoslav Richter's recordings had prepared few for the impact of his in-person musicianship.

He gave three concerts here, the first with the Boston Symphony on Nov. 1 being a landmark. His Brahms B-flat major Concerto (which he later recorded with Leinsdorf) received a miraculously expressive reading on this occasion. Later, in early December, he returned in recital, an all-Beethoven sonata program and a mixed bill notable for its distinguished Prokofieff. His impeccably - scaled technique was evident at both recitals, though I have heard the sonata program critized on grounds of his excessive interpretive detachment. Still, Richter's conquest of America marks the season's annals indelibly.

Distinct Differences

2. BOSTON OPERA — The character of the two Boston opera companies, Boris Goldovsky's and Sara Caldwell's, began to assume divergent personalities in 1960: Goldovsky's the more intellectually venturesome and experimental, Miss Caldwell's stronger in production and voices. With the Goldovsky troupe — which this fall gave "Don Giovanni"—the artistic excitement is usually stirred by the remounting of obscure operas or the discovery of new facets in a standard libretto. Although the Boston Opera Group is sorely in need of a ranking conductor, it has scored artistic gains through sumptuous professional voices while remaining within the limits of the popular repertory. The forthcoming productions of NEOT and the Opera Group within the next few weeks should do much to clarify these trends: meanwhile local opera is in the midst of a welcome renaissance.

3. FARBERMAN—Harold Farberman has definitely emerged as the most imaginative personality on the local scene. His formation of the New Arts Orchestra—professional young Boston musicians without a Symphony affiliation—fills a needed gap. You could call Mr. Farberman a kind of new wave in music here, for if his programs have occasionally run the risks of experiment, they have consistently contributed vigor and life. Within a Boston context they create a milieu of ferment and activity, qualities much to be desired when economics have made experiment all but moribund.

Maazel Brilliant

4. HANDEL & HAYDN—I think I detect new signs of life, too, within the Handel and Haydn Society under Dr. Edward Gildea. The two concerts thus far have not been unqualified successes (indeed "The Messiah" was a failure) but have exhibited a daring and freshness commendable in an institution once content to plod the trodden path mechanically. The chorus seems to be in transition from a large powerful mass in the English oratorio tradition, to a more flexible, lighter sound. In the process it has sacrificed something, perhaps too much, in terms of volume, but again we have aesthetic forces at work for real development.

5. MAAZEL—The guest appearances of 30-year-old Lorin Maazel with the Boston Symphony brought forth the most brilliant American conductor of his generation. Apparently there is no style which Mr. Maazel cannot encompass; his work is a harbinger of greatness. Otherwise Symphony has offered few significant occasions. The new music ranging from Schuman's Seventh to Barber's Die Natali has been disappointing. One can, however, point to many excellent performances — Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" with the splendid Chorus Pro Musica, Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, the recent Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseph de Pasquale. The most notable soloists introduced have been the Belgian husband and wife team, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, duo-pianists, and Dr. Munch has demonstrated his capacity as the orchestral accompanist without peer whenever guests turn up. But the contemporary writers have offered slim pickings at best.

Symphony on Tour This Week
Return for Gala Concert

Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist who has just arrived in this country for the first extended tour outside the Iron Curtain nations, will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's next concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Richter will perform both the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor at the Pension Fund concert on Tuesday, Nov. 1.

This week the orchestra is making its annual mid-western fall tour and will be heard in Rochester, Syracuse, Corning, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

Associate Conductor Richard Burgin will conduct at Symphony

...Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet ...Hall Friday, Nov. 4, and Saturd... ...a program which ... ...include a revival of 'William W... ...Feast.' D... ...Cleva, baritone, and ... ...Pro Musica, Alfred N... ...Patterson, conductor, will part... ...pate. Beethoven's Symphony 1... ...1 and the Suite from the Par... ...mine. "The Miraculous Man... ...rm," by Bela Bartok are s... ...scheduled. Mr. Burgin will repe... ...this program on Tuesday even... ...Nov. 8, as the second concert ... ...the Tuesday evening series.

Mr. Munch will introduce t... ...French pianist, Monique Haas, ...subscribers at the orchestr... ...concerts of Friday-Saturday, N... ...11-12, when she performs co... ...certos by Mozart and Ravel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
OCT 31 1960

Benefit Concert

Sviatoslav Richter, Soviet pianist now on his first United States tour, will make his first Boston appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night.

The occasion is the gala Pension Fund Concert, for which a few tickets still remain at the box office, CO 6-1492.

With Charles Munch conducting, Mr. Richter will perform Beethoven's First Piano Concerto and the Piano Concerto in B-flat major, No. 2, by Brahms. The program will open with the Overture "Prometheus" by Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189

NOV 6 1960

Richter Truly Extraordinary

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

Boston—Sviatoslav Richter, pianist extraordinary, was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday at the 126th Pension Fund Concert in Symphony Hall, Boston. Charles Munch conducted.

Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15 and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat major, Op. 83 were played. The program opened with Beethoven's Overture to "Die Geschopfe des Prometheus," Op. 43.

Symphony Hall was filled to capacity with an audience which applauded, stamped and cheered for fifteen minutes at the close of the program, simply because there was no other way to express the upsurge of excitement and appreciation the amazing musical experience had brought.

There was complete unity between the conductor and the musicians. The orchestra has played many a superb accompaniment but it has never played a finer one. From the very first note of the solo themes in the Beethoven it was apparent that we were to hear superlative interpretations and as the evening passed, their proportions assumed a depth and breadth that almost defies description.

It was in the Beethoven that the perfection of control in all shades of tonal shading was shown by the soloist. Stormy fortes, with the strength of steel behind them, alternated with the most exquisite pianissimos, barely whisper soft. The loftiness of mood in the largo movement communicated the feeling of spiritual calm. Absolute clarity of intention made this interpretation an exhilarating intellectual exposion of the great music.

It was in the Brahms concerto that we felt the real warmth and penetration of the rich musical insight that Mr. Richter possesses. He was born in the Ukraine and it was apparent in his strong, impressive countenance that he has in his background something of the people who have known the full cycle of seedtime and harvest.

Samuel Mayes, the first cellist, contributed an expressive introduction to the Andante and it was here that the nobility of the writing became almost overpowering. When the soloist entered, he seemed to have become the perfect voice of this generation to speak for Johannes Brahms.

At this concert we were certainly in the presence of greatness, that of the composers, the performers, and indeed, the very medium of expression which can transcend all barriers of nationality and creed. We were shown the maturity of an art which strives, suffers and accepts trial, only to go on to the joyful finale, in perfect rhythm with the demands of the score, however difficult.

Mr. Richter will play a solo recital on Dec. 11, at Symphony Hall. His is a great gift, fully matured.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447

OCT 16 1960

HERE AND THERE—The brilliant Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night, Nov. 1 in a special concert for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund . . . Such internationally known opera stars as Tito Gobbi, Igor Gorin, Lucine Amara, James Pease, and Phyllis Curtin will appear as guest artists during the current season of Sarah Caldwell's Opera Group in Donnelly Memorial Auditorium, Boston. Information about the operas and their dates may be obtained by writing to the Opera Group, 9 Park Street, Boston.

The Icelandic Singers are in this country for their first American tour in 14 years . . . Basil Rathbone is touring Australia in "Marriage-Go-Round" . . . "Ben-Hur" continues to be the nation's leading film at the box office . . . Richard Boone will portray Abe Lincoln on CBS-TV's "The Right Man," scheduled for October 24 . . . Ted Williams will do a series of Sunday afternoon sports specials for ABC-TV.

Alec Guinness will co-star with Rosalind Russell in Columbia's screen version of "Five Finger Exercise" . . . Eddie Fisher will produce a new film version of Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina," in which Elizabeth Taylor will star in the old Garbo role.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

NOV 2 1960

Society: Symphonians Roar Approval Of Soviet Pianist Richter

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Russian was spoken at Symphony Hall last night, and sedate Symphonians rose and roared a welcome to the Soviet's fervent pianist Sviatoslav Richter. The occasion was the 126th Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and there were still hopefull lingerers in the lobby on the chance of a seat, as the last round of applause brought Bostonians to their feet again, beating not only their hands but their chair backs and even their neighbor's shoulders in their enthusiasm.

Even the orchestra, who first met Mr. Richter on their Russian tour in 1956, stood and clapped instead of just tapping their bows on their violins.

In spite of the rain, the jammed lobbies, and the usual lack of parking spaces, there were few latecomers and the Beethoven and Brahms concertos were received in rapt silence.

Many in the sold-out house came from some distance to hear the concert and Mr. Richter, who sold out New York's Carnegie Hall five times to start his U.S. tour.

Down from Exeter, N.H. came the William G. Saltonstalls, and students and faculty also represented St. Mark's School in Southboro, as well as Harvard, M.I.T., Boston University, the N.E. Conservatory, Groton, Wellesley, Radcliffe and Tufts.

Greeting each other in Russian were Maxim Karolik and Mrs. Constantine Pertzoff and reminiscing on their Russian trip were the Coolidge Halls, down from Maine for the concert.

Also in Boston from Camden, Me., for the concert was R. Burdon-Muller. Mrs. Walter Edmonds came from Boonville, N.Y., and spent intermission time with former Cambridge neighbors.

Renewing Boston friendships as well as delighting in this unusual concert were the Boyd Harrises of New York and the Vineyard, who also spent part of the Summer in Russia.

At Symphony Hall from Cotuit was Cyril Jones, and Ruth Vickers came from Nashua, N.H., and Clifford Mosher from Newburyport. The Thomas Proctors were North Shore guests, and Rev. Joseph Moynahan and Edward Leszak were among Worcester patrons.

The Edward Tafts, back from their trip, were other Boston music-lovers there, as were Mrs. Soma Weiss, the Weston Howlands, Mrs. Oliver Cope, the Vcevold Strekalovskys, James Perrin, Mrs. Charles Barnes, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon and Mrs. Rutherford Bingham, Mrs. H. de P. Lockwood, Bertram K. Little, Miriam Shaw, down from Harvard, Mass., for the memorable evening, Dr. Robert Morris, Dr. and Mrs. Archie Abrams, I. Tucker Burr, the Charles Cabots, Mrs. Bayard Warren, Mrs. William Simonda, Maurice Schwartz, Henry Hofman, Dr. Wilbur Stone, Mrs. John Monks, Mrs. Julian Rogers, Mrs. G. W. Curtis, Dr. Makoto Seiji, Mrs. William Langer, Acheson Callaghan Jr., Mrs. Frank Keene, Mrs. Edwin Land, Miss Jeanne Richard, Frank Colcord Jr., Dr. I. G. Galvin, Miss Eleanor Jones, Nathan Weinsteon, Dr. Raymond McBride, Mrs. Charles Philippe, Mrs. W. Raymond Kitchel, Valerie Knapp, Mrs. Kenneth Murdock, Dr. William Nixon, Richmond Wight, Dr. Francis Schmitt, Mrs. Allan Forbes, the Palfrey Perkinses, Louis Smith, Emily Hallowell, Mr. and Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Walter Fox Jr., Dr. B. G. Clarke, Christopher Aylward, Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. Alfred Sexton, Mrs. David Black, Rev. Winston Crum, Baron Charles Pampelonne, the Henry Peabodys down from Vermont to enjoy Mr. Munch and Mr. Richter.

For those who could not get tickets last night, Aaron Richmond will present Mr. Richter at Symphony Hall on Dec. 11.

(Globe Photo by Ed Jenner)

INTERMISSION TIME — Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Reeves of Bay State rd. are enjoying the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Pension Fund Concert.

Music Review

Richter Debut in Boston

By JOHN STUART COX

BOSTON.

THE BY NO MEANS unheralded Boston debut of Sviatoslav Richter, performed in concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall last night, was a masterpiece of understatement. Those who came for a spectacle left chastened. Seekers of the unique were not disappointed. The 45-year-old Russian played exquisitely.

Mr. Richter, who never had a lesson until he was 19, had been billed variously as the world's greatest pianist, Russia's greatest, a poet at the keyboard. His program consisted of two masterpieces of the classical repertoire — Beethoven's first piano concerto and Brahms' second.

* * *

THE CONCERT was for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. Premium prices must have discouraged many of the regular symphony subscribers, for the crowd was conspicuously younger and more heterogeneous than usual—larger, too.

Excitement in the house was almost tactile. Expectations alone were worth the price of a seat. Members of the orchestra appeared tense. Dr. Munch hardly acknowledged the presence of the audience as he entered to conduct the opening "Prometheus" overture of Beethoven. A miracle was about to be revealed, the miracle of acknowledged genius.

* * *

MR. RICHTER'S entrance was practically a dance. Though he is taller than Mr. Munch and solid, he almost flitted to the keyboard, grabbed the hand of the concert master enthusiastically, bowed elegantly to the orchestra and repeatedly to the audience. He then seated himself as correctly as a grandma at the piano and twitched his back and shoulders while he awaited his entry in Beethoven's gallant first.

In this the pianist's greatness was abundantly revealed. Eschewing the urbane ironies of Schnabel's style and the histrionics of Gilel's, Richter revealed much in the music that probably no one in the hall had ever heard before. He took it slowly all the way through—inordinately so in the third movement.

* * *

TO EACH movement he brought the intensity of a sonata performance. (Not without its difficulties for the orchestra.) In each he seemed to be discovering something absolutely new. All the way he forsook almost obscenely obvious chances to dazzle. It worked. Somehow it worked.

He played his own cadenza in the first movement — a near vulgar piece of Saint-Saens-like bravura. However inappropriate, it was a showcase of his technique.

Following intermission the artist attempted to do to the Brahms what he had done to the Beethoven — make it his own. Brahms planned otherwise. Smashing as it is, it is not a show piece, nor does it permit much wandering of the solo instrument. Thanks to extraordinary cooperation from the members of the orchestra, a certain continuity was maintained. However, much impact was lost.

* * *

37

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

OCT 20 1960

Soviet Pianist, Richter, Makes Hub Debut November First

Legendary Keyboard Artist Will Perform With Boston Symphony

When the legendary Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, makes his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall November first (Tuesday, 8:30) the special concert will mark the 126th program presented by the Orchestra to benefit its Pension Institution.

A Pension Institution was discussed by the Orchestra's founder, Henry Lee Higginson, in 1881 before the first season of concerts but the desire was not implemented until the Orchestra's 22nd season. The first program, given at Symphony Hall on March 1, 1903, was advertised as: "A Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in aid of its Pension Fund, assisted by Mme. Antoinette Szumowska who has kindly volunteered." Mme. Szumowska, on the piano faculty at the New England Conservatory for many years, participated in the Saint-Saens Septet in E-flat, the concert also included Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Overture to "Leonore" by Beethoven and excerpts from Wagner operas. Symphony Hall records show tickets to the first Pension Fund Concert were priced at $1.50, $1.00 and 75 cents.

Continued on Page Six

Soviet Pianist

Continued from Page One

The 125th Pension Fund concert, a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony conducted by Pierre Monteux at Symphony Hall April 6, 1960, was in honor of Mr. Monteux' 85th birthday. Mr. Monteux also conducted a Pension Fund concert in 1955 to celebrate his 80th birthday. Danny Kaye has conducted an Open Rehearsal to benefit the Fund, pianist Van Cliburn and violinist David Oistrakh have also participated in recent years.

Funds allotted as pensions to former Orchestra members include proceeds from the Open Rehearsals held annually at Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood in addition to the gala Pension Fund concerts by the Orchestra and by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. Some income is also derived from private contributions and from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Transcription Trust, which is responsible for the delayed broadcasting on tape of the Orchestra's concerts to approximately 50 stations across the United States.

Charles Munch inaugurated the popular Open Rehearsal series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's Music Director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscriptions Doctor Munch felt many students were unable to "see' the Orchestra during their years of study in Boston. The Open Rehearsals not only provide this opportunity but they also give the public and students an opportunity to observe the Orchestra in final preparations for the week-end concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

NOV 2 1960

Music:

Soviet Pianist Richter In Debut at Boston

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

BOSTON — We've heard Symphony Hall resound to big receptions but nothing to compare with the ovation accorded Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, at his debut last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch.

A capacity audience cheered, stomped, shouted, screamed and applauded until hands must have been raw.

Richter was heard in Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 in C major, Opus 43, Brahms' Concerto No. 2 in B flat major, Opus 83.

The orchestra opened the program with Beethoven's "Prometheus" Overture, Opus 43.

Last night's concert was the 126th by the Boston Symphony for its pension fund.

Richter's visit has been anticipated for years. Without ever appearing in this country, he has long been a legend. By eight o'clock last night, the "sold out" sign was posted over the box-office, and hundreds were turned away.

The Soviet pianist's first American tour began earlier this season with five sold-out recitals at Carnegie Hall, and appearances with the Chicago and Philadelphia orchestra in their cities.

Richter looks like a skilled accountant. He's medium height, red-haired, walks erect but holds his head to the side. He rarely smiles. It's clearly all piano business.

His entrance on stage last night brought on the first outburst of prolonged applause. He bowed first to the orchestra, then Munch, then the audience.

No Mannerisms

During the long introduction of the Beethoven concerto, he seemed lost in thought. No mannerisms whatsoever. No wringing of the hands, or applications of the handkerchief.

In short order it became clear that Richter handles the piano with the delight of a toy. The end result of this consummate ease is that he transforms the piano into a instrument of profoundly personal art.

He virtually caressed the opening passages of the Beethoven. Elaborate figurations were immaculately clean as if produced by rubber fingers with reinforcements of steel. There was absolutely no distinction of facility between hands so that when difficulties went from right to left, it was impossible to detect the dividing line.

Clear, Yet Warm

Slower, chordal passages in mid-movement had bell-like clarity, yet were not devoid of warmth. We haven't heard such gentleness of sound since the late Walter Gieseking.

The first movement cadenza apparently was, in the main, the pianist's own. If one analyzed it carefully, there was material in it that might seem "corny" — deliberate exploitations of digital skill. But it did assume proportions of a Lisztian paraphrase.

Richter played the Beethoven concerto second movement at a particularly slow tempo. Every note of the melody sang out as if it were a matter of life or death. Again in the third movement, the pianist's amazing ease deceived one into accepting the tremendous speed as a matter of course.

The orchestra played the reprises with big tone as if celebrating the pianist's performance. And some of the passages were of music-box lightness.

Richter read into the Brahms concerto — blood, fire and tears.

Savagery and Power

In the first movement was savagery, without hysteria. He pounched on fistfuls of chords with tremendous power, yet did not seem to be testing the instrument's resistance.

At every opportunity (especially in the slow movement) Richter wrung ringing melody from the piano, even in spots where it is hidden behind a barracks of sheer brilliance. The work's tall summits were attained as if by a powerful machine.

Small wonder that the audience recalled Richter to the stage — again, and again, and again.

The atmosphere of "important event" had already been generated by the orchestra and Munch in Beethoven's "Prometheus."

Excitement backfired somewhat in the opening chords which sounded like unresonant blasts.

Rapport with Style

Once the slow moving, warmly-toned melody asserted itself, all was well and in rapport with the Beethoven style. Swift sections that followed teemed with energy and internal excitement, notably the string passages.

Accents were meted out with almost mechanical precision and heavy volume approached the stage of being ponderous. In other words, it was a pretty "crashy" performance on the "Prometheus" — but this was Richter's night.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 546,862 S: 637,572

OCT 8 1960

STEREO AND HI-FI

Richter's Is True Mussorgsky

By Robert C. Marsh

Sviatoslav Richter, who makes his American debut with the Chicago Symphony next Saturday, has already contributed one of the finest piano recordings of the autumn, Artia ALP 154. The disk combines the original version of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" with the seventh sonata of Prokofiev.

It is ironic that the piano version of "Pictures at an Exhibition" should gain popularity because of the widely played Ravel orchestration of this music. As Richter demonstrates, Mussorgsky did not need Ravel (or other improvers) to make "Pictures" an effective work.

Moreover, this Richter performance is conceived entirely in terms of the keyboard. No effort is made to duplicate orchestral effects; the strong pianistic quality of the original is made wonderfully explicit. When surprised—as you will be—by the appearance of an unexpected element in the music, remember, please, that this is what Mussorgsky wrote.

The finale, with a skillfully realized effect of chiming bells, shows how a pianist of Richter's stature can match any orchestral performance of this work.

The Prokofiev sonata fares equally well.

RICHARD STRAUSS'S "Sonatina in F" for 16 wind instruments is a product of his 80th year and all the proof you ought to need to refute the idea that in his old age the composer of "Till Eulenspiegel" was written out. Indeed, the spirit of "Till" runs through this music, which is unceasingly charming. It is most unlikely that you know it, and the discovery is a pleasing one. Boston 406, with a performance by Boston Symphony players, is the easiest way to get this introduction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

NOV 2 1960

TWO GENERATIONS of Boston Symphony goers at last night's Pension Fund concert were Mrs. Archie Abrams of Brookline and her mother, Mrs. Edwin Dreyfus.

39

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 4, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BEETHOVEN.....Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Minuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto vivace

BARTÓK.....Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," Op. 19

INTERMISSION

WALTON.....'Belshazzar's Feast," for Mixed Chorus, Baritone Solo and Orchestra

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

SOLOIST
DONALD GRAMM

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
NOV 5 1960

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 10 1960

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: WALTON, BARTOK, BEETHOVEN

The featured work on Richard Burgin's program at Symphony last week was William Walton's choral work called "Belshaazar's Feast," with Donald Gramm, baritone, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, assisting.

It is difficult to characterize the form of this music, although it is usually called an oratoric. The text is by Osbert Sitwell, who adapted it freely from Psalms LXXXI and CXXXVII and the Fifth Book of Daniel. The score contemplates a double mixed chorus, baritone solo, augmented orchestra and two optional brass bands (the latter were not employed in this performance). Of the three sections of the work, the first commences with a dire prophecy by Isaiah expressing the sorrow of the captive Jews, followed by the eight-part chorus, "By the waters of Babylon." The second is a depiction of the City of Bobylon. The third narrates the handwriting on the wall, followed by a lament and thanksgiving for the destruction of Belshaazar and of the city.

Walton's characteristically bold fresco style pervades the work ,which is insistently arresting if not unduly original. The "By the waters of Babylon" is a stunning example of contemporary choral writing. The vividness of the descriptive portions is underscored with effective and often audacious orchestration and with subtle manipulation of intervals and rhythms of the basic thematic material. The immensity of the drama of the "Mene, mene tekel upharsin" pronouncement is realized fully. Only the final "Alleluia," for all its impressive sonorities, seems comparatively trivial and weak.

Mr. Gramm, a frequent performer here, is always dependable though seldom inspiring; he addressed himself to his tasks with customary professional competence. As for the Pro Musica choristers, if they had their troubles from time to time with articulation and seemed to lack much needed strength in the basses, it is nonetheless true that they had verve and discipline aplenty and on balance turned in their customarily high level performance.

Mr. Burgin also brought out Bartok's Suite from the pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," which he introduced to these concerts ten years ago. This suite is a detailed musical description of as bizarre and unpalatable a story as our present Postmaster General would ever let through the mails. Emil Haraszti in his study of Bartok called it "a horrible mixture of the macabre, the grotesque, and the perverse." The score—the very essence of Bartok's second period—has all the intense dynamism, rhythmic strength and pulsating quality that one associates with Bartok, but carries in addition a pervasive and jarring harshness that once again convinced me that the "Miraculous Mandarin," really, is quite ugly music. Mr. Burgin and the men made the complicated score seem easy.

The program opened with a most amiable traversal of Beethoven's First Symphony. This piece may be the eternal beloved of amateur orchestra players and second violinists the world over, but only too seldom does it show up in the more exalted reaches of Boston Symphony programs. Yet, as Mr. Burke himself has well stated, the First Symphony "was the ultimate word, let us say, upon a form which haed reached with Haydn and Mozart its perfect crystallization, and after which there was no alternative but a new path." True, and every bar was a pleasure to hear.

Mr. Munch returns this week to conduct Bach's D major Suite and Milhaud's Suite Provencale, and the pianist, Monique Haas, will perform Mozart's D minor Concerto and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

...CLOBE—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1960

Burgin Revives Walton 'Belshazzar's Feast'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fourth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Richard Burgin conducted Beethoven's First Symphony, the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin", and "Belshazzar's Feast", by Walton. In the latter the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, participated, and the baritone soloist was Donald Gramm.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin, making his first appearance of the season in his capacity as associate conducter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, provides a very lively pair of concerts this week. Nothing upon the program is overly familiar at the moment, and in the case of the most notable work, "Belshazzar's Feast" by William Walton, this is a revival after 27 years.

Now that Mr. Burgin has had opportunity to dust off this intricate, fascinating and often powerful work, let us hope we shall hear it more often in the next quarter-Century. That it has lasted so well is testimony to Walton's talent and the intrinsic quality of the piece itself. (You could not say it has worn well, for it has had scarcel- any wear at all, locally!)

There is nothing in the slightest dated or quaint about the idiom of this work, with its choral vociferations, both sung and spoken, the interjected baritone solo, and the graphic orchestral commentary so dramatic and so kaleidoscopic in color. One can only imagine what the sum total would be if the doubling brass bands, not used in these performances, were added to the already huge instrumental resonance!

Sir Osbert Sitwell's Bible-derived text is a fine, spare word-basis for music with a true contemporary bite. The drama builds and builds through the scenes of Belshazzar's revelry and the ghostly writing of the fateful words upon the wall.

This piece takes some doing upon the part of all hands for it is complex and exacting, especially upon the conductor. Mr. Burgin, in his finest form, had real command and his performance was both rousing and cohesive. The Chorus Pro Musica sang excellently, as usual (Alfred Nash Patterson, who had prepared them, was deservingly applauded at the end), and Mr. Gramm dealt splendidly with his most difficult solo.

So, too, was the Orchestra at its thrilling best, as it had been a little earlier in another superb contemporary score, the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin." I never would have thought it possible that the brilliant ingenuities of Bartok could be overshadowed by any other music, but so it proved in a way. Belshazzar's violent carouse somehow put in the shade the violent erotic adventures of the unfortunate Mandarin, although this gorgeously vigorous and most cleverly orchestrated score had been beautifully performed.

Beethoven's First Symphony was a perfect program-beginner, providing a fine classic contrast to the remainder of the music. Like the Bartok Suite, this Symphony had not been heard at these concerts in a decade.

Next week Charles Munch will conduct, opening the concerts with Bach's D major Suite, No. 4, and closing them with Milhaud's Suite Provencale. French pianist Monique Haas will make her local debut as soloist in Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 9 1960

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON (left), director of the Chorus Pro Musica, and Richard Burgin, Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, prepare a choral work to be performed by Boston Symphony under Mr. Burgin's baton later in the season.

AMUSEMENTS

39

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 4, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Minuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto vivace

BARTÓK . . . . . Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," Op. 19

INTERMISSION

WALTON . . . . . "Belshazzar's Feast," for Mixed Chorus, Baritone Solo and Orchestra

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

SOLOIST
DONALD GRAMM

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
NOV 5 1960

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 10 1960

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: WALTON, BARTOK, BEETHOVEN

The featured work on Richard Burgin's program at Symphony last week was William Walton's choral work called "Belshazzar's Feast," with Donald Gramm, baritone, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, assisting.

It is difficult to characterize the form of this music, although it is usually called an oratoric. The text is by Osbert Sitwell, who adapted it freely from Psalms LXXXI and CXXXVII and the Fifth Book of Daniel. The score contemplates a double mixed chorus, baritone solo, augmented orchestra and two optional brass bands (the latter were not employed in this performance). Of the three sections of the work, the first commences with a dire prophecy by Isaiah expressing the sorrow of the captive Jews, followed by the eight-part chorus, "By the waters of Babylon." The second is a depiction of the City of Bobylon. The third narrates the handwriting on the wall, followed by a lament and thanksgiving for the destruction of Belshaazar and of the city.

Walton's characteristically bold fresco style pervades the work which is insistently arresting if not unduly original. The "By the waters of Babylon" is a stunning example of contemporary choral writing. The vividness of the descriptive portions is underscored with effective and often audacious orchestration and with subtle manipulation of intervals and rhythms of the basic thematic material. The immensity of the drama of the "Mene, mene tekel upharsin" pronouncement is realized fully. Only the final "Alleluia," for all its impressive sonorities, seems comparatively trivial and weak.

Mr. Gramm, a frequent performer here, is always dependable though seldom inspiring; he addressed himself to his tasks with customary professional competence. As for the Pro Musica choristers, if they had their troubles from time to time with articulation and seemed to lack much needed strength in the basses, it is nonetheless true that they had verve and discipline aplenty and on balance turned in their customarily high level performance.

Mr. Burgin also brought out Bartok's Suite from the pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," which he introduced to these concerts ten years ago. This suite is a detailed musical description of as bizarre and unpalatable a story as our present Postmaster General would ever let through the mails. Emil Haraszti in his study of Bartok called it "a horrible mixture of the macabre, the grotesque, and the perverse." The score—the very essence of Bartok's second period—has all the intense dynamism, rhythmic strength and pulsating quality that one associates with Bartok, but carries in addition a pervasive and jarring harshness that once again convinced me that the "Miraculous Mandarin," really, is quite ugly music. Mr. Burgin and the men made the complicated score seem easy.

The program opened with a most amiable traversal of Beethoven's First Symphony. This piece may be the eternal beloved of amateur orchestra players and second violinists the world over, but only too seldom does it show up in the more exalted reaches of Boston Symphony programs. Yet, as Mr. Burke himself has well stated, the First Symphony "was the ultimate word, let us say, upon a form which haed reached with Haydn and Mozart its perfect crystallization, and after which there was no alternative but a new path." True, and every bar was a pleasure to hear.

Mr. Munch returns this week to conduct Bach's D major Suite and Milhaud's Suite Provencale, and the pianist, Monique Haas, will perform Mozart's D minor Concerto and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
OCT 9 1960

Burgin Revives Walton 'Belshazzar's Feast'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fourth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin conducted Beethoven's First Symphony, the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin", and "Belshazzar's Feast", by Walton. In the latter the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, participated, and the baritone soloist was Donald Gramm.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin, making his first appearance of the season in his capacity as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, provides a very lively pair of concerts this week. Nothing upon the program is overly familiar at the moment, and in the case of the most notable work, "Belshazzar's Feast" by William Walton, this is a revival after 27 years.

Now that Mr. Burgin has had opportunity to dust off this intricate, fascinating and often powerful work, let us hope we shall hear it more often in the next quarter-Century. That it has lasted so well is testimony to Walton's talent and the intrinsic quality of the piece itself. (You could not say it has worn well, for it has had scarcel any wear at all, locally!)

There is nothing in the slightest dated or quaint about the idiom of this work, with its choral vociferations, both sung and spoken, the interjected baritone solo, and the graphic orchestral commentary so dramatic and so kaleidoscopic in color. One can only imagine what the sum total would be if the doubling brass bands, not used in these performances, were added to the already huge instrumental resonance!

Sir Osbert Sitwell's Bible-derived text is a fine, spare word-basis for music with a true contemporary bite. The drama builds and builds through the scenes of Belshazzar's revelry and the ghostly writing of the fateful words upon the wall.

This piece takes some doing upon the part of all hands for it is complex and exacting, especially upon the conductor. Mr. Burgin, in his finest form, had real command and his performance was both rousing and cohesive. The Chorus Pro Musica sang excellently, as usual (Alfred Nash Patterson, who had prepared them, was deservingly applauded at the end), and Mr. Gramm dealt splendidly with his most difficult solo.

So, too, was the Orchestra at its thrilling best, as it had been a little earlier in another superb contemporary score, the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin." I never would have thought it possible that the brilliant ingenuities of Bartok could be overshadowed by any other music, but so it proved in a way. Belshazzar's violent carouse somehow put in the shade the violent erotic adventures of the unfortunate Mandarin, although this gorgeously vigorous and most cleverly orchestrated score had been beautifully performed.

Beethoven's First Symphony was a perfect program-beginner, providing a fine classic contrast to the remainder of the music. Like the Bartok Suite, this Symphony had not been heard at these concerts in a decade.

Next week Charles Munch will conduct, opening the concerts with Bach's D major Suite, No. 4, and closing them with Milhaud's Suite Provencale. French pianist Monique Haas will make her local debut as soloist in Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON (left), director of the Chorus Pro Musica, and Richard Burgin, Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, prepare a choral work to be performed by Boston Symphony under Mr. Burgin's baton later in the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 5 1960

40

THE SYMPHONY

Stirring Power in Walton's Music

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Sir William Walton's oratorio, "Belshazzar's Feast," offered yesterday in a Boston Symphony series for the first time since the American premiere performances of 1933, is a work of stirring declamatory power.

Set to a narrative text by Osbert Sitwell arranged from Biblical sources (Psalm 137; the Fifth Book of Daniel; Psalm 81), the sweeping score created the success of scandal when it was produced in England some 30 year ago. It did not suit the notions of people who believed that an oratorio should be more contemplative in character. We need not concern ourselves with the semantic quibble; Walton's music falls within a broad definition of oratorio; and while it is tumultuous and dramatic for the most part, "Belshazzar's Feast," has sections as delicately introspective as anything in Handel.

Yesterday's account was splendid, the Chorus Pro Musica, probably the finest volunteer choral group in this part of the country, singing with supple authority under the capable direction of Alfred Nash Patterson. The baritone soloist, Donald Gramm, realized the theatrical and narrative potential of the text alloted him and displayed a clear, large, voice with a timbre of polished mahogany. Richard Burgin, who was conducting in place of Charles Munch at this pair of concerts, held the elements of orchestral and vocal performance together and unfolded the musical story at a natural pace.

Early Walton

I was reminded, in the course of the oratorio, of Neville Cardus's comment on the world premier of Walton's Second Symphony at the Edinburgh Festival a few weeks ago: "If Sir William wished to do so, he could serialize the heads off all his younger contemporaries." The Walton of "Beshazzar's Feast," is, of course, the early Walton, more the product of Bloomsbury than an Angry Young Man on the 12-tone row. To be audacious, he doesn't need to resort to a rather fashionable idiom of dissent.

He does, however, employ every colorful instrumental device within the orchestral spectrum: glockenspiel, slapsticks, alto saxophone, anvil and contra-bassoon among other hues. The harmonic and rhythmic aspects are modern in their violent surge and contrast; but is the traditional English oratorio's grand design, actually, that counts with the composer. He is retranslating an eternal theme into contemporary terms, and one feels here the importance of that theme rather than the cleverness of its new style as is so often the case today.

The master who seems most influential in Walton's music is Sibelius; still, in this work he appears to have more affinity to the Honneger of "King David," and with Bartok. The pigments of the score are worth a long discourse alone—the insinuating vowels of the word "concubine" given to the sopranos, the chattering slash of the xylophone, the diaphanous lament, "By the Waters of Babylon, and the utterance of "slain," in one explosive breath like a stab, and the final Handel-ian Alleluia. The moods are organic with the narrative. One is grateful for this revival, especially since the field of contemporary British composition has been sadly neglected in Boston of late.

Greater Talent

It is instructive to compare "Belshazzar's Feast," with "The Miraculous Mandarin," suite, for both are essentially descriptive scores. Bartok, the greater talent, comes off less vividly than Walton because his music is fused with a ballet, whereas the latter's dramatic impact is attained purely by internal musical means.

I shan't attempt to pass judgment on the ballet, which I have never seen; a perusal of the libretto indicates it to be a typical Expressionist statement from post-World War I Germany, as brutal and corrosively dream-like as "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari." The action deals with a gang of Burke-and-Hare type murderers and their nubile lure: we shall have to accept Bartok's word that in performance this acquires a Hans Christian Andersen atmosphere. The music is fascinating, with heavy ostinato repititions and brooding tensions; yet, I'm afraid, cannot seem aesthetically logical lacking the help of stage pictures before the audience.

Beethoven's First Symphony, so seldom resuscitated, is ingratiating and genial and without much personal tone: it speaks in the galant accents of Haydn and Mozart, fine models for a young genius, though merely a stage in his growth. Mr. Burgin and the orchestra projected a neat, correct outline.

Next week Monique Haas is soloist in Ravel's Piano Concerto for Left Hand; Dr. Munch has also scheduled Bach's Suite No. 4, in D, Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466, and Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the fourth program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloist was Donald Gramm, baritone, and the Chorus Pro Musica was under the direction of Alfred Nash Patterson. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21 ..... Beethoven
Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," Op. 19 ..... Bartok
"Belshazzar's Feast," for Mixed Chorus, Baritone Solo, and Orchestra .... Walton

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

NOV 6 1960

Music Events This Week

Richard Burgin will conduct the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series in Symphony Hall on Tuesday. Donald Gramm and the Chorus pro Musica will participate in a performance of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." The Walton oratorio will be preceded by Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from the Pantomine "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok.

Monique Haas, the French pianist, will be introduced to Symphony subscribers at the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and at Sanders Theater in Cambridge on Tuesday, Nov. 15 at 8:30. Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time in North America.

Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the Orchestra, the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart was last performed here in 1915 and the Ravel Concerto in 1937. Doctor Munch will open with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major, and conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

The first concert of the Orchestra's annual Sunday Afternoon Series will be given in Symphony Hall on Nov. 13 at 3:00 p.m. The program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

NOV 5 1960

'Belshazzar's Feast'

Oriental Splendor Delineated by Burgin

By Harold Rogers

After painting scenes of Oriental splendor, summoning up visions of dancing girls in dithyrambic frenzy, Sir William Walton employs a sudden spectral hush; the baritone soloist proclaims the handwriting on the wall—"MENE, MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN"—and Belshazzar's doom is sealed. From that point onward Sir William builds his choral forces into a paean of religious jubilation.

♪ ♪ ♪

This sensitive balance between the profane and the sacred is what gives "Belshazzar's Feast" its dramatic power; and it would be difficult to imagine a more colorful or polished performance than that given this oratorio yesterday in Symphony Hall under Richard Burgin's direction.

The entire program, in fact, had its beguiling aspects. The Boston Symphony's associate conductor gives careful thought to the two or three concerts that fall to him each season. He goes out of his way to revive authentic if neglected masterworks, and he nearly always builds a program that is a winner.

Collaborating with Mr. Burgin for "Belshazzar's Feast" is Alfred Nash Patterson, who has drilled his Chorus Pro Musica to a marvel of precision. This is one of the finest choral performances within recent memory in Symphony Hall — the diction so clear that the printed text was hardly required, the tone so buoyant that it seldom touched earth, the phrases so tapered as to make evident the architecture of the whole.

♪ ♪ ♪

Donald Gramm did not appear to be in his best voice during his first two solos, but he soon recovered the ringing warmth remembered from his many appearances with the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Burgin opened with an ingratiating reading of Beethoven's First Symphony, elucidating its classical graces, and then provided violent contrast with Bartók's Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin," a work splashed with violent colors.

This was a brilliant stroke of programing on Mr. Burgin's part—the twinning of "The Miraculous Mandarin" with "Belshazzar's Feast." He gave us an opportunity to see how two modern masters handle Oriental themes without—we are grateful to say—resorting to the facile tricks of musical orientalisms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

NOV 6 1960

41

CHORUS PRO MUSICA

CHORUS PRO MUSICA, comprising more than 100 male and female voices, will present Belshazzer's Feast with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening. Although many of its members are professionals in other areas, the chorus retains its amateur standing.

ACCOMPANIST for the choral group, Robert Pettitt, above, and several members rehearse for the final Nov. 8 performance.

CONCERT MASTER, Richard Burgin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, above, concentrating on the score of the piece he will conduct with the Chorus Pro Musica.

STRONG voices are those of Greg Larkin, left, and Thomas Robinson, Jr., baritones.

STUDENT choral member is Maureen Taylor, soprano, of Boston University.

YOUNG PHYSICIANS, Drs. Bruce Dull, left, and Fred Welland, just off duty from Peter Bent Brigham Hospital show up for rehearsal still in uniform. They are active members of the chorus.

BLANK PAGE

43

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Minuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto vivace

BARTÓK ..... Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," Op. 19

INTERMISSION

WALTON ..... "Belshazzar's Feast," for Mixed Chorus, Baritone Solo and Orchestra

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

SOLOIST
DONALD GRAMM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 8 1960

Theaters & Concerts

SHUBERT THEATER — "Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowall, Robert Coote, and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 8:25 P.M.

COLONIAL THEATER—"Five Finger Exercise," by Peter Shaffer, with the players, headed by Jessica Tandy, including the New York cast. Fifth in the Theater Guild-ATS subscription series. 8:30 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE — "A Streetcar Named Desire," opening day of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Suorus and R. J. Carlyn. 8:30 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting Beethoven-Symphony No. 1; Bartok Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin"; Walton "Belshazzar's Feast," with Donald Gramm, baritone, and Chrus Pro Musica. 8:30 P.M.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY—Serge Conus, pianist-composer, Concert Room, 26 Fenway. Program lists own compositions of Variations, Sonata and Children's Pieces. Admission free, 8:30 P.M.

N. E. MUTUAL HALL — David Tyler, piano, and Gretchen Moore, flute, presented by Music Lovers' Club of Boston. 11:00 A.M.

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 11, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Suite No. 4, in D major

Overture
Bourrées I and II
Gavotte
Minuet
Réjouissance

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466

I. Allegro
II. Romance
III. Rondo: Allegro assai

INTERMISSION

RAVEL ..... Concerto for the Left Hand
(In one movement)

MILHAUD ..... Suite Provençale
Animé — Modéré — Vif — Modéré — Vif — Lent — Vif

SOLOIST
MONIQUE HAAS
Miss Haas uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

Globe 11/4/60

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

NOV 9 - 1960

Monique Haas Debut

Monique Haas, French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers at the concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday-Saturday (Nov. 11 at 2:15 and Nov. 12 at 8:30) and at Sanders Theater in Cambridge on Tuesday (Nov. 15 at 8:30). Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel, and Australia, is now touring North America for the first time.

At her first Boston appearances Miss Haas will be heard in two concerts not recently performed by the orchestra. She will play the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart Concerto was last presented by the orchestra in 1915, and the Ravel Concerto was last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major. The program will conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provençale.

The first concert of the Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series will be given in Symphony Hall on Nov. 13 at 3 o'clock. Dr. Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston, and the Symphony in D minor by César Franck.

Monique Haas Piano Soloist At Symphony

Monique Maas, French pianist now on her first North American tour, will make her Boston debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. She will be heard in Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the left Hand. Charles Munch will begin these concerts with Bach's Suite No. 4, in D major, and will end it with the Suite Provencale by Milhaud. The program will be repeated at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30, Nov. 15.

HAAS

Richard Burgin will conduct the second Tuesday evening concert at Symphony Hall, Nov. 8, presenting Beethoven's First Symphony; the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin", and with the Chorus Pro Musica and bass Donald Gramm participating, "Belhazzar's Feast", by Walton.

Dr. Munch will conduct the season's first Sunday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall, Nov. 13 at 3. Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Walter Piston's New England Sketches and the Franck Symphony in D minor will be heard.

The Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt, composed late in his life, will be given first United States performances by Dr. Munch at the Nov. 18 and 19. Leonid Kogan, Symphony Hall concerts of Soviet artist, will be soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto, and the program will include the "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite by Faure.

These concerts last described, will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal, Nov. 17 at 7:30 p.m., to benefit the Orchestra's pension fund.

43

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Minuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto vivace

BARTÓK . . . . . Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin," Op. 19

INTERMISSION

WALTON . . . . . "Belshazzar's Feast," for Mixed Chorus, Baritone Solo and Orchestra

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

SOLOIST
DONALD GRAMM

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 8 1960

Theaters & Concerts

SHUBERT THEATER — "Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowell, Robert Coote, and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 8:25 P.M.

COLONIAL THEATER—"Five Finger Exercise," by Peter Shaffer, with the players, headed by Jessica Tandy, including the New York cast. Fifth in the Theater Guild - ATS subscription series. 8:30 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE — "A Streetcar Named Desire," opening day of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Sperus and R. J. Calvin. 8:30 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting. Beethoven Symphony No. 1; Bartok Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin"; Walton "Belshazzar's Feast," with Donald Gramm, baritone, and Chrus Pro Musica. 8:30 P.M.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY—Carlo Conus, pianist-composer, Concert Room, 25 Fenway. Program lists own compositions of Variations, Sonata and Children's Pieces. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

N. E. MUTUAL HALL — David Tyler, piano, and Gretchen Moore, flute, presented by Music Lovers' Club of Boston. 11:00 A.M.

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 11, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH . . . . . Suite No. 4, in D major

Overture
Bourrées I and II
Gavotte
Minuet
Réjouissance

MOZART . . . . . Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466

I. Allegro
II. Romance
III. Rondo: Allegro assai

INTERMISSION

RAVEL . . . . . Concerto for the Left Hand
(In one movement)

MILHAUD . . . . . Suite Provençale
Animé — Modéré — Vif — Modéré — Vif — Lent — Vif

SOLOIST
MONIQUE HAAS
Miss Haas uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Monique Haas Piano Soloist At Symphony

Monique Maas, French pianist now on her first North American tour, will make her Boston debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. She will be heard in Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the left Hand. Charles Munch will begin these concerts with Bach's Suite No. 4, in D major, and will end it with the Suite Provencale by Milhaud. The program will be repeated at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30, Nov. 15.

HAAS

Richard Burgin will conduct the second Tuesday evening concert at Symphony Hall, Nov. 8, presenting Beethoven's First Symphony; the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin", and with the Chorus Pro Musica and bass Donald Gramm participating, "Belhazzar's Feast", by Walton.

Dr. Munch will conduct the season's first Sunday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall, Nov. 13 at 3, Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Walter Piston's New England Sketches and the Franck Symphony in D minor will be heard.

The Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt, composed late in his life, will be given first United States performances by Dr. Munch at the Nov. 18 and 19. Leonid Kogan, Symphony Hall concerts of Soviet artist, will be soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto, and the program will include the "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite by Faure.

These concerts last described, will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal, Nov. 17 at 7:30 p.m., to benefit the Orchestra's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

NOV 9 - 1960

Monique Haas Debut

Monique Haas, French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers at the concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday-Saturday (Nov. 11 at 2:15 and Nov. 12 at 8:30) and at Sanders Theater in Cambridge on Tuesday (Nov. 15 at 8:30). Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel, and Australia, is now touring North America for the first time.

At her first Boston appearances Miss Haas will be heard in two concerts not recently performed by the orchestra. She will play the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart Concerto was last presented by the orchestra in 1915, and the Ravel Concerto was last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major. The program will conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provençale.

The first concert of the Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series will be given in Symphony Hall on Nov. 13 at 3 o'clock. Dr. Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston, and the Symphony in D minor by César Franck.

SHOWTHROUGH

Tribune

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1960

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

By Paul Henry Lang

[illegible], Charles Munch; soloist, Monique Haas, pianist. The program:

[illegible] No. 4 in D major.....Bach
[illegible] Concerto No. 20, K. 466.....Mozart
Three New England Sketches.....Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand.....Ravel

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented Sunday afternoon a good and varied program. Such a program demands corresponding treatment, which it received only in the second half, where Mr. Munch went to work on the kind of brilliant coloristic compositions that have always been associated with this fine body of players. Indeed, Walter Piston's evocative "Three New England Sketches" showed the orchestra at its best, while Ravel's tour de force known as Concerto for the left hand, elicited appropriately elegant sounds from the orchestra, though not from the piano.

Monique Haas, the French pianist, should be at home in this French music, and parts of it she played acceptably, but when she had to distribute melody and accompaniment between five fingers she tended to bring out the melody by accentuation—not the best way to cope with the problem. So much for the second half of the concert. Before the intermission we heard music making altogether unworthy of an orchestra of such august standing.

Bach's Suite No. 4 is delightful and joyous outdoor music by a man who spent very little time out of doors. As usual, though, when Bach makes up his mind to do something he has not done before one can almost read an invisible superscription on the score: "Now look here, I will show you what can be done in this vein." The old cantor sheds his robes of office, closes the organ console, steps out in the backyard of St. Thomas', the choirboys bring out an old harpsichord, fiddles, and bass viols, while the municipal musicians contribute oboes, bassoons, trumpets, timpani, and the air is soon filled with festive sunshine and the most delectable sounds.

Unfortunately, there was no such out of doors atmosphere in Mr. Munch's rendition of this charming work; he seems to have gone back and picked up the solemn robes Bach had just got rid of. The suite sounded bulky and ponderous, the sound was thick, the delightful chatter of the woodwinds and the merriment of the trumpets dampened by the sexton's stern warning to the boys that they should remember that they are still in St. Thomas' backyard and not out in the open.

The phrasing was incredibly bad—everything in a nondescript legato—which ruined the fugue; all the bounce was gone. Mr. Munch simply dispensed with the continuo, therefore whenever the concertino of oboes and bassoons appeared they had to play without accompaniment. But the height of the ridiculous was reached in the gavotte and minuet, where the strings put on mutes and played "The Maiden's Prayer," complete with sighs and fadeouts.

Miss Haas also played Mozart's somber D minor concerto, Mr. Munch assisting with a double orchestra. The French pianist played every note as it is printed in the score, never worrying about the relationship of these notes to one another. Her color scheme is very restricted and her way with a melody naive.

Mr. Munch displayed the same fuzzy phrasing and articulation he employed in the Bach suite: no clear legato nor staccato but a careless mixture of the two. The wonderfully crisp rondo theme in the finale was like a minestrone soup. Well, I can't explain it, but it surely shocks you when such a distinguished musical organization, capable of the most extraordinary artistry, plays like a sloppy old band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

NOV 11 1960

At Symphony

Monique Haas, French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony subscribers at the concerts in Symphony Hall today and tomorrow and at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday night, a aa

Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time i nNorth America.

At her first Boston appearances Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the orchestra. She will be soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The program, conducted by Charles Munch, will open with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major and end with Milhand's Suite Provencale.

The first concert of the annual Sundaya fternoon series will be in Symphony Hall Sunday at 3 p.m. Dr. Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walter Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,509

NOV 10 1960

Famed French Pianist Debuts At Hub Symphony Tomorrow

Keyboard Artist, Monique Haas, Will Perform Two Concertos

Monique Hass, the celebrated French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony Orchestra subscribers at the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday-Saturday (Nov. 11 at 2:15 and Nov. 12 at 8:30) and at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge on Tuesday (Nov. 15 at 8:30). Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time in North America.

At her first Boston appearances Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the Orchestra. She will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart Concerto was last performed by the Orchestra in 1915 and the Ravel Concerto was last heard in 1937. Doctor Munch will open the program with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major. The program will con-

Continued on [illegible] Seven

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

NOV 9 - 1960

Pianist Symphony Guest

Monique Haas, the French pianist now making her first visit to the United States, will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on Friday and Saturday.

Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the orchestra. She will perform the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20, which has not appeared on Symphony programs since 1915, and the Concerto for the Left Hand by Ravel, which was last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, concluding with a performance of Milhaud's "Suite Provencale."

clude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

"The first concert of the Orchestra's annual Sunday Afternoon Series will be given in Symphony Hall on November 13 at 3:00 p.m. Doctor Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walter Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

The Orchestra's concerts of Friday-Saturday (Nov. 18-19) will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday evening (Nov. 17) at 7:30 p.m. The ticket sale proceeds from this rehearsal will benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Leonid Kogan, who made his first United States appearance as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1958, will return as Doctor Munch's guest in a performance of the Beethoven Violin Concerto in the concerts on Friday-Saturday (Nov. 18-19). The United States premiere of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt will be heard at these concerts as well as the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure.

* * * *

Richard Burgin will conduct the second concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series in Symphony Hall this Tuesday (Nov. [illegible] 8:30). Donald Gramm and the Chorus pro Musica, will participate in a performance of William Walton's "Belshazar's Feast". The Walton oratorio will be preceded by Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from the Pantomime "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok.

The complete programs:

Tuesday, Nov. 8, 8:30, Symphony Hall, Richard Burgin conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21; Bartok, Suite from the Pantomime, "The Miraculous Mandarin", Op. 19; Walton, "Belshazzar's Feast" (Donald Gramm, baritone; Chorus pro Musica).

Friday, Nov. 11, 2:15; Saturday, Nov 12, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch: Bach, Suite No. 4, in D major; Mozart, Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466 (Monique Hass; Ravel, Concerto for the Left Hand (Monique Haas); Milhaud, Suite Provencale.

Sunday, Nov. 13, 3:00; Symphony Hall, Munch conducting: Mozart, Symphony No. 41; Piston, "New England Sketches"; Franck, Symphony in D minor.

Tuesday, Nov. 15, 8:30, Sanders Theatre, Cambridge; Munch conducting: Bach, Suite No. 4, in D major; Mozart, Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466 (Monique Haas); Ravel, Concerto for the Left Hand (Monique Haas); Milhaud, Suite Provencale.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

NOV 12 1960

French Pianist, Milhaud Suite Symphony Features

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fifth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Bach: Suite No. 4, in D major; Mozart, Piano Concerto in D minor (K. 466); Ravel: Piano Concerto for the Left Hand; Milhaud: Suite Provencale.

By CYRUS DURGIN

French pianist Monique Haas, and the long-unplayed Suite Provencale by Darius Milhaud are the especial features of the Boston Symphony concerts this week. To put it in a homelier way, however, they are the frosting upon a most nourishing and delectable musical cake, loaded with the dozen eggs of Bach's D major Suite, No. 4, and the [illegible] pound or two of butter which is the excellence of Charles Munch and the Orchestra itself.

Miss Haas, making her Boston debut performing the [illegible] tillating fashion such dismaying music as Mozart's D minor Concerto (K. 466) and the difficult, showy Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand.

Just as [illegible] those not familiar with the genesis of Ravel's tour de force, and who might wonder why a concerto for the left hand, let it be added that the piece was written for Paul Wittgenstein, an Austrian pianist who lost his right arm in World War I, and who introduced the Concerto here in 1933. [illegible] Ravel's difficulties before her as if they scarcely existed. To be sure, she [illegible] ding to the right side of the piano with her other, from time to time; otherwise the required gyrations of the left hand raced down and up the keyboard might have swept her slight body off the bench.

Miss Haas is a most musical player, neat, clean, rhythmically vigorous, who phrases upon a keyboard as a fine singer would phrase with voice, and who understands thoroughly the whereforesof singing Mozart sound [illegible] and Ravel like [illegible] Her use of the pedal [illegible] ly def[illegible]

[illegible] has for the first time come to the United States, let us hope she will return periodically. Such an admirable musician is bound to acquire a large international public. Yesterday the response from the audience was a full-scale ovation.

This report [illegible] among others, thanks Dr. Munch [illegible] for retiring Milhaud's [illegible] neglected [illegible] This is a [illegible] delightful excursion into [illegible] Provencal [illegible] Youth and [illegible] full of bright [illegible] rhythms and [illegible] and [illegible] perfectly together [illegible] it is extremely [illegible] emotional heart-warming [illegible] sensation of a people's [illegible] and [illegible] sun-baked [illegible]

[illegible] Bach [illegible] the sparkling gayety which ends Milhaud's Suite. Dr. [illegible] as the top of [illegible] the orchestra responded superbly.

Next week Dr. Munch will present the first United States performances of the Second Symphony which the late Florent Schmitt wrote not long before he died. The concerts will begin with Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite, and will end with the Beethoven Violin Concerto, the soloist to be the Soviet artist, Leonid Kogan.

Herald 11/6/60

Music Events This Week

Richard Burgin will conduct the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series in Symphony Hall on Tuesday. Donald Gramm and the Chorus pro Musica will participate in a performance of William Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast." The Walton oratorio will be preceded by Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from the Pantomime "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok.

Monique Haas, the French pianist, will be introduced to Symphony subscribers at the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and at Sanders Theater in Cambridge on Tuesday, Nov. 15 at 8:30. Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through the European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time in North America.

Miss Haas will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the Orchestra, the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart was last performed here in 1915 and the Ravel Concerto in 1937. Doctor Munch will open with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major, and conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

The first concert of the Orchestra's annual Sunday Afternoon Series will be given in Symphony Hall on Nov. 13 at 3:00 p.m. The program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

TODAY

Monique Haas, French pianist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony for its Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

MONIQUE HAAS, piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, playing in Ravel's Concerto for Left Hand alone and Mozart's Concerto No. 20 in D minor.

Tournée de Mme Monique HAAS

MME. Monique Haas, pianiste, commencera sa tournée nord-américaine à Ottawa le lundi 7 novembre; elle jouera ensuite au Symphony Hall de Boston les 11 et 12 novembre en matinée et en soirée sous la baguette de Charles Münch; le 15 novembre à Cambridge au Théâtre Sanders de l'Université Harvard; le 20 novembre à Montréal à l'Hôtel Ritz-Carlton. A Montréal également, elle se fera entendre à la radio le 22 novembre; elle donnera un concert à Québec le 23 novembre.

Mme Haas reviendra ensuite aux Etats-Unis, où elle donnera les concerts suivants: le vendredi 2 décembre à l'Académie de Musique de Brooklyn; le 3 à Carnegie Hall sous la direction de Charles Münch et le 8 décembre à Detroit, dans l'auditorium Henry Edsel Ford.

Presse Canadienne 11/6/60

Herald 11/12/60

THE SYMPHONY

Ravel Piano Concerto For Left Hand Is Just Right for Miss Haas

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Monique Haas, blonde, handsome and French, dominated the scene at Symphony yesterday. Her account of the Ravel Piano Concerto for Left Hand came off as a brilliantly tempestuous virtuoso statement. She also gave us an exceedingly refined performance of Mozart's Concerto in D minor, heard—mirabile dictu!—at a week-end concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in 45 years.

Making her debut here, Miss Haas undoubtedly selected the Ravel to follow the Mozart on the grounds of nationality and musical contrast. The score is ingenious and exciting in a rather obvious way; and I must confess, for all its virtues of craft, no less a stunt for the average performer than snapping several strings of a violin and playing the fiddle upside down in the tradition of Paganini.

The piece has a curious history. It was commissioned by Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist, who lost his right arm during the first World War. In one movement, combining four tempos, Ravel subtly nudges the soloist into the spotlight, mingling quasi-jazz effects for orchestra with alternate impassioned piano dialogue. This culminates in a cadenza demanding fabulous dexterity from five fingers.

Incredible Problems

The incredible technical problems encountered may well be imagined. "My left thumb," stated Mr. Wittgenstein, "does the work of my lost right hand. I play the melody with my thumb." Indeed, the arpeggios, yawning like canyons at the close, must be spanned by the thumb and second finger. Miss Haas not only conquered each complexity, but managed to sound in the process as multitudinously gifted as a five-fingered First Piano Quartet.

Still, it is to be doubted that the conditions of the performance will ever seem more than a novelty. Much as one admires Mr. Wittgenstein's valiant spirit, he is a unique case. A person not handicapped must, perforce, do as Miss Haas did yesterday—clutch the side of the keyboard, or rest the right hand in the lap, all the while playing superbly, the contrast between action and inaction recalling Dr. Johnson's remark about lady preachers. Not until another Wittgenstein appears will the concerto seem a natural declaration.

Does this mean the Ravel should be dropped pending such conditions? No. The writing for soloist and ensemble abounds in flashing felicities (at times the instrumental portions invoke "Bolero") and flamboyant power. I am glad Miss Haas essayed the oddity, a strange work but cherishable.

The statistic about the Mozart is staggering. Not in 45 years? But it is among the true glories of western music; one of the two Mozart piano concertos in a minor key. (I've never heard the C minor at a Symphony concert either.) Here, I think the soloist's artistry was most convincingly displayed.

Warm Personality

Miss Haas projected the stormy, brooding elements without sacrificing one iota of idyllic mood. The character of the work is difficult to capture because of its ambiguous relationship, sadness and struggle and rapture chasing like clouds upon a gentle sun. The soloist gave a lyrical and delicate reading though the scale remained large.

She has a lovely touch, a glowing tone. Monique Haas can play at various dynamic levels and speeds with the dazzle of a conservatory technician; but her effects are in proportion. Her phrasing revealed a warm personality, never coldly chiseled or detached. The poetic ideas of this great work flowed effortlessly. There was no lingering over slow passages or thundering through fast ones or filling in the segments Mozart left to the discretion of the performer with a gluey imagination. The sense of style proved impeccable. In short, Monique Haas is a spirited and distinguished Mozart interpreter of whom one would like to hear more.

The rapport between the orchestra and soloist was stimulating; indeed Dr. Munch stayed in his finest fettle throughout the afternoon. The Mozart, gracefully understated, the vibrancy of the Ravel, the bright pomp of the Bach and the rollicking Milhaud suite, based on French folk sources, received firm utterance.

True, the Bach was being revived after only two years — I am told no less than five Handel concerti grosso have never been done by the BSO,—yet was thoroughly delightful. Sixteen years have elapsed since the Milhaud, and it had vast, charm, too. One could not help but think that in this stereo age the score's tart instrumental combinations should be recorded by the Boston Symphony, for the intriguing timbres, buoyant rhythms and Gallicism suit the present identity of the orchestra persuasively.

Next week Leonid Kogan will be the [illegible] Beethoven's Concerto. Charles Munch has also scheduled the American premiere of Schmitt's Symphony No. 2, Op. 137, and Faure's Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande," Op. 80.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the fifth program of the 80th season in Symphony Hall yesterday. Monique Haas was the piano soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Suite No. 4, in D major ..... J. S. Bach
Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466 ..... Mozart
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel
Suite Provencal ..... Milhaud

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

NOV 5 1960

Christian Science Monitor 11/12/60

—Monique Haas's Debut

French Pianist Acclaimed In Left-Handed Concerto

By Harold Rogers

After Charles Munch warmed our hearts with a radiant reading of Bach's Suite No. 4, Monique Haas came on stage to cool them off again with a pretty performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20. The notes were clear, even sparkling, but superficial brilliance cannot compensate for profound poesy.

One's disappointment, however, did not outlast the intermission yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mlle Haas came forward with a stunning traversal of Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand, a theatrical work of magnificent orchestral sonorities and filigree fabric for the piano. She has, it was plain to see, a flair for the dramatic. She won a prolonged ovation, thus bringing her Boston debut to a climactic triumph.

The Mozart is susceptible of deeper insights. Will those who have heard Clara Haskil ever forget? It is doubtful, though, if brighter coruscations are possible in the Ravel. I wasn't on hand to hear the American première with the Boston Symphony in 1934 as played by Paul Wittgenstein, the one-armed pianist who commissioned the work; Mlle Haas's performance could be equaled, but hardly exceeded.

It was surprising to see Darius Milhaud's name on the program, especially in view of Dr. Munch's dislike of his countryman's music (he must dislike it, otherwise he'd surely play it more often). True, the Suite Provencale is not tough going; there is no raging sea of polytonality; it is filled with bucolic pleasures and spirited dances.

Dr. Munch leaned back and let the music soar and swirl. Both he and his listeners were happy.

MONIQUE HAAS, the celebrated French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony orchestra followers at the Friday and Saturday concerts of Nov. 11 and 12, and at Sanders theater in Cambridge on Tuesday, Nov. 15.

Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time in North America. In her initial appearance here, she will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the orchestra.

To be played will be the Mozart Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart Concerto was last performed by the orchestra in 1915 and the Ravel Concerto was last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major. The program will conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

The first concert in the orchestra's annual Sunday afternoon series will be given in Symphony hall on Nov. 13. Dr. Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

The concert calendar at the New England Conservatory lists a fine series of events for November. The opening events will be next Wednesday evening when students of Howard Goding will present an evening of recital in piano. On Nov. 16, a concert of compositions for woodwind and brass ensembles will be featured.

A top program is listed for Nov. 17 when a concert will be presented by the New England Conservatory chorus and Symphonic Wind ensemble and the distinguished teacher and conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth will appear as guest. An Alumni Association concert is scheduled for Nov. 21. Three prize-winning compositions, selected from entries in the association's 1959-60 composition contest, are listed. This competition is held annually, and is open to students and graduates of the conservatory.

An artist diploma debut recital featuring Miss Jeanne Grealish, mezzo-soprano, will be given on Nov. 28 and on Nov. 30, there will be a concert of vocal music.

MONIQUE HAAS, the celebrated French pianist, will be introduced to Boston Symphony orchestra followers at the Friday and Saturday concerts of Nov. 11 and 12, and at Sanders theater in Cambridge on Tuesday, Nov. 15.

Miss Haas, who has toured extensively through European countries, Russia, Turkey, Israel and Australia, is now performing for the first time in North America. In her initial appearance here, she will be heard in two concertos not recently performed by the orchestra.

To be played will be the Mozart Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for Left Hand by Ravel. The Mozart Concerto was last performed by the orchestra in 1915 and the Ravel Concerto was last heard in 1937. Dr. Munch will open the program with the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major. The program will conclude with a performance of Milhaud's Suite Provencale.

The first concert in the orchestra's annual Sunday afternoon series will be given in Symphony hall on Nov. 13. Dr. Munch's program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "New England Sketches" by Walton Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

The concert calendar at the New England Conservatory lists a fine series of events for November. The opening events will be next Wednesday evening when students of Howard Goding will present an evening of recital in piano. On Nov. 16, a concert of compositions for woodwind and brass ensembles will be featured.

A top program is listed for Nov. 17 when a concert will be presented by the New England Conservatory chorus and Symphonic Wind ensemble and the distinguished teacher and conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth will appear as guest. An Alumni Association concert is scheduled for Nov. 21. Three prize-winning compositions, selected from entries in the association's 1959-60 composition contest, are listed. This competition is held annually, and is open to students and graduates of the conservatory.

An artist diploma debut recital featuring Miss Jeanne Grealish, mezzo-soprano, will be given on Nov. 28 and on Nov. 30, there will be a concert of vocal music.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
DEC 4 1960

4/6

MUSIC
Boston Symphony

By Paul Henry Lang

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Monique Haas, pianist. The program: Bach Suite No. 4 in D major ..... Bach
Piano Concerto No. 20, K 466 ..... Mozart
Three New England Sketches ..... Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented yesterday afternoon a good and varied program. Such a program demands corresponding treatment, which it received only in the second half, where Mr. Munch went to work on the kind of brilliant coloristic compositions that have always been associated with this fine body of players. Indeed, Walter Piston's evocative "Three New England Sketches" showed the orchestra at its best, while Ravel's tour de force known as Concerto for the left hand, elicited appropriately elegant sounds from the orchestra, though not from the piano.

Monique Haas, the French pianist, should be at home in this French music, and parts of it she played acceptably, but when she had to distribute melody and accompaniment between five fingers she tended to bring out the melody by accentuation—not the best way to cope with the problem. So much for the second half of the concert. Before the intermission we heard music making altogether unworthy of an orchestra of such august standing.

Bach's Suite No. 4 is delightful and joyous outdoor music by a man who spent very little time out of doors. As usual, though, when Bach makes up his mind to do something he has not done before one can almost read an invisible superscription on the score: "Now look here, I will show you what can be done in this vein." The old cantor sheds his robes of office, closes the organ console, steps out in the backyard of St. Thomas', the choirboys bring out an old harpsichord, fiddles and bass viols, while the municipal musicians contribute oboes, bassoons, trumpets, timpani, and the air is soon filled with festive sunshine and the most delectable sounds.

Unfortunately, there was no such out of doors atmosphere in Mr. Munch's rendition of this charming work; he seems to have gone back and picked up the solemn robes Bach had just got rid of. The suite sounded bulky and ponderous, the sound was thick, the delightful chatter of the woodwinds and the merriment of the trumpets dampened by the sexton's stern warning to the boys that they should remember that they are still in St. Thomas' backyard and not out in the open.

The phrasing was incredibly bad—everything in a nondescript legato—which ruined the fugue; all the bounce was gone. Mr. Munch simply dispensed with the continuo, therefore whenever the concertino of oboes and bassoons appeared they had to play without accompaniment. But the height of the ridiculous was reached in the gavotte and minuet, where the strings put on mutes and played "The Maiden's Prayer," complete with sighs and fadeouts.

Miss Haas also played Mozart's somber D minor concerto, Mr. Munch assisting with a double orchestra. The French pianist played every note as it is printed in the score, never worrying about the relationship of these notes to one another. Her color scheme is very restricted and her way with a melody naive.

Mr. Munch displayed the same fuzzy phrasing and articulation he employed in the Bach suite: no clear legato nor staccato but a careless mixture of the two. The wonderfully crisp rondo theme in the finale was like a minestrone soup. Well, I can't explain it, but it surely shocks you when such a distinguished musical organization, capable of the most extraordinary artistry, plays like a sloppy old band.

Monique Haas, piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday

SHOWTHROUGH

17

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 13, at 3:00 o'clock

MOZART . . . . . Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

PISTON . . . . . Three New England Sketches

I. Seaside
II. Summer Evening
III. Mountains

INTERMISSION

FRANCK . . . . . *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
NOV 13 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
NOV 13 1960

Good Music for This Week

The R.I. Philharmonic Orchestra will be heard in a live broadcast originating from the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium, Monday at 8:30 p.m. on WPRM-FM. The program will feature a complete performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Soloists in the fourth movement will be Freda Grey-Nasse, Ginis Davis, Jon Crain and David Laurent plus the 150 voice Lexington Choral Society. Other works to be heard are Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor and the Coriolan Overture. The orchestra will be under the direction of its musical director Francis Madeira.

Two piano concertos highlight the televised concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel (2). Mozart's Concerto in D minor and Ravel's Left Hand Piano Concerto are to be performed by Monique Haas, who is making her American debut this season. Under the direction of Charles Munch, the orchestra also presents Bach's Suite No. 4 and Milhaud's Suite Provençale.

Composer-conductor Carlos Chavez will lead the New York Philharmonic in works by Elliott Carter, Robert Schumann and Richard Strauss, Saturday at 8:30 p.m. on WEAN and WPJB-FM. Guiomar Novaes will be the soloist in Schumann's Piano Concerto in A minor. Cellist Laszlo Varga and violinist William Lincer will be heard in Strauss' tone poem Don Quixote.

WXCN-FM will present a complete recording of Giordana's opera, Andrea Chenier, Saturday afternoon at 2. The performance is under the direction of Gianandrea Gavezzini. The soloists include Mario del Monaco in the title role, Renata Tebaldi, Ettore Bastianini and Fernando Corena.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 17 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER—"All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dewhurst, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 2:15 and 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER—"Camelot," the new Lerner-Loewe musical-comedy based on [illegible] with the cast including Julie Andrews, Robert Goulet, Moss Hart has directed. 2:15 and 8:30 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE—"A Streetcar Named Desire," opening play of the season and first play in the "Shrine of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Suarino and E. J. Calvin. 8:30 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER—"The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Pen, Paint and Pretzels and Tufts University Theater. 8:30 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL—Boston Symphony in Open Rehearsal with Charles Munch rehearsing the Friday-Saturday concert. 7:30 P.M.

B. U. THEATER—"The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera, performed by B. U. Music Theater Department. 8:30 P.M.

LORD BRAMA CENTER—(Cambridge) —"Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:30 P.M.

JORDAN HALL—N. E. Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, assisted by Symphonic Wind Ensemble. G. Wallace Woodworth, guest conductor. 8:30 P.M.

SHOWTHROUGH

47

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 13, at 3:00 o'clock

MOZART . . . . . Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

PISTON . . . . . Three New England Sketches

I. Seaside
II. Summer Evening
III. Mountains

INTERMISSION

FRANCK . . . . . *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
NOV 13 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
NOV 13 1960

Good Music for This Week

The R.I. Philharmonic Orchestra will be heard in a live broadcast originating from the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium, Monday at 8:30 p.m. on WPRI-FM. The program will feature a complete performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Soloists in the fourth movement will be Freda Grey Negus, Ginig Davis, Jon Crain and David Laurent plus the 150 voice Barrington Choral Society. Other works to be heard are Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor and the Coriolan Overture. The orchestra will be under the direction of its musical director Francis Madeira.

Two piano concertos highlight the televised concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel (2). Mozart's Concerto in D minor and Ravel's Left Hand Piano Concerto are to be performed by Monique Haas, who is making her American debut this season. Under the direction of Charles Munch, the orchestra also presents Bizet's Suite No. 1 and Milhaud's Suite Provençale.

Composer-conductor Gunther Schuller will lead the New York Philharmonic in works by Elliott Carter, Robert Schumann and Richard Strauss, Saturday at 8:30 p.m. on WEAN and WPJB-FM. Guiomar Novaes will be the soloist in Schumann's Piano Concerto in A minor. Cellist Laszlo Varga and violinist William Steinberg will be heard in Strauss' tone poem Don Quixote.

WXCN-FM will present a complete recording of Giordano's opera, Andrea Chenier, Saturday afternoon at 2. The performance is under the direction of Gianandrea Gavezzini. The soloists include Mario del Monaco in the title role, Renata Tebaldi, Ettore Bastianini and Fernando Corena.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
NOV 17 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER—"All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dewhurst, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 8:15 and 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER—"Camelot," the new Lerner-Loewe musical-comedy based on [illegible] with the cast including Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowall, Robert Goulet and Robert Coote. [illegible] 7:15 and 7:30 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE—"A Streetcar Named Desire," opening July 5, the season also first plays by [illegible] Tennessee Williams [illegible] Arthur Miller, Eugene O'Neill and Sidney Howard. [illegible] 8:30 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER—"The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Jan Hus Players. Pretzels and Tuna Upstairs Dry Theater. 8:30 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL—Boston Symphony in open rehearsal. Willis Conover [illegible] Munch conducting. 10 A.M. Friday-Saturday concert, 8:30 P.M.

[illegible] THEATER—"The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera performed by [illegible] Tufts Theatre Department. 8:30 P.M.

LORD BRAMA CENTER—(Cambridge) "Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:30 P.M.

JORDAN HALL—N. E. Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, assisted by Symphonic Wind Ensemble, G. Wallace Woodworth, guest conductor. 8:30 P.M.

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

NOV 29 1960

Composer-Pianist Woytowicz Here for Paderewski Memorial

By CYRUS DURGIN

Boleslaw Woytowicz, composer and pianist and one of Poland's most eminent musicians, has come to Boston to inaugurate local observance of the Paderewski Centennial Year. Ignace Jan Paderewski, the fabulous keyboard master whose career was crowned by a period of statesmanship as Premier of Poland after World War I, was born Nov. 6, 1860.

WOYTOWICZ

To commemorate the anniversary, a Paderewski Centennial Committee has been formed, with Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as honorary chairman. First event of the commemoration will be a concert at Jordan Hall Friday night by Boleslaw Woytowicz, which will be devoted to the music of Paderewski and his illustrious Polish forerunner, Chopin.

This is the first visit to North America for Prof. Woytowicz, a tall, lean, ruddy man jut under 61, with beetling black eyebrows and a pianist's stubby, short-nailed and powerful fingers. He speaks his native Polish and French, for he was a student of Nadia Boulanger in Paris. Our conversation, accordingly, was greatly assisted by the interpreting ability of Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak, Boston surgeon who is president of the newly-formed Paderewski Memorial Society of Mass., Inc.

Prof. Woytowicz is looking forward to the honor of playing what surely is one of the few American performances of Paderewski's own Sonata in E-flat minor since its composer gave its premiere at Symphony Hall, Dec. 21, 1907.

Woytowicz describes this work of 1903 as remarkably forward-looking for its time, a grand-scale piece with more than a hint of the 12-tone serial technic that was to emerge yeras later.

Incidentally, in his condensed answer to my request for a description of the musical state of Poland today, Woytowicz pointed out that there is just one 12-tone Polish composer today, a 25-year-old pupil of his.

"Music was really organized in Poland after the last war," Woytowicz continued, and now operates as a system beneficial to composers, performers and public. There are seven symphony orchestras wholly government subsidized, six partially thus supported, of 120 members each; eight opera houses with individual orchestras, and 10 more traveling orchestras of about 60 players. This is in a country of some 20 million persons. There is a national registry of 5000 professional musicians."

Woytowicz himself has been a prolific composer. His Second Symphony marked the beginning of a new period in his life. It was composed in Warsaw after the Nazi destruction of the city.

Woytowicz had to leave 22 major manuscripts in a basket in a cellar of his home, because he could not take them with him. He left them uncovered in the hope that if they were found they would be spared. The manuscripts included his First Symphony, a ballet, a quartet, choral music. When he returned he found just enough charred fragments to be sure they were from his manuscripts. Nazi soldiers, he later was informed, poured gasoline on the basket and set it afire.

"I felt then," Woytowicz says, "that if I had had a pistol I would have shot myself. I had no pistol, and therefore I thought 'I must begin all over again.'"

The Second, or "Warsaw" Symphony was the result of this resolution, and it is intimately bound to his feeling about the destruction and the resurgence of the Polish capital city.

As a composer Woytowicz bases much of his music upon plain song of the Gregorian chant. It is used importantly in his "Warsaw" Symphony.

The pronunciation of the musician's name, incidentally, is approximately Voy-TOE-vich, stress on the second syllable.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 30 1960

THE ROVING EYE

Bout With Nazi Justice

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The time was 1943 and the place a jail cell in Poland.

Thirty-four prisoners had been crammed into a single cell by their Nazi captors. One, a tall, middle-aged man with shaggy eyebrows that flared upward to lend him a somewhat saturnine appearance, apparently spoke German. He was, it seemed, a Professor, rounded up like most of the Polish intelligentsia—who were potential trouble-makers—and placed under lock and key. It was the routine thing.

Grim Music Lover

To the Professor fell the task of calling out the names of his fellow cellmates as, one by one, they were led away to execution.

Pucinski, Stasiak . . . The cell emptied, and ultimately it came the turn of the scholar. "Woytowicz!" called out the guard.

He stepped from the cell and followed the escort, not to the firing squad but to the prison hospital. "You are lucky," they told him as he assumed his new post of orderly, humble but assuring survival, "you are lucky to have a commander who loves music."

The music-loving prison gauleiter had, prior to arresting the Professor, despatched a squad that burned the latter's Trio for flute, clarinet and bassoon, Piano Concerto and Symphony No. 1, the manuscripts all consigned to the pyre out of sheer perversity. But fortunately, he retained a guttering of cultural spark that spared the composer, Boleslaw Woytowicz, one of Poland's most distinguished composers and piano interpreters and a figure of stature in world music.

The other day, some 17 years after Professor Woytowicz's harrowing encounter with Nazi justice, we chanced to talk with the artist through an interpreter, Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak, the Boston surgeon who is also the president of the newly-formed Paderewski Memorial Society of Massachusetts. This is the centennial year of the great Paderewski, pianist extraordinary, composer, and one of the few artists who has ever controlled the reins of a modern government. To honor the master, as the opening event of a series of Boston concerts, Mr. Woytowicz gives a recital of Paderewski and Chopin piano compositions in Jorday Hall Friday night.

First Visit

Indeed, bringing Boleslaw Woytowicz to America is something of a crusade for Dr. Nowak who reached behind the Iron Curtain to arrange that the pianist should give his first United States performance in Boston. Woytowicz has never ventured outside Europe before. Although regarded highly enough by his countrymen to represent Polish musical culture at the Brussels World Fair, he is a name virtually unknown to the musical public here.

This is, however, a reciprocal situation. Most American performers and composers are known in present-day Poland only by an occasional record, a short-wave program, a random score. Aside from politics, it illustrates the gulf between two cultures, less a matter of ideology than sheer distance and separate and distinct folkways.

The isolation was borne in on us when we asked Professor Woytowicz (he also studied mathematics, philology and earned a law degree from the University of Warsaw) whom he considered the outstanding young Polish composers today. Dr. Nowak, a flawless linguist himself, relayed the answer.

"Gorecki, Penherski, Kilar and Szalonek," he said.

They were not household names to us. Boleslaw Woytowicz must have noted the somewhat sluggish response, for he amplified his remarks.

"Kilar is a pupil of Professor Woytowicz," said Dr. Nowak.

Well then, we inquired, seeking the obverse of the statement, what American writers had attained recognition in Poland? Roy Harris, Copeland, Wallingford Reigger? It seems that Mr. Woytowicz knew Copeland and admired Walter Piston; but then he was a professional musician, and even so, American music was hard to obtain. Was Dr. Munch known? No.

Chopin's Pupil

Poland, nevertheless, he told us, currently supports the impressive number of seven Philharmonic orchestras as well as six lesser traveling orchestras subsidized by the state. He himself had studied under Michalowski, who in turn had studied under Mikuli, who was a pupil of Chopin, and the master's tradition had been passed in succession. Oh yes, Poland also boasts eight full-scale opera houses with singers and orchestras, all professionals.

The conversation seemed to be devolving toward a delicate theme. We feared a query about opera houses in Boston. "What do you think of the Boston Symphony," we asked; "have you heard it?"

"Yes," relayed Dr. Nowak, but before he could go on, the Polish composer smiled. For the first time Boleslaw Woytowicz broke into English. "Boston Symphony," he said, nodding. "First class."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald
BELMONT. Mass.
Circ. 4,942

NOV 24 1960

PADEREWSKI CENTENNIAL MEDALLION PRESENTED

On Friday, November 18, in a private ceremony, Dr. Charles Munch (right) received the first Paderewski Centennial Medallion struck by Boston's famous sculptor, Joseph A. Coletti. The presentation was made by Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak (left) of 186 Payson Road, Belmont.

This medallion depicts Paderewski in profile during the height of his career in 1914 while the reverse side shows a striking design of the heraldic Polish Eagle taken from the medal of the Order of Polonia Restituta, the words "Polonia Restituta" also appearing on the medallion to signify not only that Paderewski received this Order but was, indeed, the Restorer of Poland.

This medallion will be presented to Dr. Munch by Dr. Stanley J. G. Novak, President of the recently organized Paderewski Memorial Society of Massachusetts and by the Sculptor Coletti. Dr. Munch is Honorary Chairman of the Massachusetts Centennial Committee of Paderewski Mr. Harrison Keller who is Honorary Vice-Chairman will be present together with Mr. Henry B. Cabot, Mr. Richard C. Paine, Honorary Members. In addition, officers and trustees of the Paderewski Memorial Society will attend.

The Paderewski Memorial Society has also invited to be present as honorary guest, Professor Boleslaw Woytowicz, outstanding Polish Composer - Pianist - Pedagog, who comes from Poland to give a Paderewski Centennial Piano Recital in Jordan Hall on Friday evening, December 2, 1960.

In the Exhibition Gallery the management will show a collection of Paderewski memorial from its own collection and from that of Mr. Harrison Keller and Dr. Nowak.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190.246

NOV 17 1960

Paderewski Medal to Munch

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been awarded the first Paderewski Centennial Medallion. He will receive it in a private ceremony at Symphony Hall following the concert tomorrow afternoon.

This medallion was struck by Boston sculptor Joseph A. Coletti, and depicts Paderewski in profile during the height of his career in 1914.

The reverse side shows the heraldic Polish Eagle taken from the medal of the Order of Polonia Restituta, the words "Polonia Restituea" also appearing on the medalion to signify not only that Paderewski received this Order but was, indeed, the Restorer of Poland.

The medallion will be presented to Dr. Munch by Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak, President of the recently organized Paderewski Memorial Society of Massachusetts and by sculptor Coletti. Dr. Munch is honorary chairman of the Massachusetts Centennial Committee of Paderewski. Harrison Keller, honorary vice chairman, will be present, together with Henry B. Cabot, Richard C. Paine, honorary members, and officers and trustees of the Paderewski Memorial Society.

The Paderewski Memorial Society has also invited to be present as honorary guest, Prof. Boleslaw Woytowicz, Polish composer - pianist - teacher, who will give a Paderewski Centennial piano concert in Jordan Hall Friday evening, December 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen
BELMONT, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,079
OCT 28 1960

50

Dr. Nowak Announces Events Of Paderewski Centennial

Postmaster Ephraim Martin shown presenting sheet of new Paderewski postage stamps to Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak of Belmont who is serving as co-chairman of the many events sponsored by the Paderewski Centennial Committee.

Postmaster Ephraim Martin of Boston presided over ceremonies at the Federal Building and received a committee representing the Paderewski Centennial Committee and the Polish American Congress. A new Paderewski Centennial Stamp in the Champion of Liberty series has been issued by the Post Office Department.

Those present were Monsignor Ladislas A. Sikora of Salem; Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowak of Belmont, chairman of the Centennial Committee; Edward Nowak, Winthrop philatelist; Stanislaw J. Suchecki, Dorchester attorney; John Twarog, Eastern Mass. president of Polish American Congress, Salem, and Jan Brabinski, commander of Polish American Veterans, Post 37.

Postmaster Martin spoke of the heroic stature of Paderewski, not only as a virtuoso-composer but as a statesman, qualities which were born of self-discipline and spiritual inspiration. "Paderewski," he said, "symbolizes a true Champion of Liberty."

Dr. Nowak and Monsignor Sikora spoke of the Paderewski Commemorative plans which will center around November 6, the natal centennial date. These include:

Tuesday, Nov. 1: Public announcement of newly designed Paderewski Centennial medallion designed by Joseph Coletti, sculptor.

Sunday, Nov. 6: Radio programs commemorating the Centennial of Paderewski's birth, and Eire Society program.

Friday, Nov. 11: 11 a.m.: Memorial Mass for Paderewski and Polish heroes, Holy Cross Cathedral, Boston; Cardinal Richard J. Cushing presiding.

Sunday, Nov. 27 8 p.m.: (tentative), showing of films "Moonlight Sonata," featuring Paderewski, and "Song to Remember", depicting life of Chopin, Donnelly Memorial Theatre, Boston.

Radio and television programs in November and to feature rare recordings of Paderewski and there will be special programs by the Massachusetts Federation of Music Clubs.

Dr. Charles Munch, honorary chairman of the Paderewski Centennial Committee, will receive the first award of the Paderewski medallion designed by Mr. Coletti. Plans are under consideration for a commemorative concert program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Paderewski Committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Nowak is cooperating with the Paderewski Fund under the direction of Harrison Keller, who plans the presentation in March of a quintet commissioned by the Fund. This fund was originally established in Boston by Padewski, together with Col. Henry Lee Higginson and William Steinway to encourage American musical composition.

BUSINESSMEN:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,452

NOV 25 1960

JOSEPH A. COLETTI, Boston sculptor, struck the first Paderewski centennial medallion which was presented to Boston Symphony Conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, in a private ceremony.

51

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 18, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 19, at 8:30 o'clock

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

SCHMITT ..... Symphony No. 2, Op. 137

I. Assez animé
II. Lent sans excès
III. Animé

(First performance in the United States)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Rondo

SOLOIST
LEONID KOGAN

These concerts will end about 4:20 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[329]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

NOV 19 1960

Munch Conducts Schmitt; Kogan Symphony Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the sixth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the Suite from Faure's music to "Pelleas and Melisande"; the Second Symphony by Florent Schmitt (American premiere), and the Beethoven Violin Concerto with Leonid Kogan as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The American premiere of the Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt, and the return of Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan as soloist in the Beethoven D major Concerto furnish the noval aspects of the Boston Symphony concerts this week.

Kogan, now just 36, quickly reinforced yesterday the well-remembered impression he had made when, in January, 1958, he had made his debut here in the Brahms Concerto.

He is an exceedingly fine artist whose technical virtuosity is matched by his sensitivity.

His performance of Beethoven was fingered, bowed and spun into a beauty that was pure lyricism and refinement. The precise detail, the evenness of articulation down to the last turn, grace-note and trill, were extraordinary even in an age of great string soloists.

Kogan's performance was warm, too, and singing, qualities quickly recognized by the public. The Friday audience he won completely, and they responded with a very cordial and sustained ovation.

Among the lacunae in the local knowledge of contemporary music is the name of Florent Schmitt, who composed his Second Symphony when he was 87, and lived to hear it performed for the first time, under Charles Munch in Strasbourg, June 15, 1958. When he died two months afterward, Schmitt was just under 88.

In France, from the beginning of this century, Schmitt was counted among the eminent and esthetically independent. He composed a vast amount of music, of which the local orchestral public knows mostly about six pieces given 10 sets of performances at Boston Symphony concerts from 1913 until the present.

That is not bad for a composer of the time, neither is it good, certainly, not enough to give us a working knowledge of his music in large.

Schmitt used a big orchestra here, spun out a quantity of instrumental polyphony, filled his score with a wealth of contrasting and shifting colors, wrote with the unerring hand of a technical master and a man to whom melody was important but not necessarily a tune, and created a Symphony with unremitting forward motion and rhythmic vigor.

That any man could do so in his extreme old age is more than remarkable. (The obvious comparison here is Verdi and his "Falstaff", finished when he was 79). Schmitt also mustered, as did Verdi in "Falstaff", an uncanny sense of youthful high spirits, even a simulation of passion.

First impressions are not enough to give one a notion of such a big and involved work as a whole. Some will dismiss it as an echo of the romantic 1890s and early 1900s, which will be neither fair nor accurate, for there is about it not a little of the freer, more objective and experimental music that followed the first World War. I thought I discerned a certain kinship with Roussel, sort of a second cousin-ship.

Dr. Munch plainly had worked hard with the Orchestra on this involved and difficult Symphony. The performance seemed to be wholly admirable, as had been that of the Faure Suite previously, and as that of the Beethoven Concerto was afterward. Indeed, this was an afternoon of manifold and consistent pleasures.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Schumann's D minor Symphony; the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reding and Henry Piette as soloists, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

NOV 13 1960

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon will be heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries. In Great Britain the concert will be heard on the facilities of the British Broadcasting Corporation. Radiodiffusion Francaise will receive the broadcast from Great Britain and Russia by cable under the North Sea, will receive it for presentation in the Soviet Union. It is believed that this will be the first time such a broadcast has been made except perhaps under United Nations auspices.

At the Friday afternoon concert the Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, who made his United States debut as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1958, will be soloist. Mr. Kogan will perform Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The concert will also incinde the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt. Charles Munch conducted the world premiere of this symphony at the Strasbourg Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music on June 16, 1958. Mr. Schmitt, then 87 years of age, attended the first performance.

The first concert of the Sunday Afternoon Series will be heard this afternoon at 3:00 p.m. at Symphony Hall. Mr. Munch will conduct the program which includes Mozart's Symphony, No. 41, the Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Monique Haas will be soloist in Cambridge on Tuesday evening, in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for the Left Hand by Ravel. Mr. Munch will also include the Bach Suite No. 4 and the Suite Provencale by Milhaud.

The second open rehearsal of the season will be held at Symphony Hall at 7:30 on Thursday. This rehearsal, in which Mr. Kogan will participate, will be in preparation for the Friday and Saturday concerts.

TODAY

SOLISTI DI ZAGREB, Symphony Hall, 8:15 p.m. on B.U. Celebrity series. Antonio Janigro, conductor and cello soloist. Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerles by Corelli; Boccherini Concerto for Cello and Strings; Roosinin C major Sonata for Sextet; Haydn C major Concerto for Violin and Strings; Kelemen Concertante Improvisations. Tickets at box office.

NEW YORK PRO MUSICA, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m. M.I.T. Humanities series. Noah Greenberg conducts Elizabethan music including Dowland, Morley, and others. Tickets at box office.

KING'S CHAPEL SERIES Daniel Pinkham director, 5:00 p.m. Works for chorus, soloists and orchestra include Bach, Purcell, Buxtehude Handel and first performance of Madrigals spirituals by Wuorinen. Admission free.

COLLEGIUM MUSICUM of the University of Illinois, at Wellesley College, Jewett Art Center, 8:00 p.m. George Hunter will direct early music from the 13th through the 16th centuries.

MONDAY

SUZANNE BLOCH PLAYERS AND SINGERS, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Third and final program of the Cambridge Society for Early Music series. Early music of the 13th through 17th centuries.

PHYLLIS KNOX CARLSON, piano, College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, presented by the Chromatic Club. Scarlatti, Paderewski, Schumann and Chopin. Observing 100th anniversary of Paderewski's birth.

WEDNESDAY

NEW COMPOSITIONS presented by Brookline Library Music Association, 361 Washington Street, Brookline, 8:30 p.m. Works by Walter Miller, John Bavicchi, Daniel Pinkham and Joel Spiegelman. Admission free.

BRASS AND WOODWIND ENSEMBLES conducted by Roger Voisin and Sherman Friedland in N. E. Conservatory student program, Jordan Hall, 8:15 p.m. Bach, Altenburg, Rolland Manuel, Dahl, Stravinsky, Prokofieff. 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

CONTEMPORARY PROGRAM at Hayden Memorial Music Library, M. I. T. 5:00 p.m. Wind Chamber music by Poulenc and Hindemith. First performances of two works by Frank Wigglesworth. Admission free.

"GREAT MUSIC" series continues at B. U. College of Liberal Arts with Antonio Allotorre in illustrated lecture on Spanish folk songs of Renaissance period. Public invited. 7:15 p.m.

THURSDAY

N. E. CONSERVATORY CHORUS, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, assisted by Symphonic Wind Ensemble, directed by James Dixon. Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. G. Wallace Woodworth guest conductor. Varied program including Gunther Schuller, Karl Kohn, motets from Tallis to Randall Thompson and Gabrielli. Admission free.

SATURDAY

M. I. T. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, John Corley, conducting, Kresge Auditorium, 8:30 p.m. Works by Robert Ward, Mozart, Barber and Hindemith.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

NOV 13 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Leonid Kogan, Soviet violinist, will be heard as soloist in the Beethoven Concerto at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Dr. Charles Munch will also conduct the Suite from Faure's music to 'Palleas and Melisande," and, for the first time in the United States, the Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt.

The Friday concert will be broadcast to Europe and the U.S.S.R.

Dr. Munch will begin the Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon series today at 3. Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, and the Franck Symphony in D minor will be heard.

At Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Dr. Munch will conduct Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major; Mozart's Piano Concerto in D minor (K. 466), Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, and Milhaud's Suite Provencale. Monique Haas will be soloist.

The Friday-Saturday program of Nov. 25 and 26 will bring the Schumann D minor Symphony; Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reding and Henri Piette as soloists, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

The season's second Open Rehearsal will be Thursday at 7:30 in Symphony Hall.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 18 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER—"All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dehurs, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER—"Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical-comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowell, Robert Cotte, and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 8:25 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE—"A Streetcar Named Desire," opening play of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Sugrue and R. J. Calvin. 8:30 and 9:00 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER—"The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Pen, Paint and Pretzels and Tufts University Theater. 8:30 P.M.

DONNELLY MEMORIAL—"La Traviata," launches Opera Group's Verdi Festival with Sarah Caldwell directing and Eva Likova, John Alexander and Igor Gorin in leading parts. Orchestra of Boston Symphony players. 8:30 P.M.

B. U. THEATER—"The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera, performed by B. U. Music Theater Department. 8:30 P.M.

LOEB DRAMA CENTER—(Cambridge) —"Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:00 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL— Boston Symphony with Charles Munch conducting Faure, Schmitt and Beethoven Violin Concerto, Leonid Kogan, soloist. 2:15 P.M.

JORDAN HALL—Jean-Leon Destine and his Haitian Dance Company. Single performance. 8:30 P.M.

AGASSIZ THEATER—Cisco Houston and Lightnin' Hopkins, blues, ballads, folk songs. Harvard-Radcliffe Liberal Union. 8:30 P.M.

JEWETT ART CENTER—(Wellesley)—"The Opposition is Demanding," one-acter by Susan Levine presented by Wellesley Experimental Theater Group. 8:30 P.M.

FIRST PARISH CHURCH—(Brookline)—"Ardele," by Anouilh, presented by Boston Little Theater. Norman Decoteaux, director, AS 7-4657. 8:30 P.M.

SLOSBERG RECITAL HALL—(Waltham) —Chamber music concert with Lonnie Epstein, pianist; Frank Pelleg, harpsichord, and others. In Mozart, Haydn, Elliott Carter. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 19 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER — "All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dehurs, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 2:15 and 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER — "Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical-comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowell, Robert Cotte, and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 2:15 and 8:25 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE — "A Streetcar Named Desire," opening play of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Sugrue and R. J. Calvin. 8:30 and 9:00 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER — "The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Pen, Paint and Pretzels and Tufts University Theater. 8:30 P.M.

B. U. THEATER — "The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera, performed by B. U. Music Theater Department. 8:30 P.M.

LOEB DRAMA CENTER — (Cambridge) — "Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:00 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony with Charles Munch conducting Faure, Schmitt and Beethoven Violin Concerto, Leonid Kogan, soloist. 8:30 P.M.

KRESGE AUDITORIUM — M. I. T. Symphony, John Corley, conductor, in Robert Ward, Mozart, Barber and Hindemith. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

WELLESLEY J. H. S. — (Kingsbury Street, Wellesley) — "The Mikado," in special version for children presented by Wellesley Community Chorus, with Lanelle's Marionettes and Dr. Fujimoto as narrator. 2:15 P.M.

FIRST PARISH CHURCH — (Brookline) — "Ardele," by Anouilh, presented by Boston Little Theater. Norman Decoteaux, director. AS 7-4657. 8:30 P.M.

51

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY–SIXTY-ONE

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 18, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 19, at 8:30 o'clock

FAURÉ . . . . . "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

SCHMITT . . . . . Symphony No. 2, Op. 137

I. Assez animé
II. Lent sans excès
III. Animé

(First performance in the United States)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Rondo

SOLOIST
LEONID KOGAN

These concerts will end about 4:20 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[329]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
NOV 19 1960

Munch Conducts Schmitt; Kogan Symphony Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the sixth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the Suite from Faure's music to "Pelleas and Melisande"; the Second Symphony by Florent Schmitt (American premiere), and the Beethoven Violin Concerto with Leonid Kogan as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The American premiere of the Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt, and the return of Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, as soloist in the Beethoven D major Concerto furnish the noval aspects of the Boston Symphony concerts this week.

Kogan, now just 36, quickly reinforced yesterday the well-remembered impression he had made when, in January, 1958, he had made his debut here in the Brahms Concerto.

He is an exceedingly fine artist whose technical virtuosity is matched by his sensitivity.

His performance of Beethoven was fingered, bowed and spun into a beauty that was pure lyricism and refinement. The precise detail, the evenness of articulation down to the last turn, grace-note and trill, were extraordinary even in an age of great string soloists.

Kogan's performance was warm, too, and singing, qualities quickly recognized by the public. The Friday audience he won completely, and they responded with a very cordial and sustained ovation.

Among the lacunae in the local knowledge of contemporary music is the name of Florent Schmitt, who composed his Second Symphony when he was 87, and lived to hear it performed for the first time, under Charles Munch in Strasbourg, June 15, 1958. When he died two months afterward, Schmitt was just under 88.

In France, from the beginning of this century, Schmitt was counted among the eminent and esthetically independent. He composed a vast amount of music, of which the local orchestral public knows mostly about six pieces given 10 sets of performances at Boston Symphony concerts from 1913 until the present.

That is not bad for a composer of the time, neither is it good, certainly, not enough to give us a working knowledge of his music in large.

Schmitt used a big orchestra here, spun out a quantity of instrumental polyphony, filled his score with a wealth of contrasting and shifting colors, wrote with the unerring hand of a technical master and a man to whom melody was important but not necessarily a tune, and created a Symphony with unremitting forward motion and rhythmic vigor.

That any man could do so in his extreme old age is more than remarkable. The obvious comparison here is Verdi and his "Falstaff," finished when he was 79). Schmitt also muttered, as did Verdi in "Falstaff," an "uncanny" sense of youthful high spirits, even a simulation of passion.

First impressions are not enough to give one a notion of such a big and involved work as a whole. Some will dismiss it as an echo of the romantic 1890s and early 1900s, which will be neither fair nor accurate, for there is about it not a little of the freer, more objective and experimental music that followed the first World War. I thought I discerned a certain kinship with Roussel, sort of a second cousin-ship.

Dr. Munch plainly had worked hard with the Orchestra on this involved and difficult Symphony. The performance seemed to be wholly admirable, as had been that of the Faure Suite previously, and as that of the Beethoven Concerto was afterward. Indeed, this was an afternoon of manifold and consistent pleasures.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Schumann's D minor Symphony; the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reding and Henry Piette as soloists, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
NOV 13 1960

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon will be heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries. In Great Britain the concert will be heard on the facilities of the British Broadcasting Corporation. Radiodiffusion Francaise will receive the broadcast from Great Britain and Russia by cable under the North Sea, will receive it for presentation in the Soviet Union. It is believed that this will be the first time such a broadcast has been made except perhaps under United Nations auspices.

At the Friday afternoon concert the Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, who made his United States debut as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1958, will be soloist. Mr. Kogan will perform Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The concert will also include the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt. Charles Munch conducted the world premiere of this symphony at the Strasbourg Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music on June 15, 1958. Mr. Schmitt, then 87 years of age, attended the first performance.

The first concert of the Sunday Afternoon Series will be heard this afternoon at 3:00 p.m. at Symphony Hall. Mr. Munch will conduct the program which includes Mozart's Symphony, No. 41, the Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Monique Haas will be soloist in Cambridge on Tuesday evening, in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for the Left Hand by Ravel. Mr. Munch will also include the Bach Suite No. 4 and the Suite Provencale by Milhaud.

The second open rehearsal of the season will be held at Symphony Hall at 7:30 on Thursday. This rehearsal, in which Mr. Kogan will participate, will be in preparation for the Friday and Saturday concerts.

TODAY

SOLISTI DI ZAGREB, Symphony Hall, 8:15 p.m. on B.S.O. Celebrity Series. Antonio Janigro, conductor and cello soloist. Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie by Corelli; Boccherini Concerto for Cello and Strings; Rossinin C major Sonata for Strings; Haydn C major Concerto for Violin and Strings; Kelemen Concertante Improvisations. Tickets at box office.

NEW YORK PRO MUSICA, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m. M.I.T. Humanities Series. Monteverdi, Schoenberg concerts; Elizabethan music including Bowland, Morley and others. Records at box office.

KING'S CHAPEL CHOIRS, Daniel Pinkham director, 5:00 p.m. Works for chorus, soloists and orchestra include Bach, Purcell, Buxtehude, Handel and first performance of Madrigals spirituales by Wuorinen. Admission free.

COLLEGIUM MUSICUM of the University of Illinois, at Wellesley College, Jewett Art Center, 8:00 p.m. George Hunter will direct early music from the 14th through the 16th centuries.

MONDAY

SUZANNE BLOCH PLAYERS AND SINGERS, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Third and final program in the Cambridge Society for Early Music series. Early music of the 15th through 17th centuries.

PHYLLIS COX, Cambridge pianist, College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, presented by the Chromatic Club. Bartók, Paderewski, Schumann and Chopin. Observing 100th anniversary of Paderewski's birth.

WEDNESDAY

NEW COMPOSITIONS presented by Brookline Library Music Association, 361 Washington Street, Brookline, 8:30 p.m. Works by [illegible] Miller, [illegible] Ravicchio, Daniel [illegible] Coleman. Admission free.

BRASS AND WOODWIND ENSEMBLES conducted by Roger Voisin and Sherman Friedland at New England Conservatory student program in Jordan Hall, Carl Zeltzer, Altenburg, Manuel Dahl, Stravinsky. Program at 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

CONTEMPORARY PROGRAM at Harvard Music Library, Music 17, at 5:00 p.m. Wind Chamber music by Poulenc and Hindemith. Early performances of two works by Irving Wigglesworth. Admission free.

"GREAT MUSIC" series of lectures at B. U. College of Liberal Arts with Antonio Allotorre in illustrated lecture on Spanish folk songs of Renaissance period. Public invited. 7:15 p.m.

THURSDAY

N. E. CONSERVATORY CHORUS, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, assisted by Symphonic Wind Ensemble, directed by James Dixon. Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. G. Wallace Woodworth guest conductor. Varied program including Gunther Schuller, Karl Kohn. Motets from Tallis to Randall Thompson and Gabrielli. Admission free.

SATURDAY

M. I. T. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, John Corley, conducting, Kresge Auditorium, 8:30 p.m. Works by Robert Ward, Mozart, Barber and Hindemith.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
NOV 13 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Leonid Kogan, Soviet violinist, will be heard as soloist in the Beethoven Concerto at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Dr. Charles Munch will also conduct the Suite from Faure's music to "Pelleas and Melisande," and, for the first time in the United States, the Second Symphony by the late Florent Schmitt.

The Friday concert will be broadcast to Europe and the U.S.S.R.

Dr. Munch will begin the Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon series today at 3 Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, and the Franck Symphony in D minor will be heard.

At Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Dr. Munch will conduct Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, Mozart's Piano Concerto in D minor, Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand and Milhaud's Suite Provencale. Monique Haas will be soloist.

The Friday program [illegible] and [illegible] will be heard in [illegible] D minor Symphony; Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos, with Janine Reding and Henri Piette as soloists, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

The season's second Open Rehearsal will be Thursday at 7:30 in Symphony Hall.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
NOV 18 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER—"All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dewhurst, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER—"Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical-comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowell, Robert Coote, and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 8:25 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE—"A Streetcar Named Desire," opening play of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Sugrue and R. J. Calvin. 8:30 and 9:00 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER—"The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Pen, Paint and Pretzels and Tufts University Theater. 8:30 P.M.

DONNELLY MEMORIAL—"La Traviata" launches Opera Group's Verdi Festival with Sarah Caldwell directing. Eva Likova, John Alexander and Igor Gorin in leading parts. Orchestra of Boston Symphony players. 8:30 P.M.

B. U. THEATER—"The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera, performed by B. U. Music Theater Department. 8:30 P.M.

LOEB DRAMA CENTER—(Cambridge)—"Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:00 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL—Boston Symphony with Charles Munch conducting Faure, Schmitt and Beethoven. Violin Concerto, Leonid Kogan, soloist. 2:15 P.M.

JEWETT ART CENTER—(Wellesley)—"The Opposition Is Demanding," one-acter by Susan Levine presented by Wellesley Experimental Theater Group. 8:30 P.M.

FIRST PARISH CHURCH—(Brookline)—"Ardele," by Anouilh, presented by Boston Little Theater. Norman Decoteaux, director. AS 7-4657. 8:30 P.M.

SLOSBERG RECITAL HALL—(Waltham)—Chamber music concert with Lonnie Epstein, pianist; Frank Pelleg, harpsichord, and others, in Mozart, Haydn, Elliott Carter. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
NOV 19 1960

Theaters & Concerts

COLONIAL THEATER — "All the Way Home," new Tad Mosel drama, produced by Fred Coe, staged by Arthur Penn with the cast including Colleen Dewhurst, Arthur Hill, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon and John Megna. 2:15 and 8:30 P.M.

SHUBERT THEATER — "Camelot," the new Lerner-Lowe musical comedy based on T. H. White's version of the Arthurian legends. Cast includes Richard Burton, Julie Andrews, Roddy MacDowell, Robert Coote and Robert Goulet. Moss Hart has directed. 2:15 and 8:25 P.M.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE — "A Streetcar Named Desire," opening play of the season and first play in the "Show of Angels" series. The Tennessee Williams play is directed by Michael Murray and produced by Frank Sugrue and R. J. Calvin. 8:30 and 9:00 P.M.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER — "The Diary of Anne Frank," presented by Pen, Paint and Pretzels and Tufts University Theater. 8:30 P.M.

B. U. THEATER — "The Rape of Lucretia," Benjamin Britten's opera, performed by B. U. Music Theater Department. 8:30 P.M.

LOEB DRAMA CENTER — (Cambridge) — "Pirates of Penzance," presented by the Harvard Gilbert and Sullivan Players. 8:00 P.M.

SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony with Charles Munch conducting, Schmitt and Beethoven, Violin Concerto, Leonid Kogan, soloist. 8:30 P.M.

KRESGE AUDITORIUM — M. I. T. Symphony, John Corley, conductor, in Robert Ward, Mozart, Barber and Hindemith. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

WELLESLEY J. H. S. — (Kinsbury Street, Wellesley) — "The Mikado," in special version for children presented by Wellesley Community Chorus, with Lanelle's Marionettes and Dr. Fujimoto as narrator. 2:15 P.M.

FIRST PARISH CHURCH — (Brookline) — "Ardele," by Anouilh, presented by Boston Little Theater. Norman Decoteaux, director. AS 7-4657. 8:30 P.M.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
NOV 17 1960

Russia And Europe To Hear Boston Symphony Concert

Soviet Violinist Leonid Kogan Is Soloist For Tomorrow's Broadcast

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 2:15 p.m. will be heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries. Simultaneous transmission of this broadcast from Boston is possible via the transatlantic cable from Newfoundland to England. In Great Britain the concert will be heard on the facilities of the British Broadcasting Corporation. Radiodiffusion Francaise will receive the broadcast from Great Britain and the Soviet Union, by cable under the North Sea, will receive the broadcast for presentation in the Soviet Union. It s believed that this simultaneous broadcast of a United States concert in Europe and Russia will be the first time such a broadcast has been made except perhaps under United Nations auspices.

At the Friday afternoon concert the Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan who made his United States debut as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1958, will be soloist. Mr. Kogan will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The concert will also include the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure' and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt. Charles Munch conducted the world premiere of this symphony at the Strasbourg Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music on June 15, 1958. Mr. Schmitt, then 87 years of age, attended the first performance.

The duo - pianists Janine Reding and Henri Piette will be heard for the first time in Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Friday and Saturday November 25 and 26. At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct the Symphony No. 4

Continued on Page Six

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
NOV 11 1960

Continued from Page One

by Schuman the Enigma Variations by Elgar and the Concerto for Two Pianos by Martinu.

The first concert of the Orchestra's annual Sunday Afternoon at 3:00 p.m. at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch will conduct the program which includes Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and the Symphony in D Minor by Ce'sar Franck.

Monique Haas was soloist at the Orchestra's concert in Cambridge on Tuesday evening, November 15. Miss Haas will be heard in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20 and the Concerto for the Left Hand by Ravel; the program, conducted by Doctor Munch, will also include the Bach Suite No. 4 and the Suite Provencale by Milhaud.

The second open rehearsal of the season will be held at Symphony Hall at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, November 17. This rehearsal, in which Mr. Kogan will participate, will be in preparation for the Orchestra's concerts of November 18 and 19.

The Orchestra will be heard at Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence on Tuesday evening, November 22. The first program of the annual Providence series will include composition by Faure', William Schmann and Beethoven.

The complete program:

Friday, Nov. 18, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 19, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch: Faure' Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande"; Schmitt, Symphony No. 2, Op. 137 (first U.S. performance); Beethoven, Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 (Leonid Kogan).

Friday, Nov. 25, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 26, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch: Schumann Symphony No. 4, in D minor Op. 120; Martinu, Concerto for Two Pianos (Janine Reding and Henri Piette) Elgar, Variations on an Original Tfieme Op. 36.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Moniter (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
NOV 18 1960

Soviets to Hear Boston Symphony

By the Associated Press

Boston

Soviet radio listeners who stay up late Friday night will hear a "live" American broadcast—with one of their countrymen, violinist Leonid Kogan, playing as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The famous American orchestra, directed by French-born Charles Munch, and featuring Soviet violinist Kogan in Beethoven's Violin Concerto, will be heard in the Soviet Union, France, and England.

For this event, Boston's educational FM station, WGBH, joins the British Broadcasting Corporation, Moscow Radio, and Radio Diffusion Française via trans-Atlantic cable. The broadcast will emanate from Boston's Symphony Hall at 3:30 p.m., e.s.t., 8:30 London time, 9:30 Paris time, and 11:30 Moscow time. WGBH will carry the entire concert, from its beginning at 2:10 p.m. Boston time for New England.

A Russian-language commentator will speak to the audience in the Soviet Union, Claude Levy will address the French audience, and WGBH-FM's William Pierce will address English-speaking listeners.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
NOV 12 1960

Symphony Concert to Britain, Russia

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Symphony Hall next Friday afternon will be he heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries.

Simultaneous transmission of the broadcast from Boston is possible via the transatlantic cable from Newfoundland to England. In Great Britain the concert will be heard on the facilities of the British Broadcasting Corp. Radiodiffusion Francaise will receive the broadcast from Great Britain and the Soviet Union, by cable under the North Sea, will receive the broadcast for presentation in the Soviet Union.

It is believed that this simultaneous broadcast of a United States concert in Europe and Russia will be the first time such a broadcast has been made except perhaps under United Nations auspices.

At the Friday afternoon concert the Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, who made his United States debut as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1958, will be soloist. Mr. Kogan will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The concert will also include the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt.

Charles Munch conducted the world premiere of this symphony at the Strasbourg Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music on June 15, 1958. Mr. Schmitt, then 87 years of age, attended the first performance.

The duo-pianists Janine Reding and Henri Piette will be heard for the first time in Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Friday and Saturday, Nov. 25 and 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
FEB 5 - 1961

Bill Pierce of WGBH A 'Voice From Home'

"I have just this minute come from hearing the dying applause in Symphony Hall and the final words of William Pierce, 'Good evening to Europe.' I cannot tell you how excited and happy I was, and how close to New England it made me feel!"

These are the words of a young Cambridge (Mass.) matron, writing from London (England) where she now lives with her British-born husband. She had just heard a recent Boston Symphony Orchestra transatlantic broadcast, beamed to Europe and Russia by Boston's WGBH-FM; a concert in which Charles Munch directed Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Russian-born soloist Leonid Kogan.

She is just one of the many enthusiasts for William Pierce who have called him "the Voice of WGBH" and the "finest announcer on the air." He has brought a twinge of nostalgia to many a New Englander in remote parts of the world, when heard announcing Symphony broadcasts or introducing "Backgrounds" to Voice of America listeners abroad.

Not only the nostalgic Yank afar, but the regular New England WGBH listener reports: "What a pleasure it is to listen to his impeccable English!"

Announcing isn't his only career, however. Bill spends long hours patiently working with children suffering from specific language disabilities—children, who, for instance, may transpose letters in reading, turning "for" into "rof" or "cat" into "tac."

Teaching has always held great interest for Bill Pierce. A native of New Bedford, he graduated from Bowdoin College and then taught at Westminster School, Simsbury, Conn. Last year he trained for his present work under Dr. Edwin Cole at the Massachusetts General Hospital Children's Clinic; work he finds both stimulating and satisfying.

To the WGBH audience, Bill Pierce has long been "Mr. WGBH." Now he has won a new title, that of "Mr. NET." It is his voice viewers of 50 non-commercial stations across the country will soon hear at the end of many programs, announcing: "This is NET: National Educational Television."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271
DEC 1960

The Denver Symphony Orchestra has been given the U. S. Information Agency's Distinguished Service Award in recognition of ten consecutive years of participation in the Voice of America's "musical salute" program between the United States and foreign cities. The award was presented to the orchestra and its director, Saul Caston, November 9, by Harold Boxer, musical director of the Agency's worldwide radio network.

The Boston Symphony's concert in that city November 18 was heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries. Such transmission was possible via the transatlantic cable from Newfoundland to England. In Great Britain the concert was heard on the facilities of the British Broadcasting Corporation. Radiodiffusion Francaise received the broadcast from Great Britain. It was presented in the Soviet Union by cable under the North Sea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor 11/11/60

Europe to Hear Symphony on Radio

The Boston Symphony concert at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Nov. 18, will be heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France, and other European countries. Simultaneous transmission of this broadcast from Boston is possible via the transatlantic cable from Newfoundland to England.

In Great Britain the concert will be heard on the facilities of the BBC. Radiodiffusion Française will receive the broadcast from Great Britain; and the Soviet Union, by cable under the North Sea, will receive the broadcast for presentation in the Soviet Union. It is believed that this simultaneous broadcast of a United States concert in Europe and Russia will be the first time such a broadcast has been made, except perhaps under United Nations auspices.

At the Friday concert the Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, who made his United States debut as guest of the Boston Symphony in 1958, will be soloist. Mr. Kogan will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Concerto.

The concert will also include the Suite from "Pelléas and Mélisande" by Fauré and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt.

Monitor 12/17/60

BBC Puts Ear to Transatlantic Cable

By Melita Knowles

London

Live relays of concerts from Boston's Symphony Hall which have delighted music-lovers here recently are significant of a new standard of transatlantic exchange which many hope will replace less desirable imports of recent years.

This music comes to listeners in Britain over the new transatlantic submarine cable. About 8:30 in the evening, listeners to the BBC home service heard part of the Friday afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under conductor Charles Munch.

Leonid Kogan's solo work in Beethoven's Violin Concerto came over the air as clearly as if he had been in London's Albert Hall. Mr. Kogan is remembered here for his participation in the 1959 Tchaikovsky Festival.

The concert from Boston was relayed to France, Italy, the Soviet Union, and Belgium. Announcements were made in five languages.

* * *

Such transatlantic linkups pleasantly make up for American material missing from the British Broadcasting Corporation TV schedules this winter.

British stars have taken over to a much greater extent than ever before. Eric Maschwitz, head of BBC TV light entertainment, has announced this as a definite trend of their present policy.

"Top British performers attract greater audience appreciation." And he added, "we must try not to be dazzled by Broadway."

Of TV programs, generally, Kenneth Adam, program controller says: "The emphasis is on quality and content and British material."

The substitution of live British programs in place of the large number of American films has made this the most expensive winter BBC TV has ever had. Extra sums are spent on special projects, documentaries, news features, and outside broadcasts.

This all adds up to the conclusion British TV is maturing on its own account, aside from American influence, that it is producing its own material as well as the trained technicians and artists to put it across. For instance, a series of new, specially-written Sunday night plays began last September and will continue till February 1961.

* * *

The new emphasis on native talent does not mean British viewers do not see American productions—and like them. On BBC Perry Como, Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and the westerns are strong favorites still. The Perry Como show is adapted for British showing. In this connection Mr. Como has expressed his delight at the "expert showmanship in the difficult task of adapting the show for England." He feels this is a "significant first step toward the realization of true international TV."

Many American TV films are shot in British studios and shown in Britain. And unfortunately there is no longer monopoly of fisticuffs and shooting in American films. ITV's so-called children's serial "Robin Hood" is not without its violent moments.

Commercial television (ITV), to the casual viewer, seems to carry more films of violence than the BBC. ITV is more often slated in the press for this type of film. At one period ITV made enormous holes in the BBC's child audience figures with its American films and the BBC followed suit. Now, however, the BBC, responding to public outcry, has withdrawn many.

Women's organizations, social workers, and church authorities have campaigned for less violence in TV films. The companies are urged to stick more closely to the letter of the Television Act covering both BBC and ITV which demands there should be a proper balance of programs and that "they should be predominantly British."

MISSING
PAGE(S)

BLANK PAGE

54

BLANK PAGE

56

Christian Science Monitor

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1960 — Art—Music—Theater — 9

Kogan Acclaimed at Symphony Hall

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 79,797

NOV 26 1960

KOGAN IS SOLOIST

Leonid Kogan, Russian violinist, will be making a return appearance in the United States when he performs as guest soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch. His performance of the Beethoven Violin Concerto in D with the Boston Symphony will be broadcast over WQXR tomorrow afternoon from 3:05 to approximately 5 o'clock.

This concert on WQXR also will include the first United States performance of Florent Schmitt's Symphony No 2. Munch was the conductor of this work when it was first played in June of 1958 at the Strasbourg Festival. Two months later the 88-year-old composer, Schmitt, died.

Also to be heard on the program will be Incidential Music from Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

NOV 18 1960

At Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon is being heard simultaneously in the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and other European countries.

At today's concert, to be repeated tomorrow night, Leonid Kogan, Soviet violinist who made his U. S. debut with the orchestra in 1958, will be soloist. He will be heard in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

The concert also includes the Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande" by Faure and the first performance in the United States of the Symphony No. 2 by Florent Schmitt.

Noted Soviet Violinist Plays Beethoven Concerto

By Louis Chapin

There may be oceans of cold war circling the earth these days, but they made room for a gulf stream in Symphony Hall yesterday, moving from a grateful audience to Leonid Kogan for his playing of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Actually, the Soviet violinist's interpretation was rather cool; but it was the coolness of effortless poise and not of indifference. Effort usually means pushing or pulling, and this music above all is too precise and too familiar to be pushed or pulled. It simply has to be given its freedom, and this is what Mr. Kogan did to it. Which, as we all know, is not so simple.

In most previous hearings, it has been the catchy dance of the rondo that this reviewer has been humming on his way out; but this time he wasn't humming, but remembering the epic geometry of the preceding main themes. The audience's responses to Mr. Kogan's quiet realization seemed to recognize, also, Beethoven's structural meaning for today. Yesterday's sound went half round the world by radio—including the applause, we hope.

♪ ♪ ♪

The earlier half of the program offered works by two successive Frenchmen, about a generation apart, each composing for two generations. Gabriel Fauré taught composition, for a while, to Florent Schmitt, and there is a horizontal linear element in the slow movement of Schmitt's Second Symphony, heard yesterday in its American première, which is reminiscent of his teacher's style. But mostly they are quite different Frenchmen.

Fauré was heard in the suite from his incidental music to Maeterlinck's tragedy "Pelléas et Mélisande." Charles Munch let the music speak with childlike directness, which makes the more poignant this legend of young girlhood tangled in ancient dreams.

♪ ♪ ♪

Schmitt's Symphony No. 2, written in 1957 during the composer's 87th year, illuminates another aspect of youth. Its first movement springs to life with quick spirals of rhythm, and stays hugely alive to the end, though with some variations of texture and tempo.

The breadth of the slow movement is particularly welcome after the considerably vertical activity of the first, and it is here that one can recall Fauré's level sonority. But Schmitt's range is bigger in color variety as well as dynamics; it stretches even his large orchestra in many directions, impelled by almost continually busy percussion.

The third movement is somewhat lighter in its embodiment of energy. One leaves the performance of this impressive work wishing (of course) to hear it several more times, partly to penetrate to the linear movement which must exist but is almost submerged in its massive polychrome.

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

NOV 19 1960

Music

Soviet Violinist Given Overwhelming Reception

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Whether they had heard the Beethoven "Violin Concerto in D major" on previous occasions, or for the first time, the result was still a reaction of wonder and appreciation to those who visited Symphony hall Thursday evening for the second open rehearsal of the current season by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Dr. Charles Munch, who continues to provide a musical generalship of the highest type, had as his soloist, Leonid Kogan, the Soviet violinist who appeared here for the first time in 1958. We remember that at that time the violinist was accorded a reception of history making proportions, and again, the same procedure was followed.

Dr. Charles Munch

Mr. Kogan, from all indications, intends to follow with gospel intent the wishes of the composer. The Concerto known for its poetic insight, genius of pattern and unchallenged acceptance in regards to sheer enjoyment, was all of that on this occasion.

As a technician the artist has few, if any peers, and as for his inner strength in regards to interpretation, this also leaves nothing to be desired. The opening allegro was developed with a smooth and still much lived motif. There was technique, especially during the long solo passages that dimax the movement, and the slow passages of bowing that were an achievement in tone and musical grace.

The larghetto making it necessary that the performing artist be at very best, was about as fine Beethoven that you would expect to hear. From top to bottom, the playing range of the artist's instrument sang, was colored and sent the softest of tones to the far reaches of the hall with precision like effects.

Dr. Munch who has that capacity to do so many things correctly proved to be in rare form for this occasion. He programmed such wide mediums of musical opinion as the Faure "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite and for an American premiere, Schmitt's "Symphony No. 2."

THE SUITE RECEIVED a magnificent reading, one that belied the fact that this affair was purely a rehearsal and finishing off process. The prelude passages, moving so melodically across the footlights were warm in opinion and true in the story they told.

Many were waiting for the premiere. They heard it, and to a man, left the hall satisfied that the composer has done more to foster relations between the classic and modern age than any composer we can think of at the moment. How refreshing to hear modern styled chords and fast moving passages that are filled with an opulance of melody while still retaining the modern blare of trumpets!

This is actually so. The listener is treated to some spots that are blue styled trumpet while an amazing string motif goes on its pleasant way without being either marred or distracted. We realize that creative genius made much of this possible, but we might add that Mr. Schmitt has found the secret—he has introduced the long hairs and short hairs to a taste of living under the same roof and with a super sprinkling of good neighbor policy.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 19 1960

A U. S. Premiere

Scenic Railway Of a Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The opus 137 of the French composer, Florent Schmitt, which received a United States premiere under the baton of Charles Munch yesterday, is a veritable scenic railway of a symphony. The ride is comfortable, the appointments fastidious, and the view from the window familiar.

It is the landscape of fin-de-siecle French music. The tracks of M. Schmitt's structure are grounded on soil broken by Debussy and terraced by Ravel. Here is a patch cultivated by Chausson, there a rustic farm dwelling inhabited by a certain Roussel. An occasional dissonant yelp signifies that neighbor Satie, a great practical joker, has crossed the wires on the switches again.

Nevertheless the trip proves light, brisk and refreshing. Some of the passengers expected to travel into the Ultima Thule of contemporary expression. The surface aspects are percussive enough to be modern. But no; we have covered a territory that begins around 1902 and reaches a terminal point around 1924, and the composer, who is adroit to a degree, has persuaded one that it is novel.

High Premium

Still, perhaps, we put too high a premium on novelty nowadays. Is it so surprising that Florent Schmitt, who died in 1958 and wrote this symphony the year previous, at the age of 87, should hark to the heyday of his creative vigor? Certainly, the Symphony No. 2 represents an astounding feat that out-Verdi's Verdi and makes the octogenarian plays of Bernard Shaw seem spotted by senescence. There is no betrayal of waning powers here; the composer's vitality and awareness of what is going on around him is unimpaired; but he continues writing in a style native to his art, the post-impressionism part of the fabric of his character.

Remarkable as it is as a swan song, I'm afraid the Symphony No. 2 has chances of survival well below the works for which Florent Schmitt will be remembered: Psalm 47, the Piano Quintet and "The Tragedy of Salome"—all issued since 1908. These, with compound meters and harmonies daring for their period, attain a rare eloquence

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the sixth concert of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Leonid Kogan, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80	Faure
Symphony No. 2, Op. 137	Schmitt
Violin Concerto in D maior, Op. 61	Beethoven

the artist was seldom afterward to recapture. The trouble with the Symphony No. 2 is that it projects not the individual voice of a man, but the voice of an era. Rugged and bluff enough to declare Schmitt's idiosyncratic interest in large forms, the air of stylistic pastiche is unmistakable.

No. 2 may not have an individual voice, nevertheless it is pitched in an ingratiating and lively tone. The three sections are marked Vigorously, Not Too Slow and Animated, a fast-slow-fast, pattern, and two of especial interest for their rhythmic fluency and treatment of solo instruments against the mass. The harp arpeggios, shimmering brass and strings establish a typically evanescent Gallic texture, though the use of percussion is more declamatory than one usually finds in the Impressionists. This penultimate score by the master remains eclectic and old-fashioned, yet not lacking the dignity and charm of a craftsmanship so refined as to have grown ingrained.

Leonid Kogan, the Soviet virtuoso, appeared in the Beethoven Violin Concerto — the performance, incidentally, was broadcast live from the Hall by Soviet Radio to Russia—and proceeded to give a satisfactory account leaving no question he is a splendid exponent of his instrument. He is a player of a decidedly cerebral cast, so I missed in his interpretation those songful aspects offered by, say, David Oistrakh, on records. The tone of Mr. Kogan is a trifle dry and without a striking amount of body, although his intonation and fingering represent a formidable attainment.

Hence his Beethoven emerged as an intense, vigorous and functional statement, extremely contemporary in outline, but a shade too detached for one who prefers more lushness. The elaborate cadenzas chosen, the fleetness of the bowing technic and firmness of stops proved that Mr. Kogan need defer to no one as a performer. He doesn't have to as an interpreter either, for his lean, hard-driving approach is legitimate enough. My preference lies toward the warmly lyrical.

Dr. Munch showed beguiling tact and sympathy, as he generally does with a soloist, and invested Faure's "Pelleas" suite with the same gentle glow. The score is fragile, sweet and melodic, and yesterday received a cursive and graceful reading indeed.

Next week Jeanne Reding and Henry Pigtte, duo-pianists, will be the soloists in Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos; Charles Munch has also scheduled Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variation, Op. 36.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Bost...

Schmitt Premiere

If you do not follow the currents of contemporary music in Europe it may come as a surprise to learn that Florent Schmitt, three years ago wrote what he called his Second Symphony. He lived another year, and on June 15, 1958, about two months before he died at the age of nearly 88, Schmitt heard the first performance of his work, conducted by Charles Munch at an International Society for Contemporary Music concert in Strasbourg.

On Nov. [illegible] last, Mr. Munch gave the first two American performances of Schmitt's Second Symphony at concerts of the Boston Symphony. It stood midway in a program that began with four movements from Fauré's music to "Pelléas et Mélisande", and concluded with Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with the USSR's Leonid Kogan as soloist.

People are bound to compare Schmitt and his large, intricate, and vigorous Second Symphony with Verdi and his "Falstaff", which the old master completed at age 72. The [illegible] music on such large [illegible] age always seems extraordinary. Whether Schmitt's work will assume as important a place in symphonic literature as "Falstaff" in opera, someone with longer vision than mine will have to foretell. But at the moment it is possible to give lively first impressions.

Schmitt, in the forefront of major French musicians from the turn of the century, obviously never got into the stubborn woods of academic dodecaphony and such. The idiomatic sources of the Second Symphony are mixed, going back to the early 1900s or at least the decade before World War I. There are colors and warm currents from the Impressionists, perhaps a little similarity to Roussel. Yet there is another force here, something freer and more objective in the play of instrumental polyphony and the consistent forward motion of rhythm which has its own complexities. It is a big work requiring a big orchestra, and it sounds amazingly youthful.

Kogan, whose performance of the

(Continued on page 154)

NATIONAL REPORT

(Continued from page 149)

Beethoven Concerto was pure lyricism and refinement, four days later gave his first local solo concert at Symphony Hall in the Boston University Celebrity Series. Though, unaccountably, the hall was not filled, the audience applauded, stamped, and cheered him, as well they should. The profound musicianship of this Russian artist was exemplified in a long and exacting program which, among other things, displayed a wide interpretive range. First, Brahms' G minor Sonata, next the Bach Sonata in C major, No. 3, for unaccompanied violin, Prokofieff's Second Sonata, Bloch's Improvisations and—a rarity these days —Wieniawski's Original Theme and Variations. Kogan enjoyed the assistance of a superb accompanist in Andrei Mitnick.

Richard Burgin, making his first appearance of the season as conductor at the Symphony concerts, accomplished a notable revival of Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" on Nov. 4 and 5. The chorus was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, and the baritone soloist, Donald Gramm. Mr. Burgin also presented on these occasions Beethoven's First Symphony and the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin". I never expected to hear William Walton put Bela Bartok in the shadow, but that is what happened here, thanks to a powerful reading of a work whose freshness and strength are undiminished.

Monique Haas, the admirable French pianist, was acclaimed in her Boston debut as soloist at the Symphony concerts of Nov. 11 and 12. She played two works — Mozart's Concerto in D minor (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. Bach's D major Suite, No. 4, and Milhaud's gay, bubbly "Suite Provençale", long unheard here, were the other numbers.

Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter has arrived and conquered, as he has done elsewhere in the United States this autumn. He first appeared as soloist in the Beethoven C major and Brahms B flat Concertos at a Boston Symphony pension fund concert, Nov. 1, under Mr. Munch. Symphony Hall went wild.

We have something new in Boston: the New Arts Orchestra assembled by Harold Farberman, the young musician who is pursuing two careers simultaneously: that of percussionist with the Boston Symphony, and as conductor and composer of works which extend the field of percussion instruments. At the first concert, in the Little Opera House, Nov. 9, the feature piece was Farberman's Concerto for Tympani, with his Boston Symphony colleague, Everett Firth, as soloist. The piece asks prodigies of the solo drummer, which Mr. Firth tossed off brilliantly. It even succeeds in eliciting a few melodic fragments from the kettledrums.

Some difficulty attended the debut of this band of young professional musicians. Olga Firth (Mrs. Everett Firth), slated to make her debut as cello soloist in the Haydn Concerto, became ill. With but two rehearsals to go, Mr. Farberman proceeded to work up a sequence of concerto movements to preserve the character of "A Concerto Evening". These presented four of the New Arts Orchestra's first-desk players: Richard Summers, oboe; Elinor Preble, flute; Ralph Pottle, horn; and Felix Viscuglia, clarinet. The program also contained the F minor Concertino, No. 4, rightly or wrongly attributed to Pergolesi, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The Cambridge Society for Early Music has given another three-program series in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. The first, by the London Intimate Opera Company, brought Dr. Arne's "Thomas and Sally", and the factitious "Don Quixote" to Purcell music; the second concert was devoted to harpsichord music performed by the Society's musical director, Fernando Valenti; and the third was presented by the Suzanne Bloch Players and Singers.

The Boston Opera Group began a new season at Donnelly Memorial Theatre, Nov. 16 (and repeated it Nov. 18), with Verdi's "La Traviata". Sarah Caldwell staged the production but did not conduct it; Osbourne McConathy, hornist of the Boston Symphony, presided over an orchestra of his colleagues. The singers were good: Eva Likova as Violetta; John Alexander as Alfredo; and Igor Gorin as the elder Germont.

Other recent musical activity has included a visit of the Israel Philharmonic conducted by Josef Krips (Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for strings, and the "Great" C major Symphony of Schumann); the lutenist and guitarist Julian Bream; the New England Conservatory chorus, guest-conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth in a remarkable evening of choral works from Tallis to Karl Kohn and Randall Thompson; the opening of the Boston Morning Musicales by soprano Pierette Alarie and tenor Leopold Simoneau (two singers born to sing duets together!), tenor Jan Peerce, and pianist Jan Smeterlin.

—Cyrus W. Durgin

Première américaine, à Boston, de la IIème Symphonie de Florent Schmitt

FLORENT SCHMITT, né à Blâmont, en Lorraine, en 1870, est mort à Neuilly, le 17 août 1958, deux mois après que Charles Münch, eut révélé au monde, au Festival de Strasbourg, sa seconde Symphonie, la première étant sa Symphonie concertante, terminée en 1932, sans parler de nombreuses autres œuvres comme la Tragédie de Salomé, les Musiques de Plein Air, etc., traitant de sujets classiques, romantiques et exotiques avec le même bonheur.

C'est dire qu'il avait 88 ans lorsque cette symphonie vit le jour (elle fut commencée environ deux ans plus tôt) et on est d'autant plus surpris — agréablement — de la "jeunesse" de cette œuvre (pour citer l'appréciation de Marc Pincherle), de son indépendance de toute école, de sa verve et de la vitalité qui la caractérisent.

Certes, nous en connaissons à qui déplairont les passages syncopés, rythmés, très "jazz", quelques dissonances même, qui pourraient faire classer cette œuvre dans les "modernes", mais il est incontestable que même les puristes ne pourraient trouver à y redire d'un point de vue strictement musical, même si l'orchestre est augmenté d'un vibraphone et d'un xylophone.

Quelle richesse de couleur! Quelle palette prodigieuse! On est pris dès la première note comme dans un tourbillon dont on a tout juste le temps de se remettre pendant le passage "lent" — une méditation émouvante — auquel fait suite une nouvelle explosion de joie, d'exubérance.

Il va de soi que Münch et ses virtuoses en ont donné une interprétation hors de pair, électrisante, saluée par de bruyants bravos.

Le concert avait commencé par le Pelléas et Mélisande de Gabriel Fauré, tragique, mélodieux, prenant, et s'est terminé par le Concerto de Beethoven pour violon, interprété magistralement par Leonid Kogan.

Soirée mémorable, en vérité, dont une grande partie du monde aura profité. Le concert était, en effet, retransmis directement de Symphony Hall, dans l'Union soviétique, la Grande-Bretagne, la France et d'autres pays d'Europe, relayé par la BBC pour la RTF et l'URSS. C'est, croyons-nous, la première fois qu'une telle radiodiffusion est faite.

A l'issue du concert de vendredi, au cours d'une cérémonie intime, le Maître Charles Münch a reçu des mains du Dr Stanley Nowak, président de la Paderewski Memorial Society, un médaillon à l'effigie du grand musicien et chef d'Etat, frappé par le sculpteur bostonien Joseph Coletti. L'avers du médaillon représente l'Aigle polonais de la Médaille de l'Ordre Polonia Restituta.

M. Münch est président honoraire du Comité du Centenaire de Paderewski pour le Massachusetts.

Pierre DARGENS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
NOV 19 1960

A U. S. Premiere

Scenic Railway Of a Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The opus 137 of the French composer, Florent Schmitt, which received a United States premiere under the baton of Charles Munch yesterday, is a veritable scenic railway of a symphony. The ride is comfortable, the appointments fastidious, and the view from the window familiar.

It is the landscape of fin-de-siecle French music. The tracks of M. Schmitt's structure are grounded on soil broken by Debussy and terraced by Ravel. Here is a patch cultivated by Chausson, there a rustic farm dwelling inhabited by a certain Roussel. An occasional dissonant jolt signifies that neighbor Satie, a great practical joker, has crossed the wires on the switches again.

Nevertheless the trip proves light, brisk and refreshing. Some of the passengers expected to travel into the Ultima Thule of contemporary expression. The surface aspects are percussive enough to be modern. But no; we have covered a territory that begins around 1902 and reaches a terminal point around 1924, and the composer, who is adroit to a degree, has persuaded one that it is novel.

High Premium

Still, perhaps, we put too high a premium on novelty nowadays. Is it so surprising that Florent Schmitt, who died in 1958 and wrote this symphony the year previous, at the age of 87, should hark to the heyday of his creative vigor? Certainly, the Symphony No. 2 represents an astounding feat that out-Verdis Verdi and makes the octogenarian plays of Bernard Shaw seem spotted by senescence. There is no betrayal of waning powers here; the composer's vitality and awareness of what is going on around him is unimpaired; but he continues writing in a style native to his art, the post-impressionism part of the fabric of his character.

Remarkable as it is as a swan song, I'm afraid the Symphony No. 2 has chances of survival well below the works for which Florent Schmitt will be remembered: Psalm 47, the Piano Quintet and "The Tragedy of Salome"—all issued since 1908. These, with compound meters and harmonies daring for their period, attain a rare eloquence

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the sixth concert of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Leonid Kogan, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80 — Faure
Symphony No. 2, Op. 137 — Schmitt
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 — Beethoven

the artist was seldom afterward to recapture. The trouble with the Symphony No. 2 is that it projects not the individual voice of a man, but the voice of an era. Rugged and bluff enough to declare Schmitt's idiosyncratic interest in large forms, the air of stylistic pastiche is unmistakable.

No. 2 may not have the individual voice, nevertheless it is pitched in an ingratiating and lively tone. The three sections are marked Vigorously, Not Too Slow and Animated, a fast-slow-fast, pattern of especial interest for the rhythmic fluency and treatment of solo instruments against the mass. The harp arpeggios, shimmering brass and strings establish a typical impressionist Gallic texture, but the use of percussion is more declamatory than one usually finds in the Impressionists. This penultimate score by the master remains eclectic and old-fashioned, yet not lacking the dignity and charm of craftsmanship so refined as to have grown ingrained.

Leonid Kogan, the Soviet virtuoso, appeared in the Beethoven Violin Concerto — the performance, incidentally, was broadcast live from the Hall by Soviet Radio to Russia—and proceeded to give a satisfactory account leaving no question he is a splendid exponent of his instrument. He is a player of a decidedly cerebral cast, so I missed in his interpretation those sensual aspects offered by, say, David Oistrakh, on records. The tone of Mr. Kogan is a trifle dry and without striking amount of body, although his intonation and fingering represent a formidable attainment.

Hence his Beethoven emerged as an intense, vigorous and functional statement, extremely contemporary in outline, but a trifle too detached for one who prefers more lushness. The elaborate cadenzas chosen, the fleetness of the bowing technic and firmness of stops proved that Mr. Kogan need defer to no one as a performer. He doesn't have to as an interpreter either, for his lean, hard-driving approach is legitimate enough. My preference lies, however, for warmly lyrical.

Dr. Munch showed beguiling tact and sympathy, as he generally does with a soloist, and invested Faure's "Pelleas" suite with the same genial glow. The score is flexible, sweet and melodic, and yesterday received a cursive and graceful reading indeed.

Next week Jaime Zeding and Henry Pierre, duo-pianists, will be the soloists in Martinu's Concerto for Two Pianos; Charles Munch has also scheduled Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, and Elgar's "Enigma" Variation, Op. 36.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Bost...

...hmitt Premiere

If you ... currents of contemporary ... ope it may come as a surprise ... Florent Schmitt ... hat he called ... lived another ... 1958, about ... at the age ... he first performance of his ... ted by Charles ... International Society for ... music concert in Strasb...

On No... Mr. Munch gave the ... American performances ... Second Symphony at ... of the Boston Symphony. It ... midway in a program that began ... four movements from Faure's music to "Pelleas et Melisande", and concluded ... Violin Concerto, with the USSR's Leonid Kogan as soloist.

People are ... to ... Schmitt and his large ... rigorous Second Symphony ... and his "Fa...", which ... master composition ... music on ... ways seem ... Schmitt's work ... place in ... f" in opera ... than music ... But at the ... y first in...

... in the ... ment of major ... musicians from the turn of the ... into the ... dodecaphonic ... The idiomatic sources of the Second Symphony are mixed, going back to the early 1900s or a little ... are colors and warm currents from the Impressionists, perhaps a little ... to Roussel. Yet there is an ... force ... something fresh and ... objective in the play of instrumental polyphony and the consistent forward motion of rhythm which has its own complexities. It is a big work requiring a big orchestra, and it sounds amazingly youthful.

Kogan, whose performance of the

(Continued from page 154)

NATIONAL REPORT

(Continued from page 149)

Beethoven Concerto was pure lyricism and refinement. Four days later gave his ... at Symphony Hall ... University Celebrity Series ... notably, the hall was not filled, the audience applauded, stamped, and cheered him, as well they should. The profound musicianship of this Russian artist was exemplified in a long and ... program which, among other things, displayed ... interpretive ... first, Brahms' ... minor ... the Bach sonata in C ... No. 3, for unaccompanied violin, ... Second Sonata, Bloch's Improvisations and—a rarity these days — Wieniawski's Original Theme and Variations. Kogan ... the assistance of ... pianist Andrei ... Vatnick.

Richard Burgin, making his first appearance of the season as conductor at the Symphony concerts, accomplished a notable revival of Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" on Nov. 4 and 5. The chorus was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, and the baritone soloist, Donald Gramm. Mr. Burgin also presented on these occasions Beethoven's First Symphony and the Suite from Bartok's "The Miraculous Mandarin". It never expected ... William Walton put Bela Bartok in the shadow, but that is what happened, thanks to a powerful reading of a work whose freshness and strength are undiminished.

Monique Haas, the admirable French pianist, ... acclaimed in her Boston ... debut as soloist at the Symphony concerts of Nov. 11 and 12. She played two works — Mozart's Concerto in D minor (K. 466) and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. Bach's D major Suite, No. 4, and Milhaud's gay, bubbly "Suite Provençale", long unheard here, were the other numbers.

Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter has arrived and conquered, as he has done elsewhere in the United States this autumn. He first appeared as soloist in the Beethoven ... major and Brahms B flat Concertos at Boston Symphony pension fund concerts Nov. 1, under Mr. Munch. Symphony Hall went wild.

We have something new in Boston: the New Arts Orchestra assembled by Harold Farberman, the young musician who is pursuing two careers simultaneously: that of percussionist with the Boston Symphony, and as conductor and composer of works which extend the field of percussion instruments. At the first concert, at the Little Opera House, Nov. 9, the feature piece was Farberman's Concerto for Tympani, with his Boston Symphony colleague, Everett Firth, as soloist. The piece asks prodigies of the solo drummer, which Mr. Firth tossed off brilliantly. It even succeeds in eliciting a few melodic fragments from the kettledrums.

Some difficulty attended the debut of this band of young professional musicians. Olga ... Firth, ... Everett Firth, slated to make her debut as cello soloist in the Haydn Concerto, became ill. With but two rehearsals to go, Mr. Farberman proceeded to work up a sequence of concerto movements to preserve the character of "A Concerto Evening". These presented four of the New Arts Orchestra's first-desk players: Richard ... oboe; Elinor Preble, flute; Ralph Pottle, horn; and Felix Viscuglia, clarinet. The program also contained the ... minor Concertino, Op. 4, rightly or wrongly attributed to Pergolesi, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The Cambridge Society for Early Music has given another three-program ... in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. ... by the London Intimate Opera Company, brought Dr. Arne's "Thomas and Sally", and the factitious "Don Quixote" to Purcell music; the second concert was devoted to harpsichord music performed by the Society's musical director, Fernando Valenti; and the third was presented by the Suzanne Bloch Players and Singers.

The Boston Opera Group began a new season at ... Dunbelly Memorial Theatre, Nov. 10 (and repeated on Nov. 18) with Verdi's "La Traviata". Sarah Caldwell ... the production but did not conduct it. Osbourne McConathy, hornist of the Boston Symphony, presided over an orchestra of ... colleagues. The singers were good: Eva ... as Violetta; John Alexander as ... Giorgio Germont, the elder Germont; ... is artistic.

Other recent musical activity has included a visit of the Israel Philharmonic ... conducted by Josef Krips (Beethoven's ... Overture No. 3, Honegger's ... for strings, and the ... Symphony of Schubert); ... and guitarist Julian Bream; the New England Conservatory chorus, guest-conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth in a remarkable evening of choral works by ... Tallis to Karl Kohn and Randall Thompson; the opening of the Boston Morning Musicales by soprano Pierette Alarie and tenor Leopold Simoneau (two singers born to sing duets together), tenor Jan Peerce, and pianist Jan Smeterlin.

—Cyrus W. Durgin

Première ... à Boston, de la IIème Sym... Florent Schmitt

FLORENT ... à Ba... mai, ... en 1870, est mort à Neu... le 17 août 1958, deux mois après que Charles Munch eut révélé au monde, au Festival de Strasbourg, sa seconde Symphonie, la première étant sa Symphonie concertante, terminée en 1902, sans parler de nombreuses autres œuvres comme la Tragédie de Salomé, les Musiques de plein air, etc., traitant de sujets classiques, romantiques et exotiques avec ... bonheur.

... avait 83 ans lorsque ... phonie vit le jour ... commencée environ deux ans ... et on est d'autant plus ... agréablement — de ... de cette œuvre (... de Marc Pin... dance de toute ... et de la vitalité qui ... ent.

Certes, ... connaissons à qui déplaisent les passages syncopés, rythmes ... "jazz", quelques dissonances ..., qui pourraient faire classer cette œuvre dans les "modernes", mais il est incontestable que même les puristes ne pourraient trouver à y redire d'un point de vue strictement musical, même si l'orchestre est augmenté d'un vibraphone et d'un xylophone.

Quelle richesse de couleur! Quelle palette prodigieuse! On est pris dès la première note comme dans un tourbillon dont on a tout juste le temps de se remettre pendant le passage "lent" — une méditation émouvante — auquel fait suite une nouvelle explosion de joie, d'exubérance.

Il va de soi que Münch et ses virtuoses en ont donné une interprétation hors de pair, électrisante, saluée par de bruyants bravos.

Le concert avait commencé par Pelléas et Mélisande de Gabriel Fauré, tragique, mélodieux, prenant, et s'est terminé par le Concerto de Beethoven pour violon, interprété magistralement par Leonid Kogan.

Soirée mémorable, en vérité, dont une grande partie du monde aura profité. Le concert était, en effet, retransmis directement de Symphony Hall, dans l'Union soviétique, la Grande-Bretagne, la France et d'autres pays d'Europe, relayé par la BBC pour la RTF et l'URSS. C'est, croyons-nous, la première fois qu'une telle radiodiffusion est faite.

A l'issue du concert de vendredi, au cours d'une cérémonie intime, le Maître Charles Münch a reçu ... mains du Dr Stanley Nowak, ... ent de la Polish Music Center Society, la médaille à l'effigie du grand musicien et chef d'état, frappé par le sculpteur bostonien Joseph ... L'avers du médaillon ... de l'Aigle polonais de la ... de l'Ordre Polonia Restituta.

M. Münch est président honoraire du Comité du Centenaire de Paderewski pour le Massachusetts.

Pierre DARGENS

BLANK PAGE

Boston Symphony Due Tuesday

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will open its Providence season Tuesday evening at 8:15 pm. at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct.

One of the orchestra's younger violinists was recently winner of the Naumberg International String Competition. Joseph Silverstein, 28, won first prize in the competition with 23 other violinists. The prize was a check for $25,000, a two-year managerial contract for tours of this country and Europe and a recording contract.

The program:

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80 .....Faure
- Prelude: Quasi adagio
- "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
- Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
- "The Death of Melisande"; Molto adagio

Symphony No. 7 .....Schuman
- Largo assai
- Vigoroso
- Cantabile Intensamente
- Scherzando brioso

Symphony No. 7 in a A Major, Op. 92 .....Beethoven
- Poco sostenuto; Vivace
- Allegretto
- Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
- Allegro con brio

Joseph Silverstein, prize-winning violinist, will be here with Boston Symphony.

servatory of Music, will accompany Miss Kailer

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 3,600

NOV 17 1960

Symphony Here Tuesday Night

An interesting contrast in music will be presented Tuesday night at 8:15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it opens its new season in Providence.

Performing in Veterans Auditorium the orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch will open with Faure's Pelleas' and Melisande, the new Seventh Symphony by William Schuman, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

NOV 23 196

MUSIC LAST NIGHT

Boston Symphony Opens Its Concert Series Here

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its series of Providence concerts last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Charles Munch conducted the interesting program which featured William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, a contemporary work of importance.

Faure's Suite, "Pelleas et Melisande" opened the program and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 was the final offering. Conductor and orchestra were given an ovation at the close of the program.

The Schuman work is a challenging fabrication of sound. In one hearing, the listener is left with a sense of profound admiration for the composer's skill at combining his material and a sense of uncertainty as to what the music was meant to convey. And this is what makes it an important work. It is safe to say that such music would mean something different to each listener.

For me it resembled a huge mosaic, put together with vivid colors from the brass and reeds, with stunning rhythmic accents from the busy battery, and the whole composition held together and kept in balance by the wonderfully contrived string scoring.

I recall vividly hearing the Schuman Symphony No. 2, at its first performance in Boston. Blatant brass and angular themes are what come to mind when this is mentioned. The Symphony No. 7 is the voice of the same composer. He has learned his craft and he now speaks with a voice which commands attention.

The Faure was a delicate introduction for this listening adventure and if there is an orchestra which can play a more ethereal pianissimo tone than the Boston Symphony, I've never heard of it. Exquisite grace prevailed throughout this gossamer score. This was once again, a virtuoso demonstration.

The familiar Beethoven Seventh was as welcome as a dear friend, arriving for the holidays. The audience welcomed it with open arms and sat back to revel in its richness. Dr. Munch whipped up a terrific tempo for the finale and the musicians were right with him to the last brilliant chord. Is there anything so serenely plaintive as the slow movement of this work? The orchestra was especially eloquent here. It was this persistent theme which stayed in my mind after this program. Twenty years from now, perhaps the audience will be humming Schuman themes as they leave a concert. Who knows?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189

NOV 20 1960

SHOWTHROUGH

60

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY–SIXTY-ONE

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 25, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

MARTINU . . . . . Concerto for Two Pianos

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

INTERMISSION

ELGAR . . . . . Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36

Enigma: Andante

Variations:

I.	"C.A.E." L'istesso tempo	VIII.	"W.N." Allegretto
II.	"H.D.S.-P." Allegro	IX.	"Nimrod" Moderato
III.	"R.B.T." Allegretto	X.	"Dorabella–Intermezzo" Allegretto
IV.	"W.M.B." Allegro di molto	XI.	"G.R.S." Allegro di molto
V.	"R.P.A." Moderato	XII.	"B.G.N." Andante
VI.	"Ysobel" Andantino	XIII.	"–Romanza" Moderato
VII.	"Troyte" Presto	XIV.	"E.D.U.–Finale"

SOLOISTS

JANINE READING and HENRY PIETTE

The soloists use the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[393]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
NOV 23 1960

Les Frères Haine

Janine Reding and Henry Piette will perform the Martinů Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
NOV 26 1960

THE SYMPHONY

Duo Pianists Feature Agreeable Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"What fun," exclaimed a woman in my vicinity as soon as the husband-and-wife team of Belgian duo-pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, had completed a stylish account of Bohuslav Martinu's brilliant Concerto for Two Pianos at Symphony yesterday, "what fun they must have playing together!"

That was how we felt about it, too, on this most agreeable program of the season thus far, bringing together Schumann's remarkable symphony with the Martinu and the best of Elgar. Noteworthy duo-piano literature is at a premium; the scores Mozart wrote for his pupil, Josephine Aurnhammer, the Bach for multiple harpsichords, the Poulenc Concerto—The list springing immediately to mind is not lengthly. Martinu's virtuoso piece, which was heard during the war years last, (October, 1944) must have come as a delightful surprise to the majority of Symphony-goers.

Clarity, Pith

Mr. and Mrs. Piette, she a tall brunette wearing a lilac-colored gown, he an impeccably-tailored, ramrod-straight man with an air of courtly elegance, gave the work a glittering panache and rapport worthy of a Luboschutz and Nemenoff, to whom, indeed, the concerto is dedicated. It is not a profound statement nor is it intended to be. Rather, the music exhibits the qualities of cultivated French conversation (Martinu's Czech background said to be present, the unobtrusive): clarity, pith, sophistication and dazzle.

In fact, the work is big, providing many opportunities for bravura display; yet such is the adroitness of the orchestration, the doubling, woven splice, and subtle equality of the piano voices, that a variety of timbre and movement launches the concerto on its way lightly. The first of the three movements reveals brittle staccato swiftness, and the dialogue is studded by terse, complex, contrapuntal figures; the second allows the soloists to state charming solo badinage of an amiable character; while the third, employing a striking bassoon duet among the tutti, creates rhythmic tension, withdrawing before a graceful pianistic exchange and then surging into a stirring and festive conclusion.

Solid Approach

Undoubtedly two-piano pieces offer more possibilities to the [illegible] one keyboard a [illegible] however, a prejudice [illegible]

Symphony Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the seventh program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Janine Reding and Henry Piette, duo-pianists. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120 . . . . . Schumann
Concerto for Two Pianos . . . . . Martinu
Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36 . . . . . Elgar

Too often they strike me as a musical pair of tennis players caroming trick shots at each other to show off their backhand, and quite insensible of the art of the game itself. Such is not the case with the Piettes.

They exhibit the clipped qualities of precision and marksmanship so germane to their unison field; but the team acts as one rare alert sensibility. In the first movement where the line lies close to the orchestra, their touch and phrasing proved crystalline. At each dynamic level and at varying speeds they exhibited persuasion. They play from the wrists, near the keyboard, and project color, warmth and musical imagination as well as accuracy. The playing and the score, both sparkling, inspired the Friday audience to cast off reserve, and Dr. Munch's handling of the orchestra showed innate sympathy, devoted appreciation.

He also offered a rock-solid approach to the beguiling Elgar "Enigma" Variations. Would this seem so "English" one wonders without the program? If we didn't know that No. 11, say, referred to Dan, a bulldog belonging to a friend of the composer, barking at the river Wye and at last "engaged in a little rating at the water's edge," would we recognize the land of origin? Coming after gallantry of the Martinu, however, it seemed nevertheless, the music had a bluff rustic eloquence indigenous to a nation of oratorio, straightforward simplicity and hearty humor. (The "Enigma" of the title, is, after all, a private spoof.)

At any rate, it was set forth with exceeding nobility and conviction by the conductor, the broad [illegible] utterance (No. 2), tripping lightness reminiscent of Sullivan's "The Tempest" (No. 10), melodic 'cello soliloquy (No. 11), forming a captivating [illegible] portrait gallery.

[illegible] Fourth — accelerated [illegible] put aside [illegible] marred for me by the [illegible] of Dr. Munch to pave the way for the mounting exhilaration of the finale by slowing down. We were borne headlong into the passionate ultimate episode. This was a pity, for the earlier parts had been shaped attractively, the thematic material, so closely and admirably integrated, underlined suavely. Only the ending, too loud and fast, scuffed the otherwise polished goodies.

Next week, the Orchestra goes on tour. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor Dec. 9-10. He has scheduled Giuriniati's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2, Strauss' Also sprach Zarathustra, and Brahms's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
NOV 22 1960

Belgian Pianists Debut Fri. With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (November 25, 2:15) and Saturday (November 26, 8:30). Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar will be heard at these concerts.

The Orchestra will be absent from Boston next week. During the week Doctor Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the Orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York concerts.

The third concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on December 6th. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of December 9 and 10, these concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday, December 8.

The complete programs:

Friday, Nov. 25, 2:15; Saturday. Nov. 26, 8:30, Symphony Hall, Munch: Schumann, Symphony No. 4 in D minor Op. 120. Martinu, Concerto for Two Pianos (Janine Reding and Henry Piette, first performance with Boston Symphony) Elgar, Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36.

Herald 11/20/60

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony at the orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday. Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar will be heard.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when Doctor Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York concerts.

The third concert of the Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of December 9 and 10. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Dec. 8.

TODAY

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, pianist Symphony Hall, 2:30 p.m. Presented by Aaron Richmond on B.U. Celebrity Series. Schumann Fantasy [illegible]

SHOWTHROUGH

60

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 25, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. [illegible]; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

MARTINU . . . . . Concerto for Two Pianos

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

INTERMISSION

ELGAR . . . . . Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36

Enigma: Andante

Variations:

I. "C.A.E." L'istesso tempo
II. "H.D.S.-P." Allegro
III. "R.B.T." Allegretto
IV. "W.M.B." Allegro di molto
V. "R.B.A." Moderato
VI. "Yaher" Andantino
VII. "Troyte" Presto
VIII. "W.N." Allegretto
IX. "Nimrod" Moderato
X. "Dorabella–Intermezzo" Allegretto
XI. "G.R.S." Allegro di molto
XII. "B.G.N." Andante
XIII. "–Romanza" Moderato
XIV. "E.D.U.–Finale"

SOLOISTS

JANINE READING and HENRY PIETTE

The soloists use the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[395]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

NOV 26 1960

THE SYMPHONY

Duo Pianists Feature Agreeable Program

By ROBERT [illegible]

"What fun," exclaimed a [illegible] in my vicinity as soon as the husband-and-wife team of Belgian duo-pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, had completed a stylish account of Bohuslav Martinu's brilliant Concerto for Two Pianos at Symphony yesterday, "what fun they must have playing together!"

That was how we felt about it, too, on this most agreeable program of the season thus far, bringing together Schumann's remarkable symphony with the Martinu and the best of Elgar. Noteworthy duo-piano literature is at a premium; the scores Mozart wrote for his pupil, Josephine Aurnhammer, the Bach for multiple harpsichords, the Poulenc Concerto—The list springing immediately to mind is not lengthy. Martinu's virtuoso piece, which was heard during the war years last, (October, 1944) must have come as a delightful surprise to the majority of Symphony-goers.

Clarity, Pith

Mr. and Mrs. Piette, she a tall brunette wearing a lilac-colored gown, he an impeccably-tailored, ramrod-straight man with an air of courtly elegance, gave the work a glittering panache and rapport worthy of a Luboschutz and Nemenoff, to whom, indeed, the concerto is dedicated. It is not a profound statement that it is intended to be. Rather, the music exhibits the qualities of cultivated French [illegible] (Martinu's Czech background said to be present, we unobtrusive): clarity, pith, sophistication and delude.

In fact, the work is big, providing many opportunities for bravura display; yet such is the adroitness of the orchestration, the doubling, woven splice, and subtle equality of the piano voices, that a variety of timbre and movement launches the concerto on its way lightly. The first of the three movements reveals brittle staccato, swift-flying, and the dialogue is studded by terse, complex contrapuntal figures; the second allows the soloists to state charming solo badinage of an amiable character; while the third, employing a striking bassoon duet among the tutti, creates rhythmic tension, withdrawing before a graceful pianistic [illegible] and then surging into a diatribe and festive conclusion.

Solid Approach

[illegible] two-piano pieces, possibilities the duo one keyboard. [illegible] a prelude [illegible] a rollicking [illegible] and put aside [illegible] for the by the [illegible] of Dr. Munch to pave the way for the mounting exhilaration of the finale by slowing down. We were borne, headlong into the passionate ultimate episode. This was a pity, for the earlier parts had been shaped attractively, the thematic material, so closely and admirably integrated, underlined suavely. Only the ending, too loud and fast, [illegible] the others be polished.

Next week [illegible] on tour. [illegible] will be guest conductor [illegible]. He has scheduled [illegible] Concerto Grosso [illegible] minor, Op. 3, No. 1, [illegible] Also sprach Zarathustra, and Brahms's Symphony No. [illegible] D major, Op. 73.

Symphony Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented its 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Janine Reding and Henry Piette, duo-pianists. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 4 in D minor, Op. 120 . . . . . Schumann
Concerto for Two Pianos . . . . . Martinu
Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36 . . . . . Elgar

Too often they strike me as a musical pair of tennis players caroming trick shots at each other to show off their backhand, and quite insensible of the art of the game itself. Such is not the case with the Piettes.

They exhibit the clipped qualities of precision and marksmanship so germane to their unison field; but the team acts as one rare alert sensibility. In the first movement where the line lies close to the orchestra, their touch and phrasing proved crystalline. At each dynamic level and at varying speeds they exhibited persuasion. They play from the wrists, near the keyboard, and project color, warmth and musical imagination as well as accuracy. The playing and the score, both sparkling, inspired the Friday audience to cast off reserve, and Dr. Munch's handling of the orchestra showed innate sympathy, devoted appreciation.

He also offered a rock-solid approach to the beguiling Elgar "Enigma" Variations. Would this seem so "English" one wonders without the program? If we didn't know that No. 11, say, referred to Dan, a bulldog belonging to a friend of the composer, barking at the river Wye and at last, "engaged in a little rather [illegible] the water's edge," would we recognize the land of origin? Coming after gallantry of the Martinu, however, it seemed nevertheless, the music had a bluff rustic eloquence indigenous to a nation of orators, straightforward simplicity and hearty humor. (The "Enigma" of the title is, after [illegible] private spoof.)

[illegible] rate, it was set forth [illegible] exceeding nobility and conviction [illegible] the conductor, the broad [illegible] (No. 1) of trip[illegible] reminiscent of Sullivan's "The Tempest" (No. [illegible] melodic [illegible] soliloquy [illegible] captivating [illegible] fourth [illegible] scherzo [illegible] put aside [illegible] for the by the [illegible] of Dr. Munch to pave the way for the mounting exhilaration of the finale by slowing down. We were borne, headlong into the passionate ultimate episode. This was a pity, for the earlier parts had been shaped attractively, the thematic material, so closely and admirably integrated, underlined suavely. Only the ending, too loud and fast, [illegible] the others be polished.

Next week [illegible] on tour. [illegible] will be guest conductor [illegible]. He has scheduled [illegible] Concerto Grosso [illegible] minor, Op. 3, No. 1, [illegible] Also sprach Zarathustra, and Brahms's Symphony No. [illegible] D major, Op. 73.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 136,267

NOV 23 1960

Les Freres Maine

Janine Reding and [illegible] Piette will perform the Martinu Concerto for Two [illegible] the Boston Symphony Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

NOV 22 1960

Belgian Pianists Debut Fri. With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (November 25, 2:15) and Saturday (November 26, 8:30). Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar will be heard at these concerts.

The Orchestra will be absent from Boston next week. During the week Doctor Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the Orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York concerts.

The third concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on December 6th. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of December 9 and 10, these concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday, December 8.

The complete programs:

Friday, Nov. 25, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 26, 8:30, Symphony Hall, Munch: Schumann, Symphony No. 4 in D minor, Op. 120. Martinu, Concerto for Two Pianos (Janine Reding and Henry Piette, first performance with Boston Symphony) Elgar, Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36.

Herald 11/20/60

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony at the orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday. Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar will be heard.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when Doctor Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York concerts.

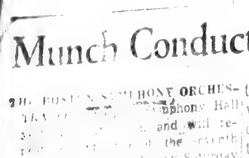
The third concert of the Tuesday [illegible] Series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of December 9 and 10. [illegible] concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Dec. 8.

TODAY

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, pianist. Symphony Hall, 2:30 P.M. Presented by [illegible] on RAI: Celebrity Series. [illegible] Schumann Fantasies; Prel[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
NOV 26 1960

Munch Conducts Martinu Concerto, Elgar 'Enigma'



By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston musical public [illegible] debt of thanks to Charles Munch, yesterday afternoon, when he revived the Concerto for Two Pianos by the late Bohuslav Martinu. This is a remarkable modern work, and too long a time has gone by since last we heard it.

Plenty of composers write acceptable symphonies, but the form of the concerto can boast far fewer examples of really excellent writing nowadays. The Martinu work is one that does, and it is exceptional both for the disposition of keyboard instruments against the orchestra, and for the idiom of the solo writing.

The solo treatment here is largely percussive, but with variety and a songlike character despite the often driving rhythms and the unsentimental nature of the concerto as a whole. In technic it requires the collaboration of paired pianists accustomed to the finest delicacy of ensemble.

Not that the music is elegant or quiet; the reverse is more often true, but it is crisp and precise, and just that element is required of the two soloists.

Janine Reding and Henry Piette (married in private life) are well endowed in this respect. They are Belgian and newcomers to this city.

Each is a pianist of notable vigor, with obviously strong hands and an evident love of strong rhythms. Together they make a prodigious team spinning out the whirl of rapid notes in the first movement with true brilliance; singing but not softening the adagio, and competing with the orchestra on equal terms of strength and speed in the rhythmic finale.

Miss Reding and Mr. Piette were cordially acclaimed by the Friday audience, and so were Dr. Munch and the Orchestra after a performance that did full justice to this work.

Dr. Munch's account of Elgar's fresh and lovely variations was a new aspect of his conducting art. The work, something between German romanticism and British urbanity, might not be thought to appeal especially to this essentially Gallic conductor.

Nonetheless, he did it most beautifully, the Orchestra responding in all the majesty of its power and color. Each variation lacked nothing of individual distinction; they were joined in a long line of sustained interpretive discernment, and unerringly built up to the final imposing climax.

The solo playing in Elgar was a salient feature. Flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, viola and cello especially were masterful and noble, and served to emphasize how fortunate we are that the Boston Symphony includes such great first desk players.

Schumann's D minor Symphony also was an essay in passionate romanticism, and a little different from the way Dr. Munch has conducted it before. He seemed to take the greatest care in bringing out detail within the continuity of the Symphony.

True Glory

There was, too, an improvisatory sense which suggested that, carried away by the pulse and the intensity of the music, Dr. Munch perhaps departed a little from the way he had rehearsed the work, and required the players to follow him closely upon the spur of the moment. If this was so, the Boston Symphony virtuosi again displayed their flexibility of response. In sum, here was a reading of true glory.

Next week the Orchestra will be away on tour. At the next Friday-Saturday concerts, Dec. 9 and 10, Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor, presenting a Geminiani Concerto Grosso in G minor, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
NOV 26 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
NOV 19 1960

Symphony Soloists

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the [illegible] today and Saturday.

Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edware Elgar will be heard at these concerts.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston next week. During the week, Dr. Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York Concerts.

Globe 11/20/60

Martinu Concerto At Symphony

Dr. Charles Munch will revive the Concerto for Two Pianos by the late Bohuslav Martinu at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Soloists will be the Belgian pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette who will then make first appearances with this Orchestra.

The program will include Elgar's "Enigma" Variations and the D minor Symphony of Schumann.

The week following, the Orchestra will make its first tour of the season to New York. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of Dec. 9 and 10, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal Thursday evening, Dec. 8.

The third Symphony Hall Tuesday evening concert will be Dec. 6.

Belgian Duo at Symphony Hall

10-60

Pianists Display Vitality Of Martinů Concerto

By Louis Chapin

Bohuslav Martinů was born in the belfry of a small Czech town, and the swung sound of it rang out again in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, with a splendid performance of the composer's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra.

The two pianos were played with alert vitality by Janine Reding and Henry Piette, and the orchestra, of course, was the Boston Symphony. Meeting with these pianists for the first time, Charles Munch, in his direction, joined skillfully the rich countryside color of the orchestration, including long stretches of piano arpeggios, with the folk-like and often syncopated themes of the first and last movements.

The slow middle movement is more of a deliberate dialogue, with preliminary alternations between soloists and orchestra giving way to simultaneous consideration of the material. Solo passages of exploratory chords, some sharply bitonal, contrast pleasingly with the prevailing roll of the texture, although occasional sequences sound a bit ordinary.

The cooperative workmanship in this performance was impressive, and the result was a joy to hear.

The program was altogether romantic in flavor. Schumann's Fourth Symphony (his second in order of composition) provided a full-blown opening, with themes spilling from movement to movement.

This composer is traditionally suspect in his orchestration and in his handling of large forms, and there are several places in this symphony that call for particularly active attention on the conductor's part. Dr. Munch includes, among his manifold gifts, the skill of knowing at just what point to reawake the musical flow; there were no sleepy sections in yesterday's performance. Actually, Schumann's use of his orchestra seems often quite inspired, as when he puts his lovely slow movement melody, with its oboe crispness, to rest on cushioned string chords.

The program's resonant symmetry was completed with a wonderfully sociable work: Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme, which he labeled "Enigma." The roots of this sociability seem to me to have nourished much of the most successful British music (Britten's "Young Person's Guide" comes quickly to mind); even the solid tradition of "Messiah" performance in England may have gathered strength from the appreciative delight in getting people together musically.

And so a return to Elgar and his guest-list of variations can be one of the friendliest things to happen in a concert-hall, and certainly was yesterday. Although the theme is clearly his own, and he connects its last triumphant word with himself in the coda, its fullest melodic unfoldment is generously bestowed on his close friend August Jaeger, in the ninth variation. This, too, is in the best English tradition.

Elgar's music is expert and his characterizations distinct. But the quality that emerged most fully from yesterday's performance—strongly encouraged by Schumann and Martinů—was that of inclusive affection.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
NOV 20 1960

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony at the orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday. Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

In addition to the concerto, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar will be heard.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston next week when Doctor Munch will conduct concerts in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn plus two concerts in New York's Carnegie Hall which will open the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of New York concerts.

The third concert of the Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of December 9 and 10. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Dec. 8.

TODAY

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, pianist, Symphony Hall, 3:30 p.m. Presented by Aaron Richmond on B.U. Celebrity Series. Program: Schumann Fantasiestucken; Brahms F minor Sonata; Prokofieff Visions Fugitives and March from "Love of Three Oranges;" Chopin, C-sharp minor Waltz and A-flat major Polonaise.

NATIONAL SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, of Washington, D.C., at Lexington Street Junior High School, Waltham, 3:00 p.m. First of four concerts in the Waltham Community Concerts Association. Howard Mitchell conducts Schubert Symphony No. 5; William Schumann, New England Triptich; Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" Symphony.

THEODORE BIKEL, folksinger and actor, Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m. assisted by Ray Bogusiav, guitarist-vocalist. Third event on M. A. Greenhill's Folklore Concert Series.

VERLE LARSON, organist, M.I.T. Chapel, 4:00 p.m. Bach and Joseph Ahrens. Admission free.

EMMANUEL CHURCH CHOIR, (15 Newbury Street) 5:00 p.m. Harvest Cantata, "The Sower," by Harold Darke. Soloists and chorus conducted by Jack Fisher, organist. Admission free.

OLD NORTH SINGERS AND PLAYERS, (193 Salem Street) 4:30 p.m. Bach Cantata, "Sleepers Awake." John Fesperman directing. Admission free.

CHORAL ART SOCIETY of Scituate [illegible] p.m. Will[illegible] by John[illegible] Britten.

TUFTS CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA, [illegible] Cohen Arts Center, Medford, 8:30 p.m.; [illegible] in new opera, "The [illegible]," conducted by Kenneth [illegible], [illegible] assisted by Gordon [illegible].

TOMORROW

TUFTS CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA, [illegible] "Lowe [illegible]," 8:00 p.m.

[illegible] ASSOC., [illegible] works [illegible] p.m. [illegible] by William Hibbs, Alice Jones, Raymond Wilding-White, new songs composed by Conservatory alumni, with Ray Reynolds, baritone. Admission free.

TUESDAY

LEONID KOGAN, Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m. The Russian violinist plays the Brahms G major Sonata; Bach, E major Sonata for Solo Alone; Prokofieff D major Sonata; Bloch Improvisations; and Wieniawski Original Theme and Variations.

DUO DI ROMA, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Ornella Santoliquido, piano, Massimo Amfitheatrof, cello. Sonatas by Beethoven, Shostakovich and Brahms. Admission free but by ticket for the Mason Music Foundation event.

MARTHA SCHLAMME, folk singer, in "Songs of Many Lands." Temple Israel Meeting House, Longwood Avenue and Riverway, 8:30 p.m. Season's first concert of the N. E. Jewish Music Forum.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY, Concert Room, 26 Fenway, 8:30 p.m. Woodwind and brass music by Tocelli, Haydn, Milhaud, Hindemith, Desportes and Schubert. Attilio Polo conducts. Admission free.

FRIDAY

ELWYN ADAMS, violin, assisted by Ruth Kumin, piano, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Program includes Devil's Trill, Tartini; Sonata in F major, Beethoven; Poem, Op. 25, Chausson; Sonata No. 3, Ysaye; Notturno and Tarantelle, Szymanowski.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
NOV 21 1960

Symphony Piano Team

Charles Munch has invited the Belgian pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette to perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the orchestra's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts.

Miss Reding and Mr. Piette have toured extensively in Europe, the Far East and Japan but they have not previously performed with the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Moniter (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
NOV 22 1960

Symphony Program

The Belgian pianists Janine Reding and Henry Piette will perform the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony at the orchestra's concerts Friday, Nov. 25, at 2:15 and Saturday, Nov. 26, at 8:30. Charles Munch also will conduct Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma" Variations by Edward Elgar.

The orchestra will be absent from Boston the week of Nov. 28. The third Tuesday evening concert will be held at Symphony Hall Dec. 6. Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor at the concerts of Dec. 9 and 10, which will be preceded by an open[illegible] Thursday, Dec. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
NOV 25 1960

At Symphony

The Belgian pianists, Janine Reding and Henry Piette, are performing the Martinu Concerto for Two Pianos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra today and tomorrow.

Dr. Charles Munch will also conduct Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the "Enigma Variations" by Edward Elgar.

BLANK PAGE

62

BLANK PAGE

OBSCURED TEXT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460

NOV 27 1960

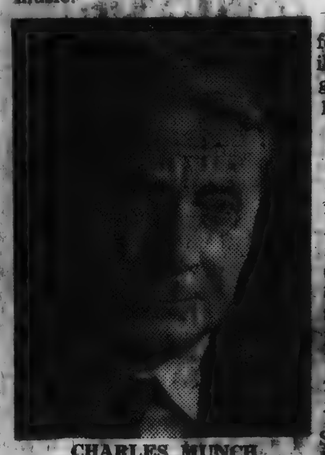
MUSIC

Charles Munch Conducts Boston Symphony Tuesday

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The [illegible] will give the first of its two regularly [illegible] here on Tuesday evening. Charles [illegible] will be on the podium in Woolsey Hall for what is [illegible] called a "tailor-made" program by this great orchestra. [illegible] say that there will be something new as well [illegible] an aspect of the Bostonians' programs which invariably adds novelty and interest for at least the more adventurous among audiences here.

The new work which we are to hear in Tuesday's concert is the Symphony No. 7, by William Schuman, president of the Juilliard School of Music. In fact, the work received its world premiere in Boston just a few weeks ago. It was jointly commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation of the Library of Congress. The latter organization which bears the name of the former conductor of the Boston Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, is dedicated to promoting and carrying on the late conductor's lifetime interest in contemporary music.



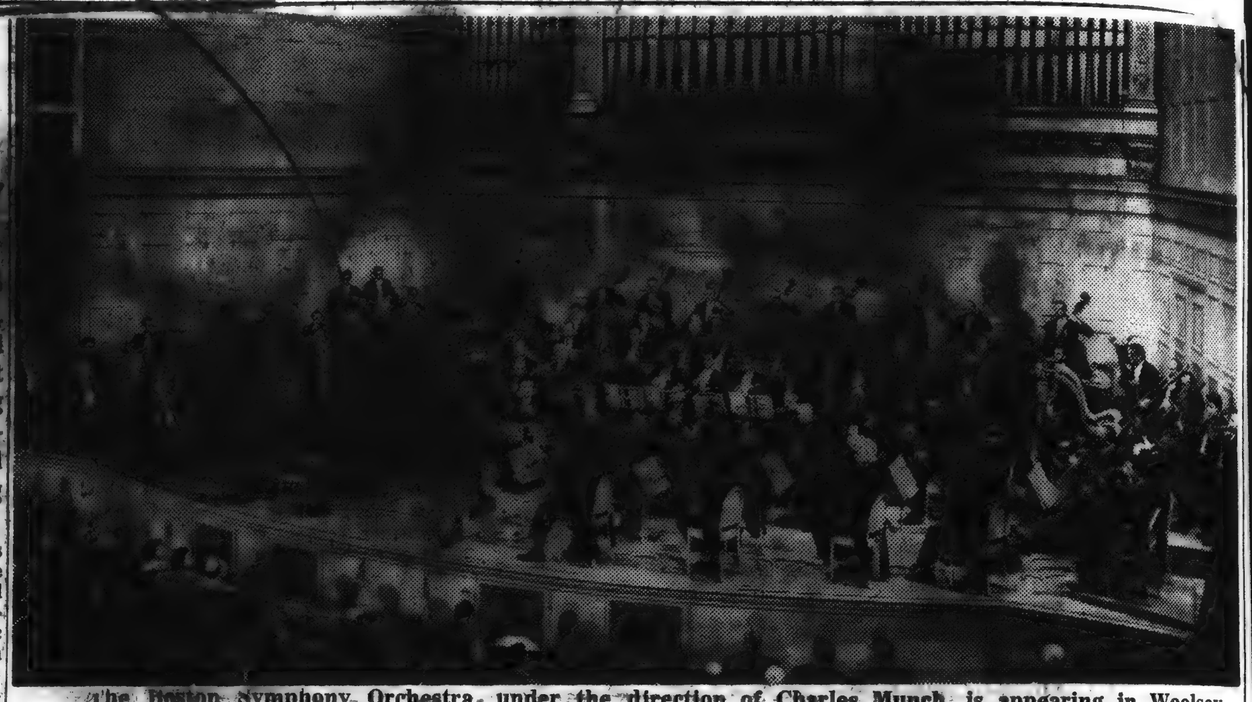
CHARLES MUNCH

Fortunately Dr. Munch has followed in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor with regard to promoting the cause of present day music. The orchestra has maintained its policy of commissioning and performing an appreciable number of works during the Munch tenure, with a notable nod in the direction of American composers. (And in stance) during the present conductor's first 10 years with the orchestra (1949-1950—1958-1959), the following American composers were honored with commissions: Easley Blackwood, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Lukas Foss, Howard Hanson, Walter Piston, Roger Sessions, Samuel Barber, and Alexei Haieff.

Several of these Americans were represented on the list of composers who were awarded commissions five years ago when the Boston Symphony handed out the unprecedented number of 15 commissions in celebration of its 75th anniversary. Thanks to the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which jointly sponsored the awards, it was possible for the orchestra to celebrate that happy occasion in real "contemporary style."

Currently in its 80th season, the Boston Symphony is not only one of the world's great orchestras, but one of its busiest. Along with its concerts both in Boston and on tour, the Berkshire Music Festival summers helps to keep the musicians and conductor on an almost "full-time" yearly schedule. But the orchestra is no different in one respect from the smallest community symphony—it is not self-supporting. However it does manage to earn some 90 per cent of its annual operating budget of approximately $2,000,000, a feat which no other major U. S. symphony can match. And few other orchestras can boast of the fact that its concerts everywhere are sold out long in advance. Just to satisfy the home-town music lovers, the orchestra has even been obliged to admit the public to a number of its rehearsals during the regular season.

Patrons of the Woolsey series are truly fortunate in having the opportunity of hearing this superb ensemble twice each season. In this third event of the series on Tuesday evening, listeners will be among the first to hear the new Schuman work. The program also lists the Suite from Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.



The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, is appearing in Woolsey Hall on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. This group, always a favorite in New Haven, will return for a second concert March 7, 1961.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (m)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 73,760

NOV 30 1960

ON TOUR

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert here Tuesday night. It will proceed to New York City Wednesday on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey. In 1887, the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

NOV 30 1960

ON TOUR

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert here Tuesday night. It will proceed to New York City Wednesday on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey. In 1887, the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
NOV 27 1960

65

BOSTON SYMPHONY BEGINS 75TH SEASON OF CONCERTS IN NEW YORK THIS WEEK

Gus Mager and Doph Herras

POISED FOR DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY—In its first visit of season here, the orchestra will be heard in Carnegie Hall Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon and at Brooklyn Academy Friday. In strip below, Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, is shown in four characteristic studies during course of a rehearsal.

HE MARKS MILESTONES

Schuman Notes Them With New Symphony

By ERIC SALZMAN

THIS seems to be the big birthday year for American composers, and one of the principal celebrants is William Schuman. He is not only marking his fiftieth year, but also his fifteenth as president of the Juilliard School of Music.

He has a new symphony, fresh for the occasion, and it will come to town with the Boston Symphony this Wednesday. It is his seventh and, while this is not a United States record, it still represents quite an accomplishment for this New Yorker, who has successfully negotiated a double or even triple career as teacher, administrator and composer.

"I like to write lots of different kinds of music," he said last week in his Juilliard office, "but I'm primarily an orchestral composer. The greatest stage and the greatest drama is the orchestra."

Yet this symphonic-minded composer writes his music by singing!

"I sit at my desk," he explained, "and I sing and conduct. Everything I write sings; it just doesn't always have words, it is for instruments—but it sings."

Morning Composer

Unlike many of his colleagues, Mr. Schuman does most of his singing and composing early in the day. He gets up and settles down to two hours of morning composing at his home in New Rochelle, N. Y., before driving into New York.

"I am a very tough disciplinarian—with myself, that is. I compose 400 hours during the school year; that's an average of ten hours a week. Some weeks, I do little less, some a little more. I keep track of the hours on a desk pad, so that I am sure to make it come out. Then I put in 200 hours during vacation; so I get 600 in all.

"It shocks a lot of people that a creative artist would work on such a regimen. But, after all, if I'm a composer, I must write music."

Does it work? Look at the record. Since 1945, he has written twenty-one works, many of them of major proportions. He is not at all sure that he would have written more if he were only writing music. He likes both jobs and sees administration and composing as parts of a life in music.

When the Juilliard School picked a 35-year-old composer to become its president in 1945, a lot of eyebrows were raised. One of the trustees was reported to have said:

"This will either be the greatest thing that ever happened to Juilliard or the most colossal error of our collective lives."

Teaching Revolutionized

Mr. Schuman did not edge timidly into the job. He revolutionized the whole teaching of theory, composition and history at the school by combining them in one big program, which has become famous as the Juilliard Literature and Materials Program, a scheme that its originator likes to call "organized flexibility."

The basic idea is that all the courses that used to form separate pigeonholes are combined in a way that is intended to show the basic unity of all aspects of music.

For composition and theory students, it serves as a major; for others it is a required course. Best of all, it can be adjusted to suit individual requirements.

Mr. Schuman has been responsible for other shifts in Juilliard outlook—principally in fostering interest in contemporary music in all its manifestations. Right now, more changes are in prospect: the move to Lincoln Center and a simultaneous narrowing of the school's activities to concentrate only on advanced talent.

No Dogmatism

His official insistence that no particular esthetic tendencies be emphasized in the school's work is reflected in a strong personal lack of dogmatism. His music is hard to categorize. ("I have never been impressed with categories"); nevertheless, it manages to carry the composer's personal stamp. He feels that, although individual works may seem to differ, there is a totality in his work.

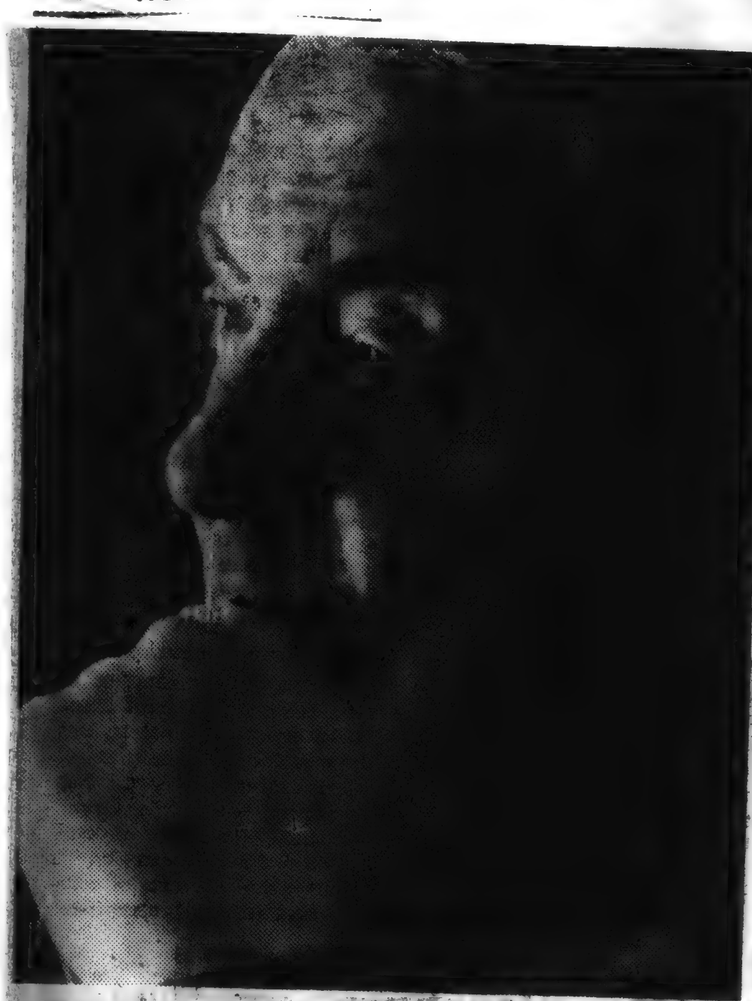
He finds that, as he views his own completed music, he can observe what happened and begin to understand what he did. The creative process, in this view, evolves in such a way that fully conscious understanding comes only after the actual process of creation. "The composer has to be able to do more than he knows," he likes to say.

Mr. Schuman is tall, nearly bald, with strong, serious features. His talk is serious, too, intelligent, and to the point. But he is an articulate, well-spoken man who won't talk about the technical aspects of his music.

"I really am not interested in talking about techniques. There are always plenty of people to do that. It's enough trouble writing music, without having to analyze it too.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
NOV 27 1960

66



CHARLES MUNCH — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director will conduct the opening concerts of its seventy-fifth New York season, on Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall and Friday night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 42,413
NOV 29 1960

BOSTON. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone." The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven. The New York concerts are scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
NOV 30 1960

Symphony in New York

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will be away from Boston this week to inaugurate the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of concerts in New York. There also will be performances in New Haven, Washington, and Brooklyn.

The third Tuesday evening concert will be held at Symphony Hall Dec. 6, and will include works by J. S. Bach, Walter Piston, and César Franck.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
NOV 29 1960

BSO Leaves For Its 75th N.Y. Season

Diamond Jubilee Will Be Celebrated At Carnegie Hall

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven, Conn. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

Ecstatic Review

The New York Times review the following day was ecstatic:

"Such splendid virility and pure quality of tone have not been heard in strings before in New York. All the barriers of reserve must fall at once before such a body of bowed instruments... We have no local band which can approach this organization in its superb collection of strings."

The Boston Traveller critic was impressed by the fine quality of the audience at the March 2, 1887, concert, including "a group of fine young fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly" in contrast to the usual "promiscuous company in New York."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 142,535
NOV 29 1960

Hub Symphony On Sentimental Journey to N.Y.

Boston — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board the 2 p.m. train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven. The New York concerts are scheduled tomorrow and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

The New York Times review the following day was ecstatic:

"Such splendid virility and pure quality of tone have not been heard in strings before in New York. All the barriers of reserve must fall at once before such a body of bowed instruments . . . We have no local band which can approach this organization in its superb collection of strings."

The Boston Traveller critic was impressed by the fine quality of the audience at the March 2, 1887, concert, including "a group of fine young fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly" in contrast to the usual "promiscuous company in New York."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,616
NOV 29 1960

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,708
NOV 29 1960

Returns to Scene of 1st Triumph . . .

Boston Symphony Leaving Today On Sentimental Journey to N. Y.

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York, where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven, Conn. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

The New York Times review the following day was ecstatic:

"Such splendid virility and pure quality of tone have not been heard in strings before in New York. All the barriers of reserve must fall at once before such a body of bowed instruments... We have no local band which can approach this organization in its superb collection of strings."

The Boston Traveller critic was impressed by the fine quality of the audience at the March 2, 1887, concert, including "a group of fine young fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly" in contrast to the usual "promiscuous company in New York."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958
NOV 29 1960

Club Symphony Goes To N. Y. For 75th Concert

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven, Conn. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 11,802
NOV 29 1960

Boston Symphony Journeys to New York

BOSTON (UPI)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven, Conn. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

The New York Times review the following day was ecstatic:

"Such splendid virility and pure quality of tone have not been heard in strings before in New York. All the barriers of reserve must fall at once before such a body of bowed instruments... We have no local band which can approach this organization in its superb collection of strings."

The Boston Traveller critic was impressed by the fine quality of the audience at the March 2, 1887, concert, including "a group of fine young fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly" in contrast to the usual "promiscuous company in New York."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367
NOV 29 1960

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 12,961
NOV 29 1960

News Brief

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians and their instruments were scheduled to board a train at South Station, stopping tonight for a concert at New Haven, Conn. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

The New York Times review the following day was ecstatic:

"Such splendid virility and pure quality of tone have not been heard in strings before in New York. All the barriers of reserve must fall at once before such a body of bowed instruments... We have no local band which can approach this organization in its superb collection of strings."

The Boston Traveller critic was impressed by the fine quality of the audience at the March 2, 1887, concert, including "a group of fine young fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly" in contrast to the usual "promiscuous company in New York."

Music Events This Week

MONDAY

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will be absent from Boston this week to inaugurate the orchestra's 75th consecutive season in New York. In addition to the two concerts at Carnegie Hall, the orchestra will also perform in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn.

The third concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6, Mr. Munch's program for this concert includes Bach's Suite No. 4, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Lorin Maazel will be the Orchestra's guest conductor for several concerts beginning Dec. 9. Mr. Maazel's first program, to be heard Friday, Dec. 9, and Saturday, Dec. 10, will include Geminiani's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Richard Strauss' Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 8.

Mr. Maazel has also announced his Symphony Hall program for December 16-17. At these concerts he will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, Stravinsky's Symphonic Poem "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'estase."

TODAY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,072

NOV 29 1960

Boston Symphony Plays 75th New York Season

BOSTON, (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves today on a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York City where the orchestra was acclaimed at its first Gotham concert three generations ago for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone."

The musicians stop tonight for a concert at New Haven. The New York concerts are scheduled Wednesday and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

It was Feb. 14, 1887, that the now famed orchestra opened the first of 75 consecutive seasons in New York. The coming engagement is the 75th.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

NOV 28 1960

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,878

NOV 27 1960

Bostonians Return

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, starts its 75th consecutive season of New York concerts this week with Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall.

coming to ... tomorrow.

Symphony on Tour

The Boston Symphony is returning to New York this week for another part of its 75th New York anniversary season. The orchestra is also being heard in Rye and Brooklyn.

The twelfth pair of Boston concerts, to be given Jan. 13 and 14, will include Eugene Istomin as soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2. Charles Munch will also conduct the orchestra in Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," and in Dvorak's Fourth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

NOV 30 1960

Symphony Travels

BOSTON, Nov. 30 (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is making a sentimental diamond anniversary journey to New York, where the orchestra was acclaimed Feb. 14, 1887 for its "splendid virility and pure quality of tone." New York concerts are scheduled tonight and Saturday at Carnegie Hall.

Symphony in N. Y. Concert Date

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be absent from Boston this week in order to inaugurate the orchestra's 75th consecutive season of concerts in New York.

The third concert of the orchestra's Tuesday evening series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6 at 8:30 p. m. Dr. Munch's program for this concert includes Bach's Suite No. 4, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Lorin Maazel will be the orchestra's guest conductor for several concerts beginning Dec. 9. Mr. Maazel's first program, to be heard Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Dec. 9 and 10, will include Geminiani's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Richard Strauss' Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p. m. Thursday, Dec. 8.

EXCLUSIVE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

OCT 27 1960

SOVIET PIANIST HERE

Sviatoslav Richter, brilliant Soviet pianist who has just arrived in this country for his first extended tour outside the Iron Curtain nations, will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall. Mr. Richter will perform both the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in Symphony Hall on Tuesday, Nov. 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

NOV 27 1960

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will be absent from Boston this week to inaugurate the orchestra's 75th consecutive season in New York. In addition to the two concerts at Carnegie Hall, the orchestra will also perform in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn.

The third concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on Dec. 6, Mr. Munch's program for this concert includes Bach's Suite No. 4, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Lorin Maazel will be the Orchestra's guest conductor for several concerts beginning Dec. 9. Mr. Maazel's first program, to be heard Friday, Dec. 9, and Saturday, Dec. 10, will include Geminiani's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Richard Strauss' Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 8.

Mr. Maazel has also announced his Symphony Hall program for December 16-17. At these concerts he will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, Stravinsky's Symphonic Poem "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'estase."

TODAY

MANTOVANI

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562

NOV 13 1960

Symphony Sets Concert Dates

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to The Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season.

Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30. The dates are Dec. 2, 1960, Jan. 6, Feb. 17, March 10 and April 7.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the close of last season, made an extensive tour of the Far East where it was acclaimed by thousands of Asiatic music lovers.

The orchestra played to vast audiences and on its return home was thanked by President Eisenhower for its participation in the International Cultural Exchange Program.

Monique Haas, French pianist, will be soloist at the first concert in the Academy on Friday evening, Dec. 2.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,189 S. 1,254,635

DEC 1 1960

Music: Diamond Jubilee

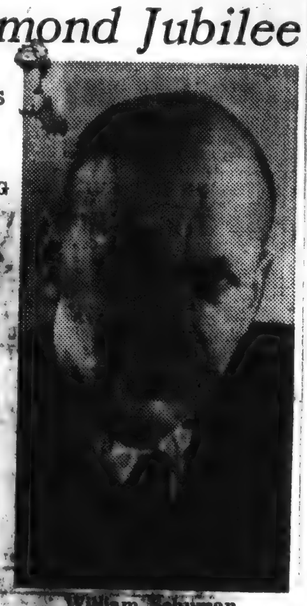
Boston Symphony Has Celebration Here

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

A DIAMOND anniversary was celebrated last night in Carnegie Hall. The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its seventy-fifth New York season there last night.

Back in 1887, when the first concert was given in New York, the critic of this newspaper noted that Boston "has at times shown a foolish jealousy of New York, and an equally groundless fear that the feeling was reciprocated." He went on to say that the New York reception of the Boston Symphony "should go far toward re-establishing those peaceful relations which existed between the New England and the middle states . . ."

Relations, one guesses, have smoothed out. We need no passport to enter Boston, and all is serenity. Could it have been the Boston Symphony that accomplished this mighty work? Music doth have charms.



William Schuman

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor, At Carnegie Hall.

Pelleas et Melisande Suite.....Faure
Symphony No. 7 (first New York performance).....Schumann
Symphony No. 7.....Beethoven

A new work was on the program. It was William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, receiving its first New York performance. It is in four sections, played in one consecutive movement, and runs about twenty-six minutes. It uses a very large orchestra, including six horns, and also an elaborate battery.

So much for the externals. In recent years there has been much talk about the Copland sound. There also is and always has been a Schuman sound. Whenever the brass section sounds out, syncopated, metrically complex in extreme but bright dissonance and nervous changes of rhythm, one knows immediately that Mr. Schuman is talking.

This characteristic has always been part of his style. It was in steady evidence last night, aside from the third movement, scored only for strings. The opening of the finale was typical: festive, jazzy, intense, syncopated, alternating between rhythms of three and four.

But it will take many more hearings to take the full measure of the work. Certain things immediately stand out—the professionalism, the assured (though slightly overorchestrated) scoring, the strange duet between clarinet and bass clarinet that leads into the second movement, and the decided force of the symphony as a whole.

About one is less sure of, on one hearing at least, is the lasting power of the music. Mr. Schuman has his own style of melody, and it is not to everybody's taste.

In the slow movement he strived for a near-perpetual melodic line. But perhaps it was an imitation of a melody rather than the real thing. The harmonic dissonance that underpinned it sounded too tense and, even, rather dated.

One kept thinking of the Nineteen Thirties, when this kind of writing made such an impact. Somehow it does not seem to mean as much these days.

Mr. Schuman was in the audience and came on stage for several bows.

There was another Seventh Symphony on the program—Beethoven's. The concert opened with a rather rough-sounding performance of Fauré's "Pelléas et Mélisande" Suite, and the lovely "Sicilienne" in this work was rushed almost beyond recognition. In the Beethoven, Mr. Munch produced energetic noises, but it cannot be said that he penetrated far beneath the surface of the music.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 23,190
NOV 29 1960

Boston Symphony Set For 75th N.Y. Season

NEW YORK (UPI) — It is encouraging to learn much progress has been made toward establishing peace in our own country since February 15, 1887. It gives you hope for the world.

This progress began that February evening of the long ago when the Boston Symphony came to New York for the first time. The musicians were nervous, venturing into hostile country. But they behaved like men.

And what happened? The local critics sheathed their professional stilettoes, self-conscious, but proud in this magnanimity. They went to the concert with no critical equipment but olive branches.

There had been a recent war between "eastern poets and western critics and philosophers," one music critic remarked. One he definitely favored "peaceful relations" all the way round.

Proved the Contrary

The trouble with Boston was it harbored "a foolish jealousy of New York," he continued. No less foolish, in his view, was the notion that New York had the same feeling about Boston.

Then to prove the contrary, he gave the Boston Symphony an excellent notice. He praised everything about it, and was particularly struck that its strings sounded "virile" and "masculine."

In 1960 you can guess only that way back then someone must have suggested the Boston strings were passive and feminine. Either that, or feminizing of strings was being done generally.

The critical tolerance knew no bounds. It was even unaware of Georg Frederic Handel whirling widely in his grave while the Boston violin players stood in a line across the stage and accompanied the harp player plucking Handel's celebrated largo. (Let it be said in extenuation no great master has been more grave-whirled by musicians than Handel.)

That was the Boston Symphony's first local concert and tomorrow evening it will open its 75th consecutive season here. It is safe to predict there will be no jealousy-inspired untoward occurrences. In fact, New Yorkers love the Bostonians and are confident the love is reciprocated.

At the end of this new season it will have given 700 concerts in New York since the first one. You can see the progress. The truly optimistic might even say peace has been established in fact.

Another of New York's favorite "foreign" orchestras, the one from Philadelphia, featured an opera in its second concert of its New York concert. It was Bela Bartok's one-acter, "Duke Bluebeard's Castle" and since it is long on musical conversation and short on action and has only two singing characters, it went very well in "concert version."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562

NOV 27 1960

An Echo of 1887

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHEN THE Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town on Wednesday night it will begin its 75th consecutive New York season. It first played at Steinway Hall on Feb. 14, 1887. Wilhelm Gericke conducted and Franz Kneisel was soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The program also included Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Beethoven Fifth Symphony, and Handel's "Largo."

The latter "moved the audience as no orchestra playing has moved people in this city of recent years."

●

THE ORCHESTRA gave three concerts that season. Reporting the second event, the Boston Traveler printed the following: "Many surprises marked the evening, not the least of which was the character of the audience; in place of the faces of foreign type which accompany one everywhere in cosmopolitan New York, here right alongside was one of the loveliest old New England grandmammas, with a bevy of nephews and nieces; in the next row a group of fine fellows, New Yorkers, it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly, while it was such a pleasure to see all about the faces with which one felt a kinship.

"This is written not in disparagement of those truly musical people, the Germans, who seem to form the bulk of a New York concert constituency, but only to show, it may be to others who, like the writer, have been really homesick for the sight of a family face when for any cause brought into a promiscuous company in New York that they are to be found there, but it needs some such summons as the Gabriel trump of a Boston orchestra to bring them out.

"There were present, as a matter of course, many German musicians and dilettanti; and many members of the New York orchestras, almost all of Herr Seidl's band, embraced this opportunity to hear what sort of truth our Boston Fiddlers and Fifers spake."

Times have changed; so has the audience. The orchestra played in Carnegie Hall in 1893, then at the Metropolitan Opera House for four seasons, and since then in Carnegie.

●

WHEN IT FINISHES its current season, it will have given 700 concerts in New York. Incidentally, for the past 42 years the orchestra has only three musical directors: Monteux, Koussevitzky, and Munch.

From the beginning the Boston has been held in the highest repute. Its prestige continues undiminished as one of the world's great orchestras.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917

DEC 1 1960

Music

Two Sevenths Concert Played

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

The two Seventh Symphonies on last night's Boston Symphony program in Carnegie Hall were Beethoven's, which needs no introduction, and William Schuman's, which a matter of fact, the Juilliard president's latest score got a very brilliant introduction by the visiting orchestra under its dynamic conductor Charles Munch.

The orchestra, you might say, had a stake in the new symphony. Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, it was premiered in Boston last October as part of the orchestra's 75th anniversary celebration here.

Where to place this symphony — except last and latest in Mr. Schuman's constantly evolving style is hard to say. Arresting in many ways, it is a score that makes few compromises and no concessions.

Much of it moves in a kind of block formation, with sharp pauses between the blocks. Momentum builds up suddenly and just as suddenly subsides. The mood ranges from somber proclamation to mammoth whimsy.

For all I know, the Seventh Symphony may be Mr. Schuman's most significant score. Certainly it has peaks of chorale-like declamation of true power. In between are passages of pensive gravity.

There is also something refreshing about Mr. Schuman's habit of entrusting major announcements to groups rather than to individuals. As a composer, he appears to thrive best on mass movements.

But there was too little sustained impetus and much too much abruptness of rhythm for my personal comfort last night. Still, Mr. Schuman, beaming and buoyant, got a warm reception when he came to the stage for a bow.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra gave the new symphony as hospitable a send-off as it could get anywhere in America today. It is dedicated, incidentally, to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

The only other listing last night, besides the Beethoven symphony, was Fauré's "Pélleas et Melisande" music, a score that Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony seem to have made their very own. It sounded that way last night.

Already the aristocrat of orchestras, the Boston Symphony opened its 75th season here in a triumph of sound.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322

NOV 27 1960

Boston, N.Y. Keep Peace With Music

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—It is encouraging to learn much progress has been made toward establishing peace in our own country since February 15, 1887. It gives you hope for the world.

This progress began that February evening of the long ago when the Boston Symphony came to New York for the first time. The musicians were nervous, venturing into hostile country. But they behaved like men.

And what happened? The local critics sheathed their professional stilettoes, self conscious but proud in this magnanimity. They went to the concert with no critical equipment but olive branches.

There had been a recent war between "Eastern poets and Western critics and philosophers," one music critic remarked. One he definitely favored "peaceful relations" all the way round.

The trouble with Boston was it harbored "a foolish jealousy of New York," he continued. No notion that New York had the same feeling about Boston.

Then, to prove the contrary, he gave the Boston Symphony an excellent notice. He praised everything about it, and was particularly struck that its strings sounded 'virile" and "masculine."

In 1960 you can guess only that way back then someone must have suggested the Boston strings were passive and feminine. Either that, or feminizing of strings was being done generally.

The critical tolerance knew no bounds. It was even unaware of Georg Frederic Handel whirling wildly in his grave while the Boston violin players stood in a line across the stage and accompanied the harp player plucking Handel's celebrated Largo. (Let it be said in extenuation no great master has been more grave-whirled by musicians than Handel.)

First Local Concert

That was the Boston Symphony's first local concert and, Wednesday evening, it will open its 75th consecutive season here. It is safe to predict there will be no jealousy-inspired untoward occurrences. In fact, New Yorkers love the Bostonians and are confident the love is reciprocated.

At the end of this new season it will have given 700 concerts in New York since the first one. You can see the progress. The truly optimistic might even say peace has been established in fact.

Another of New York's favorite "foreign" orchestras, the one from Philadelphia, featured an opera in its second concert of its New York concert. It was Bela Bartok's one-acter, "Duke Bluebeard's Castle" and since it is long on musical conversation and short on action and has only two singing characters, it went very well in "concert version."

Naturally, or perhaps inevitably, the two characters were a man and a woman (sung by Rosalind Elias and Jerome Hines of the Metropolitan Opera.) Hines was Bluebeard and there is no need to state his attitude toward femmes. But to show how composers think, Bartok thought it illustrates "the eternal tragedy of the dualism of man and woman." whatever that is.

Another current commentary on the state of the musical art comes from New Orleans where the local symphony is observing its 25th anniversary. It wanted a "big" piece for the occasion and approached the composer, Alan Hovhaness, for a symphony. The fee it was offering was to come from the annual stipend set up by one of its patrons, Edward Benjamin, who had specified it was to pay only for the creation of "tranquil" music.

Hovhaness couldn't go for that. Benjamin said, OK—the orchestra could make an exception. So Hovhaness got the commission and his 11th Symphony will have its premiere by the New Orleans Symphony March 21 next year.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Mittwoch, 30. November 1960

75. Saison in New York:

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra hat eine stolze Geschichte

Wenn heute abend Charles Munch den Taktstock heben und das Boston Symphonie-Orchester die ersten Takte von Faurés "Pelléas et Mélisande"-Suite spielen wird, beginnt damit die 75. Saison eines der großen Orchester der Welt in New York.

Diese Reihe der Gastspiele, die in 75 Jahren auch durch Kriege und Wirtschaftsdepressionen nicht unterbrochen werden konnte, begann in der Steinway Hall am 14. Februar 1886. Wilhelm Gericke leitete das Orchester damals, und der Abend war deutscher Musik gewidmet: Auf dem Programm stand Beethovens Fünfte Symphonie, das Violinkonzert, das von dem Konzertmeister des Orchesters, Franz Kneisel, zu Gehör gebracht wurde, die "Oberon"-Ouvertüre von Carl Maria von Weber und schließlich die Hellmesberger-Orchestrierung des "Largos" von Händel.

Der Erfolg war phänomenal. Die Gäste aus Boston wurden stürmisch gefeiert, und Gericke wurde viele Male auf das Podium gerufen. Die "New York Times", sonst stets reserviert in ihren Besprechungen, gebrauchte in der Kritik dieser Veranstaltung alle lobenden Adjektive, die zur Verfügung standen: "Kein Orchester hat in den letzten Jahren eine solche Wirkung auf das Publikum gehabt wie dieses", hieß es am nächsten Morgen.

'Andere Zeitungen verlangten, daß das Orchester dieses Konzert wiederhole. Das war nicht möglich — aber angespornt von diesem Erfolg, wurden zwei weitere Konzerte arrangiert, ehe die Saison 1886/87 zu Ende war.

*

Seither hat die "Boston Symphonie", wie dieses Orchester in einer liebevollen Abkürzung genannt wird, jedes Jahr in New York konzentriert. Erst spielten die Bostoner in der Steinway Hall, dann in einem Haus, das längst vergessen ist, der Chickering Hall, und schließlich am 8. November 1893 hielt es seinen Einzug in dem Haus, das seit seiner Dedizierung der Musiktempel New Yorks ist: Der Carnegie Hall, wo es natürlich auch die fünf Mittwochabend- und die fünf Sonnabendnachmittag-Konzerte der laufenden Saison geben wird.

New York begrüßt dieses Orchester, dessen Weltruf unbestritten ist. Die drei großen Dirigenten, die es in den vergangenen Jahren gehabt hat — Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky und sein jetziger Leiter, Charles Munch — haben ihm eine Tradition und eine Geschichte gegeben, auf die nicht nur Boston allein, sondern jede Musikstadt Amerikas, jeder Musikfreund stolz ist.

E. St.

185 Church Street – New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
NOV 30 1960

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, opening of 75th N. Y. season, Charles Munch conducting Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, William Schuman Symphony No. 7 in first N. Y. performance, Beethoven Symphony No. 7 in A Major. Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Ivan Davis, pianist, winner of first Franz Liszt Piano Competition, 1960. Program includes Robert Schumann Fantasy in C Major, Chopin "Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise." Town Hall, 8:30.

Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Gary Bertini, conductor, Pnina Salzman, pianist, in Franck's Variations for Piano and Orchestra. Beethoven Symphony No. 7, Kaminski's "Israeli Sketches," Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. Hunter College, 8.

Metropolitan Opera: "Carmen," Jean Morel conducting, Kerstin Meyer in title role, American tenor Leonard Del-Ferro, makes Met debut as Don Jose, 8.

N. Y. City Ballet: "Allegro Brillante," "Monumentum," "Figure in the Carpet." City Center, 8.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 428,283
DEC 10 1960

MUSICAL EVENTS

The Inside Track

TO me, there was a certain air of unreality about the Boston Symphony performance of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening last week. The ceremony was familiar enough—that of launching a new symphony (new, at least, to New York) by a well-known American composer. The audience applauded politely, and long enough to bring the composer to the stage, where he took a couple of bows. Some of the audience probably reflected that Mr. Schuman is the head of the Juilliard School of Music, which is an important institution of learning, and that therefore what he had to say, with the help of Charles Munch and a very large orchestra, should be considered worth listening to. The next day the critics of the daily press wrote respectfully about the symphony, though they were not moved to anything resembling outright enthusiasm. Doubtless other orchestras will now proceed to perform it, possibly because their conductors are righteously interested in it, and possibly also because Mr. Schuman, as head of the Juilliard School, is inevitably a dispenser of patronage in the form of teaching jobs and scholarships, and a valuable man to be on good terms with. Nobody, as far as I could make out, approached the other night's performance expecting it to slake a deep thirst for emotional experience, and nobody left the hall with his heart aflame or with his brain set tingling by intellectual stimulation. The new symphony, like many of its kind, was not so much a work of art as what is nowadays called a status symbol. Not only are contemporary composers expected to compose symphonies in order to maintain their status but composers like Mr. Schuman are also themselves status symbols in a society that feels, perhaps rightly, that to be considered cultured it must have, and applaud the work of, a full complement of composers.

The element of unreality enters in when you note that nobody is getting a real bang out of the ceremony. The applause seems to be for the principle of the thing rather than for the work itself. Not that Mr. Schuman's symphony is a particularly bad one, as contemporary American symphonies go. In an attempt to criticize it on a rational basis, I can say that it is a fairly expert fabrication, solemn and sententious enough to give an effect of seriousness, cacophonous enough to be fashionable, and nowhere exhibiting the quality of inspired lyricism that I regard as the fundamental talent of a really interesting composer. It does not seek—some doctrinaire thinkers would use the word "stoop"—to please its audience. This sort of seeking or stooping is something that has largely disappeared from music since the time of Richard Strauss and Jean Sibelius—composers who were more conscious of audience reaction—and today's listeners have ceased to expect it of today's composers. Why should they have ceased to expect it? The reason, I think, can be found in some current methods of commissioning and scheduling compositions for performance.

This particular symphony, according to a note in the program, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, in collaboration with the Boston Symphony. Now, it is common knowledge that the jury of advisers that recommends awards and commissions for the Koussevitzky Foundation consists of Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, and Mr. Schuman—all of them but the first being composers. Here we have a setup that is typical of what currently goes on in the granting of foundation awards. Much of the contemporary music we are obliged to hear is picked by composers who serve on the advisory boards of foundations, and much of it, therefore, is written not for audiences but for the composers who happen to be members of these boards. This process of composing for composers rather than for audiences is apparently a built-in feature of our system of foundation grants, and seems to me to be a major source of the stagnation and monotony in contemporary American music. The Koussevitzky Foundation is not alone in using the method, which is lending a sort of genteel Tammany Hall aroma to our musical life. Of all the foundations interested in music, only one, as far as I am aware, has avoided the difficulty, and it has done so with generally happy and constructive results. This is the Ford Foundation, which has done so much (especially in the field of opera) to inject a ray of excitement into the contemporary musical scene. Except in connection with certain special grants at the high-school level, the Ford Foundation does not use composers as its advisers, preferring to get its advice from performing musicians, who are apt to be more impartial and who are certainly in more intimate touch with the concertgoing public.

AND now I pass on to George Frederic Handel, a composer who composed for audiences, and who, like virtually all the other great composers of the past, was not above turning an honest dollar with his music, the dollar being eagerly provided by a public that just couldn't wait to hear what the Master had to say next. What he said in his opera "Hercules," which was given its American première (at least, there is no record of a previous performance) by the American Opera Society in Town Hall on Friday evening, must have struck his contemporaries as very grand indeed. It is a little difficult for modern audiences to listen to "Hercules" with eighteenth-century ears. Its style is staid, formal, and florid in the manner of its period, and it lacks the dramatic impetus that we are accustomed to in later and more popular operas. Still, it contains a lot of noble counterpoint, some stunning choruses, and some opportunities for magnificent coloratura singing, which were grasped admirably, on the whole, by a distinguished cast last Friday. Among the principals, I found Elisabeth Schwarzkopf a little precious (though she sang everywhere with the greatest refinement), Christa Ludwig fairly impressive, Richard Verreau quite adequate, and Walter Berry (as Hercules) magnificent, with superb enunciation, a ringing voice, and an authoritative command of the Handelian idiom. Nicola Rescigno conducted with vigor, the chorus sang impeccably, and the performance in its entirety was decidedly of more than documentary interest. —WINTHROP SARGEANT

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
DEC 1960

Boston Symphony Premieres 7th Symphony by Schuman

■ Of the Boston Symphony we expect the best of the old and the new, and this season promises both in about equal measure. The premiere of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony was worth waiting for (it had been commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary five years ago). The music is both lean and lusty, altogether "American" in its dynamism and brass component. But Schuman clearly understands that volume must serve rhetoric, and he handles his forces convincingly.

Other weekend concerts of annual interest are these assigned to the Symphony's assistant conductor and concertmaster, Richard Burgin. This year, Mr. Burgin coupled Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite with Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" in a concert that crackled with excitement. Assisting was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The chief event of the concert season so far, was the appearance here of Sviatoslav Richter as soloist for two concertos for the annual Pension Fund Concert. The big man with the air of benign humility made it clear that he was glad to be on hand to help personally the orchestra which, by its spying him out on its tour of Soviet Russia, was primary in pressing for his tour here (the negotiations were accomplished ultimately by Sol Hurok).

To his performance of Beethoven's First Concerto he applied a scrutiny of note-placement, of nuance and piquant detail, of upbeat and slurring that completely articulated the brisk sections and gave the slow movement a sustained and lofty calm. More revelations came with Brahms Second Concerto, in which Richter's mixture of leopard's pounce and sudden caress made a charged excitement difficult to match. He converted the Symphony men to his audience, too.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Boston Symphony

On Nov. 30, at Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, opened its 75th consecutive season of New York concerts. Featured were two Seventh Symphonies—the familiar one by Beethoven and a new one by William Schuman. The Schuman work, which received its first New York performance, was premiered in Boston in October. The program also included Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite.

Monique Haas, pianist, will make her first New York orchestral appearance at the Boston Symphony concert, Dec. 3. She will play the Mozart Concerto No. 20 and Ravel's "Concerto for the Left Hand." . . . Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts (in Boston), Dec. 9, 10, 16 and 17. The 30-year-old conductor was a child prodigy, having first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was 9.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Munch Leads Seventh Symphony By Schuman

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Carnegie Hall, Nov. 30, E—William Schuman's new Seventh Symphony had its first New York presentation in Carnegie Hall at the Boston Symphony's opening concert of the season.

Mr. Schuman's superb creative talent has been evidenced over many years of fruitful activity in various forms. His Seventh Symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation and is dedicated to the memory of the beloved late conductor and his wife, Natalie. It was premiered last Oct. 21 in Boston. The composer submitted it without notes or description other than that it is in four movements, takes 27 minutes to perform, and is played without pause.

The work is grandiose architecturally and tonally. It requires an augmented instrumentation and challenges the resourcefulness of conductor and players. It is a work of complexity and brims over with ideas. These Mr. Schuman utilizes with procedures which, if not always spontaneous and appealing, are stylistic, rousing and impressive. Highlights of the symphony are the third and final sections. The Cantabile glows with vital melodic line, and the concluding Scherzando is brilliant and captivating in its riotious fling and spirited transition to the extended and exciting coda.

Mr. Munch and his players gave a devoted virtuoso reading of the entire symphony, evoking hearty acclaim which brought the composer onstage to share the ovation.

The program opened with a romantic unfolding of Fauré's suite from his music to "Pelleas et Mélisande" and ended with a stirring rendition of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. R. L.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Mittwoch, 30. November 1960

75. Saison in New York:

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra hat eine stolze Geschichte

Wenn heute abend Charles Munch den Taktstock heben und das Boston Symphonie-Orchester die ersten Takte von Faurés "Pelléas et Mélisande"-Suite spielen wird, beginnt damit die 75. Saison eines der großen Orchester der Welt in New York.

Diese Reihe der Gastspiele, die in 75 Jahren auch durch Kriege und Wirtschaftsdepressionen nicht unterbrochen werden konnte, begann in der Steinway Hall am 14. Februar 1886. Wilhelm Gericke leitete das Orchester damals, und der Abend war deutscher Musik gewidmet: Auf dem Programm stand Beethovens Fünfte Symphonie, das Violinkonzert, das von dem Konzertmeister des Orchesters, Franz Kneisel, zu Gehör gebracht wurde, die "Oberon"-Ouvertüre von Carl Maria von Weber und schließlich die Hellmesberger-Orchestrierung des "Largos" von Händel.

Der Erfolg war phänomenal. Die Gäste aus Boston wurden stürmisch gefeiert, und Gericke wurde viele Male auf das Podium gerufen. Die "New York Times" sonst sehr reserviert in ihren Besprechungen, gebrauchte in der Kritik dieser Veranstaltung alle lobenden Adjektive, die zur Verfügung standen: "Kein Orchester hat in den letzten Jahren eine solche Wirkung auf das Publikum gehabt wie dieses", hieß es am nächsten Morgen.

Andere Zeitungen verlangten, daß das Orchester dieses Konzert wiederhole. Das war nicht möglich — aber angespornt von diesem Erfolg, wurden zwei weitere Konzerte arrangiert, ehe die Saison 1886/87 zu Ende war.

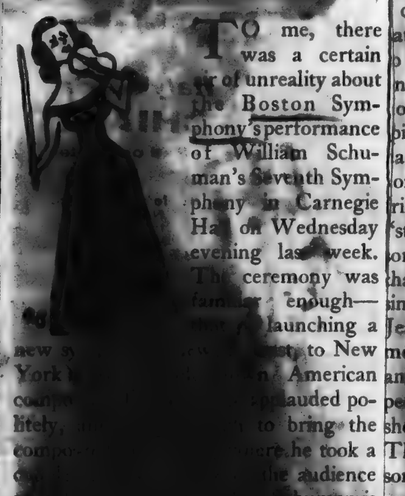
Seither hat die "Boston Symphonie", wie dieses Orchester in einer liebevollen Abkürzung genannt wird, jedes Jahr in New York konzentriert. Erst spielten die Bostoner in der Steinway Hall, dann in einem Haus, das längst vergessen ist, der Chickering Hall, und schließlich am 8. November 1893 hielt es seinen Einzug in dem Haus, das seit seiner Dedizierung der Musiktempel New Yorks ist: Der Carnegie Hall, wo es natürlich auch die fünf Mittwochabend- und die fünf Sonnabendnachmittag-Konzerte der laufenden Saison geben wird.

New York begrüßt dieses Orchester, dessen Weltruf unbestritten ist. Die drei großen Dirigenten, die es in den vergangenen Jahren gehabt hat — Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitsky und sein jetziger Leiter, Charles Munch — haben ihm eine Tradition und eine Geschichte gegeben, auf die nicht nur Boston allein, sondern jede Musikstadt Amerikas, jeder Musikfreund stolz ist.

E. St.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 428,283
DEC 10 1960

69



TO me, there was a certain air of unreality about the Boston Symphony's performance of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening last week. This ceremony was familiar enough—launching a new symphony, on its way to New York [illegible] American country, to be applauded politely, [illegible] to bring the composer [illegible] he took a bow [illegible] the audience [illegible] human is [illegible] of Music [illegible] stitution of learning [illegible] what he had in store [illegible] of Charles Munch [illegible] orchestra, should be [illegible] listening to. The next day the critics of the daily press were [illegible] about the symphony, though they were not moved to any [illegible] enthusiasm. Doubtless other orchestras will now proceed to perform it, possibly because they feel [illegible] duty, possibly interested in it, and possibly also because Mr. Schuman, as head of the Juilliard School, is inevitably a dispenser of patronage in the form of teaching jobs and scholarships, hence a valuable man to be on good terms with. Nobody, as far as I could make out, approached the other night's performance expecting it to slake a deep thirst for emotional experience, and nobody left the hall with his heart aflame or with his brain set tingling by intellectual stimulation. The new symphony, like many of its kind, was not so much a work of art as what is nowadays called a status symbol. Not only are contemporary composers expected to compose symphonies in order to maintain their status but composers like Mr. Schuman are also themselves status symbols in a society that feels, perhaps rightly, that to be considered cultured it must have, and applaud the work of, a full complement of composers.

The element of unreality enters in when you note that nobody is getting a real bang out of the ceremony. The applause seems to be for the principle of the thing rather than for the work itself. Not that Mr. Schuman's symphony is a particularly bad one, as contemporary American symphonies go. In an attempt to criticize it on a rational basis, I can say that it is a fairly expert fabrication, solemn and sententious enough to give an effect of seriousness, cacophonous enough to be fashionable, and nowhere exhibiting the quality of inspired lyricism that I regard as the fundamental talent of a really interesting composer. It does not seek—some doctrinaire thinkers would use the word "stoop"—to please its audience. This sort of seeking or stooping is something that has largely disappeared from music since the time of Richard Strauss and Jean Sibelius—composers who were more conscious of audience reaction—and today's listeners have ceased to expect it of today's composers. Why should they have ceased to expect it? The reason, I think, can be found in some current methods of commissioning and scheduling compositions for performance.

This particular symphony, according to a note in the program, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, in collaboration with the Boston Symphony. Now, it is common knowledge that the jury of advisers that recommends awards and commissions for the Koussevitzky Foundation consists of Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, and Mr. Schuman—all of them but the first being composers. Here we have a setup that is typical of what currently goes on in the granting of foundation awards. Much of the contemporary music we are obliged to hear is picked by composers who serve on the advisory boards of foundations, and much of it, therefore, is written not for audiences but for the composers who happen to be members of these boards. This process of composing for composers rather than for audiences is apparently a built-in feature of our system of foundation grants, and seems to me to be a major source of the stagnation and monotony in contemporary American music. The Koussevitzky Foundation is not alone in using the method, which is lending a sort of genteel Tammany Hall aroma to our musical life. Of all the foundations interested in music, only one, as far as I am aware, has avoided the difficulty, and it has done so with generally happy and constructive results. This is the Ford Foundation, which has done so much (especially in the field of opera) to inject a ray of excitement into the contemporary musical scene. Except in connection with certain special grants at the high-school level, the Ford Foundation does not use composers as its advisers, preferring to get its advice from performing musicians, who are apt to be more impartial and who are certainly in more intimate touch with the concertgoing public.

AND now I pass on to George Frederic Handel, a composer who composed for audiences, and who, like virtually all the other great composers of the past, was not above turning an honest dollar with his music, the dollar being eagerly provided by a public that just couldn't wait to hear what the Master had to say next. What he said in his opera "Hercules," which was given its American première (at least, there is no record of a previous performance) by the American Opera Society in Town Hall on Friday evening, must have struck his contemporaries as very grand indeed. It is a little difficult for modern audiences to listen to "Hercules" with eighteenth-century ears. Its style is staid, formal, and florid in the manner of its period, and it lacks the dramatic impetus that we are accustomed to in later and more popular operas. Still, it contains a lot of noble counterpoint, some stunning choruses, and some opportunities for magnificent coloratura singing, which were grasped admirably, on the whole, by a distinguished cast last Friday. Among the principals, I found Elisabeth Schwarzkopf a little precious (though she sang everywhere with the greatest refinement), Christa Ludwig fairly impressive, Richard Verreau quite adequate, and Walter Berry (as Hercules) magnificent, with superb enunciation, a ringing voice, and an authoritative command of the Handelian idiom. Nicola Rescigno conducted with vigor, the chorus sang impeccably, and the performance in its entirety was decidedly of more than documentary interest. —WINTHROP SARGEANT

165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
NOV 30 1960

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, opening of 75th N. Y. season, Charles Munch conducting Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, William Schuman Symphony No. 7 in first N. Y. performance, Beethoven Symphony No. 7 in A Major. Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Ivan Davis, pianist, winner of first Franz Liszt Piano Competition, 1960. Program includes Robert Schumann Fantasy in C Major, Chopin "Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise." Town Hall, 8:30.

Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Gary Bertini, conductor, Pnina Salzman, pianist, in Franck's Variations for Piano and Orchestra, Beethoven Symphony No. 7, Kaminski's "Israeli Sketches," Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. Hunter College, 8.

Metropolitan Opera: "Carmen," Jean Morel conducting, Kerstin Meyer in title role, American tenor Leonard Del Ferro, makes Met debut as Don Jose, 8.

N. Y. City Ballet: "Allegro Brillante," "Monumentum," "Figure in the Carpet." City Center, 8.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1960

Boston Symphony

On Nov. 30, at Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, opened its 75th consecutive season of New York concerts. Featured were two Seventh Symphonies—the familiar one by Beethoven and a new one by William Schuman. The Schuman work, which received its first New York performance, was premiered in Boston in October. The program also included Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite.

Monique Haas, pianist, will make her first New York orchestral appearance at the Boston Symphony concert, Dec. 3. She will play the Mozart Concerto No. 20 and Ravel's "Concerto for the Left Hand." . . . Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts (in Boston), Dec. 9, 10, 16 and 17. The 30-year-old conductor was a child prodigy, having first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was 9.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
DEC 1960

Boston Symphony Premieres 7th Symphony by Schuman

Of the Boston Symphony we expect the best of the old and the new, and this season promises both in about equal measure. The premiere of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony was worth waiting for (it had been commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary five years ago). The music is both lean and lusty, altogether "American" in its dynamism and brass component. But Schuman clearly understands that volume must serve rhetoric, and he handles his forces convincingly.

Other weekend concerts of annual interest are those assigned to the Symphony's assistant conductor and concertmaster, Richard Burgin. This year, Mr. Burgin coupled Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite with Walton's "Belshazzar's Feast" in a concert that crackled with excitement. Assisting was the Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The chief event of the concert season so far, was the appearance here of Sviatoslav Richter as soloist for two concertos for the annual Pension Fund Concert. The big man with the air of benign humility made it clear that he was glad to be on hand to help personally the orchestra which, by its spying him out on its tour of Soviet Russia, was primary in pressing for his tour here (the negotiations were accomplished ultimately by Sol Hurok).

To his performance of Beethoven's First Concerto he applied a scrutiny of note-placement, of nuance and piquant detail, of upbeat and slurring that completely articulated the brisk sections and gave the slow movement a sustained and lofty calm. More revelations came with Brahms Second Concerto, in which Richter's mixture of leopard's pounce and sudden caress made a charged excitement difficult to match. He converted the Symphony men to his audience, too.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Munch Leads Seventh Symphony By Schuman

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conductor, Carnegie Hall, Nov. 30, E—William Schuman's new Seventh Symphony had its first New York presentation in Carnegie Hall at the Boston Symphony's opening concert of the season.

Mr. Schuman's superb creative talent has been evidenced over many years of fruitful activity in various forms. His Seventh Symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation and is dedicated to the memory of the beloved late conductor and his wife, Natalie. It was premiered last Oct. 21 in Boston. The composer submitted it without notes or description other than that it is in four movements, takes 23 minutes to perform, and is played without pause.

The work is grandiose architecturally and tonally. It requires an augmented instrumentation and challenges the resourcefulness of conductor and players. It is a work of complexity and brims over with ideas. These Mr. Schuman utilizes with procedures which, if not always spontaneous and appealing, are stylistic, rousing and impressive. Highlights of the symphony are the third and final sections. The Cantabile glows with vital melodic line, and the concluding Scherzando is brilliant and captivating in its riotious fling and spirited transition to the extended and exciting coda.

Mr. Munch and his players gave a devoted virtuoso reading of the entire symphony, evoking hearty acclaim which brought the composer onstage to share the ovation.

The program opened with a romantic unfolding of Fauré's suite from his music to "Pelleas et Mélisande" and ended with a stirring rendition of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. R. L.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

The Dangers of Being a Destructive Reactionary...

These are harsh words but they are certainly deserved by the outrageous article written by Winthrop Sargent in the Dec. 10, 1960 issue of the New Yorker under the heading The Inside Track. This article is not only a savage attack upon contemporary American music but it makes misstatements of fact and unfair implications about one of our leading composers, William Schuman, which need to be repudiated for the honor of the critical profession in this country.

At the outset I should make it plain that this is not a personal squabble. As a matter of fact, Mr. Sargent and I are personal friends and colleagues of long standing. This is not the first time that we have crossed swords over this issue. Many years ago he published an article on The Sterility of Modern Music in which he calmly asserted that music really stopped with Mahler. Olin Downes (who, for all his honesty and lovable human qualities, was also, I am sorry to relate, a violent reactionary) enthusiastically seconded Mr. Sargent in the New York Times. And I replied in the Dance Observer with an article on The Sterility of Modern Music Critics.

Before citing chapter and verse from Mr. Sargent's article I should like to point out some of the dangers referred to in the title of this editorial as they are exemplified in his attitude. The mark of the true reactionary is that he is unwilling to bask in the familiar and comfortable glories of the classics and to let the present alone. In order to justify himself and to feel secure in his attitudes, he must attack contemporary, challenging and revolutionary art and show that it is worthless. Only when he has demolished the art of his own time which he is unwilling to accept and incapable of appreciating can he feel happy about living in the past.

He salutes every work which is a mere reflection of familiar traditions and forms with great enthusiasm and he castigates every artist who dares to expose him to something completely new. He assumes an Olympian authority and he frequently resorts to sophistry to bolster his arguments. Now, as a reactionary music critic, Mr. Sargent is a wonderful example, a positive Museum Piece, and therefore he can serve as a warning to the rest of us.

He begins The Inside Track by saying that there was "a certain air of unreality about the Boston Symphony's performance of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony in Carnegie Hall" on Nov. 30. "The ceremony was familiar enough—that of launching a new symphony . . . by a well-known American composer. The audience applauded politely, and long enough to bring the composer to the stage, where he took a couple of bows. Some of the audience probably reflected that Mr. Schuman is the head of the Juilliard School of Music, which is an important institution of learning, and that therefore what he had to say . . . should be considered worth listening to. The next day the critics of the daily press wrote respectfully about the symphony, though they were not moved to anything resembling outright enthusiasm. Doubtless other orchestras will not proceed to perform it, possibly because their conductors are genuinely interested in it, and possibly also because Mr. Schuman, as head of the Juilliard School, is inevitably a dispenser of patronage in the form of teaching jobs and scholarships, and a valuable man to be on good terms with."

Before going any farther, I should like to point out the misstatements and fallacies in this opening barrage. The most damaging implication—that Mr. Schuman uses his position as head of Juilliard to get his music performed—is absolutely untrue. In his fifteen years at Juilliard he has never had anything to do with the awarding of scholarships, which is done at the recommendation of the faculty members and supervised by the Dean, not by Mr. Schuman. And he has never used his influence to get a teaching job for anyone because it might further the performance of his works. Anyone who gave a second thought to the matter could see how ridiculous this accusation is.

And notice how cleverly Mr. Sargent suggests that audiences really don't want symphonies by Mr. Schuman or other composers of his kind. He talks about "polite" applause. Has he never heard an audience shout itself hoarse with enthusiasm about a Schuman symphony—as I have more than once at performances of the Third and Sixth? Does he really dare to imply that there are not people who love modern American music and are stirred by it? Does he never attend concerts conducted by Leonard Bernstein, who gets audiences as excited over Copland, Schuman, Harris, Barber and Foss as they are over Tchaikovsky?

Well, we have the answer in his next passage. "Nobody, as far as I could make out, approached the other night's performance expecting it to slake a deep thirst for emotional experience, and nobody left the hall with his heart aflame or with his brain set tingling by intellectual stimulation. The new symphony, like many of its kind, was not so much a work of art as what is nowadays called a status symbol." For Mr. Sargent's information, a great many people approached that performance expecting to slake a deep thirst for emotional experience. I was among them, for Schuman's Sixth Symphony was one of the profound emotional experiences of my life, and other scores of his—the ballet Undertow for Tudor and Night Journey for Martha Graham among them—have set my brain tingling and my heart aflame. It so happened that I was personally disappointed in the Seventh at first hearing, but this did not lessen one iota my admiration for Schuman or my high hopes for his next work. How can Mr. Sargent's brain tingle or his heart flame, if he goes with a soured, hostile attitude, like a confirmed dyspeptic sitting down to a banquet?

He continues to harp on the theme of emotional values. "The element of unreality enters in when you notice that nobody is getting a real bang out of the ceremony." (Again, I can only say that Mr. Sargent has not observed audiences at performances of modern American music very closely or accurately.) What he really means is that HE is not getting a bang and why this is appears at once. He says of Schuman's Seventh: "In an attempt to criticize it on a rational basis, I can say that it is a fairly expert fabrication, solemn and sententious enough to give an effect of seriousness, cacophonous enough to be fashionable, and nowhere exhibiting the quality of inspired lyricism that I regard as the fundamental talent of a really interesting composer."

Now to see what Mr. Sargent identifies as "inspired lyricism" we need only examine a few of his notices and articles. What he means are melodies of a familiar pattern in comfortably traditional settings. In an article on opera in the January 1960 issue of Horizon he lashes into Berg's Wozzeck, Stravinsky's The Rake's Progress, and the operas of Britten and Walton as "flawed affairs—musicodramatic experiments which lack the elements that draw and retain the enthusiasm of confirmed operagoers. The principal element lacking is the creation of dramatic tension by means of melodies that are really worth singing—that make demands on, and exploit, the expressive power of great voices."

This in the face of Marie's monologue from Wozzeck, Tom's Mad Scene in the Stravinsky opera, the arias of Peter and Ellen in Peter Grimes, and the arias of Cressida and Pandarus in Troilus and Cressida! What does Mr. Sargent regard as melodies really worth singing? Well, he likes most of the operas of Gian Carlo Menotti and he really loves The Ballad of Baby Doe.

The Old Refrain. Of Verdi: "The unfortunate man is incapable of real melody—his airs are such as a man born deaf would compose by calculation of the distances of musical notes and the intervals between them." Of Wagner:

(Continued on page 60)

A Destructive Reactionary

(Continued from page 8)

"Wagner—enemy of melody, seeker after the unorthodox, corrupter of art, eccentric by nature." Of Puccini: "So we get a few set pieces or few prolonged melodies; indeed, the short bursts of sustained melody are generally formless. Here is the Wagner theory skeletonized, almost reduced to an absurdity." Nicolas Slonimsky's Lexicon of Musical Invective is full of it. What a pity he did not quote from Mr. Sargent!

Having disposed of Mr. Schuman and modern American symphonies, Mr. Sargent proceeds to the foundations. He says that the reason that modern composers, by and large, do not seek to please their audience can be found in some current methods of commissioning and scheduling compositions. He notes that Schuman's Seventh was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation in collaboration with the Boston Symphony and adds that "it is common knowledge that the jury of advisers that recommends awards and commissions for the Koussevitzky Foundation consists of Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, and Mr. Schuman—all of them but the first being composers." (It is also common knowledge that the chairman of the board is Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky and that two other members of it are Richard Burgin and Harold Spivacke and they are not composers.)

Mr. Sargent asserts that "much of the contemporary music we are obliged to hear is picked by composers who serve on advisory boards of foundations, and much of it, therefore, is written not for audiences but for the composers who happen to be members of those boards." This, he contends, is "a major source of the stagnation and monotony in contemporary American music." Now it so happens that Mr. Schuman had absolutely nothing to do with the commissioning of his Seventh Symphony. In 1954 the Boston Symphony through its director Charles Munch proposed that the Koussevitzky Foundation should join it in commissioning works by fifteen leading composers to celebrate its 75th anniversary, during the 1955-56 season. Mr. Schuman's name was among the fifteen submitted for approval by the orchestra, the other fourteen being: Benjamin Britten, Henri Dutilleux, Gottfried von Einem, Jacques Ibert, Darius Milhaud, Goffredo Petrassi, Samuel Barber, Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Bohuslav Martinu, Walter Piston, Roger Sessions and Heitor Villa-Lobos—a catholic list, if ever there was one.

And the suggestion that much music is written for the board members who pick it for public performance is idiotic. The board members are perfectly aware that audiences are the tests of music and they are also perfectly aware (which Mr. Sargent is not) that there are audiences all over the world that have shown enthusiasm for the contemporary music that they pick. The "sort of genteel Tammany Hall aroma" in our musical life mentioned by Mr. Sargent exists only in his imagination and in the wishful thinking of composers who have not won public success and are therefore eager to attack those who have.

The cream of the jest is that Mr. Sargent picks the Ford Foundation as the only exception to his rule, the Ford Foundation which has (indeed) "done so much (especially in the field of opera) to inject a ray of excitement into the contemporary musical scene." But unfortunately it was the Koussevitzky Foundation that commissioned Douglas Moore's The Ballad of Baby Doe, which Mr. Sargent salutes as "a truly American opera, and also . . . perhaps the most effective and engaging work of its kind yet to be produced in this country." And the Ford Foundation has commissioned Mr. Schuman to write a work!

But the primary evil of Mr. Sargent's article is its open hostility to a group of composers who are actually the backbone of our contemporary American music. He is wrong when he says that they are unloved and unpopular and he is forgetting one of the most important functions of his own profession as a music critic in turning against the challenging art of his own time. It is not a question of liking this composer or that one—it is a question of openness of mind and willingness to listen.

Sabin

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite.....Faure
Symphony No. 7 (first N. Y. performance
Schuman
Symphony No. 7 in A major. Op. 92
Beethoven

By Ronald Eyer

The usually illuminating notes on the programs of the Boston Symphony by John N. Burk are singularly cryptic and elliptical about the Seventh Symphony of William Schumann, performed for the first time in New York last night.

This leaves the reviewer at a distinct disadvantage, and even makes him a bit huffy, since it gives him nothing to crib and sets him adrift with twenty-five minutes of so of music of which he is wholly innocent and scarecly in a position to learn very much about between Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite and the intermission.

William Schuman, whose Symphony No. 7 was played last night.

However, Mr. Burk suggests that the work has choral characteristics and that it is "declarative" music that makes "strong statements." With these generalities I agree, in the main. But I think there are some things besides to be said even after a single hearing.

Mr. Schuman is an elderly young composer (Aug. 4, 1910 —), and as a much older reporter (July 23, 1910—), I feel emboldened to say that he still is very much in the process of development. This symphony, for example, is a far mellower expression that anticipated. It is, to be sure, vigorous and relentlessly inventive in its pursuit of the sonorities of a very big orchestra. The opening Largo, alternately a fanfare and a prayer, sems to be an introduction to the symphony proper, a high point of which is the third movement, Cantabile intensamente, fo rstrings alone. Here there is a beautifully arched melody which seems to develop out of the harmony rather than the other way round. It is intensely emotional and even sentimental at times. Antoher high point is the closing Scherzando brioso based upon a tricky rhythmic figure of Puckish unpredictablity which leads to a sustained melody for horns and cellos in happy vein followed by a nice long noisy coda.

Mr. Schuman still likes to develop short thematic ideas, a practice for which there are some eminent precedents, and he is not bashful about using rather obvious dissonances which he likes to wham out, glittering and strident, in the brass. These passages sometimes have a chorale-like effect, as Mr. Burk says, and they do have a majesty about them as "statements."

The important fact about this symphony seems to me to be its essentially romantic quality. It sings soulfully, it skips and dances with youthful abandon, sometimes it questions anxiously. If it is not a new Schuman, it is at least a Schuman to whom listeners probably will take more readily than they have to some of his more austere embodiments.

Another Seventh Symphony, Beethoven's, received an eloquent performance from Mr. Munch and his men, as did the ever-fresh incidental music to Maeterlinck's tragedy by Faure.

Youth Series Concerts

The Brooklyn Philharmonia will give the first concert of this season's Youth Series in the Brooklyn Academy of Music at 3 p. m. Saturday. "Sunday Excursion," a one-act opera by Alec Wilder and Arnold Sundgaard, will be the principal item in the program, which Siegfried Landau will conduct. The list also includes Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Carlos Surinach's "Dance Suite" and the Rondo from a Mozart concerto for flute and harp.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
DEC 2 1960

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite.....Faure
Symphony No. 7 (first N. Y. performance
Schuman
Symphony No. 7 in A major. Op. 92
Beethoven

By Ronald Eyer

The usually illuminating notes on the programs of the Boston Symphony by John N. Burk are singularly cryptic and elliptical about the Seventh Symphony of William Schuman, performed for the first time in New York Wednesday.

This leaves the reviewer at a distinct disadvantage, and even makes him a bit huffy, since it gives him nothing to crib and sets him adrift with twenty-five minutes of so of music of which he is wholly innocent and scarcely in a position to learn very much about between Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite and the intermission.

However, Mr. Burk suggests that the work has choral characteristics and that it is "declarative" music that makes "strong statements." With these generalities I agree, in the main. But I think there are some things besides to be said even after a single hearing.

Mr. Schuman is an elderly young composer (Aug. 4, 1910 —), and as a much older reporter (July 23, 1910—), I feel emboldened to say that he still is very much in the process of development. This symphony, for example, is a far mellower expression than anticipated. It is, to be sure, vigorous and relentlessly inventive in its pursuit of the sonorities of a very big orchestra. The opening Largo, alternately a fanfare and a prayer, seems to be an introduction to the symphony proper, a high point of which is the third movement, Cantabile intensamente, for strings alone, Here there is a beautifully arched melody which seems to develop out of the harmony rather than the other way round. It is intensely emotional and even sentimental at times. Antoher high point is the closing Scherzando brioso based upon a tricky rhythmic figure of Puckish unpredictablity which leads to a sustained melody for horns and cellos in happy vein followed by a nice long noisy coda.

Mr. Schuman still likes to develop short thematic ideas, a practice for which there are some eminent precedents, and he is not bashful about using rather obvious dissonances which he likes to wham out, glittering and strident, in the brass. These passages sometimes have a chorale-like effect, as Mr. Burk says, and they do have a majesty about them as "statements."

The important fact about this symphony seems to me to be its essentially romantic quality. It sings soulfully, it skips and dances with youthful abandon, sometimes it questions anxiously. If it is not a new Schuman, it is at least a Schuman to whom listeners probably will take more readily than they have to some of his more austere embodiments.

Another Seventh Symphony, Beethoven's, received an eloquent performance from Mr. Munch and his men, as did the ever-fresh incidental music to Maeterlinck's tragedy by Faure.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIEI D, Mass.
Circ. 11: 664
NOV 27 960

Boston Symphony Returns To New York City Wed.

NEW YORK (UPI) — It is encouraging to learn much progress has been made toward establishing peace in our own country since Feb. 15, 1887. It gives you hope for the world.

Initial Visit

This progress began that February evening of the long ago when the Boston Symphony came to New York for the first time. The musicians were nervous, venturing into hostile country. But they behaved like men.

And what happened? The local critics sheathed their professional stilettoes, self conscious but proud in this magnanimity. They went to the concert with no critical equipment but olive branches.

There had been a recent war between "eastern poets and western critics and philosophers," one music critic remarked. But he definitely favored "peaceful relations" all the way round.

Proved the Contrary

The trouble with Boston was it harbored "a foolish jealousy of New York," he continued. No less foolish, in his view, was its notion that New York had the same feeling about Boston.

Then to prove the contrary he gave the Boston Symphony an excellent notice. He praised everything about it, and was particularly struck that its strings sounded "virile" and "masculine."

In 1960 you can guess only that way back then someone must have suggested the Boston strings were passive and feminine. Either that, or feminizing of strings was being done generally.

The critical tolerance knew no bounds. It was even unaware of Georg Frederic Handel whirling widely in his grave while the Boston violin players stood in a line across the stage and accompanied the harp player plucking Handel's celebrated largo. (Let it be said in extenuation no great master has been more grave-whirled by musicians than Handel.)

Love Is Reciprocated

That was the Boston Symphony's first local concert and Wednesday evening it will open its 75th consecutive season here. It is safe to predict there will be no jealousy-inspired untoward occurrences. In fact, New Yorkers love the Bostonians and are confident the love is reciprocated.

At the end of this new season it will have given 700 concerts in New York since the first one. You can see the progress. The truly optimistic might even say peace has been established in fact.

Another of New York's favorite "foreign" orchestras, the one from Philadelphia, featured an opera in its second concert of its New York concert. It was Bela Bartok's one-acter, "Duke Bluebeard's Castle" and since it is long on musical conversation and short on action and has only two singing characters," it went very well in "concert version."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
DEC 1 1960

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite.....Faure
Symphony No. 7 (first N. Y. performance
Schuman
Symphony No. 7 in A major. Op. 92
Beethoven

By Ronald Eyer

The usually illuminating notes on the programs of the Boston Symphony by John N. Burk are singularly cryptic and elliptical about the Seventh Symphony of William Schuman, performed for the first time in New York last night.

This leaves the reviewer at a distinct disadvantage, and even makes him a bit huffy, since it gives him nothing to crib and sets him adrift with twenty-five minutes of so of music of which he is wholly innocent and scarcely in a position to learn very much about between Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite and the intermission.

However, Mr. Burk suggests that the work has choral characteristics and that it is "declarative" music that makes "strong statements." With these generalities I agree, in the main. But I think there are some things besides to be said even after a single hearing.

Mr. Schuman is an elderly young composer (Aug. 4, 1910 —), and as a much older reporter (July 23, 1910—), I feel emboldened to say that he still is very much in the process of development. This symphony, for example, is a far mellower expression than anticipated. It is, to be sure, vigorous and relentlessly inventive in its pursuit of the sonorities of a very big orchestra. The opening Largo, alternately a fanfare and a prayer, seems to be an introduction to the symphony proper, a high point of which is the third movement, Cantabile intensamente, for strings alone, Here there is a beautifully arched melody which seems to develop out of the harmony rather than the other way round. It is intensely emotional and even sentimental at times. Antoher high point is the closing Scherzando brioso based upon a tricky rhythmic figure of Puckish unpredictablity which leads to a sustained melody for horns and cellos in happy vein followed by a nice long noisy coda.

Mr. Schuman still likes to develop short thematic ideas, a practice for which there are some eminent precedents, and he is not bashful about using rather obvious dissonances which he likes to wham out, glittering and strident, in the brass. These passages sometimes have a chorale-like effect, as Mr. Burk says, and they do have a majesty about them as "statements."

The important fact about this symphony seems to me to be its essentially romantic quality. It sings soulfully, it skips and dances with youthful abandon, sometimes it questions anxiously. If it is not a new Schuman, it is at least a Schuman to whom listeners probably will take more readily than they have to some of his more austere embodiments.

Another Seventh Symphony, Beethoven's, received an eloquent performance from Mr. Munch and his men, as did the ever-fresh incidental music to Maeterlinck's tragedy by Faure.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

DEC4 1960

72

New York to Greet BSO Diplomats

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Thanks to its excellence, the Boston Symphony Orchestra occupies a position of international repute; but its diplomatic relations with New York are less well-known than they are with Tokyo. This week, however, marks the beginning of the 75th consecutive series of Manhattan concerts by the BSO, and when the current concert year ends in the spring of 1961, our orchestra will have presented an even 700 concerts there.

It is an impressive total, illustrating the eminent position of the Boston Symphony in the field of American music. If the New York Philharmonic were to have appeared that many times in Boston we should consider it virtually an adopted New England ensemble. Statistics are not at-hand, but with the possible exception of the nearby Philadelphia Orchestra, probably no other outside American group has played so consistently as the Bostonians in New York.

Standing 'Largo'

Actually, the Boston Symphony's first New York concert was offered at Steinway Hall on Valentine's Day, 1887. The date is a symbolic one; the ardor of the liaison has never waned. At this concert Wilhelm Gericke conducted and Fritz Kneisel, his new concertmaster, was soloist in a performance of the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The debut program also included the "Oberon" Overture, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, and the Helmesberger arrangement of Handel's "Largo."

Scored for harp, string and orchestra, the latter required the violin section to play while standing in place. A New York music reviewer of the time could, with justification, state that the Boston Symphony was an orchestra "of stature," since visible proof was at hand. The "Times," sober as always in judgment, merely declared the Largo "moved the audience as no orchestra playing has moved people in this city of recent years."

Three concerts were featured in New York during the 1886-1887, and the program book announced another since-traditional hegira of the Boston: the national tour. "Plans are now completed for a second tour which will embrace all the larger Central and Western cities, including New York. The concerts of this Orchestra, wherever given, are conducted with the same business system and musical thoroughness, and there is no such thing as a 'substitute player' in its ranks. It gives the best always: Milwaukee and Louisville, St. Louis and New York can recognize no difference in its point of view."

The New Yorker must have been startled to find his native heath described with consummate parochialism as a "Central and Western" city in this cosmopolitan proclamation. It ought to have been gratifying to learn the same sound business system prevailed, though. Touring impresarios of the era had been known to leave the train the stop before the concert, gate receipts in bag; indeed, save for the example of Theodore Thomas who was raising the touring orchestra to a plane of genteel respectability, the road was a notable trail of piracy, flummery and techniques better suited to the con man than the Muse.

Paur at Met

Steinway Hall and then Chickering Hall were used by the BSO in New York until 1893 when the New York "Tribune" reported "an audience of fine appearance an evident refinement" (did this mean the Bostonians had ben hitherto twangling in a raffish music hall environment?) filled "the large music room" at Carnegie Hall, to hear the new conductor. Emil Paur, with the soprano Emma Eames, as the soloist. Save for four seasons (1894-98) at the Metropolitan Opera House, the Boston Symphony has continued to play in Carnegie Hall since. Was Paur satisfied with Cafnegie's properties? One wonders. The billowing Opera House hardly seems an adequate substitute; yet he conducted there until the close of his tenure.

The original New York concert, however, took the city by storm. By the second, our orchestra was attracting an audience that belied the implications of the "Tribune." The Boston "Traveler," reporting the March 2, 1887 concert, gave an account that sounds today as as though New England's cultural Indian summer came early that year.

"Many surprises marked the evening, not the least of which was the character of the audience; in place of faces of a foreign type which accompany one everywhere in cosmopolitan New Nork, here, right alongside, was one of the loveliest old New England grandmammas, with a bevy of nephews and nieces; in the next row a group of fine fellows, New Yorkers it may be, but Harvard men undoubtedly, while it was a pleasure to see all about the faces with which one felt a kimship."

Personally, we prefer the "Times" critic, who observed that "all the barriers of reserve must fall" before the splendor or the strings. "The test was a severe one," he said, "for any organization, and especially one coming from a city which has at times shown a foolish jealousy of New York, and an equally groundless fear that the feeling was reciprocated."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
DEC 1 1960

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Open 75th Season

Though world tensions may not be abating, the Boston Symphony has been making its own progress in this direction.

Not only was there a new symphony last night in Carnegie Hall—American composer William Schuman's Seventh—but a transformation in the ensemble which spelled a new Charles Munch and a revitalized orchestra.

The group opened its 75th season of local concert-giving here by sounding as if it had taken inventory over the summer and set its house in beautiful order. A mellowness and sense of repose—qualities which have been increasingly disappearing from the ensemble's sound and style in recent years—were back in abundance.

Any orchestra naturally reflects the personality of its music director. Munch, noted for his dynamic qualities, can always communicate excitement and brilliance, especially in the French repertoire. But too often his drive has been accompanied by a brittleness and a bypassing of the highest standards of instrumental finesse.

Ripe Age of 80

Now it seems a miracle has taken place. At the ripe age of 80, the Bostonians have taken a new lease on life.

In Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, in the incidental music from Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande," and in the Schuman, the orchestra exhibited the best aspects of youth and age. Tonal radiance was linked with admirable technical discipline and mature perspective in interpretation.

As the New Yorker puts it this week: "Anybody with a free summer can write his first novel at 19, but to write it at 91—that takes genius."

Well, the Bostonians have have turned the trick a bit early in celebration of their anniversaries. They've done it at 80.

Schuman's symphony was commissioned almost six years ago by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony, in honor of the ensemble's 75th anniversary. Only completed last summer, it represents in many respects an expanding horizon for the 50-year-old composer. It's four movements—Largo assai, Vigoroso, Cantabile intensamente, scherzando brioso—take about 29 minutes and are played without pause.

Express Epic Quality

Altogether they express an epic quality and emotional urgency which weren't present in the fifth and sixth Symphonies. The longest section, the third, for strings alone, oozes with sensuousness, but this is accompanied by a tragic, relentless search. There is a groping which is never resolved but reaches a measure of tranquility before the finale.

The idiom is complex but not confused because there is inevitability in the building of the structure. And there is vividness of feeling, especially in the mysterious Largo, punctuated as it is, by thrusts from dark-colored instruments and an occasional surprise spot of brightness from the brass. In fact, the work alternately smolders and tingles with suspense—an achievement in a contemporary symphony.

165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,552
DEC 1 1960

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Bostonians Bring a 'First'

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony opened the orchestra's 75th season here with the first New York performance of William Schuman's Seventh Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night.

On first hearing it not only sustained interest in its entirety but invited further acquaintance.

Much of this music is contemplative and somber. The opening largo moves deliberately almost to the point of being funereal at times. Its texture has been thickened by chordal complexities, but as sound they convey both mood and purpose.

'An Alive Quality'

The second movement breaks into this serious streak with a brilliant fanfare, but the prevailing meditative course becomes reestablished in the third. The finale bears the indelible stamp of American rhythmic impulse and ends with optimistic and brassy assertiveness.

An alive quality permeates the work. That this comes without resort to raucous writing suggests that Mr. Schuman has reached a new phase of maturity in expression. Certainly it has more emotional communication. Indeed, on first impression, this symphony stands out as one of his best compositions.

One reason is that it offers more than just composition though the listener becomes quite conscious of ideas being worked out with care. Though its harmonies and orchestral fabric reminded me at times of Honegger, it has an identity of its own.

Coming as it does on the threshold of the sixties, this symphony may point the direction native music may take in consolidating its assets.

Originally commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, it has turned up strategically to usher in its 75th season here.

That it was worthy to do so the performance revealed clearly. Mr. Munch and the players paid tribute to Mr. Schuman's skill in orchestration in their exposition of his music.

The concert began with Faure's identical music to "Pelleas and Melisande." Its subdued, pastel beauty became an artstic prelude to the Schuman. As the symphony opened, it sounded like more of the same music brought up to date, especially as a study in orchestral textures.

Beethoven's seventh symphony concluded the program.

New Tenor

Another tenor tried out in the role of Don Jose in Bizet's "Carmen" at the Metropolitan last night. Leonard Del Ferro gave a conscientious performance but neither his voice nor his action qualified as first class in this debut.

A pale interpretation of the "Flower Song" with over-fussy acting did not endear him to the audience. His voice sounded small and strident in the wrong places during Act 2. What another performance may reveal is anybody's guess.

Incidentally that portion of the opera that I heard sounded drab.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
DEC1 1960

Symphony Opens 75th New York Season This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be absent from Boston this week in order to inaugurate the Orchestra's 75th consecutive season of concerts in New York. In addition to the two concerts at Carnegie Hall, the Orchestra will also perform in New Haven, Washington and Brooklyn.

The third concert of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will be held at Symphony Hall on December 6, (Tuesday, 8:30). Charles Munch's program for this concert includes Bach's Suite No. 4, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Lorin Maazel will be the Orchestra's guest conductor for several concerts beginning December 9th. Mr. Maazel's first program, to be heard Friday (Dec. 9, 2:15) and Saturday (Dec. 10, 8:30), will include Geminiani's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Richard Strauss' Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 Thursday Dec. 8.

Mr. Maazel has also announced his Symphony Hall programs for December 16-17. At these concerts he will conduct Beethoven's Twelve contra-dances, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, Stravinsky's Symphonic Poem "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poe'me de l'estase."

The complete programs:

Tuesday, Dec. 6, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch conducting: Bach, Suite No. 4; Piston Three New England Sketches; Franck, Symphony in D minor.

Thursday, Dec. 8, 7:30; Symphony Hall; Open Rehearsal, Maazel conducting.

Friday, Dec. 9, 2:15; Saturday, Dec. 10, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Maazel cond. Geminiani, Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2; Strauss, "Also sprach Zarathustra", Symphonic Poem; Brahms, Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73.

Friday, Dec. 16, 2:15; Saturday, Dec. 17, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Maazel Beethoven Twelve Contra-dances; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68; Stravinsky, "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem; Scriabin, "Le Po'eme de l'extase," Op. 54.

THE EVENING STAR A-19
Washington, D. C., Friday, December 2, 1960

NEWS OF MUSIC

Boston Orchestra Still Among Best

By DAY THORPE
Star Music Critic

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor. Constitution Hall. Program: Pelleas and Melisande, Opus 80, Faure; Symphony No. 7, in A, Opus 92, Beethoven.

Gabriel Faure did not write a great deal of orchestral music, and what he did compose is all too infrequently heard nowadays in performance. The incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande," given a stunning performance last night by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, is four years older than Debussy's opera, and more conventional in idiom. It has a veiled and tenuous charm.

It is inevitable, but not unfortunate, I think, that we must today listen to Faure's music for each scene always with Debussy's handling of the same situation in our ears, just as we cannot read Marlowe's "Faustus" without thinking of Goethe.

William Schuman's latest symphony, the seventh, commissioned jointly by the Koussevitsky Foundation and the Boston Orchestra, is a broadly developed work in four movements. I find it not highly original or arresting (this in itself is no particular disparagement) but very pleasant to listen to, with many passages of mildly entertaining orchestration, as for example the nervous extended duet for trumpet and horn in the finale. The orchestra gave the new work a stunning performance.

Dr. Munch has played the Beethoven seventh symphony on three different trips to Washington in the last few years. It must be a favorite of his, and yet, though I admire his readings of French music and of a great deal of his modern repertoire, I do not feel very sympathetic to his Beethoven — particularly the seventh symphony.

Most good conductors believe the way to play Beethoven is to let the man have his say; Dr. Munch seems to think that no two consecutive phrases are to be left alone. His frequent tempo changes and pointless rubatos seem quite arbitrary, and tend to make Beethoven fussy instead of direct. The fugato passage in the slow movement, to cite only one example, was so far from the style of what goes before and after that it might well have been lifted from another work.

Whatever you may think of how it is conducted, there is no doubt that the Boston Orchestra is still one of the world's best, nor that it does not allow an almost continuous year-round schedule to make its music cut and dried.

Wash. Post 12/2/60

Postlude

Bostonians Present New Schuman Work

By Paul Hume

The lure of Boston Symphony and Charles Munch filled Constitution Hall last night with an audience that was politely restrained in response to Faure, demonstrative in behalf of William Schuman's newest, Seventh Symphony, and shouting when it came to acknowledging the Seventh Symphony of Beethoven.

Hume

The Faure was the touching beauty of four pieces from his incidental music for Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Melisande." Unique in French orchestral literature, it is a series of singularly haunting portraits. Munch and the orchestra played with sounds that melted the heart.

The Beethoven symphony, at the end of the evening, had a strong feeling of urgency in the rapid, though not too fast, tempo of the Scherzo, with its powerful accents, and the driving force of the finale. The opening movements were played with constant attention to delicacies of balance and the strong forward line that is needed for a full appreciation.

The Seventh Symphony by William Schuman, new this year, is a piece of unmistakable power. It presents a new profile among contemporary American symphonies. Among the elements that can be discerned in that profile from the first hearing of a vast and extraordinarily complex structure is a striking new field of sonorities, achieved through the use of a large choir of woodwinds playing in a massed manner. These winds are deployed in a harmonic scheme that uses chords fashioned out of nearly all the notes of the diatonic scale at one time.

Thanks to his tremendous sense of instrumental textures, Schuman can give us chords of high density without creating dissonances of undue harshness. Indeed the effect is quite precisely the opposite, in new sounds of unusual richness and luster.

The scheme of the four-section work, played without pause, is not new in its alternations between slow and fast movements. But there is everywhere the feeling of a work with which Schuman has broken through into a new realm toward which he was moving, but without so marked a sense of achievement, in his "Credendum."

For all of these words, I have still told you relatively little about Schuman's new music. The reason is that here is one of those compositions whose very substance and style make it not only impossible but highly presumptuous to attempt much detailed discussion of thematic or structural minutiae.

Lest you are wondering about certain simpler matters, the symphony is full of song, of which the final cello passage is only one glorious example. And it ends in a blaze of the E flat tonic triad. For further comment we must await further performance and the Boston's forthcoming recording. But beyond question the Schuman Seventh is a genuine master stroke.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
DEC 5 1960

Symphony Rings Bell At Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra moved into Brooklyn Friday evening and from the applause at the Academy of Music and the laudatory comments rippling through the intermission and later the homeward-bound crowd, someone ought to thank the Women's Committee for the Boston Symphony concerts in the borough.

The orchestra's opening Brooklyn performance gave local concertgoers an opportunity to find out why the Boston Symphony and conductor Charles Munch are top national favorites.

And they found that France had imported a delightful performer in the person of soloist Monique Haas, who showed a profound, if heavy mastery on both ends of the repertoir gamut—Mozart and Ravel.

Newcomer on Scene.

The newcomer to the American concert scene demonstrated in her performance of the Mozart D Minor Concerto, No. 20, an outstanding feel for the music.

Her technique possesses a ponderousness which belies her femininity; but the heaviness did not detract too greatly from the Mozart piece, which borders on the romantic and is one of the two concertos he composed in the minor key.

Miss Haas was right at home with the Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand, a showy one-movement piece originally written for the Austrian pianist, Paul Wittgenstein, who lost his right arm during World War I.

Left Hand 'Touch.'

Here Miss Haas' heavy touch came to better use. She gave the keyboard a going over with her left hand, using her right hand on the piano woodwork to steady herself at times. The piece itself, flashy even for Ravel, lends more to the eye than the ear.

Maestro Munch, a perfectionist, had nothing to complain about in his orchestra's rendition of the Bach Suite No. 4 in D.

He imparted in his players the restraint which Bach most probably envisioned when he wrote the music early in the 18th century. The orchestra went from the organ chords to the light fugue dances with ease.

Also on the opening concert bill of fare was the Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, performed for the first time in the fall of 1959. So new is the dissonant work that Mr. Munch kept the score before him on the podium. Mr. Piston took a bow with the orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
SAT. 44,492
NOV 26 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to the Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960 - 61 season.

Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 2,811
NOV 17 1960

Boston Symphony to Open Season Here December 2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to The Brooklyn Academy of Music sine 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30 p.m. The dates are December 2, 1960, January 6, 1961, February 17, March 10 and April 7.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now at the peak of its international fame. At the close of last season, the orchestra made an extensive tour of the Far East where it was acclaimed by thousands of Asiatic music lovers. As in this country, the reputation of the Boston orchestra's brilliance, its silken tone and remarkable precision, had preceded it to the Far East through its numerous recordings, and the orchestra and its conductor were greeted as old friends, particularly in Japan. The orchestra played to vast audiences and on its return home was thanked by President Eisenhower for its participation in the International Cultural Exchange Program.

Monique Haas, French pianist who has a formidable reputation throughout Europe, will be soloist at the first concert in The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, December 2. Miss Haas will be heard in two works, Mozart's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D minor, K. 466 and Maurice Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. The latter work was composed by Ravel for Paul Wittgenstein, who lost his right arm in World War I and commissioned Ravel to write a concerto using only the left hand. The Boston Symphony Orhcestra, with Munch conducting, will open the program with Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, and will introduce to Brooklyn audiences Walter Piston's "New England Sketches."

Subscriptions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Brooklyn are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 17. Subscription prices for the series of five concerts are $14.50, $17.50 and $20.50 for Orchestra and Mezzanine, and $11.50 and $14.50 for Balcony seats.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 847,979 S. 1,275,193
DEC 2 1960

Boston Symphony At Academy Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will perform its first Brooklyn concert of the 1960-61 season this evening, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

The Bostonians' concert will be the first of 11 major music and dance programs to be presented at the Academy during December. Monique Haas, French pianist, will make her first New York appearance as soloist with the orchestra.

Miss Haas has appeared throughout Europe, including the Soviet Union where she was acclaimed for her interpretations of the classic piano literature. She will perform Mozart's Concerto in D minor, K 466, and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. The orchestral portion of the program includes Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major and Walter Piston's "New England Sketches."

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,035
NOV 17 1960

Five Performances By Symphony Orch.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to the Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season.

Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will take place on Friday evenings at 8:30. The dates are Dec. 2, 1960, Jan. 6, 1961, Feb. 17, March 10 and April 7.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,719
NOV 26 1960

MUSIC-ART-DRAMA

The Boston Symphnoy Orchestra, which has been coming to The Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perfrom five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30 p.m. The dates are December 2, 1960, January 6, 1961, February 17, 1961, March 10 and April 7.

Subscriptions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Brooklyn are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 17. Subscription prices for the series of the five concerts are $14.50, $17.50 and $20.50 for Orhestra and Mezzanine, and $11.50 and $14.50 for Balcony seats. Prices for single concerts are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. All mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of tickets.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 13,000
NOV 19 1960

Boston Symphony in 5 Academy Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to The Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30 p.m. The dates are Dec. 2, Jan. 6, Feb. 17, Mar. 10 and Apr. 7.

Monique Haas, French pianist will be soloist at the first concert in The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, Dec. 2, Miss Haas will be heard in two works, Mozart's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D minor, K. 466 and Maurice Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. The latter work was composed by Ravel for Paul Wittgenstein, who lost his right arm in World War I and commissioned Ravel to write a concerto using only the left hand. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Munch conducting, will open the program with Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, and will introduce to Brooklyn audiences Walter Piston's "New England Sketches".

Subscriptions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Brooklyn are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn 17. Subscription prices for the series of five concerts are $14.50, $17.50 and $20.50 for Orchestra and Mezzanine, and $11.50 and $14.50 for Balcony seats. Prices for single concerts are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. All mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of tickets.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,000
NOV 18 1960

Boston Symphony Lists 5 Concerts At Boro Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to The Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will perform five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert during Dr. Munch's mid-season vacation.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30 p.m. The dates are December 2, 1960, January 6, 1961, Feoruary 17, March 10 and April 7.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now at the peak of its national fame. At the close of last season, the orchestra made an extensive tour of the Far East where it was acclaimed by thousands of Asiatic music lovers. As in this country, the reputation of the Boston orchestra's brilliance, its silken tone and remarkable precision, had preceded it to the Far East through its numerous recordings, and the orchestra and its conductor were greeted as old friends, particularly in Japan. The orchestra played to vast audiences and on its return home was thanked by President Eisenhower for its participation in the International Cultural Exchange Program.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 13,000
DEC 3 1960

Stellar Musical Programs Today At Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, performed its first Brooklyn concert of the 1960-61 season last night at The Brooklyn Academy of Music. The Bostonians' concert was the first of 11 major music and dance programs to be presented at the Academy during the month of December. Monique Haas, French pianist, made her first New York appearance as soloist.

The Brooklyn Philharmonia, conducted by Siegfried Landau, will make two appearances during the month, the first this afternoon in a Youth Concert, and the second next Saturday, December 10th, when Nathan Milstein, world-famous violin virtuoso, will be soloist in one of the regular Saturday evening concerts.

Tonight, the Ballet Espanol-Ximenez-Vargas, will perform a program of Spanish dances. This engagement marks the only New York appearance of the season by this company.

Nadia Koutzen, violinist, who appeared in the Academy's 1959-60 Leventritt Foundation series, will return to the Music Hall stage tomorrow afternoon, at 3 p.m. Her program will include works by Mozart, Bach, Brahms, Chausson, Ravel, Sarasate and Wieniawski.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 847,979 S. 1,275,193
NOV 22 1960

Boston Symphony Lists 5 Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been coming to the Brooklyn Academy of Music since 1888, will play five subscription concerts in the Academy during the 1960-61 season. Charles Munch will conduct four of the five concerts. He has invited Erich Leinsdorf to conduct the February concert.

As has been the custom since the turn of the century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will all be on Friday evenings at 8:30 p.m. The dates are Dec. 2, Jan. 6, Feb. 17, March 10 and April 7.

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,035
DEC 1 1960

CONCERT FRIDAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will perform its first Brooglyn concert of the 1960-61 season this Friday evening, December 2, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music. 30 Lafayette Avenue.

WOODHAVEN, N.Y.
LEADER-OBSERVER
W. 3,650
DEC 1 1960

Symphony Orchestra Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will perform its first Brooklyn concert of the 1960-61 season this Friday evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette avenue. The Bostonians' concert will be the first of eleven major music and dance programs to be presented at the Academy during the month of December.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 2D CONCERT

Program Includes Mozart, Bach, Piston and Ravel—Monique Haas Is Soloist

By ALLEN HUGHES

Yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony, its second of the week in Carnegie Hall ended well after performances that ranged from objectionable to routine. There were some that were disappointing because of the music involved.

The objectionable performance was that given Bach. At this late stage, however, it scarcely seems worthwhile to protest Mr. Munch's Bach style very strongly. Year after year, both here and at Tanglewood, he has clung to the notion that the orchestral suites contain pieces to be toyed with, to be made cuter, or lusher, or more dazzling than almost anything you could imagine. The idea, presumably, is that poor old Bach simply did not have the wit to include all the ritards, high-speed metronome marking high-speed metronome markings, diminuendos, and so forth, that it takes to make his masterpieces palatable.

Mozart, apparently, was somewhat more on the ball, but his D minor concerto did not find Miss Haas and Mr. Munch appreciating its inherent subtleties of color, exuberance, wit and lyricism. The notes were there, to be sure, and the governing tempos were reasonable, but the concerto seemed unfamiliarly long as it jogged along uneventfully.

Mr. Munch is far more persuasive with the contmeporary repertory, and as the Piston pieces approached one hoped for a good measure of esthetic satisfaction. Unfortunately, Mr. Piston did not manage to put the best of his estimable talent into the "New England Sketches."

"Seaside" is a kind of "La Mer américaine." "Summer Evening" is a rather weak scherzo of the wispy variety. And "Mountains" rambles and falters in its attempt to be strong, or rugged, or whatever.

But then came the concerto Ravel wrote for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist who lost his right arm during World War I. The composition is not Ravel's greatest, but it is a tour de force worth hearing on occasion.

Miss Haas, happily, has both hands, but she did not cheat in playing the piece (unless one could call it cheating to hold on to the piano frame to maintain balance now and then). Her technique is solid and powerful, and she projected both the brilliance and drama of the music.

Since Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in their element, too, everything in the score sounded as it should. The borrowed-from-America "blue" notes were properly insinuating, and their companionable jazz-inspired rhythms were realized unself-consciously.

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. Monique Haas, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 4 ..... Bach
Piano Concerto in D minor (K. 466) ..... Mozart
Three New England Sketches ..... Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
NOV 28 1960

Footlights and Spotlights

Ravel Concerto, Due at Academy, Has a True Hollywood Flavor

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

The story of Ravel's Concerto for Left Hand—to be heard at Friday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Brooklyn—really calls for a Hollywood treatment.

The film would open in Vienna with the birth in 1887 of Paul Wittgenstein. His family is musical. Mendelssohn, Clara Schumann and Brahms are friends. Paul studies musical theory. In 1913 he appears in public for the first time as a concert pianist.

Cannon herald World War I and tragedy for the young pianist, who is wounded and loses his right arm. But Paul Wittgenstein transcends the loss, learning to play amazingly well with his left hand.

Ravel and Richard Strauss are among those who composed for him. "His capacity for wide spans and quick leaps," writes a critic, "enables him to perform with one-hand works which offer difficulties even for the ordinary pianist."

* * *

The Ravel concerto will be played in this first Boston Symphony concert of the Academy of Music's five-concert series by Monique Haas, a French pianist whose reputation in Europe is formidable.

Miss Haas will be making her New York debut Friday, although that is how the Boston Symphony is advertising her appearance the next evening at Carnegie Hall. Charles Munch will be on the podium to conduct Bach's "Suite No. 4 in D Major," Piston's "New England Sketches," Mozart's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D Minor" and the Ravel piece.

Subscriptions for the five concerts—Mr. Munch will conduct four—range from $11.50 to $20.50. Seats for single concerts run from $3 to $4.50. The Academy's telephone number is ST 3-6700.

* * *

MONIQUE HAAS appears as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Boston Symphony

Pianist Monique Haas made her first New York orchestral appearance with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting, Dec. 3. First she played Mozart's Concerto No. 20, K. 466, but neither the soloist nor the orchestra achieved the delicacy or classic manner so dear to those who love Mozart. In contrast, Miss Haas was superb in Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. Her brilliant technique—it is always incredible that all this is performed with just one hand—was matched by the virtuosity of the orchestra, and this was easily the most exciting and satisfying performance of the afternoon. Munch also conducted Bach's Suite No. 4 and "Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston.

Jaime Laredo, winner of the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, will make his first New York orchestral appearance, Jan. 4, as soloist with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony, at Carnegie Hall. He will play the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. The program will also include the New York premiere of Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation . . . . Francis Poulenc, distinguished French composer, will be in Boston, Jan. 20 and 21, to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances. The programs will also include Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, with the composer and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 614,169
DEC 5 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 2D CONCERT

Program Includes Mozart, Bach, Piston and Ravel—Monique Haas Is Soloist

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. Monique Haas, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 4 ..... Bach
Piano Concert, in D minor (K. 466) ..... Mozart
Three New England Sketches ..... Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

Saturday's concert by the Boston Symphony, its second of the week in Carnegie Hall, ended well after performances that ranged from objectionable to routine. There were some that were disappointing because of the music involved.

The objectionable performance was that given Bach. At this late stage, however, it scarcely seems worthwhile to protest Mr. Munch's Bach style very strongly. Year after year, both here and at Tanglewood, he has clung to the notion that the orchestral suites contain pieces to be toyed with, to be made cuter, or lusher, or more dazzling than almost anything you could imagine. The idea, presumably, is that poor old Bach simply did not have the wit to include all the ritards, high-speed metronome markings, diminuendos, and so forth, that it takes to make his masterpieces palatable.

Mozart, apparently, was somewhat more on the ball, but his D minor concerto did not find Monique Haas and Mr. Munch appreciating its inherent subtleties of color, exuberance, wit and lyricism. The notes were there, to be sure, and the governing tempos were reasonable, but the concerto seemed unfamiliarly long as it jogged along uneventfully.

Mr. Munch is far more persuasive with the contemporary repertory, and as the Piston pieces approached one hoped for a good measure of esthetic satisfaction. Unfortunately, Mr. Piston did not manage to put the best of his estimable talent into the "New England Sketches."

"Seaside" is a kind of "La Mer américaine." "Summer Evening" is a rather weak scherzo of the wispy variety. And "Mountains" rambles and falters in its attempt to be strong, or rugged, or whatever.

But then came the concerto Ravel wrote for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist who lost his right arm during World War I. The composition is not Ravel's greatest, but it is a tour de force worth hearing on occasion.

Monique Haas, happily, has both hands, but she did not cheat in playing the piece (unless one could call it cheating to hold on to the piano frame to maintain balance now and then). Her technique is solid and powerful, and she projected both the brilliance and drama of the music.

Since Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in their element, too, everything in the score sounded as it should. The borrowed-from-America "blue" notes were properly insinuating, and their companionable jazz-inspired rhythms were realized unself-consciously.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Monique Haas With The Boston Symphony

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Monique Haas, pianist, Carnegie Hall, Dec. 3, A—A conservative program opened with J. S. Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, amply familiar, and given a mellow reading with a somewhat larger orchestra than one associates with works of this era. The opening Overture was played with over-deliberate pace; the latter sections had grace and rich charm.

Monique Haas, the well-known French pianist, making her first appearance with orchestra in New York, was heard in two concerti. Mozart's Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K. 466, had a deft but somewhat too carefully planned reading. It lacked a certain sponstaneity and conviction, though technically expert. The Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand, one of Miss Haas' specialties, called forth a much more glowing and dramatic performance, in which the orchestra also gave a high-powered treatment. This score had never seemed so much of a personal utterance as it did on this occasion.

The other work on the program was Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," a trio of pastels with fine workmanship but with less than memorable thematic substance. The idiom is mildly acerbic; the vision conjured up is not seizing as a whole. The composer was called on stage to share bows with the conductor.

R. K.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Monique Haas Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Dec. 3, 2:30.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Monique Haas, pianist. J. S. Bach: Suite No. 4, D major. Mozart: Piano Concerto, D minor, K. 466. Walter Piston: "Three New England Sketches." Ravel: Piano Concerto for the Left Hand.

To play Mozart's D minor Concerto and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand in one afternoon is a test not only of stylistic versatility but of physical adjustment and endurance. Miss Haas acquitted herself very well on all accounts. Her Mozart was polished, assured, and well integrated with Mr. Munch's accompaniment. It was not inspired playing, but it was intelligent and cultivated.

The Ravel had an exciting sweep and plenitude of tonal color. Offhand, one would say that this is a man's concerto, but Miss Haas performed it with amazing strength and boldness. It is a fascinating score, completely unorthodox and full of originality. Every time that I hear it, I discover new things in it. The orchestra reveled in its dark, impassioned sonorities and rhythms.

Piston's neo-impressionistic "Seaside" keeps one constantly alert through its subtle harmonic shifts and clouds of iridescent color. But how mechanical is the "Summer Evening" and how humdrum are the "Mountains"! It is good to find him working programmatically, though, even if the results are not wholly satisfying.

—Robert Sabin

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,189 S. 1,254,635
DEC 4 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 2D CONCERT

Program Includes Mozart, Bach, Piston and Ravel—Monique Haas Is Soloist

By ALLEN HUGHES

Yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony, its second of the week in Carnegie Hall ended well after performances that ranged from objectionable to routine. There were some that were disappointing because of the music involved.

The objectionable performance was that given Bach. At this late stage, however, it scarcely seems worthwhile to protest Mr. Munch's Bach style very strongly. Year after year, both here and at Tanglewood, he has clung to the notion that the orchestral suites contain pieces to be toyed with, to be made cuter, or lusher, or more dazzling than almost anything you could imagine. The idea, presumably, is that poor old Bach simply did not have the wit to include all the ritards, high-speed metromone marking high-speed metromone markings, diminuendos, and so forth, that it takes to make his masterpieces palatable.

Mozart, apparently, was somewhat more on the ball, but his D minor concerto did not find Miss Haas and Mr. Munch appreciating its inherent subtleties of color, exhuberance, wit and lyricism. The notes were there, to be sure, and the governing tempos were reasonable, but the concerto seemed unfamiliarly long as it jogged along uneventfully.

Mr. Munch is far more persuasive with the contmeporary repertory, and as the Piston pieces approached one hoped for a good measure of esthetic satisfaction. Unfortunately, Mr. Piston did not manage to put the best of his estimable talent into the "New England Sketches."

"Seaside" is a kind of "La Mer américaine." "Summer Evening" is a rather weak scherzo of the wispy variety. And "Mountains" rambles and falters in its attempt to be strong, or rugged, or whatever.

But then came the concerto Ravel wrote for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist who lost his right arm during World War I. The composition is not Ravel's greatest, but it is a tour de force worth hearing on occasion.

Miss Haas, happily, has both hands, but she did not cheat in playing the piece (unless one could call it cheating to hold on to the piano frame to maintain balance now and then). Her technique is solid and powerful, and she projected both the brilliance and drama of the music.

Since Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in their element, too, everything in the score sounded as it should. The borrowed-from-America "blue" notes were properly insinuating, and their companionable jazz-inspired rhythms were realized unself-consciously.

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. Monique Haas, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 4 ..... Bach
Piano Concerto in D minor (K. 466) ..... Mozart
Three New England Sketches ..... Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
NOV 28 1960

Footlights and Spotlights

Ravel Concerto, Due at Academy, Has a True Hollywood Flavor

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer

The story of Ravel's Concerto for Left Hand—to be heard at Friday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Brooklyn—really calls for a Hollywood treatment.

The film would open in Vienna with the birth in 1887 of Paul Wittgenstein. His family is musical. Mendelssohn, Clara Schumann and Brahms are friends. Paul studies musical theory. In 1913 he appears in public for the first time as a concert pianist.

Cannon herald World War I and tragedy for the young pianist, who is wounded and loses his right arm. But Paul Wittgenstein transcends the loss, learning to play amazingly well with his left hand.

Ravel and Richard Strauss are among those who composed for him. "His capacity for wide spans and quick leaps," writes a critic, "enables him to perform with one-hand works which offer difficulties even for the ordinary pianist."

* * *

The Ravel concerto will be played in this first Boston Symphony concert of the Academy of Music's five-concert series by Monique Haas, a French pianist whose reputation in Europe is formidable.

Miss Haas will be making her New York debut Friday, although that is how the Boston Symphony is advertising her appearance the next evening at Carnegie Hall. Charles Munch will be on the podium to conduct Bach's "Suite No. 4 in D Major," Piston's "New England Sketches," Mozart's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D Minor" and the Ravel piece.

Subscriptions for the five concerts—Mr. Munch will conduct four—range from $11.50 to $28.50. Seats for single concerts run from $3 to $4.50. The Academy's telephone number is ST 3-6700.

MONIQUE HAAS appears as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Boston Symphony

Pianist Monique Haas made her first New York orchestral appearance with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting, Dec. 3. First she played Mozart's Concerto No. 20, K. 466, but neither the soloist nor the orchestra achieved the delicacy or classic manner so dear to those who love Mozart. In contrast, Miss Haas was superb in Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. Her brilliant technique—it is always incredible that all this is performed with just one hand—was matched by the virtuosity of the orchestra, and this was easily the most exciting and satisfying performance of the afternoon. Munch also conducted Bach's Suite No. 4 and "Three New England Sketches" by Walter Piston.

Jaime Laredo, winner of the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, will make his first New York orchestral appearance, Jan. 4, as soloist with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony, at Carnegie Hall. He will play the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. The program will also include the New York premiere of Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation . . . Francis Poulenc, distinguished French composer, will be in Boston, Jan. 20 and 21, to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances. The programs will also include Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, with the composer and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 614,169
DEC 5 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 2D CONCERT

Program Includes Mozart, Bach, Piston and Ravel—Monique Haas Is Soloist

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. Monique Haas, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 4 ..... Bach
Piano Concert, in D minor (K. 466) ..... Mozart
Three New England Sketches ..... Piston
Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

Saturday's concert by the Boston Symphony, its second of the week in Carnegie Hall, ended well after performances that ranged from objectionable to routine. There were some that were disappointing because of the music involved.

The objectionable performance was that given Bach. At this late stage, however, it scarcely seems worthwhile to protest Mr. Munch's Bach style very strongly. Year after year, both here and at Tanglewood, he has clung to the notion that the orchestral suites contain pieces to be toyed with, to be made cuter, or lusher, or more dazzling than almost anything you could imagine. The idea, presumably, is that poor old Bach simply did not have the wit to include all the ritards, high-speed metronome markings, diminuendos, and so forth, that it takes to make his masterpieces palatable.

Mozart, apparently, was somewhat more on the ball, but his D minor concerto did not find Monique Haas and Mr. Munch appreciating its inherent subtleties of color, exuberance, wit and lyricism. The notes were there, to be sure, and the governing tempos were reasonable, but the concerto seemed unfamiliarly long as it jogged along uneventfully.

Mr. Munch is far more persuasive with the contemporary repertory, and as the Piston pieces approached one hoped for a good measure of esthetic satisfaction. Unfortunately, Mr. Piston did not manage to put the best of his estimable talent into the "New England Sketches."

"Seaside" is a kind of "La Mer américaine." "Summer Evening" is a rather weak scherzo of the wispy variety. And "Mountains" rambles and falters in its attempt to be strong, or rugged, or whatever.

But then came the concerto Ravel wrote for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist who lost his right arm during World War I. The composition is not Ravel's greatest, but it is a tour de force worth hearing on occasion.

Monique Haas, happily, has both hands, but she did not cheat in playing the piece (unless one could call it cheating to hold on to the piano frame to maintain balance now and then). Her technique is solid and powerful, and she projected both the brilliance and drama of the music.

Since Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in their element, too, everything in the score sounded as it should. The borrowed-from-America "blue" notes were properly insinuating, and their companionable jazz-inspired rhythms were realized unselfconsciously.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Monique Haas With The Boston Symphony

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Monique Haas, pianist, Carnegie Hall, Dec. 3, 2:30—A conservative program opened with J. S. Bach's Suite No. 4 in D major, amply familiar, and given a mellow reading with a somewhat larger orchestra than one associates with works of this era. The opening Overture was played with over-deliberate pace; the latter sections had grace and rich charm.

Monique Haas, the well-known French pianist, making her first appearance with orchestra in New York, was heard in two concerti. Mozart's Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K. 466, had a deft but somewhat too carefully planned reading. It lacked a certain sponstaneity and conviction, though technically expert. The Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand, one of Miss Haas' specialties, called forth a much more glowing and dramatic performance, in which the orchestra also gave a high-powered treatment. This score had never seemed so much of a personal utterance as it did on this occasion.

The other work on the program was Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," a trio of pastels with fine workmanship but with less than memorable thematic substance. The idiom is mildly acerbic; the vision conjured up is not seizing as a whole. The composer was called on stage to share bows with the conductor.

R. K.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JAN 1961

Monique Haas Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Dec. 3, 2:30.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Monique Haas, pianist. J. S. Bach: Suite No. 4, D major. Mozart: Piano Concerto, D minor, K. 466. Walter Piston: "Three New England Sketches." Ravel: Piano Concerto for the Left Hand.

To play Mozart's D minor Concerto and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand in one afternoon is a test not only of stylistic versatility but of physical adjustment and endurance. Miss Haas acquitted herself very well on all accounts. Her Mozart was polished, assured, and well integrated with Mr. Munch's accompaniment. It was not inspired playing, but it was intelligent and cultivated.

The Ravel had an exciting sweep and plenitude of tonal color. Offhand, one would say that this is a man's concerto, but Miss Haas performed it with amazing strength and boldness. It is a fascinating score, completely unconventional and full of originality. Every time that I hear it, I discover new things in it. The orchestra reveled in its dark, impassioned sonorities and rhythms.

Piston's neo-impressionistic "Seaside" keeps one constantly alert through its subtle harmonic shifts and clouds of iridescent color. But how mechanical is the "Summer Evening" and how humdrum are the "Mountains"! It is good to find him working programmatically, though, even if the results are not wholly satisfying.

—Robert Sabin

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 847,979 S. 1,275,193
SEP 11 1960

Brooklyn Academy Set For Its 102nd Season

The Brooklyn Academy of Music, a division of Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, will present a comprehensive calendar of events during its 102d season. More than 300 programs, including color travelogues, motion pictures, lectures, forums, stage plays, concerts, folk dancing and children's shows, will be offered.

Beginning Wednesday, Sept. 28, when the first of 30 folk-dancing sessions will be held, the season will continue into next May. Last season more than 373,664 persons visited the Academy.

THE SEASON will begin formally Monday night, Oct. 10, when the Charles Pope Choristers will present their production of "H. M. S. Pinafore." The following Monday night, the first Travel and Adventure film-lecture will initiate the 1960-61 series of the Academy's most popular membership series.

The acting company of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts will return in three plays and a musical. Additional theatre entertainment will be provided in stage readings by the Helen Hayes Equity Group. Thirty full-length motion pictures features will be shown.

Nationally famous for decades as a center of lectures on the sciences and the arts, the Academy will again emphasize this field during the 1960-61 season.

On Saturday evening, Sept. 24, Jose Ferrer, star of stage, screen and television, will make his only New York operatic appearance in the title role of Puccini's comedy, "Gianni Schicchi." On succeeding Saturday nights, the Brooklyn Opera Company, directed by Guido G. Salmaggi, will present "Madame Butterfly," "Rigoletto," "La Traviata," "La Boheme," "Aida" and "Carmen."

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra, which has been playing in Brooklyn since the 1800s, will return for a five-concert subscription series. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct four programs, with the mid-season concert of Feb. 17 directed by Erich Leinsdorf, of the Metropolitan Opera.

The New York Philharmonic will return to play seven concerts this season. Leonard Bernstein, music director of the Philharmonic, will conduct three of the Brooklyn concerts and will double as his own piano soloist in the opening all-Beethoven concert Tuesday, Oct. 18.

The Brooklyn Philharmonic, conducted by Seigfried Landau, will present four concerts and three Youth Concerts.

The Brooklyn Civic Ballet Company will give three regular programs and three programs of "Ballet for Young People."

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

28

SHOWTHROUGH

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY–SIXTY-ONE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 6 at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Suite No. 4, in D major

Overture
Bourrées I and II
Gavotte
Minuet
Réjouissance

PISTON ..... Three New England Sketches

I. Seaside
II. Summer Evening
III. Mountains

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

80

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

GEMINIANI.....Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2

I. Largo e staccato; Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

STRAUSS....."Also sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem
(Freely after Friedrich Nietzsche)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS.....*Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
IV. Allegro con spirito

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322
DEC 4 1960

Maazel To Lead Boston Orchestra

BOSTON, (UPI)— Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy at nine, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time next week.

Now, 30, Maazel had been a pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox in 1951.

Maazel is a native of Paris and began studying violin at five. He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 10 1960

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 18 1960

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: At the Loeb Drama Center the Harvard Dramatic Club's production of "The Caucasian Circle of Chalk," by Bertold Brecht was declared "an interesting example of what can be done with imagination and a well designed theater." Traditional elements in "Holiday in Japan" at the Shubert received praise but the Japanese impressions of our current musical crazes were found noisy, distorted and vulgar.

FILMS: "The Mighty Crusaders" at the Paramount, an Italian import with dubbed dialogue was called "a colorful spectacle . . . with a plot that makes history less probable than fiction," handicapped with "inflexible English dialogue."

MUSIC: The Boston Symphony Orchestra emerged "magnificent and scatheless" under the baton of guest conductor Lorin Maazel who was hailed as "very likely the most distinguished American conductor of his generation." At Jordan Hall, the Societa Corelli played with "gusto and determination . . . vibrant sound and perfect ensemble" but lack of refinement was noted. The Soviet pianist, Viatoslav Richter, scored in both his Symphony Hall recitals with his Beethoven Sonatas "superb in every way," and his second program making it clear that he "is one of the supreme pianists of our times." Nicolai Moscona, basso, pleased a Boston Morning Musicales audience at the Statler-Hilton although the singer had some difficulty with his memory. The New Arts Orchestra at the Little Opera House presented an absorbing program with dance prominently featured.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
DEC 15 1960

Lorin Maazel At Symphony

Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next Friday-Saturday concerts in Symphony Hall, Dec. 9 and 10. This week the Orchestra will be away on a tour to New York and other cities.

Maazel then will make his first appearances with this Orchestra. His only previous conducting here was at a Gershwin Festival in Feb., 1953. Maazel will present the G Minor Concerto Grosso, Op. 3, No. 2; by Geminiani; Richard Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Dr. Charles Munch has made a slight change in the program he will conduct at the Symphony Hall Tuesday evening concert, Dec. 6. Bach's Suite No. 4, in D major will replace Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Walter Piston's Three New England Sketches and the D minor Symphony by Cesar Franck will be played as scheduled.

...will be presented to the building fund committee.

Guest Conductor Maazel Wins Acclaim at Symphony

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 18 1960

Boston Symphony With Maazel on Ch. 2 Tuesday

The young American conductor Lorin Maazel directs this season's third live Channel 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The program, originating at Sanders Theatre, Harvard, will include the "Contra Dances" and Pastorale Symphony of Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. The program will be broadcast simultaneously on WGBH-FM.

Mr. Maazel first conducted when only nine years old, at the 1939 New York World's Fair. Since then he has directed major orchestras in Rome, Milan, Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Vienna, Budapest, Prague, and Telaviv; and has appeared frequently in The United States with the NBC, New York Philharmonic, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, and San Francisco Orchestras.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the eighth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, as guest, conducted the following program: Geminiani: Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2 (first performance at these concerts); Richard Strauss: Tone Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Brahms: Symphony No. 2 in D major.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel established himself with the Friday afternoon Symphony subscribers, yesterday, as a young conductor of enormous talent and spectacular accomplishment.

One's impression, further, is that he has established himself with the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At any rate, they responded magnificently to his conducting, the concert was one of consistent and exceptional beauties, and the acclaim was general. It is always a true joy to be on hand when a young talent succeeds.

That Maazel, still three months under 31, was born to do just what he is doing, is evident. Conducting is a number of things: technical prompting, interpretive persuasion, and above all the possession of a devotion willingly given by musicians to join with the conductor in the wholehearted making of music.

Maazel has all these attributes, by instinct and by training, to the degree of genius. Now we know that all those accounts of his prowess, which for several years have filtered back from his guest-conducting all over Europe, were truthful reports.

One swallow does not make a Spring, nor one concert a whole reputation, but yesterday's program put Maazel to a severe test. That he conducted from memory is not important; all conducting must be done from memory if the conductor really knows his score, and the presence of the printed work is merely a safeguard. But the superb cohesion, the ebb and flow and the sustained sense of structure which characterized the performance of an exceedingly complicated work, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," convinced this listener that Maazel has absorbed the work in hand, every note and marking of it.

His demeanor upon the stand is pleasant. Quiet confidence emanates from him; his gestures are largely practical, though full of grace and related to the character of the music at the moment.

His ear for balance of instruments is excellent and his ability to preserve a clear texture no matter how involved a passage, is really a marvel. He has an innate rhythmic sense, and one of great sensitivity for the curve of a pharse. His musical taste is impeccable, at least there were no distortions or exaggerations yesterday.

As time goes on Maazel probably will dispense with a few minor traits of the present which detract a little from his best: the too-frequent bending of the knees, the inclination to dance in fast, rhythmic passages; the lightning stroke of the baton in a sudden entrance which catches an orchestra a trifle off guard; the tendency, as in Brahms' Symphony, to bring up inner voices a little too much, such as horn and woodwind.

There is, however, no personal display for its own sake. There is nothing of the narcissistic virtuoso about Maazel. Nor is he nerve-stretched any more than the music demands —Brahms' D major Symphony had that desirable illusion of being quite relaxed.

Geminiani's vivacious Concerto Grosso, new to these concerts, proved a delightful miniature from a period between baroque and what became rococo.

We have to thank Dr. Charles Munch—who, by the way, was an interested listener throughout the concert, yesterday—for the privilege of hearing Maazel.

Next week Maazel will present Twelve Contra-dances and the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven; "Song of the Nightingale" by Stravinsky, and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy."

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
DEC 10 1960

Tanglewood Fete; Student Conducts

BOSTON (UPI) — A Paris-born former child prodigy, who trained at the Berkshire Music Center, made his formal debut Friday as guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lorin Maazel, 30, was born near Paris of American parents of Dutch ancestry. As a child, he was invited by Maestro Arturo Toscanini to conduct the former NBC Symphony Orchestra in New York.

Maazel studied under the late Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1951.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
DEC 12 1960

Koussevitsky Pupil To Lead Symphony

Boston (UPI)—Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy at the age of 9, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time next week.

Now 30, Maazel had been a pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox, Mass. in 1951.

Maazel is a native of Paris and began studying violin at the age of 5.

He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

BSO Concert

Conductor Lorin Maazel Introduced

By ALLAN SLY

The eighth pair of B.S.O. weekend concerts launched a two-week series introducing to Boston Lorin Maazel. Guest conductors invariably induce in symphony subscribers an uninhibited glow of anticipation, and when the visitor is known to be young, handsome, widely experienced — in fact crowned with laurels from Buenos Aires to Bayreuth, from Hollywood to Tel Aviv, from Mexico to Milan, naturally the excitement runs high.

Mr. Maazel is indeed one of those rare individuals singled out for the spotlight of public attention, in which charged atmosphere his natural talents have sustained him through an arduous course of self-discovery. His easy assurance is twinned with splendid evidence of secure mastery and out of all this emerges a figure of significant meaning for today. Americans can rejoice to recognize in his make-up some elements that reflect a shared inheritance; at the same time they perceive through his vivid portrayals the enduring values of other, if parallel cultures.

The Geminiani concerto grosso for strings was no mere exercise in the Baroque, even though the instruments were deployed in relation to the harpsichord. We heard, rather, an intensely passionate assertion of the temperament as it addressed the well-knit European community of its time.

In Also Sprach Zarathustra the whole torrid complex of Nietzsche's intellectual arrogance was our portion, though through its haze we could enjoy Strauss' inexhaustible inventiveness, eloquence, dramatic force, lyrical ecstasy, strength of design, brilliant sense of color—all part of the panoply of glory that imperial Germany fashioned for its outer garment. How many trains of thought must have been set busily in motion by such a performance, one wonders.

Then finally we were indulged with a spacious, almost leisurely Brahms second—appealing to heart and head alike. The audience was very well impressed, and I overheard some ecstatic remarks as subscribers encountered old friends in the lobby. They are now eagerly awaiting Mr. Maazel's treatment of Beethoven, Stravinsky and Scriabin next weekend.

Granted that the orchestral world of today needs a magnetic Maazel or two to focus public interest and secure its continued support, let us pay an overdue tribute to the men (and women) whose collective effort, after all, is what we are really listening to. Let me illustrate by describing an incident in the Brahms finale which I was able to observe closely. The passage in hand was rhythmically involved, certain inner voices pulling against each other, none of them submitting to the rule of a normal beat, even though its ultimate persistence was inevitable. What is a conductor to indicate in such a passage? If his motions determined the beat they would deny the realities of the case; if they are identified with what one section of the orchestra is doing, what will happen to the remainder? When hands, arms, head are all engaged differently, we are approaching the danger zone. At such a point Mr. Maazel most wisely withdrew his vehemence, and within a half-measure the orchestra had hold of itself and the music was in the clear—and his guiding hand was back where it belonged. The crisis was past, and all before the passengers could have been aware of the danger. While mentally commending the conductor's superb instinct, never have I had greater occasion to admire the B.S.O. as a living organism.

Is it safe to assume that audiences apportion their approval fairly as between conductor and conducted or should we, at times, check up on ourselves in this regard?

80

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

GEMINIANI . . . . . Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2

I. Largo e staccato; Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

STRAUSS . . . . . "Also sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem (Freely after Friedrich Nietzsche)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
IV. Allegro con spirito

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322
DEC 4 1960

Maazel To Lead Boston Orchestra

BOSTON, (UPI)— Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy at nine, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time next week.

Now, 30, Maazel had been a pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox in 1951.

Maazel is a native of Paris and began studying violin at five. He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 10 1960

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 18 1960

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: At the Loeb Drama Center the Harvard Dramatic Club's production of "The Caucasian Circle of Chalk," by Bertold Brecht was declared "an interesting example of what can be done with imagination and a well designed theater." Traditional elements in "Holiday in Japan" at the Shubert received praise but the Japanese impressions of our current musical crazes were found noisy, distorted and vulgar.

FILMS: "The Mighty Crusaders" at the Paramount, an Italian import with dubbed dialogue was called "a colorful spectacle . . . with a plot that makes history less probable than fiction," handled with "inflexible English dialogue."

MUSIC: The Boston Symphony Orchestra emerged "magnificent and scatheless" under the baton of guest conductor Lorin Maazel who was hailed as "very likely the most distinguished American conductor of his generation." At Jordan Hall, the Societa Corelli played with "gusto and determination . . . vibrant sound and perfect ensemble" but lack of refinement was noted. The Soviet pianist, Vlatoslav Richter, scored in both his Symphony Hall recitals with his Beethoven Sonatas "superb in every way," and his second program making it clear that he "is one of the supreme pianists of our times." Nicolai Moscona, basso, pleased a Boston Morning Musicales audience at the Statler-Hilton although the singer had some difficulty with his memory. The New Arts Orchestra at the Little Opera House presented an absorbing program with dance prominently featured.

Guest Conductor Maazel Wins Acclaim at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the eighth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, as guest, conducted the following program: Geminiani: Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2 (first performance at these concerts); Richard Strauss' Tone Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Brahms: Symphony No. 2 in D major.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel established himself with the Friday afternoon Symphony subscribers, yesterday, as a young conductor of enormous talent and spectacular accomplishment.

One's impression, further, is that he has established himself with the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At any rate, they responded magnificently to his conducting, the concert was one of consistent and exceptional beauties, and the acclaim was general. It is always a true joy to be on hand when a young talent succeeds.

That Maazel, still three months under 31, was born to do just what he is doing, is evident. Conducting is a number of things: technical prompting, interpretive persuasion, and above all the possession of a devotion willingly given by musicians to join with the conductor in the wholehearted making of music.

Maazel has all these attributes, by instinct and by training, to the degree of genius. Now we know that all those accounts of his prowess, which for several years have filtered back from his guest-conducting all over Europe, were truthful reports.

One swallow does not make a Spring, nor one concert a whole reputation, but yesterday's program put Maazel to a severe test. That he conducted from memory is not important; all conducting must be done from memory if the conductor really knows his score, and the presence of the printed work is merely a safeguard. But the superb cohesion, the ebb and flow, and the sustained sense of structure which characterized the performance of an exceedingly complicated work, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," convinced this listener that Maazel has absorbed the work in hand, every note and marking of it.

His demeanor upon the stand is pleasant. Quiet confidence emanates from him; his gestures are largely practical, though full of grace and related to the character of the music at the moment.

His ear for balance of instruments is excellent and his ability to preserve a clear texture no matter how involved a passage, is really a marvel. He has an innate rhythmic sense, and one of great sensitivity for the curve of a pharse. His musical taste is impeccable, at least there were no distortions or exaggerations yesterday.

As time goes on Maazel probably will dispense with a few minor traits of the present which detract a little from his best: the too-frequent bending of the knees, the inclination to dance in fast, rhythmic passages; the lightning stroke of the baton in a sudden entrance which catches an orchestra a trifle off guard; the tendency, as in Brahms' Symphony, to bring up inner voices a little too much, such as horn and woodwind.

There is, however, no personal display for its own sake. There is nothing of the narcissistic virtuoso about Maazel. Nor is he nerve-stretched any more than the music demands—Brahms' D major Symphony had that desirable illusion of being quite relaxed.

Geminiani's vivacious Concerto Grosso, new to these concerts, proved a delightful miniature from a period between baroque and what became rococo.

We have to thank Dr. Charles Munch—who, by the way, was an interested listener throughout the concert, yesterday—for the privilege of hearing Maazel.

Next week Maazel will present Twelve Contra-dances and the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven; "Song of the Nightingale" by Stravinsky, and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 18 1960

Boston Symphony With Maazel on Ch. 2 Tuesday

The young American conductor Lorin Maazel directs this season's third live Channel 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The program, originating at Sanders Theatre, Harvard, will include the "Contra Dances" and Pastorale Symphony of Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. The program will be broadcast simultaneously on WGBH-FM.

Mr. Maazel first conducted when only nine years old, at the 1939 New York World's Fair. Since then he has directed major orchestras in Rome, Milan, Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Vienna, Budapest, Prague, and Telaviv; and has appeared frequently in The United States with the NBC, New York Philharmonic, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, and San Francisco Orchestras.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
DEC 15 1960

Lorin Maazel At Symphony

Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next Friday-Saturday concerts in Symphony Hall, Dec. 9 and 10. This week the Orchestra will be away on a tour to New York and other cities.

Maazel then will make his first appearances with this Orchestra. His only previous conducting here was at a Gershwin Festival in Feb., 1953. Maazel will present the G Minor Concerto Grosso, Op. 3, No. 2, by Geminiani; Richard Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Dr. Charles Munch has made a slight change in the program he will conduct at the Symphony Hall Tuesday evening concert, Dec. 6. Bach's Suite No. 4, in D major will replace Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Walter Piston's Three New England Sketches, and the D minor Symphony by Cesar Franck will be played as scheduled.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
DEC 10 1960

Tanglewood Fete Student Conducts

BOSTON (UPI) — A Paris-born former child prodigy, who trained at the Berkshire Music Center, made his formal debut Friday as guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lorin Maazel, 30, was born near Paris of American parents of Dutch ancestry. As a child, he was invited by Maestro Arturo Toscanini to conduct the former NBC Symphony Orchestra in New York.

Maazel studied under the late Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1951.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
DEC 12 1960

Koussevitsky Pupil To Lead Symphony

Boston (UPI)—Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy at the age of 9, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time next week.

Now 30, Maazel had been a pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox, Mass. in 1951.

Maazel is a native of Paris and began studying violin at the age of 5.

He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

...will be presented to the building fund committee.

BSO Concert

Conductor Lorin Maazel Introduced

By ALLAN ELY

The eighth pair of B.S.O. weekend concerts launched a two-week series introducing to Boston Lorin Maazel. Guest conductors invariably induce in symphony subscribers an uninhibited glow of anticipation, and when the visitor is known to be young, handsome, widely experienced — in fact crowned with laurels from Buenos Aires to Bayreuth, from Hollywood to Tel Aviv, from Mexico to Milan, naturally the excitement runs high.

Mr. Maazel is indeed one of those rare individuals singled out for the spotlight of public attention, in which charged atmosphere his natural talents have sustained him through an arduous course of self-discovery. His easy assurance is twinned with splendid evidence of secure mastery and out of all this emerges a figure of significant meaning for today. Americans can rejoice to recognize in his make-up some elements that reflect a shared inheritance; at the same time they perceive through his vivid portrayals the enduring values of other, if parallel cultures.

The Geminiani concerto grosso for strings was no mere exercise in the Baroque, even though the instruments were deployed in relation to the harpsichord. We heard, rather, an intensely passionate assertion of the temperament as it addressed the well-knit European community of its time.

In Also Sprach Zarathustra the whole torrid complex of Nietzsche's intellectual arrogance was our portion, though through its haze we could enjoy Strauss' inexhaustible inventiveness, eloquence, dramatic force, lyrical ecstasy, strength of design, brilliant sense of color—all part of the panoply of glory that imperial Germany fashioned for its outer garment. How many trains of thought must have been set busily in motion by such a performance, one wonders.

Then finally we were indulged with a spacious, almost leisurely Brahms second—appealing to heart and head alike. The audience was very well impressed, and I overheard some ecstatic remarks as subscribers encountered old friends in the lobby. They are now eagerly awaiting Mr. Maazel's treatment of Beethoven, Stravinsky and Scriabin next weekend.

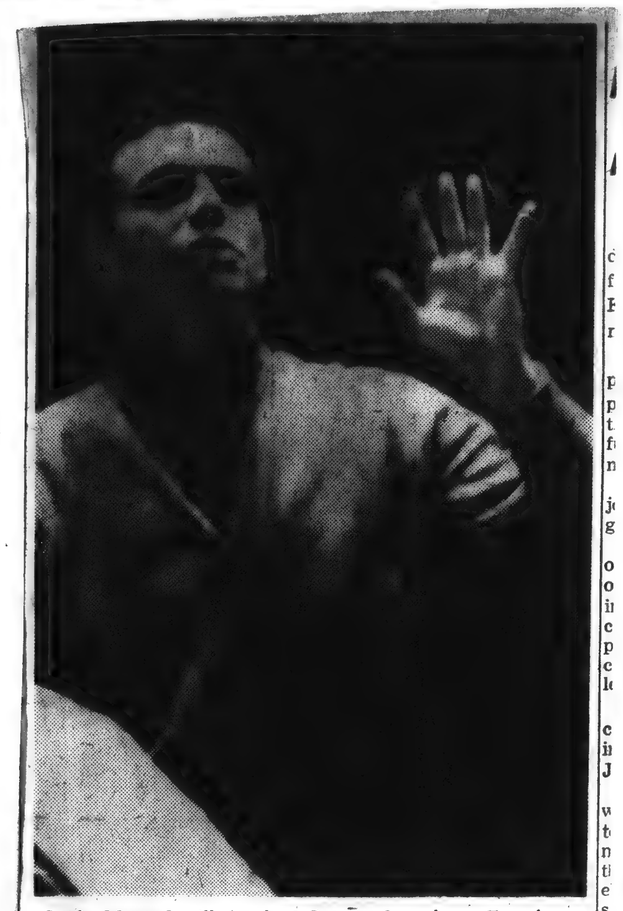
Granted that the orchestral world of today needs a magnetic Maazel or two to focus public interest and secure its continued support, let us pay an overdue tribute to the men (and women) whose collective effort, after all, is what we are really listening to. Let me illustrate by describing an incident in the Brahms finale which I was able to observe closely. The passage in hand was rhythmically involved, certain inner voices pulling against each other, none of them submitting to the rule of a normal beat, even though its ultimate persistence was inevitable. What is a conductor to indicate in such a passage? If his motions determined the beat they would deny the realities of the case; if they are identified with what one section of the orchestra is doing, what will happen to the remainder? When hands, arms, head are all engaged differently, we are approaching the danger zone. At such a point Mr. Maazel most wisely withdrew his vehemence, and within a half-measure the orchestra had hold of itself and the music was in the clear—and his guiding hand was back where it belonged. The crisis was past, and all before the passengers could have been aware of the danger. While mentally commending the conductor's superb instinct, never have I had greater occasion to admire the B.S.O. as a living organism.

Is it safe to assume that audiences apportion their approval fairly as between conductor and conducted or should we, at times, check up on ourselves in this regard?

HARPER'S BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 380 007
DEC 1960

WERNER NEUMEISTER

LORIN MAAZEL, the internationally acclaimed young American conductor, returns from his European triumphs to guest-conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in seven concerts beginning December 9. Maazel made his conducting debut at the age of nine at the New York World's Fair and was invited at eleven by the great Toscanini to guest-conduct the NBC Symphony. Recently hailed as the hero of the Berlin Philharmonic and the most dynamic musical talent since Leonard Bernstein, he will soon tour Russia and Australia.



Lorin Maazel will conduct Boston Symphony Tuesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 6 1960

Jise Buhs

Lorin Maazel will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony tonight, Thursday evening at open rehearsal, and at the weekend concerts Dec. 9, 10, 16, and 17.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 3,600
DEC 8 - 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,063
DEC 13 1960

LOREN MAAZEL, REMARKABLE YOUNG AMERICAN conductor invited by vacationing Dr. Charles Munch to lead the Boston symphony Orchestra in Providence on Tuesday evening at 8:15 in the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium. The program: Geminiani, Concerto Grosso, Op. No. 2; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 "Pastoral,; and Brahms, Symphony No. 6.

HARPER'S BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 300,007
DEC 1960

WERNER NEUMEISTER

LORIN MAAZEL, the internationally acclaimed young American conductor, returns from his European triumphs to guest-conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in seven concerts beginning December 9. Maazel made his conducting debut at the age of nine at the New York World's Fair and was invited at eleven by the great Toscanini to guest-conduct the NBC Symphony. Recently hailed as the hero of the Berlin Philharmonic and the most dynamic musical talent since Leonard Bernstein, he will soon tour Russia and Australia.

Lorin Maazel will conduct Boston Symphony Tuesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 6 1960

Jise Buhs

Lorin Maazel will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony tonight, Thursday evening at open rehearsal, and at the weekend concerts Dec. 8, 10, 16, and 17.

Symphony
aazel on uesday

American conducel directs this ive Channel 2
Orchestra
at 8:30 p.m.
originating at e, Harvard, will
"Contra Dances"
Symphony of Brahms' Sym-
the program will aneously on first conducted years old, at the k World's Fair. has directed mu-

in Rome, Milan,
Brussels, Vienna,
, and Telaviv;
frequently in ies with the NBC

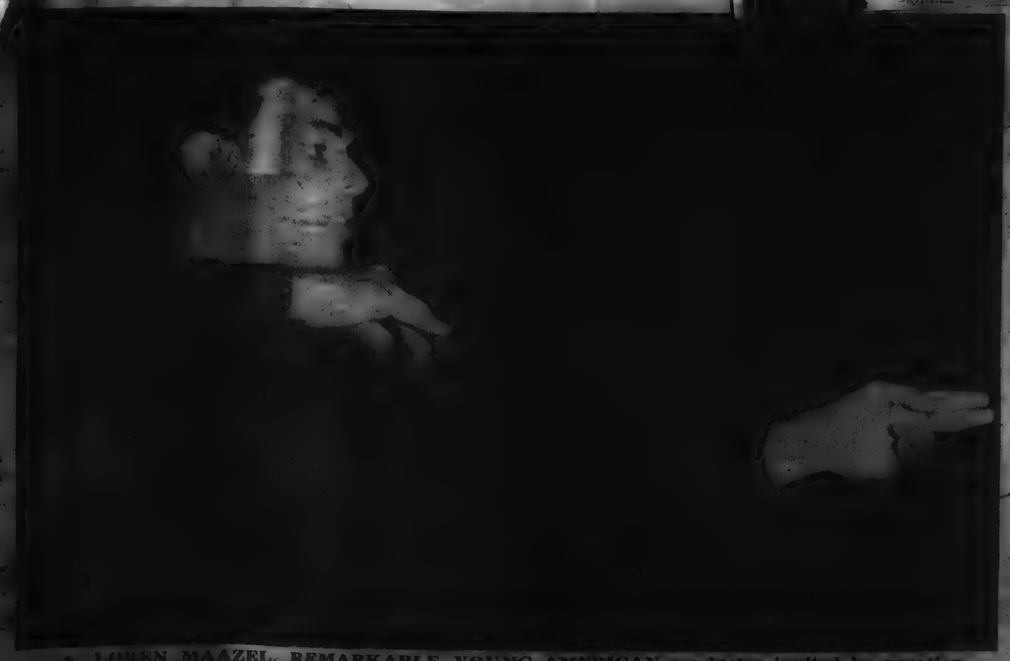
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 3,600
DEC 8 - 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,063
DEC 13 1960



LOREN MAAZEL, REMARKABLE YOUNG AMERICAN conductor invited by vacationing Dr. Charles Munch to lead the Boston symphony Orchestra in Providence on Tuesday evening at 8:15 in the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium. The program: Geminiani, Concerto Grosso, Op. No. 2; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 "Pastoral"; and Brahms, Symphony No. 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750
DEC 10 1960

82

Guest Conductor Maazel Wins Acclaim at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the eighth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, as guest, conducted the following program: Geminiani: Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2 (first performance at these concerts); Richard Strauss: Tone Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Brahms: Symphony No. 2, in D major.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel established himself with the Friday afternoon Symphony subscribers, yesterday, as a young conductor of enormous talent and spectacular accomplishment.

One's impression, further, is that he has established himself with the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At any rate, they responded magnificently to his conducting, the concert was one of consistent and exceptional beauties, and the acclaim was general. It is always a true joy to be on hand when a young talent succeeds.

That Maazel, still three months under 31, was born to do just what he is doing, is evident. Conducting is a number of things: technical prompting, interpretive persuasion, and above all the possession of a devotion willingly given by musicians to join with the conductor in the wholehearted making of music.

Maazel has all these attributes, by instinct and by training, to the degree of genius. Now we know that all those accounts of his prowess, which for several years have filtered back from his guest-conducting all over Europe, were truthful reports.

One swallow does not make a Spring, nor one concert a whole reputation, but yesterday's program put Maazel to a severe test. That he conducted from memory is not important; all conducting must be done from memory if the conductor really knows his score, and the presence of the printed work is merely a safeguard. But the superb cohesion, the ebb and flow, and the sustained sense of structure which characterized the performance of an exceedingly complicated work, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," convinced this listener that Maazel has absorbed the work in hand, every note and marking of it.

His demeanor upon the stand is pleasant. Quiet confidence emanates from him; his gestures are largely practical, though full of grace and related to the character of the music at the moment.

His ear for balance of instruments is excellent and his ability to preserve a clear texture no matter how involved a passage, is really a marvel. He has an innate rhythmic sense, and one of great sensitivity for the curve of a pharse. His musical taste is impeccable, at least there were no distortions or exaggerations yesterday.

As time goes on Maazel probably will dispense with a few minor traits of the present which detract a little from his best: the too-frequent bending of the knees, the inclination to dance in fast, rhythmic passages; the lightning stroke of the baton in a sudden entrance which catches an orchestra a trifle off guard; the tendency, as in Brahms' Symphony, to bring up inner voices a little too much, such as horn and woodwind.

There is, however, no personal display for its own sake. There is nothing of the narcissistic virtuoso about Maazel. Nor is he nerve-stretched any more than the music demands—Brahms' D major Symphony had that desirable illusion of being quite relaxed.

Geminiani's vivacious Concerto Grosso, new to these concerts, proved a delightful miniature from a period between baroque and what became rococo.

We have to thank Dr. Charles Munch—who, by the way, was an interested listener throughout the concert, yesterday—for the privilege of hearing Maazel.

Next week Maazel will present Twelve Contra-dances and the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven; "Song of the Nightingale" by Stravinsky, and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy."

STAGE IN TOWN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 78,957
DEC 9 1960

At Symphony

Paris-born Lorin Maazel, 30-year-old conductor, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. His first appearances will be at the concerts this afternoon and tomorrow night.

They will open with the Concerto Grosso in G minor by Francesco Geminiani (1687-1762) followed by the Strauss Symphonic Poem, "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
DEC 18 1960

Good Music for This Week

The young American conductor Lorin Maazel will direct this season's third live Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel (2). The program, originating at Sanders Theater, Harvard, will include the Contra Dances and Pastorale Symphony of Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Handel's Messiah, performed by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston with a chorus of 150 voices and a symphonic ensemble of 55 musicians, conducted by Dr. Edward F. Gilday, chairman of the department of music of Lowell State College, will be heard on WEAN and WPJB-FM Saturday at 9:15 p.m. Soloists will be Heather Harper, Marjorie Thomas, David Galliver and Earl Weidner will be at the organ.

C. Alexander Peloquin will conduct the Peloquin Chorale in a program of Christmas music, live from Alumnae Hall, Pembroke College, Sunday at 8:30 p.m. on WPFM-FM. Other local programs to be heard on the same station this week include the Christmas Cantata by Daniel Pinkhana and other selections sung by the combined choir of Lincoln School, St. George's Academy and Pomfret Academy, Thursday at 8:06 p.m., and on Friday the University Glee Club, assisted by the St. Dunstan's Choristers, will give a concert in celebration of the club's 50th Anniversary, at 8:06 p.m.

The new Metropolitan Opera production of Donizetti's comic opera L'Elisir d'Amore will be broadcast Saturday at 2 p.m. on WEAN and WPJB-FM. Soloists include Elisabeth Soederstroem, Dino Formichini, Fernando Corena, Frank Guarrera and Mildred Allen. Fausto Cleva will conduct.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 10 1960

INSPIRED PERFORMANCE OF BRAHMS SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Returning home after a deadly barrage of unfavorable New York press notices, the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday emerged behind a 30-year-old guest conductor, Lorin Maazel, magnificent and scatheless.

Mr. Maazel, a one-time boy prodigy who managed to escape that odious category, was making his Boston debut, and this was in every sense an auspicious occasion. He is perhaps best-known to the local audience for his work at Tanklewood a decade ago when he created a sensation with his handling of Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms"; since then, he has amassed a solid European reputation, and stands forth as, very likely, the most distinguished American conductor of his generation.

He lived up to this lofty description yesterday afternoon. His treatment of the three works scheduled was stylistically scrupulous. There was mounting excitement, too, for each gained in authority over its predecessor. The Brahms Second was the most lyrical we have heard in many seasons, and we have heard it often: five times from as many conductors within five years.

Beat Is Clear

The orchestra, with Lorin Maazel, is balanced with 'cellos to his right, after the European stlye; and the system seemed to lend the ensemble sound unusual sonority yesterday. Standing on a plump riser, this dark, lean, attenuated young man projects an aura of angular intensity. His physical appearance suggests, in a way, a drawing of Charles Van Doren by Max Beerbohm; but lest this frivolous comparison be unseemly, let us hasten to add that the conductor is a profound musician. His beat is remarkably clear. His gesture is economical. He leaves no doubt as to his dynamic intentions, and his attention to detail discloses the tidiness of a poetic mind.

He has a few idiosyncracies, as what conductor has not? The widespread fingers, the aerial flourish of the otherwise plain beat, a tendency toward the theatrical pause, may be discerned, but not as distractions. These are an organic part of a wholly mature conducting idiom — part of the grammar of personal style, as it were.

The Geminiani Concerto Grosso, which was performed for the first time at this series yesterday, received an energetic and pungent reading, threaded by the glitter of Daniel Pinkham's harpsichord. I must confess that I find it hard to distinguish from other works by minor masters of the baroque. But the lines of the terraced dynamics were flexible and clear, the strings had a bright, staccato timbre, and the music attained a lithe vivacity. There was nothing heavy about Mr. Maazel's handling of ostinato writing.

Tone Poem

Still, this didn't suffice to give one a distinct impression of the conductor's qualities. Strauss's tone poem provided partial proof. "Zarathustra," which has not been heard here since 1949, was a staple of the Koussevitzky regime—unfortunately, the former organ was pitched at 440 in the recording he made—and presents a formidable challenge to the most advanced artist.

Mr. Maazel's reading was precisely articulated, crisp in tempo and glowing with the opulent Strauss tonal colors. I particularly liked the way in which he conveyed the immense hushed mysticism of the piece without sacrificing form: it was not merely a big blob of pigments. Every entrance was meticulously paved. The tempi were judicious. The refinements were there, the dark prophetic plucked C's of the string basses dying in a final cadence, but essentially the account was notable for sturdiness and lucidity.

To this point, Mr. Maazel was highly accomplished; now, with the Brahms, he became inspired. He invested the popular symphony with an eloquence entirely his own. The program interestingly disclosed Dr. Munch's timing, 14 one-half, eight, five and nine minutes; Mr. Maazel took the first movement at a much faster pace but the coda was moulded with infinitely expressive songfulness. The rhapsodic structure of the work acquired a romantic freedom, and the turns of phrase and accent and contrast had the most subtle definition. It was a noble reading.

Next week Mr. Maazel returns with Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and 12 Contra-dances (first performance in the series); Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54, complete the program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel, guest conductor, presented the eighth program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2 ..... Geminiani
"Also sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem ..... Strauss
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73 ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
DEC 16 1960

At Symphony

Lorin Maazel, Boston Symphony guest conductor, will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances, Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, "Le chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase" at the concerts this afternoon and tomorrow evening.

Mr. Maazel's final appearance with the orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday night. The program will be the Beethoven Contra-Dances, Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Charles Munch will return from vacation to conduct the orchestra Dec. 22 and 23. The Saturday subscribers next week will hear their concert Thursday evening because of Christmas. Friday afternoon's concert will be presented as scheduled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC 4 1960

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. Mr. Maazel's first appearance will be on Friday and Saturday. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with the Concerto Grosso in G minor by Geminiani followed by the Strauss Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances and his Symphony No. 6 in F major have been scheduled by Mr. Maazel for the concerts of December 16-17. This program will also include Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Born near Paris on March 5, 1930, of American parents, Lorin Maazel was brought to the United States as a small child. He began study of the violin at five and first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was nine.

In this country Lorin Maazel has conducted the NBC Symphony at the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, and the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco and Montreal. For three years he was the associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

Mr. Maazel was a conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music Center in the summer of 1951.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening. His program includes the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

TODAY

BUDAPEST QUARTET, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m. B. U. Celebrity Series. Haydn D major, (The Lark;) Debussy; Brahms A minor.

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY, Symphony Hall, 8:00 p.m. A Handel's "Messiah" conducted by Edward Gilday. Soloists, from England, are Heather Harper, soprano; Majorie Thomas, contralto; David Galliver, tenor; Hervey Alan, bass, all in U. S. debut.

ALLAN SLY, organist, M. I. T. Chapel Christmas music and other works. Admission free. 4:00 p.m.

CAMBRIDGE COMPOSERS FORUM, Boston Adult Education Center, 5 Commonwealth Avenue. Works by Fine, Bavicchi, Randall Thompson, Kooi. 5:00 p.m.

CHAMBER MUSIC ensemble of strings winds, harpsichord. Second Church, 874 Beacon Street, 5:00 p.m. Gabrieli, Vivaldi, Handel, Bach. Armission free.

MUSICA SACRA, Victor H. Mattfeld director, University Lutheran Church, Cambridge, 7:30 p.m. Bach and Schutz. Mary Burdette, contralto, soloist. Admission free.

OLD SOUTH CHOIR, Copley Square. Carl McKinley, director, 7:30 p.m. Buxtehude, Brithen, Vaughan Williams. Soloist, Robert B. Patterson, bass.

MARSH CHAPEL CHOIR and Liturgical Dance Choir (B.U.) 735 Commonwealth Avenue, 4:30 Song-cycle: "The Confession Stone" by Owen Dodson and Max Miller. Allen C. Lannom, choir director; Dorothy M. Cleveland, dance director.

JOHN HUSTON, organist, Emmanuel Church, 12:10 p.m. Handel, Bach, Howells, Franck, Male Ingreau.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE, advanced music students, Jewett Arts Center, 8:00 p.m. J. C. Bach and Mozart. Admission free.

JOHN SKELTON, organist, Old North Church Candlelight Concert, 4:30 p.m. Bach Canonic Variations on Johnston 1759 organ.

PINE MANOR Junior College Choral Club, Bardwell Auditorium, Wellesley 8:30 p.m. Christmas concert includes Pinkham's "Ave Maria."

EMMANUEL AND B.C. GLEE CLUBS, C. Alexander Peloquin, director, at Emmanuel College. Varied programs of old and contemporary music.

MONDAY

ROBERT FISCHER, pianist, Paine Hall, Harvard, 8:45 p.m. presented by Harvard-Radcliffe Music Club. Beethoven Sonatas, Op. 109, 110, 111.

TUESDAY

BUDAPEST STRING QUARTET, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. B.U. Celebrity Series. Haydn D major; Ravel F major; Brahms B-flat major.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY of Arlington, Robbins Memorial Town Hall, 8:15 p.m. Handel's "Messiah," Paul Bauguss, conductor. Soloists; Iris Penn, Ruth Ellison, C. Ray Bryan, Francis Hester. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY gala concert, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Commemorating opening and dedication of Spaulding Library and Dormitory residence. N.E.C. Orchestra, Richard Burgin, guest conductor. Weber; Dvorak; Hindemith. Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 11 1960

Lorin Maazel on WCRB This Evening

The young American conductor, Lorin Maazel, here in Boston for two weeks of Boston Symphony concerts, will be interviewed today on WCRB at 7:05 p.m.

Maazel, who is only 30, was a child prodigy; he conducted his first concert at the age of 9 and made his debut as a violin virtuoso at 16. He later devoted his career to conducting.

The program on which Maazel will be interviewed will also feature his newest stereophonic recording, conducting the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. This great ensemble performs two works by Brahms, the Tragic overture and the Symphony No. 3, under Maazel's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
DEC 10 1960

Ex-Child Prodigy, Tanglewood Pupil, Conducts BSO

BOSTON (UPI) — A Paris-born former child prodigy, who trained at the Berkshire Music Center, made his formal debut Friday as guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lorin Maazel, now 30, was born near Paris of American parents of Dutch ancestry. As a child, he was invited by Maestro Arturo Toscanini to conduct the former NBC Symphony Orchestra in New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

DEC 7 1960

Maazel Conducts Symphony;

Conductor Lorin Maazel A Prodigy Who Grew Up

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel at the age of 30, is an old musician, comparatively speaking. He is because he began extremely young. He cannot remember precisely the day when he decided to become a conductor, but, as he says, "I have been told it was at the age of seven."

MAAZEL

At nine Maazel was a prodigy of the baton, conducting at the World's Fair of 1939 in New York. In 1951, a few months over 21, he was a conducting student at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Today, Lorin Maazel is an established conductor in all of Europe, and this week he will make his first appearances as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Maazel is a short, slight, dark man who immediately impresses you by his natural grace of movement, and by the peculiarly intense quality of his dark eyes. He speaks in a quiet voice, considers his words, and what he says indicates high intelligence and a reflective intellect.

As a former prodigy who managed to escape the traps and pitfalls which have doomed to oblivion many a promising youngster who appeared in public too soon, Maazel is fortunate and he knows it.

"The child prodigy is something the public, musicians and even the prodigy himself can do without." He shuddered slightly, with a rueful smile. "I was fortunate that I was able to grow up into a normal life.

"The prodigy oftentimes is pushed too hard into public appearances, and his upbringing becomes unbalanced. Sometimes he does not even read enough or is unable to learn the things that all persons ought to learn as children. The effect upon his psychology can be disastrous if this happens.

"When I was a boy, a child, I did know my scores—I could write them out—I was no charlatan. Toscanini took an interest in me. But I studied conducting, later on, for seven years with Vladimir Bakaleinikoff in Pittsburgh. I studied piano somewhat, and more the violin."

For three years I submerged myself as a conductor by playing in all sorts of orchestras, mainly to discover what life is like at the other end of a baton. I learned a great deal, about conductors, conducting and about music and the psychology of how an orchestra functions.

"I also took up practically every instrument of the orchestra. Since I was learning to play flute, clarinet, trumpet and tympani all at the same time I never got to be especially proficient upon any of them, but I did absorb the practicalities of knowing how they function in an orchestra. From the age of 16, for several years, I had a string quartet of my own."

In 1952 he married Mimi Sandbank, a young pianist whose family at one time lived on Byron st. in Boston. The same year Maazel received a Fulbright scholarship for work in Italy, and settled in Rome. He has lived there ever since, but he and his wife have traveled in about 35 countries where Maazel has been in demand as a guest conductor.

"It has been marvelous experience," he says. "But I have come to realize that musicians, orchestral musicians have the same basic responses everywhere. Even flutists, for example, tend to look more or less the same everywhere. I have conducted all sorts of orchestras, sometimes communicating with them in the five or six languages I speak, and in the many that I don't."

Next after Boston comes Australia, then Maazel's first visit to Russia, after that a European tour with the French Orchestre National.

To get two facts straight, Maazel says he never did study in Boston, as sometimes has been said. Also, his name is pronounced with the stress on the second syllable. "It rhymes with gazelle," he grinned.

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. Mr. Maazel's first appearance will be on Friday and Saturday. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with the Concerto Grosso in G minor by Geminiani followed by the Strauss Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Beethoven's Twelve Contradances and his Symphony No. 6 in F major have been scheduled by Mr. Maazel for the concerts of December 16-17. This program will also include Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Born near Paris on March 5, 1930, of American parents, Lorin Maazel was brought to the United States as a small child. He began study of the violin at five and first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was nine.

In this country Lorin Maazel has conducted the NBC Symphony at the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, and the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco and Montreal. For three years he was the associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

Mr. Maazel was a conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music Center in the summer of 1951.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening. His program includes the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor

LOREN MAAZEL, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Tuesday evening, Thursday evening (open rehearsal) and Friday afternoo and Saturday evening.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 229,348

NOV 1960

GUESTING AROUND George Georgescu is this season making his initial appearance in Philadelphia as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Leopold Stokowski, William Steinberg and the orchestra's assistant conductor, William Smith, will also guest-conduct the orchestra . . . The Chicago Symphony will have as guests: Hans Rosbaud, Pierre Monteux, André Cluytens and William Steinberg . . . Conductor Charles Munch has invited to the podium of the Boston Symphony, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, Lorin Maazel (a former conducting pupil at the Berkshire Music Center), Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association, and Thomas Schippers . . . The whole Dallas Symphony under Paul Kletzki will make a guest appearance on the series of the Omaha Symphony, in that Nebraska city.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

DEC 5 1960

Former Prodigy To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (UPI)—Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy at 9, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time this week. Now 30, Maazel was a pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox in 1951.

He is a native of Paris and began studying violin at 5. He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra. A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

Herald 12/11/60

Records Catch Maazel's Talent

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The recording companies, decked with holly and ivy and an occasional blush of mistletoe, are busy these days hammering out albums for Christmas. Happily, few of the recent records seem specifically designed as pure gifts for the man who has everything, but rather for their own sake: as musical experience.

Since the guest appearance of the American conductor, Lorin Maazel, with the Boston Symphony this week, has aroused considerable interest, one might enjoy hearing the former boy prodigy, now a mature artist, in his recent appearances with the Berlin Philharmonic Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft has lately brought out Maazel performing Beethoven's Fifth and Sixth Symphonies and the Brahms Third (together with such incidental items as "The Consecration of the House" and the "Tragic" Overture").

These are notably well-balanced performances, gorgeous in tone — the engineering is to be commended — and sensitive in concept. "Flowing" is perhaps the word that best describes Maazel's way with Beethoven, for the conductor's treatment of outline discloses a gentle, legato momentum. The works are refined rather than vigorous in character, but there is no want of opulence or inner detail, especially in the Brahms where brightly-textured grace is present without upsetting the master's serene equipoise. Mr. Maazel is a talent who deserves the repeated listening that only records afford.

New 'Giovanni'

Cesare Siepi as Don Giovanni and Fernando Corena as Leporello make Victor's new release of "Don Giovanni" something to treasure. The cast is extremely strong and suavely blended and includes Birgit Nilsson (Donna Anna), Cesare Valletti (Don Ottavio), Leontyne Price (Donna Elvira) and Eugenia Ratti (Zerlina) in addition to the male principals. The production is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, who, with the Vienna Philharmonic and Vienna State Chorus, imbues the pace with glitter and sprightliness.

Although Messrs. Siepi and Corena have ample competition, they easily garner the honors from the others, which is only natural in Mozart's exquisite work. The former gives a darkling account of the Don and is fully a tragic figure; for all the vocal swashbuckling, his approach is one of solemn grandeur. Mr. Corena makes Leporello a partner of animation rather than a clown, and Miss Nilsson's dramatic detachment is equalled only by Miss Price's, while both sing superbly. Valletti does the "O mio tesoro" eloquently and makes the most of the thankless part of Ottavio, who is a kind of sounding board against which the other singers volley their matchless ensembles. The secondary roles are competently executed, especially Miss Ratti's, and the performance is larded by sound effects that convey the quality of the on-stage narrative.

"The Connoisseur's Handel," (or "Arias and Ensembles From the Neglected Operas and oratorios") brings forth the Deller Consort with "The Handel Festival Orchestra," on Vanguard. The operas and oratorios on this disc may be neglected; but many of the arias are not. We aren't likely to hear "Serse," (or "Xerxes"), Handel's pastoral comedy, in the theater, but who is unfamiliar with "Ombra ma fui" or "Lascia ch'io pianga," in the recital hall? Nevertheless, the majority of Handel's ensembles on this recording are scanted works; the performance is excellent; and one is especially impressed by the manifold beauties of "Jeptha," to which one side is mainly dedicated.

Beethoven, Stravinsky And Scriabin by Maazel

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the ninth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, guest conductor, presented the following program: Beethoven: Twelve Contradances; (first performance at these concerts); Beethoven: "Pastoral" Symphony; Stravinsky: "Song of the Nightingale;" Scriabin: "Poem of Ecstasy."

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel chose a rather unusual and appealing program for his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The dozen Contra-dances by Beethoven are altogether charming, if insubstantial for a symphony concert, and Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale" is a comparative rarity.

As for Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," it had not been performed by this Orchestra in more than 14 years, and it proved to be just right for so unpleasant an afternoon of cold December rain. Its loud and imposing conclusion, held to the last ounce of the wind players' breath, also was just the thing wherewith Mr. Maazel said goodbye to the Friday subscribers.

The ovation which followed was almost as super-heated as the music itself. The decibels of applause and cheers concealed the fact that weather had reduced the customary size of the audience.

In certain respects, the "Poem of Ecstasy" was the best-performed work of the concert. Maazel held it together better than he had either the "Pastoral" Symphony or the trickily episodic "Song of the Nightingale," and in turn it called forth what at the moment are his finest attributes as conductor.

He has sufficient technic and he has the nature to revel in ardent music of much detail and complex texture. At the age of 30 that is quite natural. The delicate facade and the exposed texture and exacting continuity of the "Pastoral" Symphony, Maazel will deal with more masterfully at the age of 45 or 50 than he does today.

Some Reservations

Even genius—and Maazel is a conducting genius—requires much experience for the development of mastery of many styles, and for that seeming consistent ease and steady flow essential in long works. His "Pastoral" just now is a bit perfunctory, even plodding in the slow movement.

Maazel shows one of the mannerisms peculiar to the conductor who has worked with many different orchestras, but not for long with a single very good one: he over-conducts. For such a virtuoso band as the Boston Symphony, he gives too many cues. He also insists upon much too high a podium, with the result that he seems detached from the orchestra, the men on stage level have to look too high, and so much height only accentuates Maazel's inclination to dance about.

These points are made only upon a comparative basis, for all things considered, Maazel is enormously gifted, and he has given a fine account of himself here. If his development proceeds as we all hope it will, this young man will become one of the great masters of his art.

Next week Dr. Munch will return to the conductor's stand, and will give first performances of Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali." Jaime Laredo will be soloist in the Bach A minor Violin Concerto, and the E minor Concerto by Mendelssohn. The concerts will begin with the Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and will end with Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

N.B.—The evening concert next week will be given Thursday, since Saturday will be Christmas Eve.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

DEC 7 1960

Maazel Conducts Symphony;

Conductor Lorin Maazel A Prodigy Who Grew Up

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel at the age of 30, is an old musician, comparatively speaking. That is because he began extremely young. He cannot remember precisely the day when he decided to become a conductor, but, as he says, "I have been told it was at the age of seven."

MAAZEL

At nine Maazel was a prodigy of the baton, conducting at the World's Fair of 1939 in New York. In 1951, a few months over 21, he was a conducting student at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Today, Lorin Maazel is an established conductor in all of Europe, and this week he will make his first appearances as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Maazel is a short, slight, dark man who immediately impresses you by his natural grace of movement, and by the peculiarly intense quality of his dark eyes. He speaks in a quiet voice, considers his words, and what he says indicates high intelligence and a reflective intellect.

As a former prodigy who managed to escape the traps and pitfalls which have doomed to oblivion many a promising youngster who appeared in public too soon, Maazel is fortunate and he knows it.

"The child prodigy is something the public, musicians and even the prodigy himself can do without." He shuddered slightly, with a rueful smile. "I was fortunate that I was able to grow up into a normal life.

"The prodigy oftentimes is pushed too hard into public appearances, and his upbringing becomes unbalanced. Sometimes he does not even read enough or is unable to learn the things that all persons ought to learn as children. The effect upon his psychology can be disastrous if this happens.

"When I was a boy, a child, I did know my scores—I could write them out—I was no charlatan. Toscanini took an interest in me. But I studied conducting, later on, for seven years with Vladimir Bakaleinikoff in Pittsburgh. I studied piano somewhat, and more the violin."

For three years I submerged myself as a conductor by playing in all sorts of orchestras, mainly to discover what life is like at the other end of a baton. I learned a great deal, about conductors, conducting and about music and the psychology of how an orchestra functions.

"I also took up practically every instrument of the orchestra. Since I was learning to play flute, clarinet, trumpet and tympani all at the same time I never got to be especially proficient upon any of them, but I did absorb the practicalities of knowing how they function in an orchestra. From the age of 16, for several years, I had a string quartet of my own."

In 1952 he married Mimi Sandbank, a young pianist whose family at one time lived on Byron st. in Boston. The same year Maazel received a Fulbright scholarship for work in Italy, and settled in Rome. He has lived there ever since, but he and his wife have traveled in about 35 countries where Maazel has been in demand as a guest conductor.

"It has been marvelous experience," he says. "But I have come to realize that musicians, orchestral musicians have the same basic responses everywhere. Even flutists, for example, tend to look more or less the same everywhere. I have conducted all sorts of orchestras, sometimes communicating with them in the five or six languages I speak, and in the many that I don't."

Next after Boston comes Australia, then Maazel's first visit to Russia, after that a European tour with the French Orchestre National.

To get two facts straight, Maazel says he never did study in Boston, as sometimes has been said. Also, his name is pronounced with the stress on the second syllable. "It rhymes with gazelle," he grinned.

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. Mr. Maazel's first appearance will be on Friday and Saturday. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with the Concerto Grosso in G minor by Geminiani followed by the Strauss Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Beethoven's Twelve Contradances and his Symphony No. 6 in F major have been scheduled by Mr. Maazel for the concerts of December 16-17. This program will also include Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Born near Paris on March 8, 1930, of American parents, Lorin Maazel was brought to the United States as a small child. He began study of the violin at five and first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was nine.

In this country Lorin Maazel has conducted the NBC Symphony at the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, and the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco and Montreal. For three years he was the associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

Mr. Maazel was a conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music Center in the summer of 1951.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening. His program includes the Bach Suite No. 4 in D major, Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor

LOREN MAAZEL, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Tuesday evening, Thursday evening (open rehearsal) and Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 228,348

NOV 1960

GUESTING AROUND George Georgescu is this season making his initial appearance in Philadelphia as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Leopold Stokowski, William Steinberg and the orchestra's assistant conductor, William Smith, will also guest-conduct the orchestra . . . The Chicago Symphony will have as guests: Hans Rosbaud, Pierre Monteux, André Cluytens and William Steinberg . . . Conductor Charles Munch has invited to the podium of the Boston Symphony, in addition to the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, Lorin Maazel (a former conducting pupil at the Berkshire Music Center), Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Association, and Thomas Schippers . . . The whole Dallas Symphony under Paul Kletzki will make a guest appearance on the series of the Omaha Symphony, in that Nebraska city.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

DEC 5 1960

Former Prodigy To Lead Symphony

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (UPI)—Lorin Maazel, who was a child prodigy of 9, will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra for the first time this week. Now 30, Maazel was a pupil of Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music School in Lenox in 1951.

He is a native of Paris and began studying violin at 5. He formerly was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra. A resident of Rome, Maazel will return to Europe after his five public appearances in Boston.

Herald 12/11/60

Records Catch Maazel's Talent

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The recording companies, decked with holly and ivy and an occasional blush of mistletoe, are busy these days hammering out albums for Christmas. Happily, few of the recent records seem specifically designed as pure gifts for the man who has everything, but rather for their own sake: as musical experience.

Since the guest appearance of the American conductor, Lorin Maazel, with the Boston Symphony this week, has aroused considerable interest, one might enjoy hearing the former boy-prodigy, now a mature artist, in his recent appearances with the Berlin Philharmonic Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft has lately brought out Maazel performing Beethoven's Fifth and Sixth Symphonies and the Brahms Third (together with such incidental items as "The Consecration of the House" and the "Tragic" Overture").

These are notably well-balanced performances, gorgeous in tone — the engineering is to be commended — and sensitive in concept. "Flowing" is perhaps the word that best describes Maazel's way with Beethoven, for the conductor's treatment of outline discloses a gentle, legato momentum. The works are refined rather than vigorous in character, but there is no want of opulence or inner detail, especially in the Brahms where brightly-textured grace is present without upsetting the master's serene equipoise. Mr. Maazel is a talent who deserves the repeated listening that only records afford.

New 'Giovanni'

Cesare Siepi as Don Giovanni and Fernando Corena as Leporello make Victor's new release of "Don Giovanni" something to treasure. The cast is extremely strong and suavely blended and includes Birgit Nilsson (Donna Anna), Cesare Valletti (Don Ottavio), Leontyne Price (Donna Elvira) and Eugenia Ratti (Zerlina) in addition to the male principals. The production is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, who, with the Vienna Philharmonic and Vienna State Chorus, imbues the pace with glitter and sprightliness.

Although Messrs. Siepi and Corena have ample competition, they easily garner the honors from the others, which is only natural in Mozart's exquisite work. The former gives a darkling account of the Don and is fully a tragic figure; for all the vocal swashbuckling, his approach is one of solemn grandeur. Mr. Corena makes Leporello a partner of animation rather than a clown, and Miss Nilsson's dramatic detachment is equalled only by Miss Price's, while both sing superbly. Valletti does the "O mio tesoro" eloquently and makes the most of the thankless part of Ottavio, who is a kind of sounding board against which the other singers volley their matchless ensembles. The secondary roles are competently executed, especially Miss Ratti's, and the performance is larded by sound effects that convey the quality of the on-stage narrative.

"The Connoisseur's Handel," (or "Arias and Ensembles From the Neglected Operas and oratorios") brings forth the Deller Consort with "The Handel Festival Orchestra," on Vanguard. The operas and oratorios on this disc may be neglected; but many of the arias are not. We aren't likely to hear "Serse," (or "Xerxes"), Handel's pastoral comedy, in the theater, but who is unfamiliar with "Ombra ma fui" or "Lascia ch'io pianga," in the recital hall? Nevertheless, the majority of Handel's ensembles on this recording are scanted works; the performance is excellent; and one is especially impressed by the manifold beauties of "Jeptha," to which one side is mainly dedicated.

Beethoven, Stravinsky And Scriabin by Maazel

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the ninth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, guest conductor, presented the following program: Beethoven: Twelve Contradances; (first performance at these concerts); Beethoven: "Pastoral" Symphony; Stravinsky: "Song of the Nightingale;" Scriabin: "Poem of Ecstasy."

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel chose a rather unusual and appealing program for his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The dozen Contra-dances by Beethoven are altogether charming, if insubstantial for a symphony concert, and Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale" is a comparative rarity.

As for Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," it had not been performed by this Orchestra in more than 14 years, and it proved to be just right for so unpleasant an afternoon of cold December rain. Its loud and imposing conclusion, held to the last ounce of the wind players' breath, also was just the thing wherewith Mr. Maazel said goodbye to the Friday subscribers.

The ovation which followed was almost as super-heated as the music itself. The decibels of applause and cheers concealed the fact that weather had reduced the customary size of the audience.

In certain respects, the "Poem of Ecstasy" was the best-performed work of the concert. Maazel held it together better than he had either the "Pastoral" Symphony or the trickily episodic "Song of the Nightingale," and in turn it called forth what at the moment are his finest attributes as conductor.

He has sufficient technic and he has the nature to revel in ardent music of much detail and complex texture. At the age of 30 that is quite natural. The delicate facade and the exposed texture and exacting continuity of the "Pastoral" Symphony, Maazel will deal with more masterfully at the age of 45 or 50 than he does today.

Some Reservations

Even genius—and Maazel is a conducting genius—requires much experience for the development of mastery of many styles, and for that seeming consistent ease and steady flow essential in long works. His "Pastoral" just now is a bit perfunctory, even plodding in the slow movement.

Maazel shows one of the mannerisms peculiar to the conductor who has worked with many different orchestras, but not for long with a single very good one; he over-conducts. For such a virtuoso band as the Boston Symphony, he gives too many cues. He also insists upon much too high a podium, with the result that he seems detached from the orchestra, the men on stage level have to look too high, and so much height only accentuates Maazel's inclination to dance about.

These points are made only upon a comparative basis, for all things considered, Maazel is enormously gifted, and he has given a fine account of himself here. If his development proceeds as we all hope it will, this young man will become one of the great masters of his art.

Next week Dr. Munch will return to the conductor's stand, and will give first performances of Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali." Jaime Laredo will be soloist in the Bach A minor Violin Concerto, and the E minor Concerto by Mendelssohn. The concerts will begin with the Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and will end with Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

N.B.—The evening concert next week will be given Thursday, since Saturday will be Christmas Eve.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 10 1960

84

Lorin Maazel's Debut With Symphony

Energetic Young Conductor Pleases His Audience

By Louis Chapin

When Arturo Toscanini, in 1941, invited Lorin Maazel to conduct the NBC Orchestra, he may or may not have seen this child as "father of the man" who led the Boston Symphony in yesterday's concert. If he did, he saw some salient outlines of his own image.

Mr. Maazel, of course, is no more "another Toscanini" than he is "another Munch"; he showed himself to his interested Symphony Hall audience as already, at age 30, possessed of strong qualifications to conduct a major symphony orchestra, with distinction, as himself. It is this very distinction, rather than any imitation, which invites comparison with the most successful artists.

Distinction is a close neighbor of distinctness, and there was scarcely an indistinct sound throughout Mr. Maazel's program, an accomplishment especially impressive in the first concert of a visiting conductor. He addressed himself to the orchestra with authority and precision, and received the response which any qualified executive can expect from this magnificent group. But the result was not only the Boston Symphony playing well; it was the Boston Symphony playing well under Maazel.

♪ ♪ ♪

And they were playing a skillfully chosen program. The opening Concerto Grosso in G minor by Geminiani belongs to a style almost opposite to the Strauss "Also Sprach Zarathustra" which followed it. The earlier composer is dealing more essentially with line, and the later one with color; yet both descriptive means are energetically concerned with space. The artist may, after all, draw around his space, or paint within it, and in each case enjoy romantically the fact of the space itself.

Geminiani was an Italian contemporary of Bach, and if he resembles the German master somewhat in sound, he develops his own brand of fury. His rhythms are lively, at whatever tempo, and Mr. Maazel conducts them that way. The beat in the introductory Largo was so springy that members of the audience might have wondered which bounce of the arm or head or leg was to be followed; but the orchestra evidently had no doubts.

♪ ♪ ♪

The Strauss tone poem was a monumental display of color, spread in the interstices of chords that might have made Wagner envious. Nietzsche's poetic treatise on romanticized egotism, the impulsion for this music, cannot have been taken too seriously by the members of the orchestra, or they never could have been synchronized by Mr. Maazel into the flung precision of Zarathustra's monologue.

In Brahms' Second, wisely chosen here as the gentlest of his symphonies, Mr. Maazel emphasized what he could do with both line and color given superb formal coherence. As with Geminiani, the rhythms were kept lively, neatly tailored, and without the blur of indulged legato. As with Strauss, the color was clear and unhabitual, with Brahms' special way of anodizing.

It will be a pleasure to hear more of Mr. Maazel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 4 1960

THE SYMPHONY

MUSICAL PERSONALITY LIGHTS UP SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Keep an eye on Lorin Maazel," a charming neighbor shouted to us in the suburb in which we live last week. (She was at that moment floundering through a drift, Monday's blizzard was at its height, and music seemed a rather distant concern). "That boy is going to set the world on fire!"

Mr. Maazel fulfilled the prophecy yesterday afternoon. The 30-year-old guest conductor lit the part of the world that is Symphony Hall with the incandescence of his musical personality. Although the usual audience, due to the weather, was not out in full force, those who were on hand experienced a cheery glow of discovery.

Every School

For yesterday, combined with the evidence of the week previous, demonstrated that Mr. Maazel can conduct virtually every school and period well. We have heard him in the baroque, the classic, the romantic and the modern; and his readings have been distinguished by a conspicuous want of mannerism, their fidelity to the composer's dynamic intentions and a close personal identification with an inner lyric spirit. He is straightforward but not stiff, he neither hurries nor lingers. The balance of sonorities reflects a symphony and responsiveness between the conductor and the musicians.

In short, a splendid and communicative artist. Perhaps "discovery" is not the mot juste, for Mr. Maazel cut an impressive European swathe prior to Boston. But it took these two concerts to pragmatically assert his talent here. One is not sure of his musical tastes yet (does he have a special fondness for the contemporary, or for any particular national brand?); however, the sound, precision, solo work and intelligence displayed are of the first rank.

Owing to a lethal traffic jam on Massachusetts avenue, I found myself entering the Hall at the third Beethoven contra-dance; and I also found Mr. Maazel perched on lofty pair of risers, which he was employing like needless elevator shoes, for reasons unknown. But the performance of the jocose dances — the first at these concerts—proved brilliantly wrought. They have a bluff peasant quality that demands energy and simple gaiety, and they received a relaxed and appropriate charm. As music the suite is minor Beethoven, melodic and flowing, but distinguished chiefly by its self-plagiarism of the theme used in the ballet "Prometheus," which later became part of the material of the "Eroica" and the Opus 35.

Calm, Efficient

The delights of the remainder of the program were evenly diffused. The "Pastoral" was at once spacious, calm and efficient. There were no eccentricities of interpretation; and I particularly liked the way in which the drama of the score was unfolded. By choosing leisurely tempi, Mr. Maazel filled the tonal frame with a mellow and reflective color. This was a highly ingratiating interpretation.

Like most ballet music, I think Stravinsky's organically belongs to the stage rather than the concert hall. It is called a "tone poem," but is essentially a suite. At any rate the music has a sensuous and opulent surface; and Mr. Maazel did an admirable job in molding the decorative contrasts into an evocative aural world of fable. The spectral and the whimsical aspects of Andersen's fairy-tale were gorgeously rendered.

I'm afraid I've wan sympathy with Scriabin's ecstatic outcries, which hold the true emptiness of demagoguery. This was another Koussevitzky special, very Russian, abandoned, excessive and insincere. Yet the hysteric orchestration and blatant tricks of the writing make a gaudy showpiece, and Mr. Maazel pulled out every stop. He gave us the rhetoric at the top of its voice, and one can ask no more save, possibly, silence. Mr. Maazel had given us emotionally refined performance in this excellent concert, now when the occasion demanded, he was the showman. The music was bad and the presentation stunning.

Next week Jaime Laredo will be soloist in Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the first performance of Barber's "Die Natali"; Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" Sinfonia, and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel guest conductor, presented the ninth program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program:
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 ..... Beethoven
"Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem ..... Stravinsky
"Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54 .. Scriabin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 5 1960

Maazel Symphony Guest

Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct the Boston Symphony in two pairs of concerts, to be preceded this Thursday, Dec. 8, by an open rehearsal.

Mr. Maazel's already impressive conducting career began at the age of nine, and included, shortly thereafter, work with the NBC and other major orchestras. More recently he has been active in various parts of Europe.

For his first pair of concerts, Dec. 9 and 10, Mr. Maazel will program a concerto grosso by Geminiani, Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening at 8:30. His program will include Bach's Suite No. 4, Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Lorin Maazel to Conduct Boston Symphony as Guest

LORIN MAAZEL will be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the pair of concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall.

Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor of several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, by invitation of music director Charles Munch. Maazel's first appearances will be at the Friday-Saturday concerts at Symphony Hall this week. His program will consist of Geminiani's Concerto Grosso in G minor, Richard Strauss' Symphonic Poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2, in D major. There will be an Open Rehearsal Thursday at 7:30.

Beethoven's Twelve Contradances and his "Pastoral" Symphony, No. 6 in F major, have been scheduled by Mr. Maazel for the Symphony Hall concerts of Dec. 16-17. That program also will include Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Born Near Paris

Born near Paris March 5, of American parents, Lorin Maazel was brought to the United States as a small child. He began study of the violin at 5, and first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was 9.

In this country Maazel has conducted the NBC Symphony, at the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, and the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco and Montreal. For three years he was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

Mr. Maazel was a conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center in the Summer of 1951. In 1952 he married Mimi Sandbank, the Brazilian pianist, and in the same year received a Fulbright scholarship for travel and study in Italy.

Resident of Rome

A resident of Rome since 1953, Maazel has conducted extensively throughout Europe. He has conducted the orchestra at La Scala in Milan and Rome's St. Cecilia Orchestra, the Suisse Rommande, l'Orchestre National de la Radiotelevision de Paris, Conservatoire and Lamoureux Orchestras in Paris, Brussels Philharmonic, National Orchestras in Madrid and Lisbon, Stockholm Philharmonic, Vienna Sinfoniker, Berlin Philharmonic, the Radio Orchestras of Munich, Hamburg, Cologne, Rome and Turin, Budapest Philharmonic, Prague Philharmonic and Israel Philharmonic.

Mr. Maazel was the youngest conductor and the first American conductor invited to participate in the Wagner Festival at Bayreuth. At the 1960 Festival he conducted six performances of "Lohengrin."

Charles Munch will conduct the Tuesday evening concert at Symphony Hall, Dec. 6, at 8:30. His program will assemble Bach's Suite No. 4, in D major; Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston, and the Franck Symphony in D minor.

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
• Hancock 6-4200 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
DEC 8 1960

85

Lorin Maazel Debut Tomorrow Conducting Boston Symphony

Former Koussevitsky Pupil Has Conducted Extensively Throughout Europe

Charles Munch has invited Lorin Maazel to conduct several Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. Mr. Maazel's first appearance will be at the Orchestra's concerts tomorrow at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall tonight at 7:30.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with the Concerto Grosso in G minor by Francesco Geminiani (1687-1762) followed by the Strauss Symphonic Poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Beethoven's Twelve Contradances and his Symphony No. 6 in F major have been scheduled by Mr. Maazel for the Symphony Hall concerts of December 16-17. This program will also include Stravinsky's "Le Chant du rossignol" and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase".

Continued from Page One

Born near Paris on March 5, 1930, of American parents, Lorin Maazel was brought to the United States as a small child. He began study of the violin at five and first conducted a professional orchestra in public performance when he was nine.

In this country Lorin Maazel has conducted the NBC Symphony at the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, and the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco and Montreal. For three years he was the Associate Conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

Mr. Maazel was a conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center in the summer of 1951. In 1952 he married Mimi Sandbank, the Brazilian pianist, and in the same year he received a Fulbright scholarship for travel and study in Italy.

A resident of Rome since 1953, Lorin Maazel has conducted extensively throughout Europe. He has conducted the Orchestra at La Scala in Milan and Rome's St. Cecilia Orchestra, the Suisse Romande, l'orchestre National de la Radiotelevision de Paris, the Conservatoire and Lamoureux orchestras in Paris, the Brussels Philharmonic, the National Orchestras in Madrid and Lisbon, the Stockholm Philharmonic, the Vienna Sinfoniker, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Radio Orchestras of Munich, Hamburg, Cologne, Rome and Turin, the Budapest Philharmonic, the Prague Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic. Mr. Maazel was the youngest conductor and the first American conductor to be invited to participate in the Wagner Festival at Bayreuth. At the 1960 Festival he conducted six performances of "Lohengrin".

After his appearances with the Boston Symphony, Mr. Maazel returns to Europe to fulfill guest engagements in Germany and Russia before a tour of 40 concerts with the National Radio Orchestra of France. This will be followed by a visit to Australia where he will conduct 22 concerts.

The complete programs:

Thursday, Dec. 8, 7:30, Symphony Hall: Open Rehearsal.

Friday, Dec. 9, 2:15; Saturday, Dec. 10, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Maazel conducting. Geminiani: Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op 3, No. 2; Strauss: "Also sprach Zarathustra", Symphonic Poem; Brahms: Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 72.

Friday, Dec. 16, 215; Saturday, Dec. 17, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Maazel conducting. Beethoven: Twelve Contra-dances; Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral", Op. 68; Stravinsky: "Le Chant du rossignol", Symphonic Poem; Scriabin: "Le Poeme de l'extase", Op. 54.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

88

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... Twelve Contra-dances
(First performance at these concerts)

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo

II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto

III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro

IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

STRAVINSKY ..... "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem

SCRIABIN ..... "Le Poème de l'extase," Op. 54

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

DEC 11 1960

Music Events This Week

Lorin Maazel, Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor, has announced his programs for the remaining five Boston Symphony concerts which he will conduct in Boston, Providence and Cambridge.

At Symphony Hall on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 18, Mr. Maazel will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances as well as Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, "Le chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Mr. Maazel will conduct the orchestra in Providence Tuesday in the Geminiani Concerto Grosso, the Sixth Symphony by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. Mr. Maazel's final appearance with the orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Dec. 20, in the Beethoven Contra-dances Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Charles Munch will return from vacation to conduct the orchestra on Dec. 22-23. Because of the Christmas holidays these concerts will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon. The young Bolivian violinist, Jaime Laredo, will be Doctor Munch's guest at these concerts. The program will include the world - premiere of Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," by Samuel Barber.

TODAY

SVIATOSLAV RICHTER, pianist, Symphony Hall, 8:15 p.m. Beethoven Sonatas, Nos. 3, 9, 12, 22 and the "Appassionata."

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY, Edward Gilday, conductor, 3:00 p.m. Handel's "Messiah." Soloists: Heather Harper, Marjorie Thomas, David Galliver, Hervey Alan.

PETE SEEGER, folk singer, John Hancock Hall, two performances, 2:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Program announced from stage.

N.Y. WOODWIND QUINTET with Gregory Tucker, pianist, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m. M.I.T. Humanities Series. Hindemith, Mozart, Sweelinck, Francaix.

SOUTH SHORE CONCERT SERIES with Eunice Alberts, contralto, Nancy Carr, soprano, Joseph Silverstein, violin. The Quincy program starts at 4:00 p.m.

B.U. COLLEGIUM MUSICUM, Karl Geiringer, director, with Max Miller, organist, Marsh Chapel, 735 Commonwealth Ave., :30 p.m. Old Christmas music. Admission free.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY student recital, 4:30 p.m. Piano, voice, organ, clarinet. Admission free.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE CHOIR, Jewett Arts Center, 8:00 p.m. Christmas Vesper concert. Admission free.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" by choirs of the Souuth Congregational Church, Brockton, 4:00 p.m. Ellen Frylin, director. Soloists: Betty Fitton, Nancy Davis, Edward Robichaud, Frank Schulte.

BACH SOCIETY ORCHESTRA, Joel Lazar, conductor, Paine Hall, Harvard, 3:30 p.m. Vivaldi, Milhaud, Mozart.

CHURCH OF THE COVENANT CHOIR, with soloists and instrumentalists, Cameron Ryland, director, Berkeley and Newbury Streets, 4:00 p.m. Bach's Magnificat.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" by choir of First Congregational Church, Lowell, Bernice director, 8:00 p.m.

MONDAY

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY, Edward Gilday, conductor. Symphony Hall, 8:00 p.m. Soloist listed above.

NEW ARTS ORCHESTRA with DANCE-MAKERS, Little Opera House., 8:40 p.m. Program listed in Dance column.

TUESDAY

SVIATOSLAV RICHTER, pianist, 2nd Symphony Hall recital, 8:30 p.m. Haydn C major Sonata; Schumann Three Novelettes; works by Prokofieff—Visions Fugitives; Sonatie Pastorale; Paysage; A major Sonata, No. 6.

MUSIC LOVERS' CLUB, N. E. Mutual Hall, 1:00 a.m. Eunice de Senchez, soprano; Thomas Parrish, tenor; Annette Olivier, piano.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY Concert hall, Carol Johnson, mezzo soprano, 8:15 p.m. B.U. Choral Union, James Houghton, conductor, Hayden Auditorium, 9:00 p.m. Both events, admission free.

WEDNESDAY

NICOLA MOSCONA, bass, Boston Morning Musicales, Statler Hilton Ballroom, 11:00 a.m. Concert benefits Tufts University Boston School of Occupational Therapy.

GREAT MUSIC, Karl Geiringer, director, Room 12, B.U. College of Liberal Arts. Wilbur Fulbright lectures on Beethoven Symphonies. Public invited, 7:15 p.m.

FACULTY RECITAL, N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Corinne Flavin, cello, Felix Wolfes, piano, Kodaly, Shostakovich, Reger, Beethoven. Admission free.

FRED MACARTHUR, organ, Emmanuel Church, 15 Newbury Street, 12:10 p.m.

THURSDAY

N.E. CONSERVATORY CHORUS, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director, Jordan Hall 8:30 p.m. Annual Christmas concert. Bach Magnificat; Britten "Saint Nicholas." Frederick Jagel, tenor, soloist. Assisted by N.E.C. Orchestra James Dixon, conductor. Admission free.

B.U. OPERA DEPARTMENT, opera scenes staged by Adelaide Bishop, directed by Ludwig Bergmann. Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Mozart, Massenet, Humperdinck. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" United Presbyterian Church, Newton, 8:00 p.m. Rand Smith, director. Soloists: Corinne Jensen, Nalora Steele, Wesley Copplestone, Rand Smith.

FRIDAY

HARVARD CHRISTMAS CONCERT with Harvard Glee Club, Radcliffe Choral Society, Harvard-Radcliffe Orchestra, Elliot Forbes, conducting, Sanders Theater. Two performances, 4:00 p.m. 8:30 p.m. Bach Magnificat; Two Motets by Gabrieli.

HARVARD MEDICAL CHORUS and Double Octet, Stebbins Auditorium, Harvard Square. 8:00 p.m. Varied program including Christmas music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

DEC 11 1960

Lorin Maazel Second Week At Symphony

Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a second week. He has chosen for the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18, at 3, Twelve Contra-dances and the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven, "Song of the Nightingale" by Stravinsky, and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." The last-named long has been unheard here.

Mr. Maazel will conduct the Orchestra in Providence, R.I., Tuesday night, and will make his final appearance at a Sanders Theater, Cambridge, concert Tuesday, Dec. 20. He then will present the music of Beethoven listed above, and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Dr. Charles Munch will return from a brief vacation for the concerts in Symphony Hall of Dec. 22 and 23. Because of the Christmas holidays, the evening concert that week will be played Thursday. Jaime Laredo, Bolivian violinist, will be soloist in a work to be announced. Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," will be given first performances anywhere.

Times 11/61

WITH LORIN MAAZEL FROM KNEE BRITCHES TO BAYREUTH

By ERIC SALZMAN

IF the name Lorin Maazel conjures up the image of an 11-year-old in knee pants conducting the N. B. C. Symphony, forget it! Lorin Maazel is now a 30-year-old podium veteran with more than 400 European concerts under his belt, a dozen major festival appearances to notch on his baton and an international reputation that extends up to, but barely inside, his own country.

To accomplish all this, Mr. Maazel has had to defy one big bogey—the specter of the former prodigy—and he may be in the process of demolishing another jinx. The talent without honor in his own country finally has had his first major concerts in the United States as an adult. He led two series of concerts with the Boston Symphony last month and made a striking success.

Mr. Maazel was in New York last month on his way back to Europe from Boston. The former chubby prodigy has turned into a thin, good-looking, personable young man with a high forehead, a big crop of hair and sensitive features. He has a manner that is easy and friendly, yet grand and assured. He hardly looks his 30 years, but on the podium and off he conducts himself like a much older man.

"It isn't difficult to have success," he insisted. "What's hard is to continue to have success; to demonstrate not only potential but to begin to really make a contribution now."

This was the former prodigy speaking of personal experience and turning it into a general insight.

Trouble Begins

"People are struck by novelty; they give in to the first impression. But with familiarity they begin to resent the fact that they permitted themselves to be won over. They take a long second look, and that's where the trouble begins.

"A prodigy conductor is almost a contradiction in terms. The very definition of conducting implies the communication of a matured interpretive concept. In spite of what it says," he added, "a child shall not lead."

Conductors in knee pants have become common enough recently, but Mr. Maazel was the first to attract wide attention in this country. The story of his early years was well documented in a seemingly endless series of excited newspaper and magazine articles. He was born to American parents in a Paris suburb. His grandfather was a violinist in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra for many years and his father was a singer and singing teacher.

The conductor was reared in Los Angeles and showed his gifts early — not merely the usual prodigy run of violin and piano talents, but also the ability to read and memorize a score quickly and an inclination to direct imaginary orchestras. His parents bundled him off to Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, who became his teacher. When Mr. Bakaleinikoff moved to the Pittsburgh Symphony, the family moved, too, and that city comes as close as any to being home for Mr. Maazel.

The young Maazel started out by leading a rehearsal of the Los Angeles Philharmonic and then the student orchestra of the National Music Camp of Interlochen, Mich. He conducted the latter at the New York World's Fair, and that made him a national figure at the age of 9. Engagements with the N. B. C. Symphony, the New York Philharmonic and a host of other American orchestras followed.

Then came the usual story of the aging prodigy slowly fading out of sight. Actually, as a teen-ager he was busy studying, making music and learning. He attended the University of Pittsburgh, pursued his violin playing, joined the Pittsburgh Symphony (last stand, second violins) and eventually was appointed "apprentice conductor," a title that was granted a nine-year veteran of major American orchestras without the faintest touch of intentional irony.

"I wouldn't say opportunities were limited," Mr. Maazel says about those years with a wry smile, "I would say they were nonexistent."

Fulbright Grant

After an appearance at Tanglewood in 1951 that was successful but led to nowhere, he began to think of Europe. The next year he applied for a Fulbright grant, and in the fall of 1953 he was on his way to Italy — as a budding scholar of baroque music.

But Mr. Maazel quickly let it be known that he was available as a conductor just in case anything should turn up. Something did. In a situation that he describes as "too classic, too silly," someone in Catania, Sicily, fell ill, Mr. Maazel was reached in Milan, missed his train, missed the one rehearsal left, sat up all night in a train but wound up making his European debut on Christmas Eve, 1953.

It was a successful concert, but it hardly set the world on fire. It was six months before the next call, a chance to do some recording for rebroadcast on the Italian Radio. But other engagements followed. By 1957 Mr. Maazel was conducting all over Italy and even elsewhere in Europe.

The rest is hardly more than a list of successes: Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Stockholm, Madrid and South America. Mr. Maazel conducted eight performances of "Lohengrin" at Bayreuth this summer, thereby establishing several remarkable precedents: he was the first American ever to conduct there as well as the youngest conductor of any nationality to direct at the Wagnerian shrine. And it was his first experience in the theatre, although he had led operatic performances in concert and radio versions.

"Europe still offers the possibility of an extraordinary education for a serious musician," he believes. "You cannot understand tradition merely by studying a score."

88

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... Twelve Contra-dances
(First performance at these concerts)

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo

II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto

III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro

IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

STRAVINSKY ..... "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem

SCRIABIN ..... "Le Poème de l'extase," Op. 54

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC 11 1960

Music Events This Week

Lorin Maazel, Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor, has announced his programs for the remaining five Boston Symphony concerts which he will conduct in Boston, Providence and Cambridge.

At Symphony Hall on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 18, Mr. Maazel will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances as well as Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, "Le chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'extase."

Mr. Maazel will conduct the orchestra in Providence Tuesday in the Geminiani Concerto Grosso, the Sixth Symphony by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. Mr. Maazel's final appearance with the orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Dec. 20, in the Beethoven Contra-dances, Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Charles Munch will return from vacation to conduct the orchestra on Dec. 22-23. Because of the Christmas holidays these concerts will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon. The young Bolivian violinist, Jaime Laredo, will be Doctor Munch's guest at these concerts. The program will include the world - premiere of Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," by Samuel Barber.

TODAY

SVIATOSLAV RICHTER, pianist, Symphony Hall, 8:15 p.m. Beethoven Sonatas, Nos. 3, 9, 12, 22 and the "Appassionata."

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY, Edward Gilday, conductor, 3:00 p.m. Handel's "Messiah." Soloists: Heather Harper, Marjorie Thomas, David Galliver, Hervey Alan.

PETE SEEGER, folk singer, John Hancock Hall, two performances, 2:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Program announced from stage.

N.Y. WOODWIND QUINTET with Gregory Tucker, pianist, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m. M.I.T. Humanities Series. Hindemith, Mozart, Sweelinck, Francaix.

SOUTH SHORE CONCERT SERIES with Eunice Alberts, contralto, Nancy Carr, soprano, Joseph Silverstein, violin. The Quincy program starts at 4:00 p.m.

B.U. COLLEGIUM MUSICUM, Karl Geiringer, director, with Max Miller, organist, Marsh Chapel, 735 Commonwealth Ave., :30 p.m. Old Christmas music. Admission free.

BOSTON CONSERVATORY student recital, 4:30 p.m. Piano, voice, organ, clarinet. Admission free.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE CHOIR, Jewett Arts Center, 8:00 p.m. Christmas Vesper concert. Admission free.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" by choirs of the Sounth Congregational Church, Brockton, 4:00 p.m. Ellen Frylin, director. Soloists: Betty Filson, Nancy Davis, Edward Robichaud, Frank Schulte.

BACH SOCIETY ORCHESTRA, Joel Lazar, conductor, Paine Hall, Harvard, 3:30 p.m. Vivaldi, Milhaud, Mozart.

CHURCH OF THE COVENANT CHOIR, with soloists and instrumentalists, Cameron Rylance, director, Berkeley and Newbury Streets, 4:00 p.m. Bach's Magnificat.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" by choir of First Congregational Church, Lowell, Bernice director, 8:00 p.m.

MONDAY

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY, Edward Gilday, conductor. Symphony Hall, 8:00 p.m. Soloist listed above.

NEW ARTS ORCHESTRA with DANCE-MAKERS, Little Opera House., 8:40 p.m. Program listed in Dance column.

TUESDAY

SVIATOSLAV RICHTER, pianist, 2nd Symphony Hall recital, 8:30 p.m. Haydn C major Sonata; Schumann Three Novelettes; works by Prokofieff—Visions Fugitives; Sonata Pastorale; Paysage; A major Sonata, No. 6.

MUSIC LOVERS' CLUB, N. E. Mutual Hall, 1:00 a.m. Eunice de Senchez, soprano; Thomas Parrish, tenor; Annette Olivier, piano.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY Concert hall, Carol Johnson, mezzo soprano, 8:15 p.m. B.U. Choral Union, James Houghton, conductor, Hayden Auditorium, 2:00 p.m. Both events, admission free.

WEDNESDAY

NICOLA MOSCONA, bass, Boston Morning Musicales, Statler Hilton Ballroom. 11:00 a.m. Concert benefits Tufts University Boston School of Occupational Therapy.

GREAT MUSIC, Karl Geiringer, director, Room 12, B.U. College of Liberal Arts. Wilbur Fulbright lectures on Beethoven Symphonies. Public invited, 7:15 p.m.

FACULTY RECITAL, N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Corinne Flavin, cello, Felix Wolfes, piano, Kodaly, Shostakovich, Reger, Beethoven. Admission free.

FRED MACARTHUR, organ, Emmanuel Church, 15 Newbury Street, 12:10 p.m.

THURSDAY

N.E. CONSERVATORY CHORUS, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director, Jordan Hall 8:30 p.m. Annual Christmas concert. Bach Magnificat; Britten "Saint Nicholas." Frederick Jagel, tenor, soloist. Assisted by N.E.C. Orchestra James Dixon, conductor. Admission free.

B.U. OPERA DEPARTMENT, opera scenes staged by Adelaide Bishop, directed by Ludwig Bergmann. Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Mozart, Massenet, Humperdinck. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH" United Presbyterian Church, Newton, 8:00 p.m. Rand Smith, director. Soloists: Corinne Jensen, Nalora Steele, Wesley Copplestone, Rand Smith.

FRIDAY

HARVARD CHRISTMAS CONCERT with Harvard Glee Club, Radcliffe Choral Society, Harvard-Radcliffe Orchestra, Elliot Forbes, conducting, Sanders Theater. Two performances, 4:00 p.m. 8:30 p.m. Bach Magnificat; Two Motets by Gabrieli.

HARVARD MEDICAL CHORUS and Double Octet, Stebbins Auditorium, Harvard Square. 8:00 p.m. Varied program including Christmas music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 11 1960

Lorin Maazel Second Week At Symphony

Lorin Maazel will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a second week. He has chosen for the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, and Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18, at 3, Twelve Contra-dances and the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven, "Song of the Nightingale" by Stravinsky, and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." The last-named long has been unheard here.

Mr. Maazel will conduct the Orchestra in Providence, R.I., Tuesday night, and will make his final appearance at a Sanders Theater, Cambridge, concert Tuesday, Dec. 20. He then will present the music of Beethoven listed above, and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Dr. Charles Munch will return from a brief vacation for the concerts in Symphony Hall of Dec. 22 and 23. Because of the Christmas holidays, the evening concert that week will be played Thursday. Jaime Laredo, Bolivian violinist, will be soloist in a work to be announced. Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," will be given first performances anywhere.

WITH LORIN MAAZEL FROM KNEE BRITCHES TO BAYREUTH

By ERIC SALZMAN

IF the name Lorin Maazel conjures up the image of an 11-year-old in knee pants conducting the N. B. C. Symphony, "forget it!" Lorin Maazel is now a 30-year-old podium veteran with more than 400 European concerts under his belt, a dozen major festival appearances to notch on his baton and an international reputation that extends up to, but barely inside, his own country.

To accomplish all this, Mr. Maazel has had to defy one big bogey—the specter of the former prodigy—and he may be in the process of demolishing another jinx. The talent without honor in his own country finally has had his first major concerts in the United States as an adult. He led two series of concerts with the Boston Symphony last month and made a striking success.

Mr. Maazel was in New York last month on his way back to Europe from Boston. The former chubby prodigy has turned into a thin, good-looking, personable young man with a high forehead, a big crop of hair and sensitive features. He has a manner that is easy and friendly, yet grand and assured. He hardly looks his 30 years, but on the podium and off he conducts himself like a much older man.

"It isn't difficult to have success," he insisted. "What's hard is to continue to have success; to demonstrate not only potential but to begin to really make a contribution now."

This was the former prodigy speaking of personal experience and turning it into a general insight.

Trouble Begins

"People are struck by novelty; they give in to the first impression. But with familiarity they begin to resent the fact that they permitted themselves to be won over. They take a long second look, and that's where the trouble begins.

"A prodigy conductor is almost a contradiction in terms. The very definition of conducting implies the communication of a matured interpretive concept. In spite of what it says," he added, "a child shall not lead."

Conductors in knee pants have become common enough recently, but Mr. Maazel was the first to attract wide attention in this country. The story of his early years was well documented in a seemingly endless series of excited newspaper and magazine articles. He was born to American parents in a Paris suburb. His grandfather was a violinist in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra for many years and his father was a singer and singing teacher.

The conductor was reared in Los Angeles and showed his gifts early—not merely the usual prodigy run of violin and piano talents, but also the ability to read and memorize a score quickly and an inclination to direct imaginary orchestras. His parents bundled him off to Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, who became his teacher. When Mr. Bakaleinikoff moved to the Pittsburgh Symphony, the family moved, too, and that city comes as close as any to being home for Mr. Maazel.

The young Maazel started out by leading a rehearsal of the Los Angeles Philharmonic and then the student orchestra of the National Music Camp of Interlochen, Mich. He conducted the latter at the New York World's Fair, and that made him a national figure at the age of 9. Engagements with the N. B. C. Symphony, the New York Philharmonic and a host of other American orchestras followed.

Then came the usual story of the aging prodigy slowly fading out of public sight. Actually, as a teen-ager he was busy studying, making music and learning. He attended the University of Pittsburgh, pursued his violin playing, joined the Pittsburgh Symphony (last stand, second violins) and eventually was appointed "apprentice conductor," a title that was granted a nine-year veteran of major American orchestras without the faintest touch of intentional irony.

"I wouldn't say opportunities were limited," Mr. Maazel says about those years with a wry smile, "I would say they were nonexistent."

Fulbright Grant

After an appearance at Tanglewood in 1951 that was successful but led to nowhere, he began to think of Europe. The next year he applied for a Fulbright grant, and in the fall of 1953 he was on his way to Italy as a budding scholar of baroque music.

But Mr. Maazel quickly let it be known that he was available as a conductor just in case anything should turn up. Something did. In a situation that he describes as "too classic, too silly," someone in Catania, Sicily, fell ill. Mr. Maazel was reached in Milan, missed his train, missed the one rehearsal left, sat up all night in a train but wound up making his European debut on Christmas Eve, 1953.

It was a successful concert, but it hardly set the world on fire. It was six months before the next call, a chance to do some recording for rebroadcast on the Italian Radio. But other engagements followed. By 1957 Mr. Maazel was conducting all over Italy and even elsewhere in Europe.

The rest is hardly more than a list of successes: Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Stockholm, Madrid and South America. Mr. Maazel conducted eight performances of "Lohengrin" at Bayreuth this summer, thereby establishing several remarkable precedents: he was the first American ever to conduct there as well as the youngest conductor of any nationality to direct at the Wagnerian shrine. And it was his first experience in the theatre, although he had led operatic performances in concert and radio versions.

"Europe still offers the possibility of an extraordinary education for a serious musician," he believes. "You cannot understand tradition merely by studying a score."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872
DEC 14 1960

MUSIC LAST NIGHT

Boston Symphony Delayed But Not Snowed Out Here

By RUTH TRIPP

Transportation problems beset symphony orchestras along with the rest of the populace when we have had what the weather men call a paralyzing blizzard. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's buses were delayed in arriving at Symphony Hall because of a traffic jam in Boston and as a result their Providence concert at Veterans Auditorium was an hour late in starting. Nothing was lost however, since the long wait gave a chance for geneerally festive visiting back and forth and exchanging of snow storm episodes. (This while the orchestra was hastily consuming the sandwiches and hot coffee back stage which had to serve for their evening meal.)

Two announcements were made over the loud speaker that the program would start in 10 minutes. Finally a handsome young gentleman with a baton came on stage and announced that he was the coductor, Lorin Maazel was his name. He said, "There is nothing more ludicrous than a conductor without an orchestra. I got here at eight o'clock. The men are now here and the concert will begin in two or three minutes." It did.

There was not time for the Geminiani Concerto Grosso which was to have opened the program. Instead, the concert began with Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Headings for the various movements read in part, "Serene impressions on arriving", "Jolly gathering" and "gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm". Beethoven was not composing music about a New England blizzard. His was a summer thunder storm.

Lorin Maazel, the guest conductor, is completely different in his style with a baton. Without score, he gave one of the most meticulous readings of the Beethoven Sixth which has been heard here in a long time. Yet the attention to detail gave a freshness and depth to the interpretation which made parts of it sound like a new composition. The musicians played with great artistry.

The second number was Symphony No. 2 by Brahms and Mr. Maazel's unerring direction made its rhythmic involvements a most exhilarating experience. There was a refinement of tone color throughout the Adagio which was beautiful. The final Allegro was taken at a reasonable pace and the accumulation of tone for the climax was very dramatic when it arrived. Throughout the work, there was flexibility and grace and here again, the restraint emphasized the brilliance of the intellectual quality of Mr. Maazel's interpretations. He is a conductor to watch and his visit to Providence will be memorable chiefly for his command of his art.

Too much cannot be said for the manner in which the musicians measured up to the difficult situation and gave their best to their playing, once the group was assembled. There have been only three cancellations of concerts anywhere in the 80 years of Boston Symphony's career and none of them in Providence. Last evening's was the only time anyone present seemed to remember that their concerts had been delayed more than five minutes. A remarkable record indeed. Another record was set by the small number of listeners who left before the concert was over. Everyone had come to hear the Boston Symphony play. Their concert was worth every minute of the long wait.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208
DEC 13 1960

Concert Is On

BOSTON, Dec. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play as scheduled tonight at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence, despite road conditions caused by yesterday's storm. A spokesman said the members of the orchestra would leave early in three buses and would eat their supper backstage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 14 1960

Symphony Makes It to Providence

The Boston Symphony Orchestra kept its concert date in Providence last night after three chartered buses were an hour late because, a spokesman said, "The big trouble was getting out of Boston."

The audience waited in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium and the guest conductor, Lorin Maazel, lifted his baton promptly at 9:15 p.m.

A featured selection was the Beethoven Pastoral Symphony whose fourth movement carries this descriptive note by the composer — "gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S: 252,240
DEC 14 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 14 1960

Boston Symphony Plods in Snow, Keeps Its Date

Nobody can accuse the Boston Symphony Orchestra of shirking. When it makes a commitment, it keeps it.

The orchestra had scheduled an appearance at Providence tonight, second of five this year. Three chartered buses were engaged, one more than usual to accommodate the musicians who normally drive their own cars.

Traffic tie ups—all in Boston—caused some delay and on occasions members of the orchestra tramped considerable distances through the snow to alert other musicians waiting at stops along the way that could not be reached by the buses.

Cold, hungry and tired, the orchestra arrived in Providence an hour behind schedule.

The opening number: Beethoven's "Spring Symphony."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 14 1960

Music Hath Charms . . .

Providence, Dec. 14 (AP)—After much delay in snow-clogged highways, buses brought 105 members of the Boston Symphony Orcestra here last night for the second of five regularly scheduled concerts.

After an opening string number the orchestra played Beethoven's Sixth, or "Pastoral," Symphony.

The opening movement is designated, "Awakening of Serene impressions on arriving in the country."

The fourth movement—"Gladsome and tranquil feelings after the storm."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,163
DEC 13 1960

Boston Symphony To Keep RI Date

BOSTON (AP — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play as scheduled tonight at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence, R.I. despite road conditions caused by yesterday's storm.

A spokesman said today the members of the orchestra will leave early in three buses and will eat their supper backstage.

It's Snow Fun!

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Talk about contrasts!

Try Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday-evening experience for size.

Seems the group started out in three chartered buses for the second of their five concerts in Providence, R.I. Snow-clogged Boston streets delayed them, as they did everybody else.

On top of which, several musicians tromped through the 14-inch snowfall to fetch compatriots waiting at regular bus stops the buses couldn't reach this time.

Finally they arrived at Veterans Memorial Auditorium—one hour late.

And the program? Major work was Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, the Pastoral Symphony.

Opening movement is called: "Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country."

Fourth movement: "Gladsome and tranquil feelings after the storm.".

Snow melts indoors. Ask any mother of young children.

Better still, look at her front-hall rug.

But it takes a real New Englander to put this knowledge to practical use. Tuesday some smart thinkers did. They're down at the Franklin Street Building of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Their sidewalks needed shoveling, as whose didn't. But there wasn't any room in the snow-glutted street.

Out popped the idea, Why not take the white stuff indoors, dump it on the car-wash stand, and happily watch it disappear?

Attention, Cantabrigians!

Big brother is watching you, if you're shoveling a sidewalk. And if you fling a shovelful into the street, you'll hear about it.

Cambridge Police Chief Daniel J. Brennan has ordered patrolmen to notify householders to clean off their walks.

If any are spied shoveling the white flakes into the street, policemen are instructed to take their names.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
DEC 14 1960

Symphony Keys Theme in R. I.

An hour late because of snow-chocked highways the famed Boston Symphony gave its usual superb performance at a concert in Veterans Memorial Auditorium ni Providence.

Music lovers who fidgeted for an hour until the orchestra arrived, thought the fourth movement of Beethoven's Sixth, or "Pastoral," Symphony was played with particular feeling and understanding.

A composer's note interprets the movement as "gladsome and tranquil feelings after the storm."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 142,535
DEC 13 1960

Symphony to Play In R.I. as Scheduled

The after effects of yesterday's storm hold no terror for the doughty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

They will appear as scheduled tonight at the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium in Providence.

A spokesman said that three buses containing the members of the orchestra and their instruments left Boston early this morning, despite road conditions caused by the worst blizzard in New England's recent history.

The group plans to eat its supper backstage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
DEC 14 1960

Symphony Delayed Leaving Boston

PROVIDENCE—An audience in Veterans Memorial Auditorium waited for an hour last night to hear a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The three buses carrying the orchestra were late because of trouble encountered in getting out of Boston.

Lorin Maazel conducted the program, which included the Beethoven Pastrola Symphony. The composer's note for the fourth movement is: "gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 7,905
DEC 13 1960

CONCERT STILL ON

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play as scheduled tonight at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence, despite road conditions caused by yesterday's storm.

A spokesman said today the members of the orchestra will leave edrly in three buses and will eat their supper backstage.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 17 1960

Maazel's Second Symphony Weekend

Musical Weather: Fair and Warmer

By Louis Chapin

Outside Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, people were sliced into a sandwich of drizzle and slush. Inside, comforted by the ministrations of Lorin Maazel and the Boston Symphony, they were having (I think most would agree) quite a different sort of experience.

Though Mr. Maazel's interpretations of Beethoven, Stravinsky, and Scriabin would not generally be considered dry, they enable the listener to see clearly where he is stepping, and they provide him with intervals of warmth, sometimes gentle and sometimes blazing.

In the set of 12 Contra-dances with which the program opened, the stepping is quite lively. Heard for the first time at these concerts, they made, in conjunction with the "Pastoral" symphony which followed, a distinctly happy Beethoven-birthday present. Biographical doubts permit a celebration at either concert, but prospective dancers will need boots for the accents, light feet for the brisker tempi. Those who sit and watch can enjoy these tiny movements as Beethoven experiments in orchestration and melodic treatment (No. 7 anticipates an "Eroica" theme).

They may also enjoy them as miniature instances of the rustic zest which authenticized the "Pastoral" symphony, six years later. Mr. Maazel's reading of this music rests on nimble and appreciative delineation; his characteristic care in controlling dynamics focuses sounds perfectly, from the lightest string thunder-echo to the brassiest over-blown horn. Fewer instances of the latter might improve the proportion, even though this heightened, deftly manipulated Beethoven is most satisfactory.

Scriabin, in his "Le Poème de l'Extase," develops a blazing climax. But he was at a disadvantage by following some of the most exquisite orchestral coloration of this or perhaps any century, in Stravinsky's "Le Chant du Rossignol."

Such a thought obviously runs counter to the enthusiasm which echoed yesterday's whelm of ecstasy, and Mr. Maazel is to be admired for the isolated brilliance of these performances. He has proved himself in two concepts a young conductor of remarkable gifts, one who deserves to exploit the sonorities of a virtuoso orchestra.

He also proved himself, in the inflections of Stravinsky and the formal definitions of Beethoven and Brahms, responsive to an economy of music that was not of primary concern to Scriabin for example. We need that economy today, among the splashings of echo-chambers and frequency ranges, if music is to do the sort of thing that keeps Beethoven indestructible. There's music with that intention being written, and we can hope Mr. Maazel will bring some of it with him next time.

Meanwhile, his infectious clarity sent us out of Symphony Hall half expecting blue skies and dry streets. We might have found them, only the weather doesn't subscribe.

AMERICAN PRODIGY COMES HOME

LORIN MAAZEL, WHO HAS CONDUCTED ALMOST EVERY MAJOR EUROPEAN ORCHESTRA, — THAT "THERE IS TOO MUCH SUCCESS AND NOT ENOUGH STUDY" IN OUR MUSIC.

BY LESTER TRIMBLE

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

DEC 17 1960

Lorin Maazel, the 30-year-old American conductor who made his debut with the Boston Symphony in December, has been building a unique career in the past decade. Unlike his young American colleagues, most of whom gained the major part of their renown in the United States, Maazel has confined his professional activities entirely to Europe. He has conducted every major orchestra on the Continent. In Italy this has meant the orchestras at La Scala and in Milan; the radio orchestras of Rome and Turin. In France there has been the National Radio-Television Orchestra of Paris, the orchestra of the Conservatoire and the Lamoureux; in Germany, the Berlin Philharmonic, the RIAS, and the Munich radio orchestra. He has conducted, as well, in Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Israel, and at all major European festivals.

Last summer, at the invitation of Richard Wagner's descendants, he became the youngest conductor (and the first American) ever to appear on the podium at Bayreuth. After his performance of "Lohengrin," MUSICAL AMERICA's French correspondent, Claude Rostand, wrote that he had been ". . . the musical sensation of the year . . .".

These achievements (and for an almost-boy American conductor to have success with European orchestras is indeed an achievement) have been brought about by Mr. Maazel alone. He went to Europe without a letter of introduction, without a sponsor, and without publicity. As he says, he simply presented himself to managers and said, "Here I am."

But one must not forget that Maazel had a background as a prodigy. At the 1939 New York World's Fair, when he was nine, his conducting debut drew from Olin Downes the appelation "a genius" and a spate of guest-conducting engagements with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Montreal. In 1941, when he was eleven, Toscanini invited him to conduct the NBC Orchestra.

From 1946 to 1950, Maazel went through a period which, while unsensational, must have provided an important part of the basis for his present career. Since his parents resided in Pittsburgh, he was given over to Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, Fritz Reiner's assistant conductor, for lessons in conducting and the violin. He also pursued academic training at the University of Pittsburgh, played in the Pittsburgh Symphony, made appearances as a concert violinist and was the leader of the Fine Arts String Quartet. For three years, he was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony. Then followed important successes at Tanglewood, a Fulbright Grant, and the launching of his present international career.

Lorin Maazel . . .

(Continued from page 15)

Of his early days as a prodigy and his period of training in Pittsburgh, Maazel has relatively little to say. He pities prodigies, and feels that they are fortunate if they are not forced to exhibit their gifts before the public. His conducting activities in Pittsburgh he considers preparatory and pre-professional. His real musical life, one gathers, began when he took his gifts into his own hands and began to mold them. This took place in Europe.

Maazel has firm opinions about the requirements of a conductor's métier. "Anybody can learn to wave a stick," he says. "That is not important." Cultivation of mind and musical spirit is the prime necessity, while, for the young conductor, repertoire is a major bugaboo. He deplores the attitude which makes "success" a goal in itself, and feels that in the United States there is "too much success and not enough study". Art, he says, is a "tall, wide, deep thing". One can be preoccupied with it endlessly. There is no need of popularization; only understanding.

Coming from a French-born, American-trained conductor, one of Maazel's statements, in particular, is likely to ring in American ears. "I have a feeling," he says, "that the American public has come farther than the American artist. The people want something better."

THE SYMPHONY

MUSICAL PERSONALITY LIGHTS UP SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Keep an eye on Lorin Maazel," a charming neighbor shouted to us in the suburb in which we live last week. (She was at that moment floundering through a drift. Monday's blizzard was at its height, and music seemed a rather distant concern). "That boy is going to set the world on fire!"

Mr. Maazel fulfilled the prophecy yesterday afternoon. The 30-year-old guest conductor lit the part of the world that is Symphony Hall with the incandescence of his musical personality. Although the usual audience, due to the weather, was not out in full force, those who were on hand experienced a cheery glow of discovery.

Every School

For yesterday, combined with the evidence of the week previous, demonstrated that Mr. Maazel can conduct virtually every school and period well. We have heard him in the baroque, the classic, the romantic and the modern; and his readings have been distinguished by a conspicuous want of mannerism, their fidelity to the composer's dynamic intentions and a close personal identification with an inner lyric spirit. He is straightforward but not stiff, he neither hurries nor lingers. The balance of sonorities reflects a symphony and responsiveness between the conductor and the musicians.

In short, a splendid and communicative artist. Perhaps "discovery" is not the mot juste, for Mr. Maazel cut an impressive European swathe prior to Boston. But it took these two concerts to pragmatically assert his talent here. One is not sure of his musical tastes yet (does he have a special fondness for the contemporary, or for any particular national brand?); however, the sound, precision, solo work and intelligence displayed are of the first rank.

Owing to a lethal traffic jam on Massachusetts avenue, I found myself entering the Hall at the third Beethoven contra-dance; and I also found Mr. Maazel perched on lofty pair of risers, which he was employing like needless elevator shoes, for reasons unknown. But the performance of the jocose dances — the first at these concerts—proved brilliantly wrought. They have a bluff peasant quality that demands energy and simple gaiety, and they received a relaxed and appropriate charm. As music the suite is minor Beethoven, melodic and flowing, but distinguished chiefly by its self-plagiarism of the theme used in the ballet "Prometheus," which later became part of the material of the "Eroica" and the Opus 35.

Calm, Efficient

The delights of the remainder of the program were evenly diffused. The "Pastoral" was at once spacious, calm and efficient. There were no eccentricities of interpretation; and I particularly liked the way in which the drama of the score was unfolded. By choosing leisurely tempi, Mr. Maazel filled the tonal frame with a mellow and reflective color. This was a highly ingratiating interpretation.

Like most ballet music, I think Stravinsky's organically belongs to the stage rather than the concert hall. It is called a "tone poem," but is essentially a suite. At any rate the music has a sensuous and opulent surface; and Mr. Maazel did an admirable job in molding the decorative contrasts into an evocative aural world of fable. The spectral and the whimsical aspects of Andersen's fairy-tale were gorgeously rendered.

I'm afraid I've wan sympathy with Scriabin's ecstatic outcries, which hold the true emptiness of demagoguery. This was another Koussevitzky special, very Russian, abandoned, excessive and insincere. Yet the hysteric orchestration and blatant tricks of the writing make a gaudy showpiece, and Mr. Maazel pulled out every stop. He gave us the rhetoric at the top of its voice, and one can ask no more save, possibly, silence. Mr. Maazel had given us emotionally refined performance in this excellent concert, now when the occasion demanded, he was the showman. The music was bad and the presentation stunning.

Next week Jaime Laredo will be soloist in Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the first performance of Barber's "Die Natali"; Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" Sinfonia, and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel guest conductor, presented the ninth program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program:

Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 ..... Beethoven
"Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem ..... Stravinsky
"Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54.. Scriabin

AMERICAN PRODIGY COMES HOME

LORIN MAAZEL, WHO HAS CONDUCTED ALMOST EVERY MAJOR EUROPEAN ORCHESTRA, SAYS — THAT "THERE IS TOO MUCH SUCCESS AND NOT ENOUGH STUDY" IN OUR MUSIC.

BY LESTER TRIMBLE

Lorin Maazel, the 30-year-old American conductor who made his debut with the Boston Symphony in December, has been building a unique career in the past decade. Unlike his young American colleagues, most of whom gained the major part of their renown in the United States, Maazel has confined his professional activities entirely to Europe. He has conducted every major orchestra on the Continent. In Italy this has meant the orchestras at La Scala and in Milan; the radio orchestras of Rome and Turin. In France there has been the National Radio-Television Orchestra of Paris, the orchestra of the Conservatoire and the Lamoureux; in Germany, the Berlin Philharmonic, the RIAS, and the Munich radio orchestra. He has conducted, as well, in Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Israel, and at all major European festivals.

Last summer, at the invitation of Richard Wagner's descendants, he became the youngest conductor (and the first American) ever to appear on the podium at Bayreuth. After his performance of "Lohengrin," MUSICAL AMERICA's French correspondent, Claude Rostand, wrote that he had been ". . . the musical sensation of the year . . .".

These achievements (and for an almost-boy American conductor to have success with European orchestras is indeed an achievement) have been brought about by Mr. Maazel alone. He went to Europe without a letter of introduction, without a sponsor, and without publicity. As he says, he simply presented himself to managers and said, "Here I am."

But one must not forget that Maazel had a background as a prodigy. At the 1939 New York World's Fair, when he was nine, his conducting debut drew from Olin Downes the appelation "a genius" and a spate of guest-conducting engagements with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Montreal. In 1941, when he was eleven, Toscanini invited him to conduct the NBC Orchestra.

From 1946 to 1950, Maazel went through a period which, while unsensational, must have provided an important part of the basis for his present career. Since his parents resided in Pittsburgh, he was given over to Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, Fritz Reiner's assistant conductor, for lessons in conducting and the violin. He also pursued academic training at the University of Pittsburgh, played in the Pittsburgh Symphony, made appearances as a concert violinist and was the leader of the Fine Arts String Quartet. For three years, he was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony. Then followed important successes at Tanglewood, a Fulbright Grant, and the launching of his present international career.

Lorin Maazel . . .

(Continued from page 15)

Of his early days as a prodigy and his period of training in Pittsburgh, Maazel has relatively little to say. He pities prodigies, and feels that they are fortunate if they are not forced to exhibit their gifts before the public. His conducting activities in Pittsburgh he considers preparatory and pre-professional. His real musical life, one gathers, began when he took his gifts into his own hands and began to mold them. This took place in Europe.

Maazel has firm opinions about the requirements of a conductor's métier. "Anybody can learn to wave a stick," he says. "That is not important." Cultivation of mind and musical spirit is the prime necessity, while, for the young conductor, repertoire is a major bugaboo. He deplores the attitude which makes "success" a goal in itself, and feels that in the United States there is "too much success and not enough study". Art, he says, is a "tall, wide, deep thing". One can be preoccupied with it endlessly. There is no need of popularization; only understanding.

Coming from a French-born, American-trained conductor, one of Maazel's statements, in particular, is likely to ring in American ears. "I have a feeling," he says, "that the American public has come farther than the American artist. The people want something better."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

DEC 17 1960

THE SYMPHONY

MUSICAL PERSONALITY LIGHTS UP SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Keep an eye on Lorin Maazel," a charming neighbor shouted to us in the suburb in which we live last week. (She was at that moment floundering through a drift, Monday's blizzard was at its height, and music seemed a rather distant concern). "That boy is going to set the world on fire!"

Mr. Maazel fulfilled the prophecy yesterday afternoon. The 30-year-old guest conductor lit the part of the world that is Symphony Hall with the incandescence of his musical personality. Although the usual audience, due to the weather, was not out in full force, those who were on hand experienced a cheery glow of discovery.

Every School

For yesterday, combined with the evidence of the week previous, demonstrated that Mr. Maazel can conduct virtually every school and period well. We have heard him in the baroque, the classic, the romantic and the modern; and his readings have been distinguished by a conspicuous want of mannerism, their fidelity to the composer's dynamic intentions and a close personal identification with an inner lyric spirit. He is straightforward but not stiff, he neither hurries nor lingers. The balance of sonorities reflects a symphony and responsiveness between the conductor and the musicians.

In short, a splendid and communicative artist. Perhaps "discovery" is not the mot juste, for Mr. Maazel cut an impressive European swathe prior to Boston. But it took these two concerts to pragmatically assert his talent here. One is not sure of his musical tastes yet (does he have a special fondness for the contemporary, or for any particular national brand?); however, the sound, precision, solo work and intelligence displayed are of the first rank.

Owing to a lethal traffic jam on Massachusetts avenue, I found myself entering the Hall at the third Beethoven contra-dance; and I also found Mr. Maazel perched on lofty pair of risers, which he was employing like needless elevator shoes, for reasons unknown. But the performance of the jocose dances — the first at these concerts—proved brilliantly wrought. They have a bluff peasant quality that demands energy and simple gaiety, and they received a relaxed and appropriate charm. As music the suite is minor Beethoven, melodic and flowing, but distinguished chiefly by its self-plagiarism of the theme used in the ballet "Prometheus," which later became part of the material of the "Eroica" and the Opus 35.

Calm, Efficient

The delights of the remainder of the program were evenly diffused. The "Pastoral" was at once spacious, calm and efficient. There were no eccentricities of interpretation; and I particularly liked the way in which the drama of the score was unfolded. By choosing leisurely tempi, Mr. Maazel filled the tonal frame with a mellow and reflective color. This was a highly ingratiating interpretation.

Like most ballet music, I think Stravinsky's organically belongs to the stage rather than the concert hall. It is called a "tone poem," but is essentially a suite. At any rate the music has a sensuous and opulent surface; and Mr. Maazel did an admirable job in molding the decorative contrasts into an evocative aural world of fable. The spectral and the whimsical aspects of Andersen's fairy-tale were gorgeously rendered.

I'm afraid I've wan sympathy with Scriabin's ecstatic outcries, which hold the true emptiness of demagoguery. This was another Koussevitzky special, very Russian, abandoned, excessive and insincere. Yet the hysteric orchestration and blatant tricks of the writing make a gaudy showpiece and Mr. Maazel pulled out every stop. He gave us the rhetoric at the top of its voice, and one can ask no more save, possibly, silence. Mr. Maazel had given us emotionally refined performance in this excellent concert, now when the occasion demanded, he was the showman. The music was bad and the presentation stunning.

Next week Jaime Laredo will be soloist in Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the first performance of Barber's "Die Natali", Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" Sinfonia, and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel guest conductor, presented the ninth program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program:

Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 ..... Beethoven
"Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem ..... Stravinsky
"Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54 ..... Scriabin

AMERICAN PRODIGY COMES HOME

LORIN MAAZEL, WHO HAS CONDUCTED ALMOST EVERY MAJOR EUROPEAN ORCHESTRA, DECLARES — THAT "THERE IS TOO MUCH SUCCESS AND NOT ENOUGH STUDY" IN OUR MUSICAL LIFE —

BY LESTER TRIMBLE

Lorin Maazel, the 30-year-old American conductor who made his debut with the Boston Symphony in December, has been building a unique career in the past decade. Unlike his young American colleagues, most of whom gained the major part of their renown in the United States, Maazel has confined his professional activities entirely to Europe. He has conducted every major orchestra on the Continent. In Italy this has meant the orchestras at La Scala and in Milan; the radio orchestras of Rome and Turin. In France there has been the National Radio-Television Orchestra of Paris, the orchestra of the Conservatoire and the Lamoureux; in Germany, the Berlin Philharmonic, the RIAS, and the Munich radio orchestra. He has conducted, as well, in Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Israel, and at all major European festivals.

Last summer, at the invitation of Richard Wagner's descendants, he became the youngest conductor (and the first American) ever to appear on the podium at Bayreuth. After his performance of "Lohengrin," MUSICAL AMERICA's French correspondent, Claude Rostand, wrote that he had been ". . . the musical sensation of the year . . .".

These achievements (and for an almost-boy American conductor to have success with European orchestras is indeed an achievement) have been brought about by Mr. Maazel alone. He went to Europe without a letter of introduction, without a sponsor, and without publicity. As he says, he simply presented himself to managers and said, "Here I am."

But one must not forget that Maazel had a background as a prodigy. At the 1939 New York World's Fair, when he was nine, his conducting debut drew from Olin Downes the appelation "a genius" and a spate of guest-conducting engagements with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Montreal. In 1941, when he was eleven, Toscanini invited him to conduct the NBC Orchestra.

From 1946 to 1950, Maazel went through a period which, while unsensational, must have provided an important part of the basis for his present career. Since his parents resided in Pittsburgh, he was given over to Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, Fritz Reiner's assistant conductor, for lessons in conducting and the violin. He also pursued academic training at the University of Pittsburgh, played in the Pittsburgh Symphony, made appearances as a concert violinist and was the leader of the Fine Arts String Quartet. For three years, he was associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony. Then followed important successes at Tanglewood, a Fulbright Grant, and the launching of his present international career.

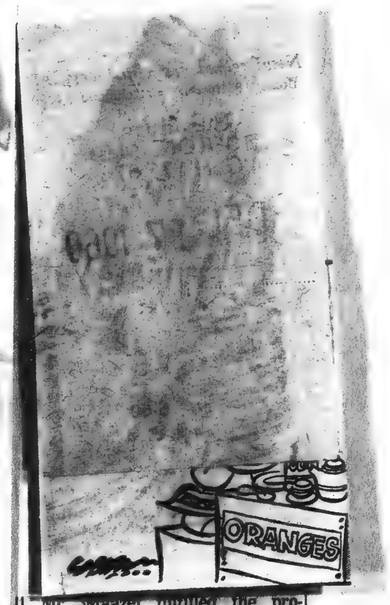
Lorin Maazel . . .

(Continued from page 15)

Of his early days as a prodigy and his period of training in Pittsburgh, Maazel has relatively little to say. He pities prodigies, and feels that they are fortunate if they are not forced to exhibit their gifts before the public. His conducting activities in Pittsburgh he considers preparatory and pre-professional. His real musical life, one gathers, began when he took his gifts into his own hands and began to mold them. This took place in Europe.

Maazel has firm opinions about the requirements of a conductor's métier. "Anybody can learn to wave a stick," he says. "That is not important." Cultivation of mind and musical spirit is the prime necessity, while, for the young conductor, repertoire is a major bugaboo. He deplores the attitude which makes "success" a goal in itself, and feels that in the United States there is "too much success and not enough study". Art, he says, is a "tall, wide, deep thing". One can be preoccupied with it endlessly. There is no need of popularization; only understanding.

Coming from a French-born, American-trained conductor, one of Maazel's statements, in particular, is likely to ring in American ears. "I have a feeling," he says, "that the American public has come farther than the American artist. The people want something better."



Mr. Maazel fulfilled the prophecy yesterday afternoon. The 30-year-old guest conductor lit the part of the world that is Symphony Hall with the incandescence of his musical personality. Although the usual audience, due to the weather, was not out in full force, those who were on hand experienced a cheery glow of discovery.

Every School

For yesterday, combined with the evidence of the week previous, demonstrated that Mr. Maazel can conduct virtually every school and period well. We have heard him in the baroque, the classic, the romantic and the modern; and his readings have been distinguished by a conspicuous want of mannerism, their fidelity to the composer's dynamic intentions and a close personal identification with an inner lyric spirit. He is straightforward but not stiff, he neither hurries nor lingers. The balance of sonorities reflects a symphony and responsiveness between the conductor and the musicians.

In short, a splendid and communicative artist. Perhaps "discovery" is not the mot juste, for Mr. Maazel cut an impressive European swathe prior to Boston. But it took these two concerts to pragmatically assert his talent here. One is not sure of his musical tastes yet (does he have a special fondness for the contemporary, or for any particular national brand?); however, the sound, precision, solo work and intelligence displayed are of the first rank.

Owing to a lethal traffic jam on Massachusetts avenue, I found myself entering the Hall at the third Beethoven contra-dance; and I also found Mr. Maazel perched on lofty pair of risers, which he was employing like needless elevator shoes, for reasons unknown. But the performance of the jocose dances — the first at these concerts—proved brilliantly wrought. They have a bluff peasant quality that demands energy and simple gaiety, and they received a relaxed and appropriate charm. As music the suite is minor Beethoven, melodic and flowing, but distinguished chiefly by its self-plagiarism of the theme used in the ballet "Prometheus," which later became part of the material of the "Eroica" and the Opus 35.

Calm, Efficient

The delights of the remainder of the program were evenly diffused. The "Pastoral" was at once spacious, calm and efficient. There were no eccentricities of interpretation; and I particularly liked the way in which the drama of the score was unfolded. By choosing leisurely tempi, Mr. Maazel filled the tonal frame with a mellow and reflective color. This was a highly ingratiating interpretation.

Like most ballet music, I think Stravinsky's organically belongs to the stage rather than the concert hall. It is called a "tone poem," but is essentially a suite. At any rate the music has a sensuous and opulent surface; and Mr. Maazel did an admirable job in molding the decorative contrasts into an evocative aural world of fable. The spectral and the whimsical aspects of Andersen's fairy-tale were gorgeously rendered.

I'm afraid I've wan sympathy with Scriabin's ecstatic outeries which hold the true emptiness of demagoguery. This was another Koussevitzky special, very Russian, abandoned, excessive and insincere. Yet the hysteric orchestration and blatant tricks of the writing make a gaudy showpiece and Mr. Maazel pulled out every stop. He gave us the rhetoric at the top of its voice, and one can ask no more save, possibly, silence. Mr. Maazel had given us emotionally refined performance in this excellent concert, now when the occasion demanded, he was the showman. The music was bad and the presentation stunning.

Next week Jaime Laredo will be soloist in Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the first performance of Barber's "Die Natali", Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" Sinfonia, and "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel guest conductor, presented the ninth program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program:
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 ..... Beethoven
"Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem ..... Stravinsky
"Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54 ..... Scriabin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
DEC 15 1960

92

Guest Conductor Announces Five Windup Performances

Boston Symphony Will Resume Regular Schedule With Munch's Return

Lorin Maazel, Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor, has announced his programs for the remaining five Boston Symphony concerts which he will conduct in Boston, Providence and Cambridge.

At Symphony Hall on Friday (Dec. 16, 2:15), Saturday (Dec. 17, 8:30) and Sunday (Dec. 18, 3:00) Mr. Maazel will conduct Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances as well as Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, "Le chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and Scriabin's Le Poeme de l'extase."

Mr. Maazel will conduct the Orchestra in Providence Tuesday (Dec. 13, at 8:15) in a program to include the Geminiani Concerto Grosso, the Sixth Symphony by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. Mr. Maazel's final appearance with the Orchestra will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on December 20. The program for this concert will be the Beethoven Contra-dances, Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and the

Continued on Page Fourteen

13

Guest Conductor

Continued from Page One

Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Charles Munch will return from vacation to conduct the Orchestra on December 22-23. Because of the Christmas holidays these concerts will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon. The young Bolivian violinist, Jaime Laredo, will be Doctor Munch's guest at these concerts. The program will include the world-premiere of Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," by Samuel Barber.

* * *

The complete programs:

Friday, Dec. 16, 2:15; Saturday, Dec. 17, 8:30; Sunday, Dec. 18, 3:00; Symphony Hall, Lorin Maazel, Guest Conductor:

Beethoven, Twelve Contra-dances; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, in F Major, "Pastoral," Op. 68; Stravinsky, "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem; Scriabin, "Le Poeme de l'extase," Op. 54.

Tuesday, Dec. 20, 8:30; Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Lorin Maazel Conductor:

Beethoven, Twelve Contra-dances; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68; Brahms, Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 453,664
DEC 18 1960

Beethoven Symphony Program

Lorin Maazel, Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor, is conducting the orchestra in Beethoven's Twelve Contra-dances this afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program will also offer "Le Chant du Rossignol" by Stravinsky and Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'Extase."

Mr. Maazel's final appearance with the orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday. Dr. Charles Munch returns from vacation to conduct the orchestra on Thursday and Friday.

Because of the Christmas holidays, these concerts will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon. The young Bolivian violinist, Jaime Laredo, will be the guest at these concerts. The program features the world-premiere of Chorale Preludes for Christmas, D"ie Natali" by Samuel Barber.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC 25 1960

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: At the Colonial, "The World of Suzie Wong," made its third visit to Boston but its unquestioned success could not shake an opinion that Paul Osborne's dramatization of Richard Mason's novel "still isn't a very good play . . . made up of nothing but threadbare situations."

★ ★ ★

FILMS: "The Three Worlds of Gulliver" at the Pilgrim was found to be handsome and well photographed, reasonably faithful to the original and successful in "straddling the gulf between child and adult. "Cinderfella," with Jerry Lewis at the Metropolitan had a "lively and funny beginning," but tapered off into "a self-conscious, drawn out fantasy." Results in the Russian ballet film, "Lileia," at the Brattle were "fiercely uneven," but the dancing of the Kiev Opera Corps de Ballet was highly praised. Otto Preminger's massive 'Exodus" at the Saxon was "pictorially superb," with "many magnificent scenes," but the film proved to be over long and the scope of the story dwarfed the efforts of most of the cast. At the Telepix, the new English-Moroccan "Another Sky" was termed "a magnificent failure" although the film's photography, local color and high intent held attention.

★ ★ ★

MUSIC: The Boston Symphony Orchestra confirmed the impression gained last week that Lorin Maazel "can conduct virtually every school and period well . . . in short, a splendid and communicative artist." The devotional aspects of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," performed by M. I. T. at Kresge Auditorium, were "beautifully caught and transmitted' but lack of dynamic contrast in the chorus and imbalance between singers and orchestra were noted. At Sanders Theater the Cambridge Civic Symphony Orchestra opened its season with "proven artistry."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 17 1960

Beethoven, Stravinsky And Scriabin by Maazel

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the ninth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Lorin Maazel, guest conductor, presented the following program: Beethoven: Twelve Contra-dances; (first performance at these concerts); Beethoven: "Pastoral" "Symphony; Stravinsky: "Song of the Nightingale;" Scriabin: "Poem of Ecstasy."

By CYRUS DURGIN

Lorin Maazel chose a rather unusual and appealing program for his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The dozen Contra-dances by Beethoven are altogether charming, if insubstantial for a symphony concert, and Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale" is a comparative rarity.

As for Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," it had not been performed by this Orchestra in more than 14 years, and it proved to be just right for so unpleasant an afternoon of cold December rain. Its loud and imposing conclusion, held to the last ounce of the wind players' breath, also was just the thing wherewith Mr. Maazel said goodbye to the Friday subscribers.

The ovation which followed was almost as super-heated as the music itself. The decibels of applause and cheers concealed the fact that weather had reduced the customary size of the audience.

In certain respects, the "Poem of Ecstasy" was the best-performed work of the concert. Maazel held it together better than he had either the "Pastoral" Symphony or the trickily episodic "Song of the Nightingale," and in turn it called forth what at the moment are his finest attributes as conductor.

He has sufficient technic and he has the nature to revel in ardent music of much detail and complex texture. At the age of 30 that is quite natural. The delicate facade and the exposed texture and exacting continuity of the "Pastoral" Symphony, Maazel will deal with more masterfully at the age of 45 or 50 than he does today.

Some Reservations

Even genius—and Maazel is a conducting genius—requires much experience for the development of mastery of many styles, and for that seeming consistent ease and steady flow essential in long works. His "Pastoral" just now is a bit perfunctory, even plodding in the slow movement.

Maazel shows one of the mannerisms peculiar to the conductor who has worked with many different orchestras, but not for long with a single very good one: he over-conducts. For such a virtuoso band as the Boston Symphony, he gives too many cues. He also insists upon much too high a podium, with the result that he seems detached from the orchestra, the men on stage level have to look too high, and so much height only accentuates Maazel's inclination to dance about.

These points are made only upon a comparative basis, for all things considered, Maazel is enormously gifted, and he has given a fine account of himself here. If his development proceeds as we all hope it will, this young man will become one of the great masters of his art.

Next week Dr. Munch will return to the conductor's stand, and will give first performances of Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali." Jaime Laredo will be soloist in the Bach A minor Violin Concerto, and the E minor Concerto by Mendelssohn. The concerts will begin with the Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and will end with Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

N.B.—The evening concert next week will be given Thursday, since Saturday will be Christmas Eve.

WORLD WEEK
SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,073,638
JAN 25 1961

Words About Music

A Guide to Building an LP Library

YOUNG MAN GOING PLACES. Here's a name to take note of: Lorin Maazel. Born in Paris in 1930, Maazel was educated in the U. S., at eight a "prodigy" conductor, and at 15 a Pittsburgh Symphony violinist. Since 1953 he has been conducting the leading European orchestras with great success. Just last month he returned to the U.S. to guest-conduct the Boston Symphony—to rousing cheers. These performances, plus a few LPs he has made in Europe, reveal a fine young musician definitely on his way to the top—the Leonard Bernstein, perhaps, of a new generation. One of his best LPs: Schubert's great "Unfinished" Symphony, coupled with the same composer's Fourth Symphony [DGG S138-128]. Maazel, with the Berlin Philharmonic, brings out Schubert's special gift for melody with unusual warmth and lightness.

Lorin Maazel

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189

DEC 11 1960

93

Symphony Here Tuesday Night

The BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra, with Lorin Maazel, guest conductor, will play its second Providence concert of the season Tuesday at 8:15 p.m., at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Maazel was born in Paris in 1930 of American parents. He began the study of violin at age five and made his debut in conducting in 1939 at the New York World's Fair. In 1941 he was invited by Toscanini to conduct the NBC Symphony.

While studying Baroque music in Italy on a Fulbright scholarship in 1952, he made his first European concert tour. Since that time, he has conducted several European orchestras and participated in many music festivals, including seven performances at last summer's Wagner Festival at Bayreuth.

The program:

Concerto Grosso in G minor, Op. 3, No. 2 ..... Geminiani
Largo e staccato; Allegro
Adagio
Allegro

Symphony No. 6 in F major "Pastoral" Op. 68 ..... Beethoven
Allegro ma non troppo
Andante molto moto
Allegro
Allegretto

Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73 ..... Brahms
Allegro non troppo
Adagio non troppo
Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
Allegro con spirito

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 37,868

DEC 14 1960

Music In Review

Former Child Prodigy Adds To His Stature In Conducting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the enchantment of Lorin Maazel's bewitching conducting, produced a most eloquent performance of Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, the Pastoral, last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Maazel is the one-time child prodigy who at the age of nine conducted orchestras at the World's Fair and Hollywood Bowl. That was in 1939. He has added to his stature as a conductor, literally and figuratively, and his every gesture, grimace and attitude seemed to charm the strings, reeds and brasses to give their grandest tones. He was guest conductor last night.

The orchestra, delayed one hour en route, came on stage unlimbered. While they were still in the wings, and only the podium, chairs and music racks were on the stage, a slender, dark-haired, youthful-looking man walked on carrying his baton. The crowd, restless after waiting so long, began to applaud at this sign of promise. It was Maazel. He raised his hand to quiet the clapping. He placed his hand dramatically against his breast and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I am the conductor." The audience roared. "Nothing is more ludicrous than a conductor without an orchestra," he continued, "but I was here at eight o'clock." He got laughter and applause.

✦✦✦

THE ORCHESTRA came on and with much jostling and confusion, (the cellos were on the right; violas, left-center, the reverse of Charles Munch's format) and eventually settled into place. Maazel announced because of the late curtain, the opening work would be omitted. It was to be Geminiani's "Concerto Grosso."

In a pose of grace and authority, that gave the appearance of theatrical ostentation, Maazel called them in. To a superficial observer, these first dramatic signs and cues were pure affectation. But he soon convinced his musicians and his audience that he knew every nuance and phrase, note for note, of that grand pastoral symphony.

It was never over-conducted and therefore, he gave it a purposeful interpretation, and received tonal luxury from every man there. As a director, he is a grand dramatist who conveys his desires to his men and his understanding to his audience. His deftness of nuance and expressiveness, articulated by gesture, if such can be said, inspired these perfectly integrated musicians to play their glorious best.

✦✦✦

THE SOLO flute in the languorous second movement was sheer eloquence; the horns and woodwinds in the third had a beauty of sonority incomparable to anything else and therefore, indescribable. Throughout, Maazel's command of breaks, attacks and rubatos, especially the rubatos, brought responses as though he controlled them with his magic wand. He does what a director should do—he directs.

The late hour forebade my hearing the finale work, Brahms' "Symphony No. 2 in D-Major."

C.H.A.

BLANK PAGE

94

BLANK PAGE

96

Second Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 18, at 3:00 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... Twelve Contra-dances

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

STRAVINSKY ..... "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem

SCRIABIN ..... "Le Poème de l'extase," Op. 54

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Tenth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 23, at 2:15 o'clock

BACH ..... Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio"

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante
III. Allegro assai

BARBER ..... "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN ..... *Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Allegro molto appassionato
II. Andante
III. Allegro molto vivace

RESPIGHI ..... "Pines of Rome," Symphonic Poem

I. The Pines of the Villa Borghese
II. The Pines near a Catacomb
III. The Pines of the Janiculum
IV. The Pines of the Appian Way

SOLOIST
JAIME LAREDO

These concerts will end about 10:20 o'clock on Thursday Evening; 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076

DEC 24 1960

'Die Natali' Premiere Disappointing

By JULES WOLFFERS

There were two works celebrating the Christmas season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall and as it turned out one was a reproach to the other.

Bach's beautiful and moving Sinfonia from the "Christmas Cantata" opened the program with Charles Munch directing a reduced string section and woodwinds in effective and devotional style. The Boston Symphony players and their conductor were no less effective in the first performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natalie," Choral Preludes for Christmas, but the splendid performance was wasted on a work which does the composer no credit and which is far below the aims of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which originally commissioned the work for the orchestra's 75th anniversary.

High Effort

This is not to suggest that we expected Barber's new work to equal Bach's masterpiece, but high effort, sincerity of purpose, dignity, seemliness and devotion are the least we demand from any composer who writes a work for a great orchestra. We were so far from getting it in Mr. Barber's potpourri that we have the right to resent such a work particularly when it purports to memorialize the Koussevitzkys. I have not the slightest doubt that the late distinguished conductor would have indignantly refused it.

This is not the first time that the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Foundation have been fobbed off with second rate work. This raises the question if both should not seek more expert aid than they apparently are receiving in the selection of composers and works. There should also be a provision for outright refusal where necessary.

The sad thing is that Mr. Barber is one of my favorite composers. He has a real gift for melody and usually has much that is worthwhile and heartfelt to say. But in "Die Natali" he has produced a pot boiler than any tunetaster with a flair for instrumentation could turn out with ease. The familiar Christmas carols are puffed up, dressed up, swollen up, with a meretricious trickiness that left me embarrassed.

Lauds Soloist

I will say one thing for the piece—it is thoroughly commercial, and if the composer wrote it with one eye on the cash register he will undoubtedly succeed in his purpose nor will he be the first to turn the season into a source of pecuniary advantage.

Turning to more pleasant things, Jaime Laredo, winner of the 1959 Brussells competition, was the soloist in the Bach A minor and the Mendelssohn Violin Concertos. Born in Bolivia in 1941, Mr. Laredo studied in this country and played for the first time with the Boston Symphony last summer where I heard him please a large audience with his grace of expression and round tone.

These qualities he still possesses as was shown in both works yesterday, but there is lacking a sense of urgency and drive which rob his interpretations of vitality. Mr. Laredo has made it a habit to dwell on his melody tones too long and he consistently likes to play behind the beat. Perhaps his instrument may be at fault but his tone lacks enough volume to compete with Mendelssohn's orchestration and even the Bach could have had more body.

Mr. Munch did a superb job of accompanying in style and tempos with which he could not have been in sympathy. Perhaps it would have been to the works' advantage had he taken a firmer hand in this case, but it was touching to see the way he respected the soloist's every wish, nuance and phrase. Undoubtedly it is fine for Symphony to encourage young and promising talent but at the same time there are leading violinists we hear only too seldom in Boston.

I am long since over any liking for Respighi's "Pines of Rome" with its obvious effects and musical jugglery. But this is the time of year when many young people take over their elders' seats for the vacation period. Mr. Munch's full-bodied and enthusiastic reading together with the virtuoso performance of the orchestra appealed to youthful spirits and brought the concert to a rousing conclusion.

PROGRAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the 10th concert in its regular subscription series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Jaime Laredo, violinist, was the soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio" ..... Bach
Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor .... Bach
"Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas ..... Barber
(First performance)
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E minor ..... Mendelssohn
"Pines of Rome," Symphonic Poem ..... Respighi

Monitor

Harry Hess

Jaime Laredo, violinist, who is appearing with the Boston Symphony Dec. 22 and 23 in concertos by Bach (No. 1) and Mendelssohn.

96

Second Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 18, at 3:00 o'clock

LORIN MAAZEL, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... Twelve Contra-dances

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

STRAVINSKY ..... "Le Chant du rossignol," Symphonic Poem

SCRIABIN ..... "Le Poème de l'extase," Op. 54

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Tenth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 23, at 2:15 o'clock

BACH ..... Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio"

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante
III. Allegro assai

BARBER ..... "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN ..... *Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Allegro molto appassionato
II. Andante
III. Allegro molto vivace

RESPIGHI ..... "Pines of Rome," Symphonic Poem

I. The Pines of the Villa Borghese
II. The Pines near a Catacomb
III. The Pines of the Janiculum
IV. The Pines of the Appian Way

SOLOIST
JAIME LAREDO

These concerts will end about 10:20 o'clock on Thursday Evening; 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
DEC 24 1960

'Die Natali' Premiere Disappointing

By JULES WOLFFERS

There were two works celebrating the Christmas season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall and as it turned out one was a reproach to the other.

Bach's beautiful and moving Sinfonia from the "Christmas Cantata" opened the program with Charles Munch directing a reduced string section and woodwinds in effective and devotional style. The Boston Symphony players and their conductor were no less effective in the first performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natalie," Choral Preludes for Christmas, but the splendid performance was wasted on a work which does the composer no credit and which is far below the aims of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which originally commissioned the work for the orchestra's 75th anniversary.

High Effort

This is not to suggest that we expected Barber's new work to equal Bach's masterpiece, but high effort, sincerity of purpose, dignity, seemliness and devotion are the least we demand from any composer who writes a work for a great orchestra. We were so far from getting it in Mr. Barber's potpourri that we have the right to resent such a work particularly when it purports to memorialize the Koussevitzkys. I have not the slightest doubt that the late distinguished conductor would have indignantly refused it.

This is not the first time that the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Foundation have been fobbed off with second rate work. This raises the question if both should not seek more expert aid than they apparently are receiving in the selection of composers and works. There should also be a provision for outright refusal where necessary.

The sad thing is that Mr. Barber is one of my favorite composers. He has a real gift for melody and usually has much that is worthwhile and heartfelt to say. But in "Die Natali" he has produced a pot boiler than any tunetaster with a flair for instrumentation could turn out with ease. The familiar Christmas carols are puffed up, dressed up, swollen up, with a meretricious trickiness that left me embarrassed.

Lauds Soloist

I will say one thing for the piece—it is thoroughly commercial, and if the composer wrote it with one eye on the cash register he will undoubtedly succeed in his purpose nor will he be the first to turn the season into a source of pecuniary advantage.

Turning to more pleasant things, Jaime Laredo, winner of the 1959 Brussells competition, was the soloist in the Bach A minor and the Mendelssohn Violin Concertos. Born in Bolivia in 1941, Mr. Laredo studied in this country and played for the first time with the Boston Symphony last summer where I heard him please a large audience with his grace of expression and round tone.

These qualities he still possesses as was shown in both works yesterday, but there is lacking a sense of urgency and drive which made his interpretations of vitality. Mr. Laredo has made it a habit to dwell on his melody tones too long and he consistently likes to play behind the beat. Perhaps his instrument may be at fault but his tone lacks enough volume to compete with Mendelssohn's orchestration and even the Bach could have had more body.

Mr. Munch did a superb job of accompanying in style and tempo with which he could not have been in sympathy. Perhaps it would have been to the works' advantage had he taken a firmer hand in this case, but it was touching to see the way he respected the soloist's every wish, nuance and phrase. Undoubtedly it is fine for Symphony to encourage young and promising talent but at the same time there are leading violinists we hear only too seldom in Boston.

I am long since over any liking for Respighi's "Pines of Rome" with its obvious effects and musical jugglery. But this is the time of year when many young people take over their elders' seats for the vacation period. Mr. Munch's full-bodied and enthusiastic reading together with the virtuoso performance of the orchestra appealed to youthful spirits and brought the concert to a rousing conclusion.

PROGRAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the 10th concert in its regular subscription series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Jaime Laredo, violinist, was the soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio" ..... Bach
Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor ... Bach
"Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas ..... Barber
(First performance)
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E minor ..... Mendelssohn
"Pines of Rome," Symphonic Poem ..... Respighi

Harry Hess

Jaime Laredo, violinist, who is appearing with the Boston Symphony Dec. 22 and 23 in concertos by Bach (No. 1) and Mendelssohn.

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam: Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam: Lebhaft
(Played without pause)

BARBER "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN . . . *Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Allegro molto appassionato
II. Andante
III. Allegro molto vivace

MILHAUD . . . Suite Provençale

Animé — Très Modéré — Modéré — Vif — Modéré — Vif — Lent — Vif

SOLOIST
JAIME LAREDO

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 24 1960

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 18 1960

Barber's 'Die Natali' At Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this week. Mr. Barber's new work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to symphony audiences in both the Mendelssohn E minor Concerto and the Concerto No. 1, in A minor, by Bach. Dr. Munch will open the program with Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio. The concerts will close with Respighi's symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra's concerts this week will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon, because of the Christmas holidays.

Lorin Maazel will conclude his engagement as guest conductor with this afternoon's concert in Symphony Hall at 3, and Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Today's program will include Beethoven's Twelve Contra dances and Symphony No. 6, the Symphonic Poem "Le Chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and "Le Poeme de l'extase" by Scriabin. The Sanders Theater concert will include the two Beethoven works plus Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Mr. Laredo will be heard again at the orchestra's Tuesday evening Symphony Hall concert Dec. 27. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's principal violinist, will be soloist at the concerts of Dec. 30 and 31.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 24 1960

97

Barber Christmas Carols Chorales Given Premiere

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and Thursday night (the latter to avoid Christmas Eve), the 10th program of the "regular" series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Bach: Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Bach: Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor; Samuel Barber: "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas (first performances); Mendelssohn: Violin Concerto in E minor; Respighi: "The Pines of Rome." Soloist was Jaime Laredo, violin, who made his Boston debut.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Christmas season was notably recognized at the 10th pair of "regular" Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Symphony Hall. (The evening one was played Thursday since tonight is Christmas Eve). Not only did the program begin with the lovely Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, but there was also a brand-new piece by Samuel Barber intended for the holidays.

This is "Die Natali" (convenient translation: "Christmastide"), which is a sequence of chorale preludes based upon familiar carols. "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel;" "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," "We Three Kings of Orient Are" (with a separate prelude for each of the Magi), "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," "Adeste Fideles," "Joy to the World" and "Silent Night," all are there, in one guise or another.

The idea for such a piece must have occurred to dozens of composers, but Mr. Barber seems to be the only one to have done anything about it. His way was scholarly, presentation of the tunes variedly according to the manifold devices of counterpoint. The result is a biggish work for big orchestra which, however, never gets to rolling out the tunes with real Christmas joy or jubilation.

Mr. Barber did work up a certain degree of Orientalism in rhythm and color, and those episodes are the ones which have the more motion. Too much of the work seems a little aimless; though it may look wonderful on paper, the sound is often amorphous. It is also very sour, harmonically. Since this is the time for giving, let us give Mr. Barber credit for effort.

I could not help thinking what the late Charles Ives would have done with the carols. You can imagine what a fantasy he would have made, winding up with a gigantic peroration, orchestra and conductor going full blast, perhaps counterpointing "Adeste Fideles" with "Joy to the World" and "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," and taking "Jingle Bells" as a ground bass.

"Die Natali" did, however, make a certain effect and the composer arose twice from his seat to acknowledge applause.

Jaime Laredo, the Bolivian violinist, appeared for the first time in this city in the Concertos of Bach and Mendelssohn. (He had played with the Orchestra last Summer at Tanglewood.)

Laredo, who is not yet 20, obviously has talent. He plays earnestly and accurately, with grace of bow and a sense of music, but to me his work lacks character, definition, strength. The word amorphous again must be applied, for Laredo's phrasing and his rhythm —except in the very animated figurations of Mendelssohn— were loosely shaped.

What really aroused the Friday audience was a superb account of "The Pines of Rome." Here were real passion, color, vigor and splendor. Respighi's mood-and-descriptive music is still quoted low on the academic exchange, but it continues to retain freshness and beauty. "The Pines" and the Bach Sinfonia represented the finest work of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Munch, and it was gorgeous.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct Vivaldi's D minor Concerto Grosso, Op. 3, No. 11; the Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseph De Pasquale as soloist, and the First Symphony of Brahms.

Symphony Strikes Holiday Note

Charles Munch Returns In Seasonal Program

By Louis Chapin

The words "Christmas Oratorio" at the top of this weekend's Boston Symphony program immediately said "voices," and for a moment it was disappointing not to be about to hear them again in this abundantly choral season. But the quick answer to this, was of course that instruments have their unique voices, with dialects shaped to consider Christmas almost as pertinently as the human voice, and with their own imagery.

The musical evidence which then proceeded to fill Symphony Hall stretched in time from Bach to Barber, in style from Bach to Respighi, and with something approaching a yawn from one end of Mendelssohn to the other.

Charles Munch, in the Christmas Oratorio Sinfonia, made the shepherds' music as welcome and restful as he surely intended it to be, though his slightly early down-beat refuses to let the movement (or the shepherds) go to sleep. The voices of woodwind and string choirs were of a clarity which may never have met Bach's ear.

Most impressive in the same composer's Violin Concerto No. 1, in which Jaime Laredo appeared as soloist, was the exquisite baroque dialogue of the central movement. Mr. Laredo's manner of playing, of an unassuming sensibility, was suitable to this music, its easy mingling of solo and ripieno (most obviously in the first movement) benefiting from the violinist's unobtrusive virtuosity.

Yet hearing his performance, after intermission, of another old friend returned for Christmas, the Mendelssohn Concerto, strengthened a wish to hear more amplitude in Mr. Laredo's playing, both as to tone and phrasing. Mendelssohn strove to speak warmly through his neat phrases. But if his familiar voice is to interest us it must derive considerable lyricism from the playing.

Mr. Laredo plays easily. Perhaps fresh interpretive problems would bring him out more.

A new and delightful addition to this Christmas circle, immediately following Bach, was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," an unbroken sequence of "Chorale Preludes" on carol themes, given its first performance.

Mr. Barber's treatment of the familiar melodies is crisply ingenious in its tonally and harmonically colored counterpoint, emerging from woodwind understatement at the opening to move through a distinctive spectrum. Especially striking were the evocation of bell overtones in a variation on "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," and the polytonal refrains of "We Three Kings."

The whole piece is given a somewhat Oriental cast by its free-breathed meter and sharp timbres. It is a welcome addition to the Christmas repertoire, as its composer was present to discover.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
JAN 1 - 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: At the Colonial, Carol Channing, Jules Munshin and Les Quat' Jeudis sparkled in "Show Girl," which was found "highly professional at heart and in its inspired moments devastatingly funny." Jean Anouilh's "Waltz of the Toreadors," was praised and the Charles Playhouse production declared 'generally good."

FILMS: John Wayne's 'The Alamo," at the Gary proved a "big, handsome, often impressive picture" loosely connected before exploding into an exciting spectacle. "The Grass is Greener" at the Metropolitan was "as pretty a piece of sophisticated fluff as you're likely to see." The movie version of "Suzie Wong" at the Paramount was found as implausable as ever but "lovely to look at though not for children." The Beacon Hill's "Tunes of Glory" was hailed as one of the year's best pictures with Alec Guinness and John Mills giving "superlative performances." The Boultin Brothers satire on British diplomacy, "Man in a Cocked Hat" at the Fenway, was highly recommended.

MUSIC: Samuel Barber's "Die Natali" was found trivial and disappointing in its premiere at the Boston Symphony concert and Jaime Laredo's violinism lacked vitality but Charles Munch and the orchestra played brilliantly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Free Press
MELROSE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,150
DEC 15 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert

The young American conductor Lorin Maazel directs this season's third live Channel 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday, Dec. 20 at 8:30 p.m. The program, originating at Sanders Theatre, Harvard, will include the "Contra Dances" and Pastorale Symphony of Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

The program is, as usual, broadcast simultaneously on WGBH-FM (89.7 mc).

Mr. Maazel first conducted when only nine years old, at the 1939 New York World's Fair. Since then he has directed major orchestras in Rome, Milan, Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Vienna, Budapest, Prague, and Telaviv; and has appeared frequently in the United States with the NBC, New York Philharmonic, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, and San Francisco Orchestras. Upon leaving Boston he will embark on a tour through most of Europe and Russia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
DEC 20 1960

At Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at concerts this week. The work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to symphony audiences this week. He will be heard in both the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and the Concerto No. 1 in A minor by Bach.

Dr. Munch will open the programs with Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio," and close with Respighi's symphonic poem, " The Pines of Rome."

The concerts this week will be Thursday night (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon.

EIGHTIETH SEASON · NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN ..... Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

BARBER ..... "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN ..... *Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Allegro molto appassionato
II. Andante
III. Allegro molto vivace

MILHAUD ..... Suite Provençale

Animé — Très Modéré — Modéré — Vif — Modéré — Vif — Lent — Vif

SOLOIST
JAIME LAREDO

BALDWIN PIANO · *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 18 1960

Barber's 'Die Natali' At Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this week. Mr. Barber's new work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to symphony audiences in both the Mendelssohn E minor Concerto and the Concerto No. 1, in A minor, by Bach. Dr. Munch will open the program with Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio. The concerts will close with Respighi's symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra's concerts this week will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon, because of the Christmas holidays.

Lorin Maazel will conclude his engagement as guest conductor with this afternoon's concert in Symphony Hall at 3, and Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Today's program will include Beethoven's Twelve Contra dances and Symphony No. 6, the Symphonic Poem "Le Chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky and "Le Poeme de l'extase" by Scriabin. The Sanders Theater concert will include the two Beethoven works plus Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

Mr. Laredo will be heard again at the orchestra's Tuesday evening Symphony Hall concert Dec. 27. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's principal violinist, will be soloist at the concerts of Dec. 30 and 31.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
DEC 24 1960

97

Barber Christmas Carols Chorales Given Premiere

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and Thursday night (the latter to avoid Christmas Eve), the 10th program of the "regular" series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Bach: Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Bach: Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor; Samuel Barber: "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas (first performances); Mendelssohn: Violin Concerto in E minor; Respighi: "The Pines of Rome." Soloist was Jaime Laredo, violin, who made his Boston debut.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Christmas season was notably recognized at the 10th pair of "regular" Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Symphony Hall. (The evening one was played Thursday since tonight is Christmas Eve). Not only did the program begin with the lovely Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, but there was also a brand-new piece by Samuel Barber intended for the holidays.

This is "Die Natali" (convenient translation: "Christmastide"), which is a sequence of chorale preludes based upon familiar carols. "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel;" "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," "We Three Kings of Orient Are" (with a separate prelude for each of the Magi), "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," "Adeste Fideles," "Joy to the World" and "Silent Night," all are there, in one guise or another.

The idea for such a piece must have occurred to dozens of composers, but Mr. Barber seems to be the only one to have done anything about it. His way was scholarly, presentation of the tunes variedly according to the manifold devices of counterpoint. The result is a biggish work for big orchestra which, however, never gets to rolling out the tunes with real Christmas joy or jubilation.

Mr. Barber did work up a certain degree of Orientalism in rhythm and color, and those episodes are the ones which have the more motion. Too much of the work seems a little aimless, though it may look wonderful on paper, the sound is often amorphous. It is also very sour, harmonically. Since this is the time for giving, let us give Mr. Barber credit for effort.

I could not help thinking what the late Charles Ives would have done with the carols. You can imagine what a fantasy he would have made, winding up with a gigantic peroration, orchestra and conductor going full blast, perhaps counterpointing "Adeste Fideles" with "Joy to the World" and "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," and taking "Jingle Bells" as a ground bass.

"Die Natali" did, however, make a certain effect and the composer arose twice from his seat to acknowledge applause.

Jaime Laredo, the Bolivian violinist, appeared for the first time in this city in the Concertos of Bach and Mendelssohn. (He had played with the Orchestra last Summer at Tanglewood.)

Laredo, who is not yet 20, obviously has talent. He plays earnestly and accurately, with grace of bow and a sense of music, but to me his work lacks character, definition, strength. The word amorphous again must be applied, for Laredo's phrasing and his rhythm —except in the very animated figurations of Mendelssohn— were loosely shaped.

What really aroused the Friday audience was a superb account of "The Pines of Rome." Here were real passion, color, vigor and splendor. Respighi's mood-and-descriptive music is still quoted low on the academic exchange, but it continues to retain freshness and beauty. "The Pines" and the Bach Sinfonia represented the finest work of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Munch, and it was gorgeous.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct Vivaldi's D minor Concerto Grosso, Op. 3, No. 11; the Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseph De Pasquale as soloist, and the First Symphony of Brahms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 24 1960

Symphony Strikes Holiday Note

Charles Munch Returns In Seasonal Program

By Louis Chapin

The words "Christmas Oratorio" at the top of this weekend's Boston Symphony program immediately said "voices," and for a moment it was disappointing not to be about to hear them again in this abundantly choral season. But the quick answer to this, was of course that instruments have their unique voices, with dialects shaped to consider Christmas almost as pertinently as the human voice, and with their own imagery.

The musical evidence which then proceeded to fill Symphony Hall stretched in time from Bach to Barber, in style from Bach to Respighi, and with something approaching a yawn from one end of Mendelssohn to the other.

Charles Munch, in the Christmas Oratorio Sinfonia, made the shepherds' music as welcome and restful as he surely intended it to be, though his slightly early down-beat refuses to let the movement (or the shepherds) go to sleep. The voices of woodwind and string choirs were of a clarity which may never have met Bach's ear.

Most impressive in the same composer's Violin Concerto No. 1, in which Jaime Laredo appeared as soloist, was the exquisite baroque dialogue of the central movement. Mr. Laredo's manner of playing, of an unassuming sensibility, was suitable to this music, its easy mingling of solo and ripieno (most obviously in the first movement) benefiting from the violinist's unobtrusive virtuosity.

Yet hearing his performance, after intermission, of another old friend returned for Christmas, the Mendelssohn Concerto, strengthened a wish to hear more amplitude in Mr. Laredo's playing, both as to tone and phrasing. Mendelssohn strove to speak warmly through his neat phrases. But if his familiar voice is to interest us it must derive considerable lyricism from the playing.

Mr. Laredo plays easily. Perhaps fresh interpretive problems would bring him out more.

A new and delightful addition to this Christmas circle, immediately following Bach, was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," an unbroken sequence of "Chorale Preludes" on carol themes, given its first performance.

Mr. Barber's treatment of the familiar melodies is crisply ingenious in its tonally and harmonically colored counterpoint, emerging from woodwind understatement at the opening to move through a distinctive spectrum. Especially striking were the evocation of bell overtones in a variation on "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," and the polytonal refrains of "We Three Kings."

The whole piece is given a somewhat Oriental cast by its free-breathed meter and sharp timbres. It is a welcome addition to the Christmas repertoire, as its composer was present to discover.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
JAN 1 - 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: At the Colonial, Carol Channing, Jules Munshin and Les Quat' Jeudis sparkled in "Show Girl," which was found "highly professional at heart and in its inspired moments devastatingly funny." Jean Anouilh's "Waltz of the Toreadors," was praised and the Charles Playhouse production declared 'generally good."

FILMS: John Wayne's "The Alamo," at the Gary proved a "big, handsome, often impressive picture" loosely connected before exploding into an exciting spectacle. "The Grass is Greener" at the Metropolitan was "as pretty a piece of sophisticated fluff as you're likely to see." The movie version of "Suzie Wong" at the Paramount was found as implausable as ever but "lovely to look at though not for children." The Beacon Hill's "Tunes of Glory" was hailed as one of the year's best pictures with Alec Guinness and John Mills giving "superlative performances." The Boultin Brothers satire on British diplomacy, "Man in a Cocked Hat" at the Fenway, was highly recommended.

MUSIC: Samuel Barber's "Die Natali" was found trivial and disappointing in its premiere at the Boston Symphony concert and Jaime Laredo's violinism lacked vitality but Charles Munch and the orchestra played brilliantly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Free Press
MELROSE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,150
DEC 15 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert

The young American conductor Lorin Maazel directs this season's third live Channel 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday, Dec. 20 at 8:30 p.m. The program, originating at Sanders Theatre, Harvard, will include the "Contra Dances" and Pastorale Symphony of Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

The program is, as usual, broadcast simultaneously on WGBH-FM (89.7 mc).

Mr. Maazel first conducted when only nine years old, at the 1939 New York World's Fair. Since then he has directed major orchestras in Rome, Milan, Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Vienna, Budapest, Prague, and Telaviv; and has appeared frequently in the United States with the NBC, New York Philharmonic, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, and San Francisco Orchestras. Upon leaving Boston he will embark on a tour through most of Europe and Russia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
DEC 20 1960

At Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at concerts this week. The work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to symphony audiences this week. He will be heard in both the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and the Concerto No. 1 in A minor by Bach.

Dr. Munch will open the programs with Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio," and close with Respighi's symphonic poem, " The Pines of Rome."

The concerts this week will be Thursday night (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

DEC 17 1960

98

Music

Ludgin in Rapid Rise As U. S. Baritone

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—The young American baritone, Chester Ludgin, continues to attract the plaudits of both the critics and the opera and concert goers whenever and wherever he appears.

During the current season he has repeatedly scored successes with his performances at the City Center in New York. It seems rather strange that the versatility of this artist has failed to attract the directors at the Met. He has essayed most of the best known roles for baritone in the standard repertoire and has achieved equal distinction in some of the modern operas.

Chester Ludgin

On the local scene, he set some kind of a record with his singing of the title role in Verdi's "Rigoletto" with the Boston-New England Opera company, the performance, another in the John A. Hunnewell series. The opera fans here should be quite happy in the fact that according to plans Mr. Ludgin should appear in the cast of the opera which is scheduled for early in the spring.

The newly organized Lowell Organ club is fast taking its place in the city's musical spotlight. This group which numbers members of both school age as well as those of many years experience in the field, has grown by leaps and bounds. Ernest Woessner has been instrumental in creating the club and attracting leading musicians in the city to support the endeavor. Lloyd Keirstead is president and Andrew J. Menzia is directing public relations.

Jan Smeterlin continues to be one of the great pianists of our time. At his recent celebrity series concert held in George Washington hall, Phillips academy, Andover, he completely thrilled a capacity audience. His program consisting of pieces by Bach, Beethoven, Brahms and Chopin, was essayed with exquisite taste and artistry. His technical approach throughout, especially in the Paganini variations, and his poetic interpretation of the Chopin group left nothing to be desired.

THE JUNIOR LEAGUE of Boston, Inc., is again sponsoring the regional Metropolitan Opera auditions. This year, Erich Leinsdorf, world-recognized conductor, will be the judge for the final day of the New England Regional Metropolitan auditions on Sunday, Feb. 12, 1961, in Jordan hall, Boston. Mr. Howard Hook, chairman of the Metropolitan Opera regional auditions and executives of the Junior league made the announcement of the coming series.

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony orchestra will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," choral preludes for Christmas, at the orchestra's concerts this week. The orchestra's concerts this week will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday series) and Friday afternoon because of the Christmas holidays.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced this week. He will be heard in both the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and the Concerto No. 1 in A minor by Bach. Dr. Munch will open the program with Bach's Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio." The program will close with Respighi's symphonic poem "The Pines of Rome."

Mr. Laredo will be heard again at the orchestra's concert on Dec. 27. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's principal violinist, will be soloist at the concerts of Dec. 30 and 31.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

DEC 29 1960

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: MUSIC FROM CRACKED BELLS

I hold, I trow, as much good will toward man as the next fellow, and nobody would be more pleased to be able to write a review of last weekend's symphony doings that overflowed with the seasonal spirit of things. The fates have decreed otherwise, alas, and I am compelled to close out the year on a most discordant note.

On paper, notwithstanding the pressure of Respighi's "Pines of Rome," the orchestra's Christmas program was promising. It featured the violinist, Jaime Laredo, the twenty-one-year-old winner of the 1959 Brussels International Music Competition in a brace of concertos and the first performance of a new work by Samuel Barber, together with the Sinfonia from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio." In performance it all added up to a poor show.

First, there was Mr. Laredo. To win a Brussels Competition, a violinist must certainly have good hands. These he had. To uphold his wares with a piece so austere and free of virtuosic display of the Bach A minor concerto requires both courage and integrity. These qualities are conceded. There is little else of an affirmative nature to report of his artistry. He had a small tone but not a pretty one. His intonation just passed muster. Far more important—for after all Kreisler and Szigeti had all sorts of trouble with intonation and technique—he was utterly hopelessly leaden in spirit.

Nor was it destined that Mr. Laredo's troubles could be attributed simply to a certain lack of rapport wih Bach. Many times young artists who assay two works on the same program with the orchestra look pretty bad with a lead-off baroque or classic concerto but come into their own with an ensuing romantic or modern one. So was it, for example, with the pianist Monique Haas a few weeks ago with the Mozart D minor Concerto and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. But on this occasion the second work, the Mendelssohn Concerto, was performed even less convincingly than the Bach. This really took some doing, for if ever buoyancy, songfulness and easy elegance combined to provide a violinist with a natural vehicle, it is the Mendelssohn. By virtue of the Laredo alchemy though, it only managed to sound long, hard and dull.

Now it happens that our own Joseph Silverstein competed in that same Brussels Competition in 1959 and placed third. Beyond question Mr. Silverstein can play rings around Laredo. This performance, then, must have made more than one listener ponder the real significance of the Brussels business. And, in view of the fact that Mr. Laredo had played with the orchestra last summer at Tanglewood, for one listener, at least, it induced some melancholy reflections on the BSO soloist selection process.

And so on to Mr. Barber. His new work carries the rather impressive title of "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas. It actually consists of a sequence of eight familiar Christmas carols plays without pause and worked together with a number of contrapuntal devices. There is much Kostelanetz-like sweetening interspersed among an appropriate endowment of mild harmonic and rhythmic eccentricities.

Had the piece been served up as a bit of harmless fun and frolic for this year's Christmas concert, thereafter to be handed over to the Salvation Army for annual duty in front of Filene's, that would have been both understandable and desirable. But no, this composition is obviously meant to be taken quite seriously by all concerned; it was composed (last July) for the orchestra's 75th anniversary (1955), is dedicated to the memory of Sergei and Natali Koussevitzky, and has been taped for submission for award to the American International Music Fund. The composer was present to take a bow.

Is it necessary to do a job on such a sitting duck as Respighi's "Pines of Rome," with which the program concluded? Sometimes a native son, like the late Guido Cantelli, can provide a momentarily plausible reason for reviewing this watered-down Latinized Strauss. Usually, as last week end, the chief purpose served by its revival is to demonstrate how really loud a composer and conductor between them can make a symphony orchestra sound.

The present extended home stand ends this week with a program that includes Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor, the Bartok Viola Concerto and Brahm's First Symphony. The soloist is Joseph de Pasquale and Mr. Munch conducts. Thereafter the orchestra departs for a New York trip. If Messrs. Laredo and Barber, as I understand will be the case, are going to grace the New York City programs, the symphony organization had better brace itself for some critical cannonades it no longer has the lung to afford.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

DEC 19 1960

Symphony Soloist

JAIME LAREDO, Bolivian violinist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch at concerts Thursday night and Friday afternoon.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076

DEC 22 1960

Boston Symphony Concert Tonight

Subscribers for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Saturday series are reminded that because of the Christmas Holiday, the concert will be given tonight in Symphony Hall at 8:30.

The change does not affect the Friday subscribers with the concert presented tomorrow as usual.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 18 1960

99

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this week. Mr. Barber's new work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to Symphony audiences this week in both the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and the Concerto No. 1 in A minor by Bach. Doctor Munch will open the program with Bach's Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio." The concert will close with Respighi's symphonic poe m "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra's concerts this week will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon because of the Christmas holidays.

Lorin Maazel will conclude his engagement as guest conductor with this afternoon's concert at Symphony Hall and Tuesday evening at Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Today's program will include Beethoven's Twelve Contradances, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, the symphonic poem "Le Chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky, and "Le Poeme de l'extase" by Scriabin. The Sanders Theater concert will include the two Beethoven works plus Brahms' Symphony Hall concert on Dec. 27. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's principal violist, will be solosit at the concerts of Dec. 30, and 31.

TODAY

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO by Bach In an English version presented by the M.I.T. Chorus and the Cambridge Festival Orchestra. Klaus Liepmann conducts. Soloists Catherine Rowe, Eunice Alberts, Blake Stern, Donald Sullivan and Paul Matthen. Complete version. 3:00 p.m.

CAMBRIDGE CIVIC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Victor Manusevitch, conductor, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. First performance of "Symphonic Paraphrases" by Nicholas Van Slyck; Marcello; Mozart Symphony K. 43; Sibelius Symphony No. 1.

EVANGELICAL CONVENANT CHURCH CHOIR of Cambridge (Beech Street near Porter Square) 26th annual service of Christmas Music by Candlelight, 8:00 p.m. Elmer G. Westlund, organist and director. Guest soloist Etialou Dimmock, soprano. Admission free.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH CHOIR, Braintree. Christmas portion of Handel's "Messiah," 8:00 p.m. Anne Bishop, Ione Lockwood, sopranos; Nina Colgrove, alto; Irving Macomber, tenor; John Ring, bass; George Butler, organist and director.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL CHOIR. Benjamin Britten's "Ceremony of Carols." 8:00 p.m. Peter Waring, conductor; Jean Kakelins, Crown, harpist.

MONDAY

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS CAROL SERVICE. Harvard University Memorial Church, 8:15 p.m. Janice Miner, oboe; Lois Pardue, organ; John Ferris, organist and choirmaster.

TUESDAY

JEANNE GREALISH, mezzo contralto, with Reginald Boardman, piano, presented by Chromatic Club at the College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 11:00 a.m. Schumann cycle and other works.

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS CAROL SERVICE. Repeat of Monday program, 4:30 and 8:15 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

GEORGE BUTLER, organist, Emmanuel Church, 15 Newbury Street, In noon hour recital of Advent and Christmas organ works. 12:10 p.m.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961
1960

Boston

Barber's Die Natali

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra really gave recognition to the season at the last concerts before Christmas, Dec. 22 and 23. (The evening concert was advanced from Saturday to Thursday.)

Not only did the program begin with the lovely little Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, but it included first performances of a brand-new score by Samuel Barber—Die Natali (convenient translation: Christmastide), a sequence of chorale preludes based upon Christmas carols. Furthermore, the composer was on hand to acknowledge the applause.

O Come, O Come, Emmanuel; Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming; We Three Kings of Orient Are (with separate prelude for each of the Magi); God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen; Good King Wenceslas; Adeste Fidelis; Joy to the World and Silent Night—all are there, in one guise or another.

The idea for such a piece must have occurred to dozens of composers, but Mr. Barber seems to be the only one to have done anything about it. His method was scholarly: presenting of the tunes according to the manifold devices of counterpoint. The result is a biggish work for big orchestra which, however, never really rolls out the tunes with Christmas joy or jubilation.

Mr. Barber did work up a certain degree of Orientalism in rhythm and color, and those episodes are the ones which have more motion. Too much of the work seems aimless; though it may look wonderful on paper, the sound is often amorphous, and the rhythm, too. The piece also is very sour, harmonically.

I could not help imagining what the late Charles Ives would have done with the carols. What a fantasy he would have made, winding up with a gigantic peroration, orchestra and conductor going full blast, perhaps counterpointing Adeste Fidelis with Joy to the World and God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen, and using Jingle Bells as a ground bass!

On the same program, violinist Jaime Laredo made his Boston debut as soloist in the A minor Concerto of Bach, and the E minor of Mendelssohn. This young musician—not yet 20—is talented. He plays accurately and with a sense of music, but for my taste his work lacks character, strength and definition. The program concluded with The Pines of Rome.

For the two weeks previous, Lorin Maazel had been guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, upon invitation of Mr. Munch, who paid the young man the signal honor of attending both of his Friday afternoon concerts. Maazel at 30 has a talent as conductor amounting to genius. It is also evident that even genius requires experience and seasoning. Maazel not only has a prodigious technic, but he has thoroughly learned the scores he performs. He dances a little too much on the stand, likes a stand far too high, and is inclined to bring out inner voices. At 40 or 50, however, if his development proceeds as all hope it will, Maazel should be a great master of his art. His first Friday-Saturday program assembled a G minor Concerto Grosso of Geminiani, Strauss's Thus Spake Zarathustra, and Brahms's Second Symphony. His second list brought Twelve Contradances and the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven; Song of the Nightingale by Stravinsky; and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy, unheard locally since Koussevitzky's time. Significantly, Maazel's two outstanding performances were of the music by Strauss and Scriabin.

The Christmas season brought a certain amount of music new in these parts. One such was Benjamin Britten's Cantata, St. Nicholas, performed in Jordan Hall Dec. 15 by the student chorus and orchestra of the New England Conservatory, Lorna Cooke de Varon conducting. Soloist, and most excellent, was tenor Frederick Jagel. St. Nicholas has many dry pages, but it also has power.

Harold Farberman's New Arts Orchestra, presenting their second concert at the Little Opera House, Dec. 15, gave Stravinsky's L'Histoire du Soldat and first Boston performances of Carlos Surinach's Hollywood Carnival and the Clarinet Quintet by Douglas Moore. The Dancemakers appeared in a staged performance of Stravinsky's bitter work; with Virginia Ehrlich as unseen, offstage Narrator. They also danced the music of Surinach and Moore, after it had been heard through once purely as concert music.

Another new work was Nicholas Van Slyck's vigorous Symphonic Paraphrase, which the composer conducted in first performance at a concert by the Cambridge Civic Symphony in Sanders Theater, Dec. 18. Victor Manusevitch conducted the remainder of the evening: an Introduction, Aria and Presto by Marcello; the Symphony No. 6, in F major (K. 43), by Mozart, and the E minor Symphony by Sibelius.

The humanities, and especially music, are receiving much longer shrift these days at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology—thanks largely to the devoted efforts of Klaus Liepmann and the equally devoted cooperation of the MIT Choral Society. This institution of scientific learning was the only local source, at Christmas of 1960, of a full-scale performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. Mr. Liepmann conducted it in Kresge Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18. Soloists were Catherine Rowe, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Blake Stern (Evangelist) and Donald Sullivan (aria soloist), tenor, and Paul Matten, bass.

Sviatoslav Richter has captured this area as easily and completely as all other centers where he has played. The marvelous Soviet pianist gave two sold-out solo concerts in Symphony Hall, Dec. 11 and 13. The first was devoted to Beethoven, the second to Haydn, Schumann and Prokofieff.

Verdi's Otello was assayed by the Opera Group at Donnelly Memorial Theater, Dec. 7 and 11, staged by Sarah Caldwell and with Osbourne McConathy wielding the baton for an orchestra of his Boston Symphony colleagues. Leonard Dell Ferro was the Otello, Lucine Amara the Desdemona, and Tito Gobbi, singing here for the first time, Iago. —Cyrus W. Durgin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

DEC 18 1960

99

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will perform the world premiere of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this week. Mr. Barber's new work was written on a joint commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Violinist Jaime Laredo will also be introduced to Symphony audiences this week in both the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and the Concerto No. 1 in A minor by Bach. Doctor Munch will open the program with Bach's Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio." The concert will close with Respighi's symphonic poe m "The Pines of Rome."

The orchestra's concerts this week will be given on Thursday evening (for the Saturday subscribers) and Friday afternoon because of the Christmas holidays.

Lorin Maazel will conclude his engagement as guest conductor with this afternoon's concert at Symphony Hall and Tuesday evening at Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Today's program will include Beethoven's Twelve Contradances, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, the symphonic poem "Le Chant du rossignol" by Stravinsky, and "Le Poeme de l'extase" by Scriabin. The Sanders Theater concert will include the two Beethoven works plus Brahms' Symphony Hall concert on Dec. 27. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's principal violist, will be soloist at the concerts of Dec. 30 and 31.

TODAY

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO by Bach. In an English version presented by the M.I.T. Chorus and the Cambridge Festival Orchestra. Klaus Liepmann conducts. Soloists Catherine Rowe, Eunice Alberts, Blake Stern, Donald Sullivan and Paul Matthen. Complete version. 3:00 p.m.

CAMBRIDGE CIVIC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Victor Manusevitch, conductor, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. First performance of "Symphonic Paraphrases" by Nicholas Van Slyck; Marcello; Mozart Symphony K. 43; Sibelius Symphony No. 1.

EVANGELICAL CONVENANT CHURCH, CHOIR of Cambridge (Beacon Street near Porter Square) 20th annual service of Christmas Music by Candlelight, 8:00 p.m. Elmer G. Westlund, organist and director. Guest soloist Ehalou Bjoerck, soprano. Admission free.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, CHOIR, Brookline. Christmas portion of Handel's "Messiah," 8:00 p.m. Anne Bilhoe, lone Lockwood, sopranos; Nina Colgrove, alto; Irving Macomber, tenor; John Ring, bass; George Butler, organist and director.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL CHOIR. Benjamin Britten's "Ceremony of Carols," 8:00 p.m. Peter Werling, conductor; Jean Kakelina, Crown, harpist.

MONDAY

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS CAROL SERVICE, Harvard University Memorial Church, 8:15 p.m. Janice Minor, oboe; Lois Perdue, organ; John Ferrie, organist and choirmaster.

TUESDAY

JEANNE GREALISH, mezzo contralto, with Reginald Boardman, piano, presented by Chromatic Club at the College Club, 40 Commonwealth Avenue, 11:00 p.m. Schumann cycle and other works.

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS CAROL SERVICE. Repeat of Monday program, 4:30 and 8:15 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

GEORGE BUTLER, organist, Emmanuel Church, 15 Newbury Street, lunchtime hour recital of Advent and Christmas organ works. 12:10 p.m.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961
1960

Boston

Barber's Die Natali

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra really gave recognition to the season at the last concerts before Christmas, Dec. 22 and 23. (The evening concert was advanced from Saturday to Thursday.)

Not only did the program begin with the lovely little Sinfonia from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, but it included first performances of a brand-new score by Samuel Barber—Die Natali (convenient translation: Christmastide), a sequence of chorale preludes based upon Christmas carols. Furthermore, the composer was on hand to acknowledge the applause.

O Come, O Come, Emmanuel; Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming; We Three Kings of Orient Are (with separate prelude for each of the Magi); God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen; Good King Wenceslas; Adeste Fidelis; Joy to the World and Silent Night—all are there, in one guise or another.

The idea for such a piece must have occurred to dozens of composers, but Mr. Barber seems to be the only one to have done anything about it. His method was scholarly: presenting of the tunes according to the manifold devices of counterpoint. The result is a biggish work for big orchestra which, however, never really rolls out the tunes with Christmas joy or jubilation.

Mr. Barber did work up a certain degree of Orientalism in rhythm and color, and those episodes are the ones which have more motion. Too much of the work seems aimless; though it may look wonderful on paper, the sound is often amorphous, and the rhythm, too. The piece also is very sour, harmonically.

I could not help imagining what the late Charles Ives would have done with the carols. What a fantasy he would have made, winding up with a gigantic peroration, orchestra and conductor going full blast, perhaps counterpointing Adeste Fidelis with Joy to the World and God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen, and using Jingle Bells as a ground bass!

On the same program, violinist Jaime Laredo made his Boston debut as soloist in the A minor Concerto of Bach, and the E minor of Mendelssohn. This young musician—not yet 20—is talented. He plays accurately and with a sense of music, but for my taste his work lacks character, strength and definition. The program concluded with The Pines of Rome.

For the two weeks previous, Lorin Maazel had been guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, upon invitation of Mr. Munch, who paid the young man the signal honor of attending both of his Friday afternoon concerts. Maazel at 30 has a talent as conductor amounting to genius. It is also evident that even genius requires experience and seasoning. Maazel not only has a prodigious memory, but he has thoroughly learned the scores he performs. He dances a little too much on the stand, likes a stand far too high, and is inclined to bring out inner voices. At 40 or 50, however, if his development proceeds as all hope it will, Maazel should be a great master of his art. His first Friday-Saturday program assembled a G minor Concerto Grosso of Geminiani, Strauss's Thus Spake Zarathustra, and Brahms's Second Symphony. His second list brought Twelve Contradances and the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven; Song of the Nightingale by Stravinsky; and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy, unheard locally since Koussevitzky's time. Significantly, Maazel's two outstanding performances were of the music by Strauss and Scriabin.

The Christmas season brought a certain amount of music new in these parts. One such was Benjamin Britten's Cantata, St. Nicholas, performed in Jordan Hall Dec. 15 by the student chorus and orchestra of the New England Conservatory, Lorna Cooke de Varon conducting. Soloist, and most excellent, was tenor Frederick Jagel. St. Nicholas has many dry pages, but it also has power.

Harold Farberman's New Arts Orchestra, presenting their second concert at the Little Opera House, Dec. 15, gave Stravinsky's L'Histoire du Soldat and first Boston performances of Carlos Surinach's Hollywood Carnival and the Clarinet Quintet by Douglas Moore. The Dancemakers appeared in a staged performance of Stravinsky's bitter work, with Virginia Ehrlich as unseen, offstage Narrator. They also danced the music of Surinach and Moore, after it had been heard through once purely as concert music.

Another new work was Nicholas Van Slyck's vigorous Symphonic Paraphrase, which the composer conducted in first performance at a concert by the Cambridge Civic Symphony in Sanders Theater, Dec. 18. Victor Manusevitch conducted the remainder of the evening: an Introduction, Aria and Presto by Marcello; the Symphony No. 6, in F major (K. 43), by Mozart, and the E minor Symphony by Sibelius.

The humanities, and especially music, are receiving much longer shrift these days at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology—thanks largely to the devoted efforts of Klaus Liepmann and the equally devoted cooperation of the MIT Choral Society. This institution of scientific learning was the only local source, at Christmas of 1960, of a full-scale performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. Mr. Liepmann conducted it in Kresge Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18. Soloists were Catherine Rowe, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Blake Stern (Evangelist) and Donald Sullivan (aria soloist), tenor, and Paul Matten, bass.

Sviatoslav Richter has captured this area as easily and completely as all other centers where he has played. The marvelous Soviet pianist gave two sold-out solo concerts in Symphony Hall, Dec. 11 and 13. The first was devoted to Beethoven, the second to Haydn, Schumann and Prokofieff.

Verdi's Otello was assayed by the Opera Group at Donnelly Memorial Theater, Dec. 7 and 11, staged by Sarah Caldwell and with Osbourne McConathy wielding the baton for an orchestra of his Boston Symphony colleagues. Leonard Dell Ferro was the Otello, Lucine Amara the Desdemona, and Tito Gobbi, singing here for the first time, Iago. —Cyrus W. Durgin

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past"
(Arranged by Charles Munch)

VIVALDI ..... Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11
I. Maestoso
II. Largo
III. Allegro

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Viola and Orchestra
I. Moderato
II. Lento; Adagio religioso; Allegretto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68
I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 31 1960

THE SYMPHONY

VIBRANT PERFORMANCES IN BSO YEAR END LIST

By JULES WOLFFERS

It was a vibrant and satisfying concert that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented yesterday afternoon for the 11th program of the series which also marked the final concert this year. From the opening Bach, through the Vivaldi and Bartok, and with the closing Brahms, the conductor directed with verve, and the orchestra played spiritedly. The afternoon was made complete with the splendid performance of the soloist, Joseph de Pasquale.

It has become Mr. Munch's custom to present a New Year offering at the final December concerts of his own arrangement of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past." The brief work was beautifully projected yesterday with a certain grave delicacy and with fine contrast between strings and the brass in the closing statement of the hymn. Although the conductor made it plain that he preferred no applause, the listeners could not refrain from bringing him back for a personal tribute in which the greetings of the season were implicit.

Special Favorite

Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor has always been one of my special favorites. Yesterday Mr. Munch developed tremendous energy both in the imposing first movement and the vigorous finale. The string choirs responded with soloistic dash to more than meet their leader half way. But I wonder if the use of the whole first violin section in the poignant middle movement solo is really an improvement over Vivaldi's original score. The pleading voice of a single violin brings just the right personal touch between the two bold outer movements.

It was high time for Bartok's Viola Concerto to make its return to the concerts. Left in sketch form on the composer's passing in 1945, the work was completed by Tibor Serly and performed here in 1952. Mr. de Pasquale's performance yesterday was therefore only the second time the work has been heard here.

The composer starts right out with the solo instrument to exploit it fully and consistently to the end with only very brief rests.

The full orchestra is rarely used and even when it leads, the viola offers added thematic allusion which can always be heard. Mr de Pasquale played superbly with rich, properly somber tones in the lower registers and with clarity in the higher parts. Mr. Munch is the orchestral accompanist without peer as he showed again yesterday. The soloist is principal violist in the orchestra and his colleagues outdid themselves to provide completely expert and sympathetic support as much in the intensely sad parts as in the gay, folk-inspired dance sections. The outcome was a triumph for all concerned.

What Counts

Mr. de Pasquale happened to use the notes but this made not a whit of difference in the results. Perhaps the rigid and by no means necessary requirement of memorization may be coming to an end. How the music sounds is what counts. If any performer feels more comfortable using the printed notes, he should by all means do so.

No matter how many times one may hear a familiar masterwork there are always new vistas to be found in it. Yesterday's performance of the Brahms Symphony No. 1 revealed previously hidden detail which Mr. Munch drew out with loving care and subtle expressiveness. The over-all conception was bold, audacious and forceful but the careful contrasts of tone, the gradual crescendos and diminuendos, the constant but concealed changes of pace, the marshalled passion and power add nothing but interest to the performance.

This was not an orthodox interpretation but it is just in such unorthodoxy that the conductor is at his best. He is to be commended and praised for providing new outlooks on old works. At any rate music also is a house with many mansions.

PROGRAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 11th program of the regular subscription series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall with Joseph de Pasquale the viola soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following programs:

Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past" (Arranged by Charles Munch)... Bach
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11 ..... Vivaldi
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Bartok
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 31 1960

Boston Symphony Salutes New Year

11-60

Pasquale Distinguished in Bartók

By Louis Chapin

Charles Munch made it quite clear to his Symphony Hall audience yesterday afternoon—in case they didn't already know—that a new year means a great deal more to him than swinging bells and con amore performances of "Auld Lang Syne." His Boston Symphony program, whether intentionally or not, faced 1961 with a prevailing seriousness, with a resolution more promising than the general run.

Its intentions were unmistakeable, of course, in the opening Chorale Prelude of Bach, arranged by Dr. Munch, "The Old Year is Past." The music, the transcription, the playing, and the conducting were as far removed as possible from any purpose to entertain. Applause seemed somehow inappropriate.

Then the orchestra strings attended to the fine sound of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor, and their warm way with it was again convincing as to the composer's understanding of how these instruments work — also as to why Bach took the trouble to copy it out.

The jump from Vivaldi to Bartók is made shorter than one might expect by the common energy of the two composers. Both men wrote muscular music without drawing attention to the muscles. Bartók's Viola Concerto seems particularly lean, and Joseph de Pasquale's playing made no special effort to fatten it up; his most important job, expertly fulfilled, was to keep the solo line raised, when needed, above the orchestra.

In a violin concerto, the solo instrument is guaranteed a degree of prominence through the use of its brilliant higher range; but where the viola is concerned, neither the composer nor the performer can well exploit this means. Mr. de Pasquale found his way with ease and clarity through the spaces which Bartók opened for him in the texture, and the music's purposefulness led to exhilarating release in the dancing finale.

And speaking of finales, Dr. Munch's reading of the Brahms First Symphony saved its amplest orchestral power till the last movement. It is indeed a symphony of resolution, and it seemed fitting to the occasion that the insistent intentions of the first movement should defer more than usually to Brahms' final joy in having written a symphony—his resolution of many years fulfilled.

102

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past"
(Arranged by Charles Munch)

VIVALDI ..... Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11
I. Maestoso
II. Largo
III. Allegro

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Viola and Orchestra
I. Moderato
II. Lento; Adagio religioso; Allegretto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68
I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[649]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
DEC 31 1960

THE SYMPHONY

VIBRANT PERFORMANCES IN BSO YEAR END LIST

By JULES WOLFFERS

It was a vibrant and satisfying concert that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented yesterday afternoon for the 11th program of the series which also marked the final concert this year. From the opening Bach, through the Vivaldi and Bartok, and with the closing Brahms, the conductor directed with verve, and the orchestra played spiritedly. The afternoon was made complete with the splendid performance of the soloist, Joseph de Pasquale.

It has become Mr. Munch's custom to present a New Year offering at the final December concerts of his own arrangement of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past." The brief work was beautifully projected yesterday with a certain grave delicacy and with fine contrast between strings and the brass in the closing statement of the hymn. Although the conductor made it plain that he preferred no applause, the listeners could not refrain from bringing him back for a personal tribute in which the greetings of the season were implicit.

Special Favorite

Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor has always been one of my special favorites. Yesterday Mr. Munch developed tremendous energy both in the imposing first movement and the vigorous finale. The string choirs responded with soloistic dash to more than meet their leader half way. But I wonder if the use of the whole first violin section in the poignant middle movement solo is really an improvement over Vivaldi's original score. The pleading voice of a single violin brings just the right personal touch between the two bold outer movements.

It was high time for Bartok's Viola Concerto to make its return to the concerts. Left in sketch form on the composer's passing in 1945, the work was completed by Tibor Serly and performed here in 1952. Mr. de Pasquale's performance yesterday was therefore only the second time the work has been heard here.

The composer starts right out with the solo instrument to exploit it fully and consistently to the end, with only very brief rests.

The full orchestra is rarely used and even when it leads, the viola offers added thematic allusion which can always be heard. Mr. de Pasquale played superbly with rich, properly somber tones in the lower registers and with clarity in the higher parts. Mr. Munch is the orchestral accompanist without peer as he showed again yesterday. The soloist is principal violist in the orchestra and his colleagues outdid themselves to provide completely expert and sympathetic support as much in the intensely sad parts as in the gay, folk-inspired dance sections. The outcome was a triumph for all concerned.

What Counts

Mr. de Pasquale happened to use the notes but this made not a whit of difference in the results. Perhaps the rigid and by no means necessary requirement of memorization may be coming to an end. How the music sounds is what counts. If any performer feels more comfortable using the printed notes, he should by all means do so.

No matter how many times one may hear a familiar masterwork there are always new vistas to be found in it. Yesterday's performance of the Brahms Symphony No. 1 revealed previously hidden detail which Mr. Munch drew out with loving care and subtle expressiveness. The over-all conception was bold, audacious and forceful but the careful contrasts of tone, the gradual crescendos and diminuendos, the constant but concealed changes of pace, the marshalled passion and power add nothing but interest to the performance.

This was not an orthodox interpretation but it is just in such unorthodoxy that the conductor is at his best. He is to be commended and praised for providing new outlooks on old works. At any rate music also is a house with many mansions.

PROGRAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 11th program of the regular subscription series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall with Joseph de Pasquale the viola soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following programs

Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past" (Arranged by Charles Munch) ..... Bach
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11 ..... Vivaldi
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra ..... Bartok
Symphony, No. 1a in C minor, Op. 68 ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 31 1960

Boston Symphony Salutes New Year

11-60

Pasquale Distinguished in Bartók

By Louis Chapin

Charles Munch made it quite clear to his Symphony Hall audience yesterday afternoon—in case they didn't already know—that a new year means a great deal more to him than swinging bells and con amore performances of "Auld Lang Syne." His Boston Symphony program, [illegible]ally or not, faced 1961 with a prevailing seriousness, with a resolution more promising than the general run.

Its intentions were unmistakeable, of course, in the opening Chorale Prelude of Bach, arranged by Dr. Munch, "The Old Year is Past." The music, the transcription, the playing, and the conducting were as far removed as possible from any purpose to entertain. Applause seemed somehow inappropriate.

Then the orchestra strings attended to the fine sound of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor, and their warm way with it was again convincing as to the composer's understanding of how these instruments work — also as to why Bach took the trouble to copy it out.

The jump from Vivaldi to Bartók is made shorter than one might expect by the common energy of the two composers. Both men wrote muscular music without drawing attention to the muscles. Bartók's Viola Concerto seems particularly lean, and Joseph de Pasquale's playing made no special effort to fatten it up; his most important job, expertly fulfilled, was to keep the solo line raised, when needed, above the orchestra.

In a violin concerto, the solo instrument is guaranteed a degree of prominence through the use of its brilliant higher range; but where the viola is concerned, neither the composer nor the performer can well exploit this means. Mr. de Pasquale found his way with ease and clarity through the spaces which Bartók opened for him in the texture, and the music's purposefulness led to exhilarating release in the dancing finale.

And speaking of finales, Dr. Munch's reading of the Brahms First Symphony saved its ampliest orchestral power till the last movement. It is indeed a symphony of resolution, and seemed fitting to the occasion that the insistent intentions of the first movement should defer more than usually to Brahms' final joy in having written a symphony—his resolution of many years fulfilled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

DEC 31 1960

De Pasquale Plays Bartok Concerto With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA presented at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 11th program of the Friday—Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Bach: Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," by Munch; Vivaldi: Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11; Bartok: Viola Concerto, Joseph De Pasquale soloist; Brahms: Symphony No. 1, in C minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

It was a thrilling and thoroughly satisfying afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday. Old music, new, and one of the most popular 19th Century masterpieces made a substantial program. Apart from a few untidy entrances here and there, and a nervously fast pace in the finale of Brahms' First Symphony, this program was performed with great beauty and exciting intensity. The Old Year is ending at Symphony Hall in true glory.

This chronicler, for one, is grateful to Dr. Munch for letting us hear the neglected Bartok Viola Concerto again, and for inviting first viola Joseph de Pasquale to be soloist. The work is altogether extraordinary, a real concerto that is at once modern and ingratiating, orchestrated with a light hand and enormous skill. Everything sings, even when the going is percussive.

De Pasquale gave us a virtuoso account of this Concerto, which is known among the viola fraternity as one of fearsome difficulties. The De Pasquale playing was so neat, so rhythmically vigorous yet subtle, so unfailingly accurate in pitch and musicianly in grace of phrasing, that it all gave the illusion of seeming easy. That is one test of great performing art.

But more than that, De Pasquale's performance—and also that of the Orchestra—showed a superb sense of continuity, musical structure and logic. The Concerto built and built, as it sang and sang. The total result was an occasion to be cherished in memory. Well, indeed, did De Pasquale merit the audience's acclaim and the spontaneous cry of "Bravo!" which burst from his colleagues on stage.

It was nice that Dr. Munch resumed his custom of observing the calendar change by beginning the concert with his lovely and subdued orchestration of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past." Vivaldi's potent Concerto Grosso, performed in an edition adhering closely to that by the late Alfred Einstein, was a delight. The continuo was taken by harpsichord.

As for that noble mountain peak among the big symphonies, Brahms' First went gorgeously. It was one of Dr. Munch's thrilling, muscular, dramatic readings.

Next week the Orchestra goes to New York. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Jan. 13 and 14, will bring Smetana's "The Moldau," the G major Symphony, No. 4, by Dvorak, and Brahms' B-flat major Piano Concerto with Eugene Istomin as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

DEC 25 1960

Bartok Viola Concerto Featured by Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal violist, Joseph de Pasquale, will be soloist with the Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon at 2:15, and on Saturday evening at 8:30. Mr. de Pasquale will be heard in a performance of the Concerto for Viola and Orchestra by Bela Bartok. Charles Munch will also conduct Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 at these concerts.

Mr. De Pasquale has appeared frequently as soloist with the Symphony and with other orchestras. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, he won particular recognition last year for his performances of the Walter Piston Viola Concerto which was played on all the orchestra's major series including New York, on tour and in Tanglewood. The violist was named to the principal's chair in Boston in 1947.

The fourth program of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will take place this week in Symphony Hall at 8:30 with Jaime Laredo as soloist in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. The Symphony No. 4 by Schumann, Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Die Natali," and Milhaud's Suite Provencale will be heard at this concert which will be conducted by Charles Munch.

Charles Munch and the Orchestra will be on tour the week of January 2. Pianist Eugene Istomin will be heard with the Orchestra in Boston on January 13-14.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

DEC 1960

Naumburg Award Finals

Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium, Oct. 21: Tartini-Kreisler: Variations on a Theme of Corelli. Bach: Fugue from Sonata in C for violin alone. Imbrie: Impromptu (First Performance). Vieuxtemps: Concerto in A minor, Op. 37.

David Nadien .....Violinist

Walton: First Movement, Violin Concerto. Bach: Chaconne for violin alone. Chausson: "Poème".

Stanley Plummer .....Violinist

Schumann: Fantasy in C, Op. 131. Bartok: Fuga (Sonata for violin alone). Bach: Sarabande and Bourree from Partita in B minor. Paganini: "Moses" Fantasy.

Joseph Silverstein ....Violinist

Departing from its past procedure of judging contestants in private and then presenting the winner in a Town Hall recital, the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation, in this year's international string competition, presented the finalists — David Nadien, Stanley Plummer and Joseph Silverstein — in this public concert in which each was permitted to play a half-hour recital.

Mr. Nadien had a little more time, possibly, because he introduced the new Andrew Imbrie work which was commissioned by the foundation as part of its program to aid composers.

After the concert, the jurors retired to pick the winner. The lucky finalist was Joseph Silverstein, the third-place runner-up in last year's Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Competition. The 28-year-old Detroit-born violinist is currently a member of the Boston Symphony.

As the Naumburg Award winner, Mr. Silverstein receives the largest prize ever offered a string contestant in this country—$5,000 in cash and the equivalent of $20,000 in the extras that go with it. This includes a two-year contract with the Herbert Barrett Management, subsidized foreign and American tours, a solo appearance with the New York Philharmonic, a New York solo recital, and a recording for Columbia Records.

Mr. Nadien, who won the Edgar M. Leventritt Award in 1946, and Mr. Plummer, who was the winner of the 1951 National Federation of Music Clubs' young artists competition, were awarded $1,750 each.

In announcing the awards from the stage, following the jury's post-concert deliberations, Leopold Mannes, the jury chairman, also outlined the new policy under which future Naumburg contest winners, beginning with Mr. Silverstein, will make their New York appearances at the close of the two-year managerial contract, rather than at the beginning. Naumburg competitions will be held biennially and the next, in 1962, will be for pianists.

The three young violinists had one thing in common. Besides giving good accounts of themselves, they all made their best impressions in works that are typical of the 19th century romantic school, the Vieuxtemps, Chausson, and Paganini music. Boris Barere was Mr. Nadien's self-effacing accompanist. Charles Wadsworth was the more assertive pianist for the other two.

Besides Mr. Mannes, the judges were Paul Doktor, Madeline Foley, Lillian Fuchs, Robert Gerlé, Joseph Knitzer, William Knitzer, William Kroll, Hans Letz, Dorothy Minty, Aldo Parisot, Oscar Shumsky, Isaac Stern and Efrem Zimbalist. Leonard Bernstein, listed among the jurors, was unable to appear.

—Rafael Kammerer

Fay Foto Service

William Schuman presents Naumburg Award to Joseph Silverstein

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 8 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER—"My Fair Lady" finally came to Boston at the Shubert where it conquered the opening night audience with its "astonishing music" and with settings "as handsome as ever they were in New York," although some flaws were noted in the acting and lighting.

SCREEN: "The Sundowners" at the Metropolitan was found "one of the warmest and nicest pictures to come here in a long time." "The Entertainer" at the Kenmore was hailed as "one of the year's most distinguished films." Elvis Presley's jump into a dramatic role in "Flaming Star" at the Pilgrim and Mayflower came in "an enjoyable, unpretentious adventure story." Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring," at the Exeter drew high praise for its compound of "beauty, terror, vengeance and repentance." The French dance film at New England Mutual Hall, "Belles and Ballets," was declared "charming and resourceful." At Loew's Orpheum, Bob Hope and Lucille Ball in "The Facts of Life" opened to an audience "baffled in spots but more often amused." Jean Renoir's "Picnic on the Grass" at the Telepix was "altogether illogical, but charming, gay and boisterous."

MUSIC: Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony and viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale ended the year with "a vibrant and satisfying concert."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

DEC 31 1960

De Pasquale Plays Bartok Concerto With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA presented at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 11th program of the Friday—Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: Bach: Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past" (arr. by Munch); Vivaldi: Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11; Bartok: Viola Concerto; Joseph De Pasquale soloist; Brahms: Symphony No. 1, in C minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

It was a thrilling and thoroughly satisfying afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday. Old music, new, and one of the most popular 19th Century masterpieces made a substantial program. Apart from a few untidy entrances here and there, and a nervously fast pace in the finale of Brahms' First Symphony, this program was performed with great beauty and exciting intensity. The Old Year is ending at Symphony Hall in true glory.

This chronicler, for one, is grateful to Dr. Munch for letting us hear the neglected Bartok Viola Concerto again, and for inviting first viola Joseph de Pasquale to be soloist. The work is altogether extraordinary, a real concerto that is at once modern and ingratiating, orchestrated with a light hand and enormous skill. Everything sings, even when the going is percussive.

De Pasquale gave us a virtuoso account of this Concerto, which is known among the viola fraternity as one of fearsome difficulties. The De-Pasquale playing was so neat, so rhythmically vigorous yet subtle, so unfailingly accurate in pitch and musicianly in grace of phrasing, that it all gave the illusion of seeming easy. That is one test of great performing art.

But more than that, De Pasquale's performance—and also that of the Orchestra—showed a superb sense of continuity, musical structure and logic. The Concerto built and built, as it sang and sang. The total result was an occasion to be cherished in memory. Well, indeed, did De Pasquale merit the audience's acclaim and the spontaneous cry of "Bravo!" which burst from his colleagues on stage.

It was nice that Dr. Munch resumed his custom of observing the calendar change by beginning the concert with his lovely and subdued orchestration of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past." Vivaldi's potent Concerto Grosso, performed in an edition adhering closely to that by the late Alfred Einstein, was a delight. The continuo was taken by harpsichord.

As for that noble mountain peak among the big symphonies, Brahms' First went gorgeously. It was one of Dr. Munch's thrilling, muscular, dramatic readings.

Next week the Orchestra goes to New York. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Jan. 13 and 14, will bring Smetana's "The Moldau," the G major Symphony, No. 4, by Dvorak, and Brahms' B-flat major Piano Concerto with Eugene Istomin as soloist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

DEC 1960

Naumburg Award Finalists

Grace Rainey Rogers ..... Oct. 21: Tartini-Kreisler: Variations on a Theme of Corelli. Bach: Fugue from Sonata in C for violin alone. Imbrie: Sonata (First Performance). Vieuxtemps: Concerto in A minor, Op. 37.

David Nadien ..... Violinist
Walton: First Movement from Violin Concerto. Bach: Chaconne for violin alone. Chausson: "Poème".

Stanley Plummer ..... Violinist
Schumann: Fantasy in C, Op. 131. Bartok: Fuga (Sonata for violin alone). Bach: Sarabande and Bourree from Partita in B minor. Paganini: "Moses" Fantasy.

Joseph Silverstein ..... Violinist

Departing from its past procedure of judging contestants in private and then presenting the winner in a Town Hall recital, the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation, in this year's international string competition, presented the finalists — David Nadien, Stanley Plummer and Joseph Silverstein — in this public concert in which each was permitted to play a half-hour recital.

Mr. Nadien had a little more time, possibly, because he introduced the new Andrew Imbrie work which was commissioned by the foundation as part of its program to aid composers.

After the concert, the jurors retired to pick the winner. The lucky finalist was Joseph Silverstein, the third-place runner-up in last year's Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Competition. The 28-year-old Detroit-born violinist is currently a member of the Boston Symphony.

As the Naumburg Award winner, Mr. Silverstein receives the largest prize ever offered a string contestant in this country—$5,000 in cash and the equivalent of $20,000 in the extras that go with it. This includes a two-year contract with the Herbert Barrett Management, subsidized foreign and American tours, a solo appearance with the New York Philharmonic, a New York solo recital, and a recording for Columbia Records.

Mr. Nadien, who won the Edgar M. Leventritt Award in 1946, and Mr. Plummer, who was the winner of the 1951 National Federation of Music Clubs' young artists competition, were awarded $1,750 each.

In announcing the awards from the stage, following the jury's post-concert deliberations, Leopold Mannes, the jury chairman, also outlined the new policy under which future Naumburg contest winners, beginning with Mr. Silverstein, will make their New York appearances at the close of the two-year managerial contract, rather than at the beginning. Naumburg competitions will be held biennially and the next, in 1962, will be for pianists.

The three young violinists had one thing in common. Besides giving good accounts of themselves, they all made their best impressions in works that are typical of the 19th century romantic school, the Vieuxtemps, Chausson, and Paganini music. Boris Barere was Mr. Nadien's self-effacing accompanist. Charles Wadsworth was the more assertive pianist for the other two.

Besides Mr. Mannes, the judges were Paul Doktor, Madeline Foley, Lillian Fuchs, Robert Gerlé, Joseph Knitzer, William Knitzer, William Kroll, Hans Letz, Dorothy Minty, Aldo Parisot, Oscar Shumsky, Isaac Stern and Efrem Zimbalist. Leonard Bernstein, listed among the jurors, was unable to appear.

—Rafael Kammerer

Fay Foto Service
William Schuman presents Naumburg Award to Joseph Silverstein

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

DEC 25 1960

Bartok Viola Concerto Featured by Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal violist, Joseph de Pasquale, will be soloist with the Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon at 2:15, and on Saturday evening at 8:30. Mr. de Pasquale will be heard in a performance of the Concerto for Viola and Orchestra by Bela Bartok. Charles Munch will also conduct Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 at these concerts.

Mr. De Pasquale has appeared frequently as soloist with the Symphony and with other orchestras. A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, he won particular recognition last year for his performances of the Walter Piston Viola Concerto which was played on all the orchestra's major series including New York, on tour and in Tanglewood. The violist was named to the principal's chair in Boston in 1947.

The fourth program of the Orchestra's Tuesday Evening Series will take place this week in Symphony Hall at 8:30 with Jaime Laredo as soloist in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. The Symphony No. 4 by Schumann, Samuel Barber's Chorale Preludes for Christmas, "Dic Natali," and Milhaud's Suite Provencale will be heard at this concert which will be conducted by Charles Munch.

Charles Munch and the Orchestra will be on tour the week of January 2. Pianist Eugene Istomin will be heard with the Orchestra in Boston on January 13-14.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 8 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER—"My Fair Lady" finally came to Boston at the Shubert where it conquered the opening night audience with its "astonishing music" and settings "as handsome as ever they were in New York," although some flaws were noted in the acting and lighting.

SCREEN: "The Sundowners" at the Metropolitan was found "one of the warmest and nicest pictures to come here in a long time." "The Entertainer" at the Kenmore was hailed as "one of the year's most distinguished films." Elvis Presley's jump into a dramatic role in "Flaming Star" at the Pilgrim and Mayflower came in "an enjoyable, unpretentious adventure story." Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring," at the Exeter drew high praise for its compound of "beauty, terror, vengeance and repentance." The French dance film at New England Mutual Hall, "Belles and Ballets," was declared "charming and resourceful." At Loew's Orpheum, Bob Hope and Lucille Ball in "The Facts of Life" opened to an audience "baffled in spots but more often amused." Jean Renoir's "Picnic on the Grass" at the Telepix was "altogether illogical, but charming, gay and boisterous."

MUSIC: Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony and viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale ended the year with "a vibrant and satisfying concert."

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

106

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 4 - 1961

Symphony on Tour

The Boston Symphony is returning to New York this week for another part of its 75th New York anniversary season. The orchestra is also being heard in Rye and Brooklyn.

The twelfth pair of Boston concerts, to be given Jan. 13 and 14, will include Eugene Istomin as soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2. Charles Munch will also conduct the orchestra in Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," and in Dvorak's Fourth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
JAN 1 - 1961

Boston Orchestra To Play Tuesday

MEMBERS OF THE Civic Music Association will hear a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a program on Tuesday evening at 8:15 in the Auditorium. The concert is the second of five in the current series, marking the 30th year of the association. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct Tuesday's program, which will open with Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor. The program will include Chorale Preludes for Christmas by Samuel Barber, Milhaud's Suite Provencale, and Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E minor by Mendelssohn, with Jaime Laredo as soloist.

One of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony is now in its 80th season and is composed of 101 men and three women. It gives concerts in different series from October through April in the winter season, followed by the Boston Pops Concerts, Esplanade series, and the six-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The major winter series is given in Symphony Hall in Boston, built for the orchestra in 1900 and still considered by many to have the finest acoustics of any U.S. concert hall. Last summer the orchestra made a Far Eastern trip.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367
JAN 4 1961

Civic Concert Is Fine Start For New Year

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

The Civic Music Association concert last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch was a heartwarming affair. Whether you looked upon it as a fine opening for the new year of music, or as an extra bonus at the end of the two-holiday fortnight, there was the right ring to it.

I do not know if Dr. Munch planned it that way, but just as the center of the program was Samuel Barber's new Christmas piece, so every other composition on the program seemed to keynote some phase of Christmas and New Year's feeling.

Barber's chorale Preludes for Christmas, entitled "Die Natali," were delightfully invigorating. They frankly used portions of several familiar carols, but in what variety and richness of harmonization! At times, the oriental effect was emphasized, and the Wise Men truly came from the Far East. Especially delightful was the featuring of instruments often given a subordinate role, with the tuba and bassoon given key assignments.

Violinist Shows Maturity

After such glitter and sonority, one might have expected the Mendlessohn Violin Concerto in E minor to sound showy and concertized, but the heart-appeal continued, especially in the famous "Andante." The young South American violinist, Jaime Laredo, still in his teens despite mature appearance, made this movement a thing of ideal beauty, and treated the intricacies of the first and third movements as if they were incidental and not ends in themselves.

His tone was always contained and musicianly. He shaped phrases with elegance, and disdained apparently to push them for showiness' sake. One may have heard more exciting performances of this well-known concerto, but few which maintained such steady goals.

This was a romantic program, opened with the Schumann Symphony No. 4 in D minor. Whole sections of this symphony are so tender and touched with hope and prophecy that they would do for a musical setting of the Nativity. Especially did Munch draw forth the smooth and noble nature of the music in the introduction.

Final Section Brisk

The body of the first movement alternated effectively between its suggestions of strife and turbulence, and periodic emergence into sunny passages. The "Romaze" was geatly poignant. The contrast of the Scherzo were handled splendidly, between vigorous accents and daintiest traceries.

The opening of the last movement brought another introduction of great dignity, before the more knowing and calculated elaborations of the finale.

The holiday mood was given quaint and attractive garb in Darius Milhaud's "Suite Provencale." Of the eight little pictures, based on folk material, I liked especially the opening "Animo," with all the gaiety and richness of holiday merrymaking, and the beautifully played theme of the seventh, slow movement, voiced by English horn, trombones, horns and strings.

The brisk final section brought the illusion of all sorts and sizes of bells some, as far as I know, played on chimes, but suggested by various ingenious instrumental combinations.

We [illegible] to Dr. Munch [illegible] this program [illegible] given its premiere in Boston only a few days ago, and obviously destined to be heard often.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 814,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 5 1961

Music: New Yule Work

Boston Symphony Plays Barber's 'Die Natali'

By HAROLD G. SCHONBERG

CHRISTMAS is a little past us, but Samuel Barber's new Christmas work last night helped to evoke sounds that recently have been sounding in our ears. It received its first local performance last night in Carnegie Hall, and is a fifteen-minute piéce d'occasion named "Die Natali," and subtitled "chorale preludes for orchestra." Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced it.

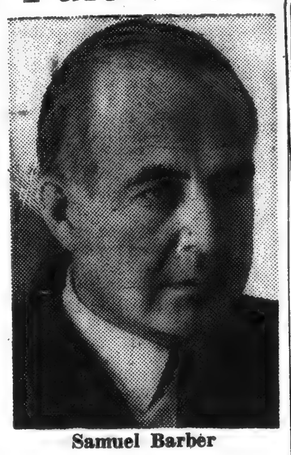
What Mr. Barber has composed is, in effect, a potpourri of familiar Christmas melodies. "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel" is heard. So are "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," "We Three Kings of Orient Are," "Silent Night," "Good King Wenceslas," "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen" and several others.

Sensitively harmonized and orchestrated, "Die Natali" is the kind of piece that any competent craftsman can turn out rapidly on order. Mr. Barber, being the professional he is, has avoided a stock arrangement of a television-commercial nature. There is nothing vulgar in this piece, save for one spot—a rather glaring, jazzlike treatment of "Good King Wenceslas." It is otherwise ttidy, pleasant and it probably will be turning up in symphony concerts all over the country come next Christmastide.

Mr. Munch led off the concert with Milhaud's "Suite Provençale." This work is not unfamiliar. It is as cute as a prettily colored spun sugar stick, is about as nourishing, and makes a colorful flicker as it spins along.

The soloist of the evening was Jaime Laredo, in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. From the opening phrase of the soloist it was evident that the performance was going to be along restricted lines.

If a violinist takes his entry in the Mendessohn without any attempt at a dynamic surge, he has failed to set his stage for what follows. Mr. Laredo, who can play the violin quite expertly, failed to realize the potential of the music. His opening statement was in character with the rest of his conception—bland, sweet, small-scaled, and with almost no dyanmic variation.



Samuel Barber

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Charles Munch, conductor; Jaime Laredo, violinist. At Carnegie Hall.
Suite Provencale ..... Milhaud
Violin Concerto in E minor..Mendelssohn
Die Natale, Choral Preludes for Christmas (first N. Y. performance)..Barber Symphony No. 4 ..... Schumann

Mr. Laredo gave the impression that all of his training has been concentrated on how to play the instrument, rather than on what the music means. He seemed uninterested in pointing up a phrase, in building to tension and then release.

Everything he did he did correctly enough. His background has been thorough enough for that, and there were no mistakes as such. But neither was there any hint at musical character or, even, great belief in what he was doing. It is a pity that so brilliant a technician should have so little to communicate.

In the concluding work, the Schumann Fourth Symphony, Mr. Munch led the Boston Symphony in a performance highlighted by pure sound. His orchestra is one of the great ones, and it gave him a beautifully shaded reading. As an interpretation, though, it was just a shade on the brittle and artificial side.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the bridge between the third and fourth movements. Mr. Munch, using an exaggerated pianissimo from his players at the start, built it up so carefully, and in such a calculated manner, that it assumed a place completely outside its true proportion. If only conductors in the Schumann symphonies would let the music flow naturally!

Hyman Brees Gives a Violin Recital

HYMAN BRESS, a violinist from Canada who made his New York recital debut three seasons ago, returned to Town Hall last night for his second appearance. He brought John Newmark with him as his assistant at the piano, and he also brought something of an innovation in recital procedure.

The innovation came with the presentation of Schonberg's Fantasy, Op. 47. While Messrs. Bress and Newmark played it, the pages of the printed score were projected one by one on the big Town Hall film screen.

The visual aid was interesting and instructive for those who could read music, and it was probably diverting even for those who couldn't.

Actually, a bit of diversion was welcome by the time Mr. Bress got to Schoenberg, for his recital was not the liveliest affair imaginable. The program was solid and the playing secure, but the music-making was almost maddeningly placid.

Prokofieff's Sonata in F minor, Op. 80; Brahms' Sonata in G, Op. 78; Mozart's Adagio, K. 261, and Kelsey-Jones' Introduction and Fugue (in its first New York performance) all seemed to move Mr. Bress about equally—that is to say, very little.

The Schoenberg demonstration showed conclusively, for example, how Mr. Bress failed in one respect to achieve needed variety. Between the fortissimos and pianos that it called for, there was generally only the slightest dynamic distinction.

This was just about the way things went all evening. There was only minimal projection of anything resembling drama or passion; even the most honorable musicianship and sweetest of quiet string tone can grow tiresome very quickly.

What young Mr. Bress needed fas to expose the temperament that must reside in him somewhere. His equipment, musical intelligence and taste are too imposing to be wasted through such unrelieved calmness.

ALLEN HUGHES.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
JAN 9 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The program:
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11—Vivaldi.
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra — Bartok.
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 —

By Ronald Eyer

The literature for solo viola being as limited as it is, the Bartok Concerto, which very nearly didn't get written, is a more than welcome addition and Joseph de Pasquale gave it its full due in a splendid performance Saturday afternoon.

Mr. de Pasquale, who is first viola of the Boston Symphony, has an intimate connection with this work. It was commissioned and first played by William Primrose who was one of Mr. de Pasquale's teachers, and the first performance by the Boston Symphony in 1952 was played by Mr. de Pasquale.

The finished work is the result of a collaboration, unforeseen by either party, between the composer, Bela Bartok, and his friend, Tibor Serly. It was one of the compositions upon which Bartok was working at the time of his death in New York in 1945. It was complete in sketch form, but a major task fell to Serly in deciphering the manuscript, completing harmonies, solving technical problems for the soloist and deciding on instrumentation.

Has Happened Before

This sort of thing has happened before (as with Alfani and Puccini's "Turandot"), but it is a difficult spot for a friend of a deceased composer to be in, no matter how good a musician the friend may be. There must always be the unanswerable question of what the music would have been like had the composer completed it himself.

Serly, however, knew Bartok and his methods intimately, and the sketches, after all, were complete although in skeletal form. What comes out in performance is pure Bartok, so far as the average listener can discern, and it is singularly beautiful music. In three movements, played without pause, it is a full-fledged bravura piece calculated, in traditional concerto style, to show off the capacities of both the instrument and the player.

There are no concessions to either, and the work bristles with technical difficulties which Mr. de Pasquale, master violist that he is, solved with no trouble at all. In the manner of the modern concerto, the solo voice is integrated much of the time with the orchestral fabric which is, as Bartok wished it, light in texture. There is graceful and ingenious interplay between the viola and the wind instruments and some very skillfully devised contrasts between the solo instrument and its fellow strings.

Hungarian Flavor

The suggestion of Hungarian folk music is, of course, always in the air, especially in the dancelike Allegro vivace which brings the work to a gay and dashing conclusion. And the slow movement has a grand, soaring melody which displayed the burnt umber voice of the viola at its resplendent best. Altogether, the concerto is a masterpiece of its kind and an ornament to the instrument for which it was conceived.

The concert began with the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor for Strings, Op. 3, No. 11, here performed with harpsichord continuo. The polyphonic texture of the first movement, Maestoso, sounded heavy and muddy and the ensemble of first-chair soloists in the succeeding movements was unbalanced and sometimes strident.

ensembles were crisply [illegible]

Yule Chorale Presented At Carnegie

Samuel Barber's latest composition—a set of Chorale Preludes for Chirstmas—sharpened interest in the concert of the visiting Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night. Charles Munch conducted.

Another attraction was the appearance of Jaime Laredo, the 19-year-old Bolivian violinist who won the coveted Belgian Prize in 1959. Bland tone and facile technique marked his reading of the Mendelssohn Concerto last night.

Mr. Barber's score carries the yuletide Latin title of "Die Natali." Based on familiar Christmas carols such as "Silent Night," it offers an unbroken sequence of contrapuntal devices with immense skill and feeling.

The tunes are heard in ingenious guises, alone, together and in brilliant rhythmic variation and with alternating moods of prayer-like peace and joyous jubilation. After a brisk crescendo, the music tapers off to echoes of "Silent Night."

This may very well be the best symphonic contribution ever made by an American composer to the Christmas shelf.

Also on the program were Milhaud's "Suite Provecale" and Schumann's Fourth Symphony.

L.B.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,12
JAN 6 19

MUS
Boston S
CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch; Laredo, violinist. The Symphony No. 4 in D mi
"Die Natali," Chorale Pre Mas (first N. Y. perfo Concerto for Violin, and C minor, Op. 64 .....
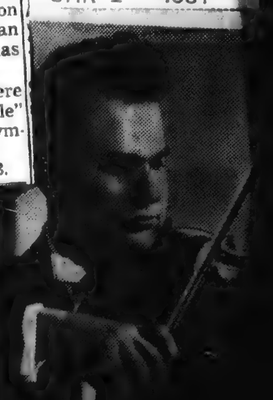
Suite Provencale .....
By Paul Henry
The novelty at night's concert of t Symphony was Samue "Die Natali," Chorale for Christmas," which distinguished compos work. Unless I am t taken, this is the fir when chorale preludes than being written for gan and perhaps later

W YORK, N.Y.
MES
814,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 1 1961



NIST IS SOLOIST—Ja
oston Symphony at Car

NEW YORK, N.Y
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S.
JAN 1

Laredo S
Violinist Jaime
his first local app orchestra in Wedn
Boston Symphony
Carnegie Hall.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,055 S. 505,121
JAN 6 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Jaime Laredo, violinist. The program:
Symphony No. 4 in D minor, Op. 120 ..... Schumann.
"Die Natali" (Chorale Preludes for Christmas (first N. Y. performance). ..... Barber.
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E minor, Op. 64 ..... Mendelssohn.
Suite Provencale ..... Milhaud.

By Paul Henry Lang

The novelty at Wednesday night's concert of the Boston Symphony was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas," which is this distinguished composer's latest work. Unless I am badly mistaken, this is the first instance when chorale preludes, rather than being written for the organ and perhaps later orchestrated, were composed directly for orchestra, yet this very fact creates a curious dichotomy. There was something unreal about this engaging, very well constructed and tasteful work, which in fact legalized a common law marriage, making the bride respectable.

The distinguishing quality of "Die Natali" is that, devoted though it largely is to the vision of a bygone era, it does not lose touch with this century. This piece seems to me to represent a search for a line along which both worlds can march, kept together on the one hand by a Christian musical tradition, on the other hand by the mental processes of the contemporary composer. The difficulty is that perhaps Mr. Barber underestimated the extent to which we have departed from Christian musical tradition, as well as from the mental processes that must inevitably be invoked when setting such traditional tunes.

It might be supposed that in the turmoil in which music finds itself in the seventh decade of the twentieth century, such a work would easily present itself and as easily be carried out without any direct relation to the main currents. Unfortunately, the agelessness that has hitherto surrounded such tunes as "God rest ye merry, gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," or "Silent night," has paled; these tunes have become a romance which is quite different from a tradition. And the romance, irrevocably standardized by the Victorians, no longer accords with the temper of today's music.

But the dichotomy goes even deeper, it concerns the whole attitude, for the division is different in kind and cannot be measured by the same scale. I have noticed it before, in the fine second symphony of Honegger, where suddenly an old hymn appears in the finale, instantly causing a feeling of unconvincing archaism. (The chorale tunes in Reger's piano concerto give the impression of a peasant's shirt worn with a dinner jacket.)

If this attitude and technique of using religious-symbolical cantus firmi in orchestral works is still viable, which I doubt, it will have to be reconciled with the spirit of the second half of our century, which calls for an entirely new musical solution. Frankly, I do not think that this is feasible either.

Yet I must confess that it is very difficult to criticize an attitude which preserves such a spirit and yields such pleasant results. I am sure that "Die Natalis" will have that success which the more archaically contrived and therefore less genuinely felt attempts fail to reach. The performance did not do justice to Mr. Barber's fastidious scoring; there were some ragged spots whole others seemed a bit perfunctory, though on the whole the orchestra sounded fine.

The concert began with Milhaud's "Suite Provencale," one of the poorer lollipops of this facile composer who has many of them to his credit, and was followed by Mendelssohn's violin concerto, played by Jaime Laredo.

Mr. Laredo's rendition was on a small scale in concept, tone, phrasing, and pretty nearly everything else! Not so the orchestra's—all the strings of Greater Boston were on the stage for a work of Mozartean proportions, for a concerto that is scored with the utmost finesse. The tuttis made mincemeat of the pleasant but dainty sound emanating from Mr. Laredo's violin.

The final number, Schumann's Fourth Symphony, started a little ponderously, going from spot to spot separated by Mr. Munch's private rallentandos. The body of the second movement showed the orchestra in its better form, but the lovely and simple melody that opens it was pretty well mangled by ultra-romantic phrasing. As I left, the scherzo got under way in a pleasantly robust manner.

Jaime Laredo, violin soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 1 1961

VIOLINIST IS SOLOIST—Jaime Laredo will play with the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879
JAN 1 1961

Laredo Soloist

Violinist Jaime Laredo makes his first local appearance with orchestra in Wednesday night's Boston Symphony concert at Carnegie Hall.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

...uch Premieres
...ber Work

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 4: Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Jaime Laredo, violinist. MILHAUD: Suite Provençale. MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto in E minor. BARBER: Die Natali (First performance in New York). SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 4.

Samuel Barber's Die Natali, written for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony and dedicated to the memory of Natalie and Serge Koussevitzky, is a set of chorale preludes for Christmas. Two of Barber's most distinct characteristics, his superb rhythmic sense and his feeling for orchestral color, work wonders in the recasting of the familiar carols he uses in this work.

It opens with a soft canon on O Come, O Come Emmanuel which sets a mood of tranquility, the predominant atmosphere of the piece. This mood is broken by such sections as the treatment of We Three Kings of Orient Are in which each king is symbolized by an instrument in an individual prelude in a quasi-oriental and often jazzy manner. Silent Night is recasted in 7/16 time and an ostinato on fragments of Adeste Fidelis bursts into a triumphant scoring of Joy to the World.

The piece is both occasional and topical which, for many works, would be the kiss of death. But Barber is far too secure a craftsman to fall into

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
JAN 5 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Barber 'Natali'

Like the winter's invading winds, the force of Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony last night in Carnegie Hall was not easy to resist. During the first movement of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, he roused the ensemble like a cheerleader. There was no special regard for refinement but the continuous pulsation was dynamic, reflecting the music director's personality.

Munch had chosen a lively program well suited to his rousing treatment.

It included a first local performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas.

Before the intermission, Jaime Laredo, 19-year-old Bolivian violinist, who won the 1959 Queen of Belgium International Music Competition, was soloist in Mendelssohn's E Minor Concerto while Milhaud's "Suite Provencale" opened the concert in carnival spirit. Harlequin and Columbine turned up in many a dance tune.

"Die Natali" used familiar Christmas carols as themes, including "Good King Wenceslaus" and "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen." They tumbled out of Santa's pack as eagerly as children darting from bed on Christmas morning. Both bright and nostalgic, the music, however, which ended with "Silent Night," expressed the religious as well as festival spirit.

As could be expected, it is a work of good cheer, too saucy to suggest a round of caroling, but instead merging traditional tunes into a colorful contenmporary design.

Laredo Makes Melody Buoyant

Laredo's playing showed him to be sensitive performer, if still understandably immature. His tone, though sweet and pure, was small, even inhibited. At times he couldn't be heard above the ensemble and soft sustained high notes faded into nothing.

His technical equipment is solid, even brilliant, while his strong feeling for the melodic line makes the music soar. It is obvious that he sustains the movement of the melody constantly in his thinking because the phrases follow one another with continuous animation and with differentiation.

Munch's accompaniment generally was too heavy and there were many sections when he took the music at his own pace, whether slow or fast, rather than concerning himself first with his young soloist's wishes.

The quality of instrumental sound in the Mendelssohn and Schumann works was more lumped together than transparent. It was a solid more than a clear union of separate choirs.

In short, Munch blew confidently through Mendelssohn, but his soloist didn't always agree with the direction.

HARTFORD JOURNAL
JAN 5, 61

Bostonians' Barber

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony gave the first N. Y. performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," a sequence of chorale preludes for Christmas, during their Carnegie Hall concert last night.

It is an attractive work which could grace many a symphonic Christmas-music program in the future.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony Premieres New Work By Samuel Barber

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Jaime Laredo, violinist, Carnegie Hall, Jan. 4, E—Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony in the first New York offering of Samuel Barber's new "Die Natali, Choral Preludes for Christmas." Also new here was young Bolivian-born and American-trained Jaime Laredo, who played the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto.

Barber has lavished his genius upon a setting of favorite carols such as "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," "O Come, Emmanuel," "We Three Kings," "Lo, How A Rose E'er Blooming" and "Silent Night." This work was played with extraordinary flexibility, grace and skill, Strange is the union of themes of extreme simplicity with a complex harmonic and countermelodic procedure. The amazing variety of their treatment in a modern idiom often is confusing. Although the listener is sometimes overwhelmed by the volume and richness of orchestral tone, one or another of the solo instruments (as in "Silent Night") carries along the thematic thread cleverly. The work seems likely to be around a long time, especially during coming Christmas observances. An enthusiastic reception brought the composer to the stage to bow his thanks.

Mr. Laredo evinced technical clarity and commanding sweep in his bowing. but he neither plumbed the depth of the Beethoven Concerto's musical substance nor soared to lyrical heights throughout the three movements. One feels that he can enter the circle of the elect only by enhancing his fine talent by acquiring a broader style and a deeper interpretative grasp.

Mr. Munch and his players opened the list with an exquisite revealment of Milhaud's "Suite Provençale." Here was orchestral virtuosity at its peak, despite the work's saccharine quality. Imposing was the Fourth Symphony of Schumann, played as a final item with every facet of its romantic glow reflected delightfully.

R. L.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
JAN 4 1961

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, Jaime Laredo, violinist, in Mendelsshon Violin Concerto in E Minor; Schumann Symphony No. 4, Samuel Barber "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, first N.Y. performance. Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Metropolitan Opera: "Rigoletto," Nino Verchi conducting, cast includes Cornell MacNeil, Roberta Peters, Barry Morell, 8.

N.Y. City Ballet: "Symphony in C," "Modern Jazz" premiere. City Center, 8:30.

Hyman Bress, violinist. Town Hall, 8:30.

Michael Tree, violinist, Hekla Hermanns, pianist, in sonata program. 92d St. YM-YWHA, 8:30.

"The Play of Daniel," by N.Y Pro Musica. St. George Church, 207 E. 16th St., 8:30.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,121
JAN 6 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Jaime Laredo, violinist. The program: Symphony No. 4 in D minor, Op. ..... Schumann. "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas (first N. Y. performance). ..... Barber. Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E minor, Op. 64 ..... Mendelssohn. Suite Provencale ..... Milhaud.

By Paul Henry Lang

The novelty at Wednesday night's concert of the Boston Symphony was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas," which is this distinguished composer's latest work. Unless I am badly mistaken, this is the first instance when chorale preludes, rather than being written for the organ and perhaps later orchestrated, were composed directly for orchestra, yet this very fact creates a curious dichotomy. There was something unreal about this engaging, very well constructed and tasteful work, which in fact legalized a common law marriage, making the bride respectable.

The distinguishing quality of "Die Natali" is that, devoted though it largely is to the vision of a bygone era, it does not lose touch with this century. This piece seems to me to represent a search for a line along which both worlds can march, kept together on the one hand by a Christian musical tradition, on the other hand by the mental processes of the contemporary composer. The difficulty is that perhaps Mr. Barber underestimated the extent to which we have departed from Christian musical tradition, as well as from the mental processes that must inevitably be invoked when setting such traditional tunes.

It might be supposed that in the turmoil in which music finds itself in the seventh decade of the twentieth century, such a work would easily present itself and as easily be carried out without any direct relation to the main currents. Unfortunately, the agelessness that has hitherto surrounded such tunes as "God rest ye merry, gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," or "Silent night," has paled; these tunes have become a romance which is quite different from a tradition. And the romance, irrevocably standardized by the Victorians, no longer accords with the temper of today's music.

But the dichotomy goes even deeper; it concerns the whole attitude, for the division is different in kind and cannot be measured by the same scale. I have noticed it before, in the fine second symphony of Honegger, where suddenly an old hymn appears in the finale, instantly causing a feeling of unconvincing archaism. (The chorale tunes in Reger's piano concerto give the impression of a peasant's shirt worn with a dinner jacket.)

If this attitude and technique of using religious-symbolical cantus firmi in orchestral works is still viable; which I doubt, it will have to be reconciled with the spirit of the second half of our century, which calls for an entirely new musical solution, one more advanced than that employed by Mr. Barber.

Jaime Laredo, violin soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night.

Frankly, I do not think that this is feasible either.

Yet I must confess that it is very difficult to criticize an attitude which preserves such a spirit and yields such pleasant results. I am sure that "Die Natalis" will have that success which the more archaically contrived and therefore less genuinely felt attempts fail to reach. The performance did not do justice to Mr. Barber's fastidious scoring; there were some ragged spots whole others seemed a bit perfunctory, though on the whole the orchestra sounded fine.

The concert began with Milhaud's "Suite Provencale," one of the poorer lollipops of this facile composer who has many of them to his credit, and was followed by Mendelssohn's violin concerto, played by Jaime Laredo.

Mr. Laredo's rendition was on a small scale in concept, tone, phrasing, and pretty nearly everything else. Not so the orchestra's—all the strings of Greater Boston were on the stage for a work of Mozartean proportions, for a concerto that is scored with the utmost finesse. The tutti made mincemeat of the pleasant but dainty sound emanating from Mr. Laredo's violin.

The final number, Schumann's Fourth Symphony, started a little ponderously, going from spot to spot separated by Mr. Munch's private rallentandos. The body of the second movement showed the orchestra in its better form, but the lovely and simple melody that opens it was pretty well mangled by ultra-romantic phrasing. As I left, the scherzo got under way in a pleasantly robust manner.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
JAN 5 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Play Barber 'Natali'

Like the winter's invading winds, the force of Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony last night in Carnegie Hall was not easy to resist. During the first movement of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, he roused the ensemble like a cheerleader. There was no special regard for refinement but the continuous pulsation was dynamic, reflecting the music director's personality.

Munch had chosen a lively program well suited to his rousing treatment.

It included a first local performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas.

Before the intermission, Jaime Laredo, 19-year-old Bolivian violinist, who won the 1959 Queen of Belgium International Music Competition, was soloist in Mendelssohn's E Minor Concerto while Milhaud's "Suite Provencale" opened the concert in carnival spirit. Harlequin and Columbine turned up in many a dance tune.

"Die Natali" used familiar Christmas carols as themes, including "Good King Wenceslaus" and "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen." They tumbled out of Santa's pack as eagerly as children darting from bed on Christmas morning. Both bright and nostalgic, the music, however, which ended with "Silent Night," expressed the religious as well as festival spirit.

As could be expected, it is a work of good cheer, too saucy to suggest a round of caroling, but instead merging traditional tunes into a colorful contemporary design.

Laredo Makes Melody Buoyant

Laredo's playing showed him to be sensitive performer, if still understandably immature. His tone, though sweet and pure, was small, even inhibited. At times he couldn't be heard above the ensemble and soft sustained high notes faded into nothing.

His technical equipment is solid, even brilliant, while his strong feeling for the melodic line makes the music soar. It is obvious that he sustains the movement of the melody constantly in his thinking because the phrases follow one another with continuous animation and with differentiation.

Munch's accompaniment generally was too heavy and there were many sections when he took the music at his own pace, whether slow or fast, rather than concerning himself first with his young soloist's wishes.

The quality of instrumental sound in the Mendelssohn and Schumann works was more lumped together than transparent. It was a solid more than a clear union of separate choirs.

In short, Munch blew confidently through Mendelssohn, but his soloist didn't always agree with the direction.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony Premieres New Work By Samuel Barber

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Jaime Laredo, violinist, Carnegie Hall, Jan. 4, E—Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony in the first New York offering of Samuel Barber's new "Die Natali, Choral Preludes for Christmas." Also new here was young Bolivian-born and American-trained Jaime Laredo, who played the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto.

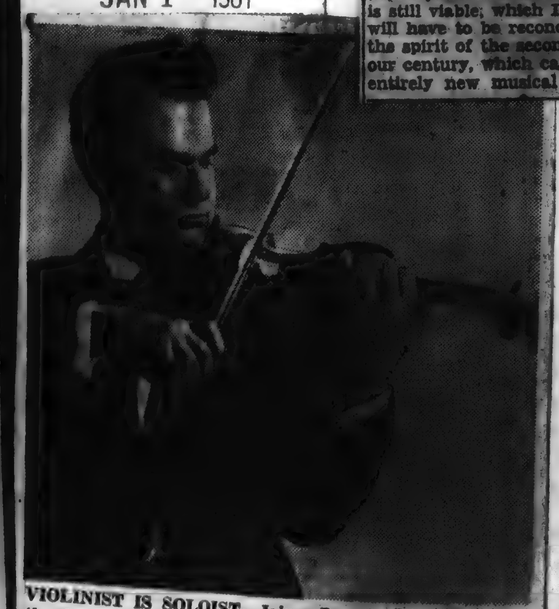
Barber has lavished his genius upon a setting of favorite carols such as "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas," "O Come, Emmanuel," "We Three Kings," "Lo, How A Rose E'er Blooming" and "Silent Night." This work was played with extraordinary flexibility, grace and skill, Strange is the union of themes of extreme simplicity with a complex harmonic and countermelodic procedure. The amazing variety of their treatment in a modern idiom often is confusing. Although the listener is sometimes overwhelmed by the volume and richness of orchestral tone, one or another of the solo instruments (as in "Silent Night") carries along the thematic thread cleverly. The work seems likely to be around a long time, especially during coming Christmas observances. An enthusiastic reception brought the composer to the stage to bow his thanks.

Mr. Laredo evinced technical clarity and commanding sweep in his bowing. but he neither plumbed the depth of the Beethoven Concerto's musical substance nor soared to lyrical heights throughout the three movements. One feels that he can enter the circle of the elect only by enhancing his fine talent by acquiring a broader style and a deeper interpretative grasp.

Mr. Munch and his players opened the list with an exquisite revealment of Milhaud's "Suite Provençale." Here was orchestral virtuosity at its peak, despite the work's saccharine quality. Imposing was the Fourth Symphony of Schumann, played as a final item with every facet of its romantic glow reflected delightfully.

R. L.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 814,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 1 1961



VIOLINIST IS SOLOIST—Jaime Laredo will play with the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

...ich Premieres ...ber Work

Carnegie Hall, [illegible] Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. Jaime Laredo, violinist. MILHAUD: Suite Provençale. MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto in E minor. BARBER: Die Natali (First performance in New York). SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 4.

Samuel Barber's Die Natali, written for the 75th Anniversary of the Boston Symphony and dedicated to the memory of Natalie and Serge Koussevitzky, is a set of chorale preludes for Christmas. Two of Barber's most distinct characteristics, his superb rhythmic sense and his feeling for orchestral color, work wonders in the recasting of the familiar carols he uses in this work.

It opens with a soft canon on O Come, O Come Emmanuel which sets a mood of tranquility, the predominant atmosphere of the piece. This mood is broken by such sections as the treatment of We Three Kings of Orient Are in which each king is symbolized by an instrument in an individual prelude in a quasi-oriental and often jazzy manner. Silent Night is recasted in 7/16 time and an ostinato on fragments of Adeste Fidelis bursts into a triumphant scoring of Joy to the World.

The piece is both occasional and topical which, for many works, would be the kiss of death. But Barber is far too secure a craftsman to fall into

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
JAN 4 1961

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, [illegible], violinist, in Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E Minor; Schumann Symphony No. 4, Samuel Barber 'Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, first N.Y. performance. Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Metropolitan Opera: "Rigoletto," Nino Verchi conducting, cast includes Cornell MacNeil, Roberta Peters, Barry Morell, 8.

N.Y. City Ballet: "Symphony in C," "Modern Jazz" premiere. City Center, 8:30.

Hyman Bress, violinist. Town Hall, 8:30.

Michael Tree, violinist, Hilda Hermanns, pianist, in sonata program. 92d St. YM-YWHA, 8:30.

"The Play of Daniel," by N.Y Pro Mus[illegible] George Church, 207 E[illegible] St., 8:30.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,878
JAN 1 1961

Laredo Soloist

Violinist Jaime Laredo makes his first local appearance with orchestra in Wednesday night's Boston Symphony concert at [illegible]

HARTFORD JOURNAL
JAN. 5, 61

Bostonians Barber

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony gave the first N. Y. performance of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," a sequence of chorale preludes for Christmas, during their Carnegie Hall concert last night.

It is an attractive work which could grace many a symphonic Christmas-music program in the future.

108

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 429 263

JAN 14 1961

MUSICAL EVENTS

Points of Reference

IN the course of my duties last week, I encountered a number of contemporary compositions, each of which represented a slightly different approach to the art of music as well as a different degree of musical talent and expertness on the part of its creator. I found the differences interesting—more interesting, perhaps, than most of the compositions themselves—since they illustrated several trends that may well be pondered by anyone who, like me, is very much concerned with what is happening on the current musical scene. The first of these compositions was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," a set of orchestral elaborations of Christmas chorales, which was given its first New York hearing by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on Wednesday evening. Mr. Barber, I think, may someday be regarded as the outstanding American composer of his period. He has a style that is both individual and communicative. He has a sure sense of his own limitations and of what sort of music is appropriate to his talents. His departures from tradition are made not through ignorance but by virtue of a firm knowledge of just what tradition is and of just how far it can be meaningfully stretched to accommodate personal impulses and whims. He is no academician, and yet his music is generally cast in a frame that is accessible to the average educated listener. He is not afraid of "charm," a word that is mistakenly regarded as a devilish one by many of his contemporaries. As for "Die Natali," it may not be one of his most ambitious works, but it is an altogether engaging one. It puts several Christmas tunes, including the entirely familiar "Silent Night," through a course of symphonic treatment that is technically very sophisticated and intellectually interesting without being in the slightest degree satirical. The result is a delightful pièce d'occasion, full of poetic feeling as well as technical virtuosity, and I am sure that it will become a popular item on symphonic programs.

Next, I should like to consider Aram Khatchaturian's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, the solo part of which was ably played by a young Singhalese cellist named Rohan de Saram at Friday afternoon's Philharmonic concert, under the baton of Stanislaw Skrowaczewski. Mr. Khatchaturian is a rarity among his contemporaries in that he is a very good, and quite unabashed, middlebrow composer. Except for a few Armenian exoticisms, his music is traditional in style, bouncy, tuneful, and altogether unpretentious. In the Cello Concerto, he had no other aim than to provide an effective exhibition piece for the instrument, and at this he has been entirely successful.

From his genial work, I will now turn to something called "And the Fallen Petals," a Triolet for Orchestra by the Chinese composer Chou Wen-chung, which appeared on the same program. Mr. Chou professes, in a program note, to have been inspired by the methods of the great Chinese painters. Now, it is a peculiarity of music that adapts its methods to those of painting that it nearly always winds up as what musicians refer to as impressionism. And the trouble with musical impressionism is that it discards the fundamental language of music in favor of an idiom made up of sound effects, tone colors, and orchestral atmospheres. Consequently, it is restricted to a very narrow range of musical expression. It appeals directly to the ear, without regard to the complex associative processes of emotional communication that convey true musical meaning; that is to say, it is concerned with the calligraphy of music rather than with its logic. I found Mr. Chou's little composition pleasant enough to listen to, but it seemed to me merely a bit of musical fuzz that nowhere assumed the responsibility of communicating anything.

If I am not boring you with these distinctions, let me now consider a score by Gunther Schuller, written allegedly in the "modern-jazz" idiom for a Balanchine ballet called "Modern Jazz: Variants," which was presented at the City Center on Wednesday evening, and which I caught between the numbers on the Boston Symphony program the same night. Mr. Schuller's composition had the advantage of a rather tricky choreographic spectacle, full of handsome dancers, to set it off. It also required the services of a full orchestra plus the Modern Jazz Quartet, which appeared [illegible] the dancers on the stage, and which, by the way, is a very gifted ensemble of its type. What gifts it has were not in evidence the other night, for it did no improvising but merely stood, or sat, like a quartet of hunters in a duck blind, anxiously shooting out a carefully calculated note once in a while in response to Mr. Schuller, who was conducting the work himself. Moreover, I could not see that Mr. Schuller's very deliberate and contrived score resembled jazz, except in one short passage of drumming, allotted to Connie Kay, who handled the drums in the quartet. On the whole, it was a strictly atonal affair, somewhat in the manner of Webern, extremely monotonous, and altogether lacking in the impetuousness and impulsive freshness that, to my mind, are the outstanding virtues of jazz. If this is the direction in which "modern jazz" is moving, I foresee for it an imminent death through strangulation by the rigid formulas of atonal music.

I SUPPOSE I should fill in this discussion with a few references to what was presented on these programs besides the compositions I have mentioned. The Boston Symphony also performed Darius Milhaud's "Suite Provençal," a familiar, slight, and reasonably pleasant work, and followed it with the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, which the young Bolivian violinist Jaime Laredo played with an agreeable, sweet tone and nothing much else. Mr. Munch's evening concluded with what I thought was a somewhat routine performance of Schumann's Fourth Symphony. Mr. Skrowaczewski, the Philharmonic's new guest conductor, finished off his matinée with a refined and rather meticulous performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, showing himself to be a maestro of considerable fastidiousness and taste. George Balanchine's new ballet, to Mr. Schuller's music, was inventive enough—after all, Mr. Balanchine can make a fairly interesting ballet to fit almost any kind of music—and the principal dancers, including Diana Adams, Melissa Hayden, John Jones, and Arthur Mitchell, were, as always, a joy to watch.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold,

Mittwoch, 4. Januar 1961

In Dur und Moll:

Konzerte,

Jaime Laredo, der junge Geiger, der 1959 der erste Preisträger des jährlichen Internationalen Königin Elisabeth-Musikwettbewerbes in Brüssel war, wird heute abend zum erstenmal als Solist mit einem der großen amerikanischen Orchester in New York zu hören sein. Im Rahmen des zweiten Besuches des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters in der Carnegie Hall wird der junge Künstler Solist im Violinkonzert in E-Moll Opus 64 von Mendelssohn sein.

Der Dirigent des Abends, in dessen Programm weiterhin die "Choral Preludes for Christmas", ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber, die 4. Symphonie von Schumann und die "Suite Provencale" von Darius Milhaud zu Gehör gebracht werden, ist Charles Munch.

In dem für Samstagnachmittag angesetzten Programm der Gäste aus Boston — ebenfalls in der Carnegie Hall — wird ein völlig neues Programm geboten: Der Solist ist der erste Bratschenspieler des Orchesters, Joseph de Pasquale, der Bartoks-Konzert für Bratsche und Orchester zu Gehör bringen wird. Weiterhin stehen die 1. Symphonie von Brahms und das "Concerto Crosso" in D-Moll. Opus 3 Nr. 11 von Vivaldi auf dem Programm. Auch dieses Konzert wird von Charles Munch geleitet, der das gleiche Programm am Freitagabend auch in der Brooklyn Academy of Music dirigieren wird.

*

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Freitag, 6. Januar 1961

Carnegie Hall: "Die Natali"

Boston Symphony Orchester bringt ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber

Die Weihnachtsdekorationen in der 57. Straße waren verschwunden, die Weihnachtsstimmung war verflogen. Die Musik der Feiertage aber klang mächtig und seltsam ergreifend und packend durch die Carnegie Hall, als Charles Munch und das Boston Symphony-Orchester am Dienstagabend ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber, "Die Natali: Choral Preludes for Christmas" zum erstenmal in New York zu Gehör brachten.

Es ist eine massive, eindrucksvolle Komposition, in der Barber, der heute schon so etwas wie ein Altmeister der modernen Musik ist, der bekannten Musik der Weihnacht einen eigenen und dramatisch ausdrucksvollen Charakter gegeben hat. Man hört die Melodien, die aus ihrem Gehäuse in eine neue Wirklichkeit treten und man kann sie mit Leichtigkeit plazieren. Aber man weiß gleichzeitig instinktiv, daß mit Sicherheit und erlebendem Musikertum etwas Neues geschaffen worden ist, das völlig ungewöhnliche Dimensionen erreicht und den vertrauten Melodien eine erhellende Deutung gibt.

Zweifellos wird von nun an Barbers "Die Natali" zu der Weihnachtsmusik in dem permanenten Repertoire der großen Orchester der Welt gehören. Charles Munch und seine Musiker brachten das Werk in der ganzen Vielfalt des Farben- und Stimmungswechsels und in vollkommener Ausgewogenheit des Klangs.

*

Der Rest des Abends, oder zumindesten der Teil in dem der junge Violinist Jaime Laredo auf dem Podium stand, war weniger stark. Mr. Laredo, der das Violinkonzert von Mendelssohn zu Gehör brachte, ließ mancherlei zu wünschen übrig. Wir haben den jungen Künstler, nachdem er den großen "Preis Königin Elisabeth von Belgien" in Brüssel gewonnen hatte, hier schon in einem Konzert gehört.

Er ist natürlich ein feiner Techniker, der sein Instrument formal beherrscht und meistert. Aber irgendwie scheint ihm die persönliche Beziehung zu dem Komponisten zu fehlen; die Wärme und das Herzliche, das grade diese Komposition braucht, und die durch keine Technik, sei sie noch so makellos, ersetzt werden kann. Präzision ist nicht alles, und wird niemals — und besonders nicht in der Musik — jemals Gefühl überschatten.

*

Daß das Boston Orchester glanzvoller Wiedergaben fähig ist, und in Klang, Dynamik und Rhythmus kaum übertroffen werden kann, wurde erneut in der letzten Darbietung des Abends, der lieblichen, singenden 4. Symphonie von Schumann bewiesen, in der der kühle, glänzende Virtuose Charles Munch und sein Orchester vom Melodischen aufbauend, die ganze Farbenskala des Werkes voll projizierten.

E. St.

108

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 429,283
JAN 14 1961

MUSICAL EVENTS

Points of Reference

IN the course of my duties last week, I encountered a number of contemporary compositions, each of which represented a slightly different approach to the art of music as well as a different degree of musical talent and expertness on the part of its creator. I found the differences interesting—more interesting, perhaps, than most of the compositions themselves—since they illustrated several trends that may well be pondered by anyone who, like me, is very much concerned with what is happening on the current musical scene. The first of these compositions was Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," a set of orchestral elaborations of Christmas chorales, which was given its first New York hearing by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Wednesday evening. Mr. Barber, I think, may someday be regarded as the outstanding American composer of his period. He has a style that is both individual and communicative. He has a sure sense of his own limitations and of what sort of music is appropriate to his talents. His departures from tradition are made not through ignorance but by virtue of a firm knowledge of just what tradition is and of just how far it can be meaningfully stretched to accommodate personal impulses and whims. He is no academician, and yet his music is generally cast in a frame that is accessible to the average educated listener. He is not afraid of "charm," a word that is mistakenly regarded as a devilish one by many of his contemporaries. As for "Die Natali," it may not be one of his most ambitious works, but it is an altogether engaging one. It puts several Christmas tunes, including the entirely familiar "Silent Night," through a course of symphonic treatment that is technically very sophisticated and intellectually interesting without being in the slightest degree satirical. The result is a delightful pièce d'occasion, full of poetic feeling as well as technical virtuosity, and I am sure that it will become a popular item on symphonic programs.

Next, I should like to consider Aram Khatchaturian's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, the solo part of which was ably played by a young Singhalese cellist named Lionan de Saram at Friday afternoon's Philharmonic concert, under the baton of Zdzislaw Skrowaczewski. Mr. Khatchaturian is a rarity among his contemporaries in that he is a very good, and quite unabashed, middlebrow composer. Except for a few Armenian exoticisms, his music is traditional in style, melodic, tuneful, and altogether unpretentious. In the Cello Concerto he had no other aim than to provide an effective exhibition piece for the instrument, and at this he has been entirely successful.

From his genial work, I will now turn to something called "And the Fallen Petals," a Triolet for Orchestra by the Chinese composer Chou Wen-chung, which appeared on the same program. Mr. Chou professes, in a program note, to have been inspired by the methods of the great Chinese painters. Now, it is a peculiarity of music that adapts its methods to those of painting that it nearly always winds up as what musicians refer to as impressionism. And the trouble with musical impressionism is that it discards the fundamental language of music in favor of an idiom made up of sound effects, tone colors, and orchestral atmospheres. Consequently, it is restricted to a very narrow range of musical expression. It appeals directly to the ear, without regard to the complex associative processes of emotional communication that convey true musical meaning; that is to say, it is concerned with the calligraphy of music rather than with its logic. I found Mr. Chou's little composition pleasant enough to listen to, but it seemed to me merely a bit of musical fuzz that nowhere assumed the responsibility of communicating anything.

If I am not boring you with these distinctions, let me now consider a score by Gunther Schuller, written allegedly in the "modern-jazz" idiom for a Balanchine ballet called "Modern Jazz: Variants," which was presented at the City Center on Wednesday evening, and which I caught between the numbers on the Boston Symphony program the same night. Mr. Schuller's composition had the advantage of a rather tricky choreographic spectacle, full of handsome dancers, to set it off. It also required the services of a full orchestra plus the Modern Jazz Quartet, which appeared [illegible] the dancers on the stage, and [illegible]nd, is a very gifted ensemble of [illegible] What gifts it has were not in evidence the other night, for it did no improvising but merely stood, or sat, like a quartet of hunters in a duck blind, anxiously shooting out a carefully calculated note once in a while in response to Mr. Schuller, who was conducting the work himself. Moreover, I could not see that Mr. Schuller's very deliberate and contrived score resembled jazz, except in one short passage of drumming, allotted to Connie Kay, who handled the drums in the quartet. On the whole, it was a strictly atonal affair, somewhat in the manner of Webern, extremely monotonous, and altogether lacking in the impetuousness and impulsive freshness that, to my mind, are the outstanding virtues of jazz. If this is the direction in which "modern jazz" is moving, I foresee for it an imminent death through strangulation by the rigid formulas of atonal music.

I SUPPOSE I should fill in this discussion with a few references to what was presented on these programs besides the compositions I have mentioned. The Boston Symphony also performed Darius Milhaud's "Suite Provençal," a familiar, slight, and reasonably pleasant work, and followed it with the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, which the young Bolivian violinist Jaime Laredo played with an agreeable, sweet tone and nothing much else. Mr. Munch's evening concluded with what I thought was a somewhat routine performance of Schumann's Fourth Symphony. Mr. Skrowaczewski, the Philharmonic's new guest conductor, finished off his matinée with a refined and rather meticulous performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, showing himself to be a maestro of considerable fastidiousness and taste. George Balanchine's new ballet, to Mr. Schuller's music, was inventive enough—after all, Mr. Balanchine can make a fairly interesting ballet to fit almost any kind of music—and the principal dancers, including Diana Adams, Melissa Hayden, John Jones, and Arthur Mitchell, were, as always, a joy to watch.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold,

Mittwoch, 4. Januar 1961

In Dur und Moll:

Konzerte,

Jaime Laredo, der junge Geiger, der 1959 der erste Preisträger des jährlichen Internationalen Königin Elisabeth-Musikwettbewerbes in Brüssel war, wird heute abend zum erstenmal als Solist mit einem der großen amerikanischen Orchester in New York zu hören sein. Im Rahmen des zweiten Besuches des Boston Symphonie Orchesters in der Carnegie Hall wird der junge Künstler Solist im Violinkonzert in E-Moll Opus 64 von Mendelssohn sein.

Der Dirigent des Abends, in dessen Programm weiterhin die "Choral Preludes for Christmas", ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber, die 4. Symphonie von Schumann und die "Suite Provencale" von Darius Milhaud zu Gehör gebracht werden, ist Charles Munch.

In dem für Samstagnachmittag angesetzten Programm der Gäste aus Boston — ebenfalls in der Carnegie Hall — wird ein völlig neues Programm geboten: Der Solist ist der erste Bratschenspieler des Orchesters, Joseph de Pasquale, der Bartoks-Konzert für Bratsche und Orchester zu Gehör bringen wird. Weiterhin stehen die 1. Symphonie von Brahms und das "Concerto Grosso" in D-Moll, Opus 3 Nr. 11 von Vivaldi auf dem Programm. Auch dieses Konzert wird von Charles Munch geleitet, der das gleiche Programm am Freitagabend auch in der Brooklyn Academy of Music dirigieren wird.

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Freitag, 6. Januar 1961

Carnegie Hall: "Die Natali"

Boston Symphony Orchester bringt ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber

Die Weihnachtsdekorationen in der 57. Straße waren verschwunden, die Weihnachtsstimmung war verflogen. Die Musik der Feiertage aber klang mächtig und seltsam ergreifend und packend durch die Carnegie Hall, als Charles Munch und das Boston Symphony-Orchester am Dienstagabend ein neues Werk von Samuel Barber, "Die Natali: Choral Preludes for Christmas" zum erstenmal in New York zu Gehör brachten.

Es ist eine massive, eindrucksvolle Komposition, in der Barber, der heute schon so etwas wie ein Altmeister der modernen Musik ist, der bekannten Musik der Weihnacht einen eigenen und dramatisch ausdrucksvollen Charakter gegeben hat. Man hört die Melodien, die aus ihrem Gehäuse in eine neue Wirklichkeit treten und man kann sie mit Leichtigkeit plazieren. Aber man weiß gleichzeitig instinktiv, daß mit Sicherheit und erlebendem Musikertum etwas Neues geschaffen worden ist, das völlig ungewöhnliche Dimensionen erreicht und den vertrauten Melodien eine erhellende Deutung gibt.

Zweifellos wird von nun an Barbers "Die Natali" zu der Weihnachtsmusik in dem permanenten Repertoire der großen Orchester der Welt gehören. Charles Munch und seine Musiker brachten das Werk in der ganzen Vielfalt des Farben- und Stimmungswechsels und in vollkommener Ausgewogenheit des Klangs.

Der Rest des Abends, oder zumindesten der Teil in dem der junge Violinist Jaime Laredo auf dem Podium stand, war weniger stark. Mr. Laredo, der das Violinkonzert von Mendelssohn zu Gehör brachte, ließ mancherlei zu wünschen übrig. Wir haben den jungen Künstler, nachdem er den großen "Preis Königin Elisabeth von Belgien" in Brüssel gewonnen hatte, hier schon in einem Konzert gehört.

Er ist natürlich ein feiner Techniker, der sein Instrument formal beherrscht und meistert. Aber irgendwie scheint ihm die persönliche Beziehung zu dem Komponisten zu fehlen; die Wärme und das Herzliche, das grade diese Komposition braucht, und die durch keine Technik, sei sie noch so makellos, ersetzt werden kann. Präzision ist nicht alles, und wird niemals — und besonders nicht in der Musik — jemals Gefühl überschatten.

Daß das Boston Orchester glänzvoller Wiedergaben fähig ist, und in Klang, Dynamik und Rhythmus kaum übertroffen werden kann, wurde erneut in der letzten Darbietung des Abends, der lieblichen, singenden 4. Symphonie von Schumann bewiesen, in der der kühle, glänzende Virtuose Charles Munch und sein Orchester vom Melodischen aufbauend, die ganze Farbenskala des Werkes voll projizierten.

E. St.

Zeitung
Staats-Herold 1/8/61

Bühne, Bild und Podium:

Ein Rückblick auf die Woche

Die erste Woche des neuen Jahres ist — zumindesten was das Theater angeht, eine traditionell ruhige. Es hat keine Premieren am Broadway gegeben, und auch die sonst stets rührigen "off Broadway"-Bühnen hatten nur eine Premiere, eine Neuaufführung von Leon Gordons großem Reißer aus den 20er Jahren "White Cargo" angesetzt. Wir sagten "nein", denn wir sind der Ansicht, "daß es für derlei derbe Erotik heute kaum noch Abnehmer geben dürfte und das Ganze zu überholt und absurd ist, um von erwachsenen Theaterbesuchern — oder selbst von neugierigen Unterprimanern — akzeptiert zu werden.

*

In der Filmwelt ging es um eine Premiere lebhafter zu: Wir sahen den Kolossalfilm "Pepe", in dem "der liebenswürdige, liebenswerte mit allen Wassern gewaschene mexikanische Komödiant und Komiker Catinflas die Hauptrolle spielt", und den wir herzlichst auf der Leinwand zurückbegrüßten. Der Film selber aber was des großen Künstlers "nicht würdig", und das Aufgebot von 35 Hollywood Stars sozusagen als Verbrämung "absolut störend und überflüssig". "The Grass is greener", eine neue Komödie, die im Astor läuft, hat uns schon besser gefallen. Wir nannten sie "ein Stück silvesterlicher Schaumschlägerei, so harmlos amüsant und so scharmant unterhaltsam, wie kaum eine zweite in langen Monaten".

*

Erfreulich wie immer war die Woche im Gebiet der Musik: Die "Met" brachte einen prachtvoll balancierten "Rigoletto" und wir hörten "in der beglückenden Vielfalt der Melodien fünf außerordentliche Sänger — amerikanische Sänger alle", und wir fragten ebenso erfreut wie erstaunt: "Wer hätte noch vor 10 Jahren gedacht, daß es der 'Met' oder irgendeinem anderen Opernhaus möglich sein würde, die 5 Hauptpartien einer italienischen Oper mit amerikanischen Sängern zu besetzen — Sängern, die die Erfüllung des Wunschtraums jedes Intendanten in der Welt sein würden ..."

In der Carnegie Hall begrüßten wir schließlich einen neuen Gastdirigenten der Philharmoniker: den Polen Stanislaw Skowaczewski, "der es verstand, sich mit einem überwiegend konservativ gehaltenen Programm, die Sympathie des Publikums und offenbar auch des Orchesters zu erringen. Ein Mann der individualistischen Experimenten abhold ist, und die Musik in ihrer klaren Lieblichkeit erstehen läßt".

*

Charles Munch und das Boston-Orchester brachten eine neue Komposition von Samuel Barber zu Gehör: "Die Natali: Choral Preludes for Christmas". Wir waren tief beeindruckt von diesem Werk, das wir "eine massive, höchst interessante Komposition" nannten, in der Barber "der bekannten Musik der Weihnacht einen eignen und dramatisch ausdrucksvollen Charakter gegeben hat. Mit erlebendem Musikertum ist hier etwas Neues geschaffen worden, das völlig ungewöhnliche Dimensionen erreicht und den vertrauten Melodien eine erhellende Deutung gibt".

*

Schließlich besuchten uns noch das Philharmonische Orchester und die Geschwister Casadesus, die Mozarts Konzert Nr. 10 für zwei Klaviere und Orchester "in einer nicht zu übertreffenden, makellosen Wiedergabe und zu einem jubelnden Abschluß brachten".

Eine Woche, die ein vielversprechender Auftakt war. Hoffentlich werden wir in den 51, die in diesem Jahr folgen werden, nicht enttäuscht... E. St.

RYE, N.Y.
CHRONICLE
W. 2,475

JAN 12 1961

Concert Ass'n. Brings Boston Symphony Here

The pride of Boston filled the Rye High School auditorium with memorable music last Thursday night when the Rye Community Concert Association presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. It was a luxury that this organization could hardly afford, with its limited budget, but the unprecedented enthusiasm of the audience showed that the sacrifice was worth while in this instance.

The selections were typical of Charles Munch's programming. He included one contemporary work and surrounded it with proven classics whose reception was bound to be friendly. Considering the priceless instrument on which he was playing — for a more generous portion of collective artistry is not to be found in any other orchestra of the world — there is little wonder that he moved the usually undemonstrative Rye audience to prolonged applause and repeated bravos.

The most striking work performed was the Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseuh de Pasquale, the very talented first violist of the Boston Symphony, as soloist. This was obviously difficult to hear for many of the listeners. The strange harmonies and rhythms distracted their attention from enjoyment of the musical message. This is, however, a real work of art, and upon repeated hearings listeners would find themselves understanding more easily the new musical language. In evaluating contemporary music the difficulty of distinguishing the pearl from the paste is largely to be left to the master musicians. The average listener can only accept the choice of his favorite artist hoping sometime to aquire an appreciation of it. Even to the untrained ear there were many parts of the concerto that were exciting, particularly in the rich harmonies of the Adagio religioso and the Hungarian flavor of the Allegro vivance. The technical difficulties for the soloist were known only to the orchestra members themselves who showed openly their admiration for their colleague's technique and interpretation.

The Brahms' Symphony No. 1 required no effort on the listener's part for enjoyment. The Rye audiences have been exposed to more than ample performances of Brahms in the past few years, and no doubt familiarity has increased their affection. The first three movements flowed with dignity and a sense of authority. In the last movement there was no concern for tradition or understatement in Charles Munch's interpretation. Almost from the start he began to build in intensity and sustained the suspense to a tremendous climax in the last bars. One could almost detect an expression of glee in Mr. Munch's face at the success of so dangerous a feat. In the hands of a less skilled conductor with a less talented orchestra the results could have been disastrous. But it seems a sign of dynamic musical character for Charles Munch to use new expressions for traditional interpretation of the old masters.

The concert opened with the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso in D-Minor, a work featuring the strings. The next concert will be March 15 with the soprano Beverly Bower as soloist.

Luciana Hnatt.

109

PORT CHESTER, N.Y.
ITEM
D. 14,679

JAN 4 1961

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it comes to Rye High School tomorrow evening under the sponsorship of the Rye Community Concert Association. The orchestra, which has been under Munch's direction since 1949, was founded in 1881. The program will open in the school auditorium at 8:30 p.m. and is for Concert Association members only.

165 Church Street — New York

RYE, N.Y.
CHRONICLE
W. 2,475

DEC 29 1960

Boston Symphony Coming to Rye On January 5th

An unusual event will occur in Rye on January 5 when the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will flow into the Rye High School Auditorium to present a concert subscribed by the Rye Community Concert Association. It was only a stroke of good fortune that this group became available for performance in this area, being on its way from New York to Boston. Fortunate, too, was the fact that the orchestra had an open day on its calendar owing to traveling requirements. Thus some enthusiastic members of the Rye Community Concert Board quickly took advantge of this opportunity before it was snapped up elsewhere.

Charles Munch, the permanent director, will conduct this concert. Mr. Munch's return to this area recalls his visit to Port Chester in 1946 with the National Symphony of France. Times were difficult in those days and the orchestra made a most informal appearance in a Port Chester theatre, the members wearing whatever clothes they had been able to acquire in France's dark days. But under the expressive hands of a then gaunt Charles Munch, who as now conducted without score, they invested their playing with a glory which transcended their appearance.

With this tour, Mr. Munch's star rose fast and he was soon asked to conduct leading American orchestras including the Boston. In 1948 he succeeded the late Serge Koussevitsky as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch was born in Strasbourg during its German domination, but his education, temperament, and style are unmistakably French. He was even drafted into the German army in 1914 and was wounded at Verdun. Although he had studied in Berlin Leipzig, he decided to return to Paris. There, he found opportunities to conduct symphony orchestras and finally became conductor of the Parish Conservatory Orchestra. Therefore you will see in Charles Munch a musician trained in the sound and long-standing culture which is rooted in the Old World. His art is appreciated everywhere that music is played. In 1956 he took the Boston Symphony to Moscow and Leningrad where they were received with tremendous ovations. Last spring he introduced the orchestra to Japan and other Far Eastern countries.

The program will include a Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, the Bartok Concerto for Viola, and the Brahm's First Symphony. The concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. and is open to members only.

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
ARGUS
D. 18,838

JAN 5 1961

Rye Concert Slated By Boston Symphony

RYE—
The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will perform for members of the Rye Community Concert Association in the Rye High School tonight at 8:30 p.m.

The performance, which is open to association members only, will be duplicated in New York City during another tour performance this week.

The orchestra for 25 years was under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

Stuttgarter Zeitung 1/8/61

Bühne, Bild und Podium

Ein Rückblick auf die Woche

Die erste Woche des neuen Jahres ist — zumindesten was das Theater angeht, eine traditionell ruhige. Es hat keine Premieren am Broadway gegeben, und auch die sonst stets rührigen "off Broadway"-Bühnen hatten nur eine Premiere, eine Neuaufführung von Leon Gordons großem Reißer aus den 20er Jahren "White Cargo" angesetzt. Wir sagten "nein", denn wir sind der Ansicht, "daß es für derlei derbe Erotik heute kaum noch Abnehmer geben dürfte und das Ganze zu überholt und absurd ist, um von erwachsenen Theaterbesuchern — oder selbst von neugierigen Unterprimanern — akzeptiert zu werden.

*

In der Filmwelt ging es um eine Premiere lebhafter zu: Wir sahen den Kolossalfilm "Pepe", in dem "der liebenswürdige, liebenswerte mit allen Wassern gewaschene mexikanische Komödiant und Komiker Catinflas die Hauptrolle spielt", und den wir herzlichst auf der Leinwand zurückbegrüßten. Der Film selber aber was des großen Künstlers "nicht würdig", und das Aufgebot von 35 Hollywood Stars sozusagen als Verbrämung "absolut störend und überflüssig". "The Grass is greener", eine neue Komödie, die im Astor läuft, hat uns schon besser gefallen. Wir nannten sie "ein Stück silvesterlicher Schaumschlägerei, so harmlos amüsant und so scharmant unterhaltsam, wie kaum eine zweite in langen Monaten".

*

Erfreulich wie immer war die Woche im Gebiet der Musik: Die "Met" brachte einen prachtvoll balancierten "Rigoletto" und wir hörten "in der beglückenden Vielfalt der Melodien fünf außerordentliche Sänger — amerikanische Sänger alle", und wir fragten ebenso erfreut wie erstaunt: "Wer hätte noch vor 10 Jahren gedacht, daß es der 'Met' oder irgendeinem anderen Opernhaus möglich sein würde, die 5 Hauptpartien einer italienischen Oper mit amerikanischen Sängern zu besetzen — Sängern, die die Erfüllung des Wunschtraums jedes Intendanten in der Welt sein würden ...".

In der Carnegie Hall begrüßten wir schließlich einen neuen Gastdirigenten der Philharmoniker: den Polen Stanislaw Skowaczewski, "der es verstand, sich mit einem überwiegend konservativ gehaltenen Programm, die Sympathie des Publikums und offenbar auch des Orchesters zu erringen. Ein Mann der individualistischen Experimenten abhold ist, und die Musik in ihrer klaren Lieblichkeit erstehen läßt".

*

Charles Munch und das Boston-Orchester brachten eine neue Komposition von Samuel Barber zu Gehör: "Die Natali Choral Preludes for Christmas". Wir waren tief beeindruckt von diesem Werk, das wir "eine massive, höchst interessante Komposition" nannten, in der Barber "der bekannten Musik der Weihnacht einen eignen und dramatisch ausdrucksvollen Charakter gegeben hat. Mit erlebendem Musikertum ist hier etwas Neues geschaffen worden, das völlig ungewöhnliche Dimensionen erreicht und den vertrauten Melodien eine erhellende Deutung gibt".

*

Schließlich besuchten uns noch das Philharmonische Orchester und die Geschwister Casadesus, die Mozarts Konzert Nr. 10 für zwei Klaviere und Orchester "in einer nicht zu übertreffenden, makellosen Wiedergabe und zu einem jubelnden Abschluß brachten".

Eine Woche, die ein vielversprechender Auftakt war. Hoffentlich werden wir in den 51, die in diesem Jahr folgen werden, nicht enttäuscht... E. St.

RYE, N.Y.
CHRONICLE
W. 2,475

JAN 12 1961

Concert Ass'n. Brings Boston Symphony Here

The pride of Boston filled the Rye High School auditorium with memorable music last Thursday night when the Rye Community Concert Association presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. It was a luxury that this organization could hardly afford, with its limited budget, but the unprecedented enthusiasm of the audience showed that the sacrifice was worth while in this instance.

The selections were typical of Charles Munch's programming. He included one contemporary work and surrounded it with proven classics whose reception was bound to be friendly. Considering the priceless instrument on which he was playing — for a more generous portion of collective artistry is not to be found in any other orchestra of the world — there is little wonder that he moved the usually undemonstrative Rye audience to prolonged applause and repeated bravos.

The most striking work performed was the Bartok Viola Concerto with Joseuh de Pasquale, the very talented first violist of the Boston Symphony, as soloist. This was obviously difficult to hear for many of the listeners. The strange harmonies and rhythms distracted their attention from enjoyment of the musical message. This is, however, a real work of art, and upon repeated hearings listeners would find themselves understanding more easily the new musical language. In evaluating contemporary music the difficulty of distinguishing the pearl from the paste is largely to be left to the master musicians. The average listener can only accept the choice of his favorite artist hoping sometime to aquire an appreciation of it. Even to the untrained ear there were many parts of the concerto that were exciting, particularly in the rich harmonies of the Adagio religioso and the Hungarian flavor of the Allegro vivance. The technical difficulties for the soloist were known only to the orchestra members themselves who showed openly their admiration for their colleague's technique and interpretation.

The Brahms' Symphony No. 1 required no effort on the listener's part for enjoyment. The Rye audiences have been exposed to more than ample performances of Brahms in the past few years, and no doubt familiarity has increased their affection. The first three movements flowed with dignity and a sense of authority. In the last movement there was no concern for tradition or understatement in Charles Munch's interpretation. Almost from the start he began to build in intensity and sustained the suspense to a tremendous climax in the last bars. One could almost detect an expression of glee in Mr. Munch's face at the success of so dangerous a feat. In the hands of a less skilled conductor with a less talented orchestra the results could have been disastrous. But it seems a sign of dynamic musical character for Charles Munch to use new expressions for traditional interpretation of the old masters.

The concert opened with the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso in D-Minor, a work featuring the strings. The next concert will be March 15 with the soprano Beverly Bower as soloist.

Luciana Hnatt.

PORT CHESTER, N.Y.
ITEM
D. 14,679

JAN 4 1961

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it comes to Rye High School tomorrow evening under the sponsorship of the Rye Community Concert Association. The orchestra, which has been under Munch's direction since 1949, was founded in 1881. The program will open in the school auditorium at 8:30 p.m. and is for Concert Association members only.

---

165 Church Street — New York

RYE, N.Y.
CHRONICLE
W. 2,475

DEC 29 1960

Boston Symphony Coming to Rye On January 5th

An unusual event will occur in Rye on January 5 when the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will flow into the Rye High School Auditorium to present a concert subscribed by the Rye Community Concert Association. It was only a stroke of good fortune that this group became available for performance in this area, being on its way from New York to Boston. Fortunate, too, was the fact that the orchestra had an open day on its calendar owing to traveling requirements. Thus some enthusiastic members of the Rye Community Concert Board quickly took advantge of this opportunity before it was snapped up elsewhere.

Charles Munch, the permanent director, will conduct this concert. Mr. Munch's return to this area recalls his visit to Port Chester in 1946 with the National Symphony of France. Times were difficult in those days and the orchestra made a most informal appearance in a Port Chester theatre, the members wearing whatever clothes they had been able to acquire in France's dark days. But under the expressive hands of a then gaunt Charles Munch, who as now conducted without score, they invested their playing with a glory which transcended their appearance.

With this tour, Mr. Munch's star rose fast and he was soon asked to conduct leading American orchestras including the Boston. In 1948 he succeeded the late Serge Koussevitsky as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch was born in Strasbourg during its German domination, but his education, temperament, and style are unmistakably French. He was even drafted into the German army in 1914 and was wounded at Verdun. Although he had studied in Berlin Leipzig, he decided to return to Paris. There, he found opportunities to conduct symphony orchestras and finally became conductor of the Parish Conservatory Orchestra. Therefore you will see in Charles Munch a musician trained in the sound and long-standing culture which is rooted in the Old World. His art is appreciated everywhere that music is played. In 1956 he took the Boston Symphony to Moscow and Leningrad where they were received with tremendous ovations. Last spring he introduced the orchestra to Japan and other Far Eastern countries.

The program will include a Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, the Bartok Concerto for Viola, and the Brahm's First Symphony. The concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. and is open to members only.

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y.
ARGUS
D. 18,838

JAN 5 1961

Rye Concert Slated By Boston Symphony

RYE—

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will perform for members of the Rye Community Concert Association in the Rye High School tonight at 8:30 p.m.

The performance, which is open to association members only, will be duplicated in New York City during another tour performance this week.

The orchestra for 25 years was under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
JAN 8 1961

110

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The program:
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11—Vivaldi.
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra — Bartok.
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 —

By Ronald Eyer

The literature for solo viola being as limited as it is, the Bartok Concerto, which very nearly didn't get written, is a more than welcome addition and Joseph de Pasquale gave it its full due in a splendid performance yesterday afternoon.

Mr. de Pasquale, who is first viola of the Boston Symphony, has an intimate connection with this work. It was commissioned and first played by William Primrose who was one of Mr. de Pasquale's teachers, and the first performance by the Boston Symphony in 1952 was played by Mr. de Pasquale.

The finished work is the result of a collaboration, unforeseen by either party, between the composer, Bela Bartok, and his friend, Tibor Serly. It was one of the compositions upon which Bartok was working at the time of his death in New York in 1945. It was complete in sketch form, but a major task fell to Serly in deciphering the manuscript, completing harmonies, solving technical problems for the soloist and deciding on instrumentation.

Has Happened Before

This sort of thing has happened before (as with Alfani and Puccini's "Turandot"), but it is a difficult spot for a friend of a deceased composer to be in, no matter how good a musician the friend may be. There must always be the unanswerable question of what the music would have been like had the composer completed it himself.

Serly, however, knew Bartok and his methods intimately, and the sketches, after all, were complete although in skeletal form. What comes out in performance is pure Bartok, so far as the average listener can discern, and it is singularly beautiful music. In three movements, played without pause, it is a full-fledged bravura piece calculated, in traditional concerto style, to show off the capacities of both the instrument and the player.

There are no concessions to either, and the work bristles with technical difficulties which Mr. de Pasquale, master violist that he is, solved with no trouble at all. In the manner of the modern concerto, the solo voice is integrated much of the time with the orchestral fabric which is, as Bartok wished it, light in texture. There is graceful and ingenious interplay between the viola and the wind instruments and some very skillfully devised contrasts between the solo instrument and its fellow strings.

Hungarian Flavor

The suggestion of Hungarian folk music is, of course, always in the air, especially in the dancelike Allegro vivace which brings the work to a gay and dashing conclusion. And the slow movement has a grand, soaring melody which displayed the burnt umber voice of the viola at its resplendent best. Altogether, the concerto is a masterpiece of its kind and an ornament to the instrument for which it was conceived.

The concert began with the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor for Strings, Op. 3, No. 11, here performed with harpsichord continuo. The polyphonic texture of the first movement, Maestoso, sounded heavy and muddy and the ensemble of first-chair soloists in the succeeding movements was unbalanced and sometimes strident.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
JAN 9 1961

Music

2 Editions Of Boston Symphony

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

New Yorkers welcoming the Boston Symphony had a choice of hearing it in two editions over the weekend—in unabridged form in Carnegie Hall on Saturday, and in pocket size in Town Hall yesterday.

Either way, it made for brilliant reading. Full-size or reduced, this is one of America's major cultural boasts, an orchestra of high-grade musicians each of whom is an artist in his own right.

On Saturday Mr. Munch led the Bostonians in what was one of the greatest practical tributes ever paid the genius of Antonio Vivaldi—a faultless reading of the D Minor Concerto Grosso that was all shimmer and glow.

De Pasquale Outstanding.

Added to that was a stalwart performance of Brahms' First Symphony—in true epic stride—and a reading of Bartok's Viola Concerto made doubly compelling by first-desk man Joseph de Pasquale.

Mr. de Pasquale was again soloist yesterday afternoon in another viola concerto, this time by Paul Hindemith in a one-composer program directed by Eric Simon as the first of the Town Hall's new Festival series.

Hindemith seemed as much his dish as Bartok, whether in warmth of tone, cogency of style, or in that overall reach of vision without which a concerto becomes so many fragments loosely strung together.

Mr. de Pasquale was one of four soloists in four Hindemith concertos, each of them, seemingly, a specialist in the bright, animated style that was Hindemith's trademark in the mid-20's.

Concertos Well Done.

A beautiful account of the Violin Concerto (1925) by prize-winner Joseph Silverstein was followed by the crisply ebullient playing of Artur Balsom in the Piano Concerto (1924). First-desk man Samuel Mayes upheld the Boston tradition in the Cello Concerto (1935).

All four soloists enjoyed the advantage of a supporting ensemble of high artistry and a conductor of seasoned skill with a marked affinity for the music of our time.

The program, of course, represented only a brief segment of Hindemith's creative span, three good years of fast, rhythmic writing that show the bustling zest of youth.

World-Telegram & Sun (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 453,331
JAN 9 1961

Music

2 Editions Of Boston Symphony

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

New Yorkers welcoming the Boston Symphony had a choice of hearing it in two editions over the weekend—in unabridged form in Carnegie Hall on Saturday, and in pocket size in Town Hall yesterday.

Either way, it made for brilliant reading. Full-size or reduced, this is one of America's major cultural boasts, an orchestra of high-grade musicians each of whom is an artist in his own right.

On Saturday Mr. Munch led the Bostonians in what was one of the greatest practical tributes ever paid the genius of Antonio Vivaldi—a faultless reading of the D Minor Concerto Grosso that was all shimmer and glow.

De Pasquale Outstanding.

Added to that was a stalwart performance of Brahms' First Symphony—in true epic stride—and a reading of Bartok's Viola Concerto made doubly compelling by first-desk man Joseph de Pasquale.

Mr. de Pasquale was again soloist yesterday afternoon in another viola concerto, this time by Paul Hindemith in a one-composer program directed by Eric Simon as the first of the Town Hall's new Festival series.

Hindemith seemed as much his dish as Bartok, whether in warmth of tone, cogency of style, or in that overall reach of vision without which a concerto becomes so many fragments loosely strung together.

Mr. de Pasquale was one of four soloists in four Hindemith concertos, each of them, seemingly, a specialist in the bright, animated style that was Hindemith's trademark in the mid-20's.

Concertos Well Done.

A beautiful account of the Violin Concerto (1925) by prize-winner Joseph Silverstein was followed by the crisply ebullient playing of Artur Balsom in the Piano Concerto (1924). First-desk man Samuel Mayes upheld the Boston tradition in the Cello Concerto (1935).

All four soloists enjoyed the advantage of a supporting ensemble of high artistry and a conductor of seasoned skill with a marked affinity for the music of our time.

The program, of course, represented only a brief segment of Hindemith's creative span, three good years of fast, rhythmic writing that show the bustling zest of youth.

Drysdale in Film

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
FEB 1961

Bostonians Contrast Vivaldi And Bartok

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Joseph de Pasquale, viola, Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7, A—The Boston Orchestra's second afternoon concert was not notable for anything beyond the unusual finesse which its conductor achieves. Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso for Strings in D minor, Op. 3, No. II, was excessively beautiful, the tonal beauty of the second movement enchanting. But these are qualities which one does not wish, in addition, to associate with Vivaldi, for while works a stylish clarity and light texture are more suitable. The orchestra was so large that the harpsichord—paying feeble lip-service to authenticity order, it seemed, to sanction the use romantic licenses—was inaudible and made its principal, but not musical, impact when being carried out.

Joseph de Pasquale was a commanding soloist in Bartok's Viola Concerto a work which the composer left in sketches and which was assembled by his pupil, Tibor Serly. The proportions of this infrequently heard work are perhaps the more debatable because of its position in Bartok's oeuvre. The lengthy first movement meanders its way into the second movement, the central portion of which is as spiritual as the adagio in the third Piano Concerto. The soloist's opulent tone went far to crossing the expanses of slow music.

The concert ended with a fine performance of Brahms' First Symphony with a highly-charged finale. P. D.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. VIVALDI: Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3 No. 11. BARTOK: Viola Concerto. BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1.

Not too many years ago this particular Vivaldi concerto was one of a half dozen pre-Haydn orchestral works in the repertory, and the usual performances it got—thundered forth by 60 silken strings, with romanticized ritards and Wagnerian heaves and swells—were accepted by most listeners as a revelation of the glories of the past. Time has evidently left Mr. Munch and his orchestra behind, at least in this respect, because that's what the work got once again. In the meantime, however, we have heard much from the Baroque in something closer to its proper esthetic framework, and the Bostonian kind of performance today strikes the ear as a grotesque anachronism.

The clouds of doubt that swirled around the Bartok Viola Concerto at its premiere (how much Bartok and how much Tibor Serly, who deciphered his master's shorthand manuscript and prepared the work for performance) have somewhat abated. Today the work has gained acceptance on its own merits, as a lightweight exercise in the Bartokian manner, ingenious and accessible. It received a magnificent performance on this occasion. The Boston Symphony is studded with virtuosi in its ranks, and Mr. De Pasquale need yield to none who play the instrument today. His colleagues surrounded him with marvelous sound, keenly shaped by Mr. Munch.

The Boston Symphony has probably brought Brahms' First to New York a record number of times during its 75 years of visits. On this occasion the ritual was observed with due solemnity, for which a little élan would have been a welcome substitute. I expect that when the first symphony orchestra from one of the new African nations makes its Carnegie Hall debut, the Brahms First will be on the program. Might we not have some respite in the meantime? —Alan Rich

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
JAN 8 1961

110

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Joseph de Pasquale, violist. The program: Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11—Vivaldi.
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra — Bartok.
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 — Brahms.

By Ronald Eyer

The literature for solo viola being as limited as it is, the Bartok Concerto, which very nearly didn't get written, is a more than welcome addition and Joseph de Pasquale gave it its full due in a splendid performance yesterday afternoon.

Mr. de Pasquale, who is first viola of the Boston Symphony, has an intimate connection with this work. It was commissioned and first played by William Primrose who was one of Mr. de Pasquale's teachers, and the first performance by the Boston Symphony in 1952 was played by Mr. de Pasquale.

The finished work is the result of a collaboration, unforeseen by either party, between the composer, Bela Bartok, and his friend, Tibor Serly. It was one of the compositions upon which Bartok was working at the time of his death in New York in 1945. It was complete in sketch form, but a major task fell to Serly in deciphering the manuscript, completing harmonies, solving technical problems for the soloist and deciding on instrumentation.

Has Happened Before

This sort of thing has happened before (as with Alfani and Puccini's "Turandot"), but it is a difficult spot for a friend of a deceased composer to be in, no matter how good a musician the friend may be. There must always be the unanswerable question of what the music would have been like had the composer completed it himself.

Serly, however, knew Bartok and his methods intimately, and the sketches, after all, were complete although in skeletal form. What comes out in performance is pure Bartok, so far as the average listener can discern, and it is singularly beautiful music. In three movements, played without pause, it is a full-fledged bravura piece calculated, in traditional concerto style, to show off the capacities of both the instrument and the player.

There are no concessions to either, and the work bristles with technical difficulties which Mr. de Pasquale, master violist that he is, solved with no trouble at all. In the manner of the modern concerto, the solo voice is integrated much of the time with the orchestral fabric which is, as Bartok wished it, light in texture. There is graceful and ingenious interplay between the viola and the wind instruments and some very skillfully devised contrasts between the solo instrument and its fellow strings.

Hungarian Flavor

The suggestion of Hungarian folk music is, of course, always in the air, especially in the dancelike Allegro vivace which brings the work to a gay and dashing conclusion. And the slow movement has a grand, soaring melody which displayed the burnt umber voice of the viola at its resplendent best. Altogether, the concerto is a masterpiece of its kind and an ornament to the instrument for which it was conceived.

The concert began with the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor for Strings, Op. 3, No. 11, here performed with harpsichord continuo. The polyphonic texture of the first movement, Maestoso, sounded heavy and muddy and the ensemble of first-chair soloists in the succeeding movements was unbalanced and sometimes strident.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
JAN 9 1961

Music

2 Editions Of Boston Symphony

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

New Yorkers welcoming the Boston Symphony had a choice of hearing it in two editions over the weekend—in unabridged form in Carnegie Hall on Saturday, and in pocket size in Town Hall yesterday.

Either way, it made for brilliant reading. Full-size or reduced, this is one of America's major cultural boasts, an orchestra of high-grade musicians each of whom is an artist in his own right.

On Saturday Mr. Munch led the Bostonians in what was one of the greatest practical tributes ever paid the genius of Antonio Vivaldi—a faultless reading of the D Minor Concerto Grosso that was all shimmer and glow.

De Pasquale Outstanding.

Added to that was a stalwart performance of Brahms' First Symphony—in true epic stride—and a reading of Bartok's Viola Concerto made doubly compelling by first-desk man Joseph de Pasquale.

Mr. de Pasquale was again soloist yesterday afternoon in another viola concerto, this time by Paul Hindemith in a one-composer program directed by Eric Simon as the first of the Town Hall's new Festival series.

Hindemith seemed as much his dish as Bartok, whether in warmth of tone, cogency of style, or in that overall reach of vision without which a concerto becomes so many fragments loosely strung together.

Mr. de Pasquale was one of four soloists in four Hindemith concertos, each of them, seemingly, a specialist in the bright, animated style that was Hindemith's trademark in the mid-20's.

Concertos Well Done.

A beautiful account of the Violin Concerto (1925) by prize-winner Joseph Silverstein was followed by the crisply ebullient playing of Artur Balsom in the Piano Concerto (1924). First-desk man Samuel Mayes upheld the Boston tradition in the Cello Concerto (1935).

All four soloists enjoyed the advantage of a supporting ensemble of high artistry and a conductor of seasoned skill with a marked affinity for the music of our time.

The program, of course, represented only a brief segment of Hindemith's creative span, three good years of fast, rhythmic writing that show the bustling zest of youth.

World-Telegram & Sun
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 453,331
JAN 9 1961

Music

2 Editions Of Boston Symphony

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

New Yorkers welcoming the Boston Symphony had a choice of hearing it in two editions over the weekend—in unabridged form in Carnegie Hall on Saturday, and in pocket size in Town Hall yesterday.

Either way, it made for brilliant reading. Full-size or reduced, this is one of America's major cultural boasts, an orchestra of high-grade musicians each of whom is an artist in his own right.

On Saturday Mr. Munch led the Bostonians in what was one of the greatest practical tributes ever paid the genius of Antonio Vivaldi—a faultless reading of the D Minor Concerto Grosso that was all shimmer and glow.

De Pasquale Outstanding.

Added to that was a stalwart performance of Brahms' First Symphony—in true epic stride—and a reading of Bartok's Viola Concerto made doubly compelling by first-desk man Joseph de Pasquale.

Mr. de Pasquale was again soloist yesterday afternoon in another viola concerto, this time by Paul Hindemith in a one-composer program directed by Eric Simon as the first of the Town Hall's new Festival series.

Hindemith seemed as much his dish as Bartok, whether in warmth of tone, cogency of style, or in that overall reach of vision without which a concerto becomes so many fragments loosely strung together.

Mr. de Pasquale was one of four soloists in four Hindemith concertos, each of them, seemingly, a specialist in the bright, animated style that was Hindemith's trademark in the mid-20's.

Concertos Well Done.

A beautiful account of the Violin Concerto (1925) by prize-winner Joseph Silverstein was followed by the crisply ebullient playing of Artur Balsom in the Piano Concerto (1924). First-desk man Samuel Mayes upheld the Boston tradition in the Cello Concerto (1935).

All four soloists enjoyed the advantage of a supporting ensemble of high artistry and a conductor of seasoned skill with a marked affinity for the music of our time.

The program, of course, represented only a brief segment of Hindemith's creative span, three good years of fast, rhythmic writing that show the bustling zest of youth.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
FEB 1961

Bostonians Contrast Vivaldi And Bartok

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, Joseph de Pasquale, viola, Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7, A—The Boston Orchestra's second afternoon concert was not notable for anything beyond the unusual finesse which its conductor achieves. Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso for Strings in D minor, Op. 3, No. II, was excessively beautiful, the tonal beauty of the second movement enchanting. But these are qualities which one does not wish, in isolation, to associate with Vivaldi, for whose works a stylish clarity and light texture are more suitable. The orchestra was so large that the harpsichord—paying feeble lip-service to authenticity in order, it seemed, to sanction the usual romantic licenses—was inaudible and made its principal, but not musical, impact when being carried out.

Joseph de Pasquale was a commanding soloist in Bartok's Viola Concerto, a work which the composer left in sketches and which was assembled by his pupil, Tibor Serly. The proportions of this infrequently heard work are perhaps the more debatable because of its position in Bartok's oeuvre. The lengthy first movement meanders its way into the second movement, the central portion of which is as spiritual as the adagio in the third Piano Concerto. The soloist's opulent tone went far to crossing the expanses of slow music.

The concert ended with a fine performance of Brahms' First Symphony with a highly-charged finale. P. D.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Joseph de Pasquale, violist. VIVALDI: Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3 No. 11. BARTOK: Viola Concerto. BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1.

Not too many years ago this particular Vivaldi concerto was one of a half dozen pre-Haydn orchestral works in the repertory, and the usual performances it got—thundered forth by 60 silken strings, with romanticized ritards and Wagnerian heaves and swells—were accepted by most listeners as a revelation of the glories of the past. Time has evidently left Mr. Munch and his orchestra behind, at least in this respect, because that's what the work got once again. In the meantime, however, we have heard much from the Baroque in something closer to its proper esthetic framework, and the Bostonian kind of performance today strikes the ear as a grotesque anachronism.

The clouds of doubt that swirled around the Bartok Viola Concerto at its premiere (how much Bartok and how much Tibor Serly, who deciphered his master's shorthand manuscript and prepared the work for performance) have somewhat abated. Today the work has gained acceptance on its own merits, as a lightweight exercise in the Bartokian manner, ingenious and accessible. It received a magnificent performance on this occasion. The Boston Symphony is studded with virtuosi in its ranks, and Mr. De Pasquale need yield to none who play the instrument today. His colleagues surrounded him with marvelous sound, keenly shaped by Mr. Munch.

The Boston Symphony has probably brought Brahms' First to New York a record number of times during its 75 years of visits. On this occasion the ritual was observed with due solemnity, for which a little élan would have been a welcome substitute. I expect that when the first symphony orchestra from one of the new African nations makes its Carnegie Hall debut, the Brahms First will be on the program. Might we not have some respite in the meantime? —Alan Rich

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,000
JAN 6 1961

Boston Symphony Lists Bartok Gem At Academy

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, January 6.

The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68. The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto, which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947.

This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn, and the occasion will be honored by the presence of the man who really is responsible for the work's completion and publication. Tibor Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than twenty years, was given the task of completing the work by the Bartok family, since the composer had died on September 26, 1945, leaving the Viola Concerto in an unfinished state.

This concerto had been commissioned by William Primrose, the famous English violist, and Bartok worked on it with tremendous energy and vigor. In the last few months of his ebbing life, however, Bartok conceived the idea of leaving as a legacy a piano concerto for his wife, and he put aside the unfinished viola concerto in order to work on this piano concerto, which he hoped would be a vehicle for his wife's performing career.

Bartok's death came with the piano concerto also unfinished, but there remained only seventeen bars to complete and Serly did this. The Viola Concerto had not been orchestrated and Serly undertook the task of preparing the work for publication, a three-year labor of love. The Concerto was given its first performance by Primrose in Minneapolis with Antal Dorati conducting, and its first New York performance was with Ernest Ansermet conducting the NBC Symphony, also with Primrose as soloist. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed the Concerto with Primrose as soloist and Ansermet as guest conductor.

The soloist in the Bartok Concerto, Mr. De Pasquale, was born in Philadelphia and graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute, where William Primrose was among his teachers. During the war, he played n the orchestra of the Marine Corps in Washington, and later was a member of the American Broadcasting Orchestra in New York. In 1947, he was invited by the late Serge Koussevitzky to become the principal violist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of January 6, 1961, are priced at $3.00, $3.50 and are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. All mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
DEC 31 1960

MUSIC - ART - DRAMA

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, January 6.

The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68. The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947.

This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn, and the occasion will be honored by the presence of the man who really is responsible for the work's completion and publication. Tibor Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than twenty years, was given the task of completing the work by the Bartok family, since the composer had died on September 26, 1915, leaving the Viola Concerto in an unfinished state.

This concerto had been commissioned by William Primrose, the famous English violist, and Bartok worked on it with trmeendous energy and vigor. In the last few months of his ebbing life, however, Bartok conceived the idea of leaving as a legacy a piano concerto for his wife, and he put aside the unfinished viola concerto in order to work on this piano concerto, which he hoped would be a vehicle for his wife's performing career.

Bartok's death came with the piano concerto also unfinished, but there remained only seventeen bars to complete and Serly did this. The Viola Concerto had not been orchestrated and Serly undertook the task of preparing the work for publication, a three-year labor of love.

The Concerto was given its first performance by Primrose in Minneapolis with Antal Dorati conducting, and its first New York performance was with Ernest Ansermet conducting the NBC Symphony, also with Primrose as soloist. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed the Concerto with Primrose as soloist and Ansermet as guest conductor.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of January 6, 1961, are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. All mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
CANARSIE COURIER
W. 6,125
JAN 5 1961

Boston Symphony Opens New Season At Academy Of Music

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, January 6.

The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68.

The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto, which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947.

This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn, and the occasion will be honored by the presence of the man who really is responsible for the work's completion and publication.

Tibor Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than twenty years, was given the task of completing the work by the Bartok family, since the composer had died on September 26, 1945, leaving the Viola Concerto in an unfinished state.

This concerto had been commissioned by William Primrose, the famous English violist, and Bartok worked on it with tremendous energy and vigor.

In the last few months of his ebbing life, however, Bartok conceived the idea of leaving as a legacy a piano concerto for his wife, and he put aside the unfinished viola concerto in order to work on his piano concerto, which he hoped would be a vehicle for his wife's performing career.

Bartok's death came with the piano concerto also unfinished, but there remained only seventeen bars to complete and Serly did this. The Viola Concerto had not been orchestrated and Serly undertook the task of preparing the work for publication, a three-year labor of love.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
DEC 30 1960

Footlights and Spotlights

Munch to Give Bartok Concerto For Viola Finished by Tibor Serly

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

When Charles Munch brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday, Vivaldi and Brahms will be upstaged by a modern genius, Bela Bartok.

The program includes Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor and Brahm's Symphony No. 1 in C minor. But Bartok's Viola Concerto must take the spotlight because of the presence in the audience of Tibor Serly.

Mr. Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than 20 years, was given the task of completing the concerto—left unfinished when Bartok died Sept. 26, 1945. It had been commissioned by William Primrose, the famous English violist, and Bartok worked on it energetically. Then he dropped it to write a piano concerto as a legacy for his wife. That, too, was not quite finished at the time of the composer's death.

Mr. Serly added 17 bars to the piano concerto and it was ready. But the viola piece had not been orchestrated. Mr. Serly spent three years preparing the work for publication. Its first performance was by Primrose and the Minneapolis Symphony under Anton Dorati.

With Mr. Serly in attendance the Viola Concerto will be played for the first time in Brooklyn by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony since 1947 and once a pupil of Primrose. Tickets for the concert, ranging in price from $3 to $4.50, may be obtained by writing or visiting the Academy, 30 Lafayette Ave.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S 778,562
DEC 27 1960

Bartok Concerto A Brooklyn 'First'

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern music at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, Jan. 6.

The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68.

The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto, which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947.

BROOKLYN 'FIRST'

This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn, and the occasion will be honored by the presence of the man responsible for the work's completion and publication.

Tibor Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than 20 years, completed the work after Bartok died on Sept. 26, 1945, leaving the Viola Concerto unfinished.

The soloist in the Bartok Concerto, Mr. De Pasquale, was born in Philadelphia. During the war, he played in the orchestra of the Marine Corps in Washington, and later was a member of the American Broadcasting Orchestra in New York.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 847,979 S. 1,275,193
JAN 2 1961

Munch at Academy

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., on Friday evening.

The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahm's Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68.

The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto, which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947. This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn.

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,035
DEC 29 1960

NEXT CONCERT

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,000
JAN 13 1961

112

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By Charles Richman

FASHIONS IN MUSIC: Vocal: "Joan Sutherland — The Art of the Prima Donna" on London stereophonic with Royal Opera House orchestra and chorus, is magnificent showcase of the versatility of a great soprano. She sings arias reminiscent of such as Mrs. Billington, Sontag, Melba, Tetrazzini, Gallic-Curci, etc. The two record volume is accompanied by text and photographs which make the renditions so much more meaningful. The editors of London Records are to be congratulated for this educational and entertaining contribution. OSA 1214.

Orchestra: "Ray Coniff — Memories Are Made of This" on Columbia stereo, refreshing popular music, sparkling with such as the little tune, "Three Coins," "Love Letters." Smooth and rhythmic. CS 83704.

Vocal: "Michel Louvain — Tour de Chant" on Coral Stereo is Quebec's gift to vocal charm. You'll recognize the tune if not the words of popular Yankee songs for this gent sings 'em in French. Exciting. CRL 757362.

Folk: "Peter Kara — The Music of Greece" on Coral zings you into that desire to up and dance from opening strain. You'll love this lively, energetic record by the man and orchestra which gave us "Misirlou." The Greeks not only had the word, they have the music for it. CRL 757348.

Country: "All-Time Country & Western" on Decca says grab your partner and have a fling with top notchers as Jimmie Davis, Ernest Tubb, Kitty Wells, etc. This is the second of these hits. Star-studded delight. DL 4090.

Show Time: "Henry IV Part II" records the unforgettable Marlowe Society and Professional Players in a great Shakespeare classic. The "book" has eight record pages, issued by London Records with a complete program. It's complete and uncut. A 4422.

Cab Calloway's "Dancing Man" and "I'll Follow You" are the back to back songs on Cab Calloway's initial recording for the Coral label. It's out in January.

Cab's contract with Coral is for single releases only. His most recent album is "Hi-De-Hi-De-Ho" for RCA Victor.

Calloway is currently on a tour of one nighters with the Harlem Globetrotters. He's dishing out his patented brand of entertainment in a show following the basketball game.

The January through March travels include dates in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, California, Texas, Arizona, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Pennsylvania.

BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, played to a packed house at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in its second of a series. Joseph DePasquale was admirable as soloist in the Bartok "Concerto for Viola and Orchestra." Vivaldi and Brahms also were on the program.

Munch brought down the house with the final number and it looked like the Bostonians might be applauded into missing that train back home. Our musical spies hinted that Tibor Serly who completed Bartok's work was in the audience.

Next Boston Symphony comes to town February 17 with Erich Leinsdorf as the conductor.

FASHION BY MOUSTACHE: Our glimpse into the fashion for men magazine world has Gentlemen's Quarter warns you can be passed over for the promotion with the wrong tie, oudated suit or too-loud shirt. Without the proper fashion look, you won't get that invitation to the big ball. Lot's of good sense in that mag.

JACK TUCHMAN, caterer par excellence, is an inveterate pocket watch enthusiast. The other day he was looking for a different fob and found it attached to a most unusual timer in his most unusual collection and so he added that one to the wardrobe of the day.

He showed it to Charles Maison, banquet manager of the Hotel St. George, and as we were covering the Federal Air Board hearings, we were privileged to see same watch. It tells the time with a bong for the hour and a bing for every five minutes. Most unusual.

AL KARMEL who knows his way around the hotel industry, tells of the waiter who served the soup to a guest which he had his thumb in it, the soup. When the guest complained, the waiter told him not to fret for he had washed the thumb that day.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 13,000
DEC 31 1960

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct a program that combines classical, romantic and modern musical literature at the next concert by the Bostonians at The Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday evening, Jan. 6. The classical school is represented by the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11 and the romantic by one of the great symphonic masterpieces, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Opus 68. The modern work is Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto, which will be performed by Joseph De Pasquale, principal violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1947.

This will be the first performance of the Bartok work in Brooklyn, and the occasion will be honored by the presence of the man who really is responsible for the work's completion and publication. Tibor Serly, a pupil and colleague of Bartok for more than twenty years, was given the task of completing the work by the Bartok family, since the composer had died on September 26, 1945, leaving the Viola Concerto in an unfinished state. Bartok's death came with the piano concerto also unfinished, but there remained only seventeen bars to complete and Serly did this.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of Jan. 6, 1961, are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. All mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope.

* * *

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

116

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA . . . . . "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro appassionato
III. Andante
IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
EUGENE ISTOMIN
Mr. ISTOMIN uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 15, at 3:00 o'clock

SMETANA . . . . . "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro appassionato
III. Andante
IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
EUGENE ISTOMIN
Mr. ISTOMIN uses the Steinway Piano

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

JAN 14 1961

—Istomin Soloist With Symphony

Pianist Acclaimed in Brahms Concerto

By Louis Chapin

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, with Eugene Istomin as guest pianist, played a program yesterday afternoon which invites a familiar question: What should be the balance between vintage and new music performed by an established orchestra? There are extremists, of course, who would argue the total exclusion of one kind or the other, but I suppose it's safe to assume that most patrons would seek out a balance of some sort.

Symphony Hall, yesterday, was filled, all afternoon, with sounds almost as familiar in substance as they were in style and idiom. Smetana's "Moldau," which opened the proceedings, was so familiar (though unheard in this series for 18 years) that it demanded interpretive newness, and got it. With its sharp accents, alert dynamics, and vividly universalized affection for a homeland, it almost qualified as "new music." (This is a category, incidentally, which could embrace fresh sounds from any period, from pre-Bach to post-Barber).

Dvořák's Fourth Symphony, while less often heard than the same composer's "New World," nevertheless tends to slip into a well-worn groove. It's sprinkled here and there with happy bits of originality, and generates some voltage in its Adagio movement, but I wonder if Dvořák himself wouldn't feel more at home with it at a Pops evening sometime. The playing, rather understandably, didn't sound particularly interested, which may have accounted for some wobbly woodwind intonation in the first movement.

Then came Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, a warmly wise work, but not appearing here to any great advantage. The experience before and after intermission was remotely like reading Trollope all morning, and then turning to Dickens in the afternoon (or, if you prefer, vice-versa). This Brahms is deservedly and deeply popular, but there are ten records of it extant (at that, it only beats the Dvořák by one).

One was conscious also, in this instance, of an audience many of whose members had had a rather exceptional experience with the same music, the same conductor, and the same orchestra some ten weeks ago. The orchestra itself seemed little inclined to emulate that earlier occasion; its playing was sometimes lacking in what might be described as tensile strength.

All of which was quite unfair to the guest of this occasion, who is a pianist of power and developing maturity. Mr. Istomin knows plenty that is worth knowing about Brahms and about the piano, and fulfilled his part of the transaction most intelligently. But even his Beethoven "Emperor" would have had a "newer" sound at this point in this season. The audience applauded him warmly, but almost in sympathy.

Both he and his conductor were, to an extent, the captives of traditional repertoire. And their listeners were captives of a program whose nominees for "newness" would have to be either Smetana's "Moldau" or Dvořák's Fourth. Thus the question.

But enough of it for now. Next week we hear new Poulenc.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 22 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER—The opening night audience for the Marlene Dietrich show at the Colonial "saw a legend come to life as a unique and skillful entertainer," and was pleased with the pantomimes and sketches of Shai K. Ophir. At Kresge Auditorium the Dancemakers had "creation and execution join hands to emerge into realizations of great beauty and unmistakable authenticity." The American Ballet Theater at Donnelly Memorial was hampered by an unsuitable stage but provided "a high level of work," with the cast being highly praised.

SCREEN—"Marriage-Go-Round" at the Metropolitan had little substance but provided "some amusement and a chance to survey two very decorative ladies"—Susan Hayward and Julie Newmar. The Pilgrim's "Blueprint for Robbery" was declared a competent low-budget film and interesting to Bostonians because of local color reminiscent of the Brink robbery.

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony concert saw Charles Munch and piano soloist Eugene Istomin join for "a shirt-sleeve program . . . undemanding, bucolic, jolly and beguiling." At Jordan Hall the Boston debut of the Soviet pianist, Dimitry Bashkirov, made it clear that "the Soviets are still exporting their top talent."

The new organ series at Symphony Hall received a good start from Donald Willing in "this significant venture by the Boston Symphony trustees and management." The parade of pianists continued with Ludwig Olshansky in a Boston debut at Jordan Hall conveying "digital dexterity and technical skill."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

JAN 12 1961

At Symphony

Eugene Istomin will be guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts tomorrow afternoon, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. He will be soloist in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat major.

For these concerts, Charles Munch has also scheduled Smetana's "The Moldau" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 in G major, Opus 88.

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA . . . . . "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro appassionato
III. Andante
IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
EUGENE ISTOMIN
Mr. ISTOMIN uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 15, at 3:00 o'clock

SMETANA . . . . . "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro appassionato
III. Andante
IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
EUGENE ISTOMIN
Mr. ISTOMIN uses the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 14 1961

—Istomin Soloist With Symphony

Pianist Acclaimed in Brahms Concerto

By Louis Chapin

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, with Eugene Istomin as guest pianist, played a program yesterday afternoon which invites a familiar question: What should be the balance between vintage and new music performed by an established orchestra? There are extremists, of course, who would argue the total exclusion of one kind or the other, but I suppose it's safe to assume that most patrons would seek out a balance of some sort.

Symphony Hall, yesterday, was filled, all afternoon, with sounds almost as familiar in substance as they were in style and idiom. Smetana's "Moldau," which opened the proceedings, was so familiar (though unheard in this series for 18 years) that it demanded interpretive newness, and got it. With its sharp accents, alert dynamics, and vividly universalized affection for a homeland, it almost qualified as "new music." (This is a category, incidentally, which could embrace fresh sounds from any period, from pre-Bach to post-Barber).

Dvořák's Fourth Symphony, while less often heard than the same composer's "New World," nevertheless tends to slip into a well-worn groove. It's sprinkled here and there with happy bits of originality, and generates some voltage in its Adagio movement, but I wonder if Dvořák himself wouldn't feel more at home with it at a Pops evening sometime. The playing, rather understandably, didn't sound particularly interested, which may have accounted for some wobbly woodwind intonation in the first movement.

Then came Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, a warmly wise work, but not appearing here to any great advantage. The experience before and after intermission was remotely like reading Trollope all morning, and then turning to Dickens in the afternoon (or, if you prefer, vice-versa). This Brahms is deservedly and deeply popular, but there are ten records of it extant (at that, it only beats the Dvořák by one).

One was conscious also, in this instance, of an audience many of whose members had had a rather exceptional experience with the same music, the same conductor, and the same orchestra some ten weeks ago. The orchestra itself seemed little inclined to emulate that earlier occasion; its playing was sometimes lacking in what might be described as tensile strength.

All of which was quite unfair to the guest of this occasion, who is a pianist of power and developing maturity. Mr. Istomin knows plenty that is worth knowing about Brahms and about the piano, and fulfilled his part of the transaction most intelligently. But even his Beethoven "Emperor" would have had a "newer" sound at this point in this season. The audience applauded him warmly, but almost in sympathy.

Both he and his conductor were, to an extent, the captives of traditional repertoire. And their listeners were captives of a program whose nominees for "newness" would have to be either Smetana's "Moldau" or Dvořák's Fourth. Thus the question.

But enough of it for now. Next week we hear new Poulenc.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
JAN 22 1961

At Symphony

Eugene Istomin will be guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts tomorrow afternoon, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. He will be soloist in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat major.

For these concerts, Charles Munch has also scheduled Smetana's "The Moldau" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 in G major, Opus 88.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,037
JAN 12 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER—The opening night audience for the Marlene Dietrich show at the Colonial "saw a legend come to life as a unique and skillful entertainer," and was pleased with the pantomimes and sketches of Shai K. Ophir. At Kresge Auditorium the Dancemakers had "creation and execution join hands to emerge into realizations of great beauty and unmistakable authenticity." The American Ballet Theater at Donnelly Memorial was hampered by an unsuitable stage but provided "a high level of work," with the cast being highly praised.

SCREEN—"Marriage-Go-Round" at the Metropolitan had little substance but provided "some amusement and a chance to survey two very decorative ladies"—Susan Hayward and Julie Newmar. The Pilgrim's "Blueprint for Robbery" was declared a competent low-budget film and interesting to Bostonians because of local color reminiscent of the Brink robbery.

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony concert saw Charles Munch and piano soloist Eugene Istomin join for "a shirt-sleeve program . . . undemanding, bucolic, jolly and beguiling." At Jordan Hall the Boston debut of the Soviet pianist, Dimitry Bashkirov, made it clear that "the Soviets are still exporting their top talent."

The new organ series at Symphony Hall received a good start from Donald Willing in "this significant venture by the Boston Symphony trustees and management." The parade of pianists continued with Ludwig Olshansky in a Boston debut at Jordan Hall conveying "digital dexterity and technical skill."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
JAN 14 1961

Munch Revives Dvorak; Istomin Piano Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHES- [illegible] Symphony Hall [illegible] afternoon, and will repeat [illegible] at 8:30, the 12th program [illegible] Friday)—Saturday series. [illegible] Munch, music director, con- [illegible] "The Moldau," Smetana; [illegible] No. 4, in G major, [illegible] and Brahms' Piano Con- [illegible] in B-flat major, Eugene Isto- [illegible] soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon is best compared to a nice day in the course of which voluminous dark, heavy clouds obscure the blue. This concert, which marked the halfway point in the 80th season, was superb at its best, but the best was not always in evidence.

Smetana's "The Moldau" began a program which might be called "Hapsburg," since all three works were composed, within a decade of the 19th Century, by musicians who were subjects of the Austrian Empire. The lovely descriptive piece of the Bohemian countryside flowed with as much strength and beauty as Smetana found in the river of the homeland he adored.

Dr. Munch's reading set for the afternoon an emphasis upon power. This is not to deny the interludes of gentle poetry which recurred in the works of all three composers, but mostly the conductor wanted volume and heavy accents. His performances were decidedly on the heroic side, which was fine when the music justified it.

Dvorak's romantic G major Symphony, as Bohemian in an abstract, symphonic way as "The Moldau" in its depictive manner, is full of sudden, passionate outbursts. It could take the big sound, the broad strokes and the dynamism of nuances better than symphonic poem or concerto.

The Dvorak Fourth, like its earlier fellow, the Second, in D minor, has slipped out of the active repertory, which is regrettable, since both are pieces of worth and expert orchestral writing. The performances of the Fourth this week are only the fourth set in all the Boston Symphony's history, and Dr. Munch is to be thanked for two of them. It would be most agreeable of he would give us the Second.

Some Misadventures

Eugene Istomin, the young American pianist, is a fine musician of the keyboard, as we all have known these several years. Yet his performance of the Brahms B-flat Concerto yesterday was strangely lacking in effervescence until the final movement, which stirred the audience to applause before the last chord had ended.

This was a performance of certain misadventures. Somehow Istomin did not draw such resonance from his instrument in the first movement, which made for a poor balance, indeed, because Mr. Munch was urging the orchestra to play too loud. Much the same was true in the second movement.

But just proportions were re-established in the songful andante, and here soloist and orchestra and conductor achieved a fine poetic rapture. To cellist Samuel Mayes, much credit for his singing articulation of that gorgeous melody which Brahms also drew upon for his son, "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer."

In conclusionu, and as aforesaid, this concert was one of flawed beauties. But there can be off-days for the best of artists.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct the world premiere of Poulenc's Gloria, with soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisting. The program will include Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings in E-flat, and Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos, with the composer and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
JAN 5 1961

At Symphony

Charles Munch has revised the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program for the concerts tomorrow afternoon, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Instead of the overture to "The Bartered Bride" by Smetana, Dr. Munch will open the concerts with the same composer's Symphonic Poem, "The Ioldau."

The program will include Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 and pianist Eugene Istomin will be guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Globe 1/8/61

Istomin Symphony Soloist

Eugene Istomin, pianist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, and Sunday, Jan. 15, at 3.

Dr. Charles Munch, music director, will also conduct at these three concerts "The Moldau" by Smetana (replacing the previously-announced Overture to "The Bartered Bride") and Dvorak's G major Symphony, No. 4.

Francis Poulenc will be honored by The Orchestra Jan. 20 and 21 (Friday at 2:15 and Sat. at 8:30) when the world-premiere of his Gloria will be given. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will be heard in this work. Poulenc's Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra also will be performed. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists. The concerts will open with Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings.

Violinist Roger Shermont will be soloist at the Orchestra's Tuesday concert Jan. 24, and Alexander Uninsky, pianist, will be guest at the concerts of Jan. 27 and 28.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
JAN 14 1961

SHIRT-SLEEVE MUSIC FROM THE SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Spring came early to Symphony Hall yesterday. Save for the presence of Eugene Istomin in the Brahms B-flat, this was a shirt-sleeve program that Charles Munch scheduled for the return of our orchestra from the hinterland; undemanding, bucolic, jolly and beguiling.

One admires the courage of Mr. Istomin in tackling the formidable Brahms Concerto so soon after Sviatoslav Richter, the Soviet pianist, had triumphed in it during the memorable Pension Fund concert of November 1. Alas, I'm afraid the choice worked to his disadvantage. It is impossible to follow an inspired performance with one that is simply good.

He brought to the B-flat many distinguished qualities. Eugene Istomin's technical excellence as an artist has been demonstrated on other occasions with the Symphony; and the same high standard again prevailed. The mechanics were admirable, the intellectual grasp of the music clear. The tone was big, and the soloist maintained a firm balance between left and right hands. The most individual traits he gave the work were those of energy and drive.

This, in short, was a more strenuous performance than the one Richter wrought, and there was an earnest attempt to communicate the huge scope of the composer's conception. But it lacked a dhapsodic temperament, the drama of the dreamy, songful mood. The vigor of the performance could not compensate for a want of lyric sweep.

Color Restricted

If the tone was big, it was also unvaried, and suffered from restricetd color. Mr. Istomin's dynamic span proved narrow. He can spin out the spacious phrasings with delicacy as he demonstrated in the andante; but the overall momentum of the work had too little contrast. The declamatory passages seemed, in consequence, to demand more fervor. The climaxes built into cold rhetoric.

Between the orchestra and the soloist existed a close balance. Dr. Munch kept the emphasis on the slo role with tact and discrimination, for the interpretation did not bear out the description, "a symphony with piano obbligato." Structurally, the concerto was neat and strong; all was correct, too much so, since in this striding, conscientious presentation the warm, romantic bloom had faded.

Still it was engaging to hear Eugene Istomin nontheless. His intense, linear approach is better suited to the modern school and the classical, and in music of that order he should probably excel. The Brahms Concerto needs a more spontaneous personality than the fine young soloist projected yesterday.

Leisurely Reading

The remainder of the program made one wonder why Charles Munch doesn't venture into musical Mittel Europa more often. To be sure, neither the Dvorak Fourth or "The Moldau" lend themselves to the daemonic and exciting pitch Dr. Munch achieves when a piece provokes his imagination. Yet in their broad nationalistic tone-painting exists a genre feeling not unlike that of a Breughel, and the conductor has an affinity for this, too.

His reading of the Fourth was leisurely, spacious and commanding. A variety of sparkling detail graced the movements. The melodic and gracious themes held a disarming and pastoral simplicity. Dr. Munch conducted the score straightforwardly; the slightly relaxed tempi enabled him to accent the expressive inner instrumental dialegues. The idiomatically persuasive treatment displayed cheerful finesse.

The orchestra responded sumptuously here, and in "The Moldau," which cascaded with a broad animation all but visual. As someone remarked in an overheard intermission comment, "The first part of the program makes me feel like I'm sitting around wearing lederhosen and drinking Pilsener;" but given stern mid-winter living and high thinking, the aural setting seemed a refreshing place to be.

Next week finds the world premiere of Poulenc's "Gloria" scheduled with the Chorus Pro Musica and Adele Addison, soprano soloist. Mr. Poulenc will be heard with Evelyne Crochet as the soloists in his own Concerto in D Minor, for Two Pianos and Orchestra; and Dr. Munch has also listed the Mendelssohn Octet for Strings, in E-flat major, Op. 20.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 12th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Eugene Istomin, piano, was the soloist. The program:

"The Moldau," Symponic Poem ..... Smetana
Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88 ..... Dvorak
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat Major, Op. 83 ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
JAN 7 1961

Symphony Bill Changed

Charles Munch has revised the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program originally announced for the Friday, Saturday and Sunday concerts, at 2:15, 8:30 and 3:00 p. m. respectively.

In place of the overture to "The Bartered Bride," by Smetana, Dr. Munch will open the concerts with the same composer's Symphonic poem, "The Moldau."

Francis Poulenc will be honored by the orchestra at its concerts Jan. 20 and 21 (Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30) when the world premiere of his "Gloria" will be given. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will be heard in this work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
JAN 13 1961

Theaters & Concerts

SHUBERT THEATER—"My Fair Lady," the Lerner and Loewe muscial in its first Boston engagement. 8:30 P.M.
WILBUR THEATER — "Catstick," new play by Jack C. Barefield, with Patricia Jessel and Donald Davis. Elaine Perry is producer-director. 8:30 P.M.
DONNELLY MEMORIAL THEATER — Harry Belafonte and Miriam Makeba. 8:30 P.M.
CHARLES PLAYHOUSE — "Waltz of the Toreadors," a comedy by Jean Anouilh. 8:30 P.M.
ALUMNI AUDITORIUM—(Northeastern) —N. U. Silver Masque Dramatic Society presents "Anastasia," by Guy Bolton. Eugene J. Bleckman directs. 8:00 P.M.
SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting. Smetana, Dvorak and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, Eugene Istomin, soloist. 2:15 P.M.
COUNTRY SCHOOL AUDITORIUM — (Weston)—The Pesenini Quartet in Mozart, Debussy and Beethoven. Reservations TW 3-7361. 8:30 P.M.
JORDAN HALL—Kappa Gamma Psi presents a chamber music concert. Mozart, Hovhaness, deCall, Beethoven. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.
MILTON ACADEMY CHAPEL—(Milton) Ann Frances Byrne, organist, in Bach, Schumann, Franck, Langlais, Liszt. Admission free. 8:30 P.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
JAN 8 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has revised the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program originally announced for the concerts this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 15. In place of the overture to "The Bartered Bride," by Smetana, Doctor Munch will open with the same composer's Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau." The program will include Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 and pianist Eugene Istomin will be guest in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms. The Orchestra will repeat this program in Providence Jan. 17.

Francis Poulenc will be honored by the orchestra at its concerts Jan. 20 and 21 when the world premiere of his "Gloria" will be given. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will be heard in this work. Poulenc's Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed. Mr. Poulenc, with Evelyne Crochet, will be soloist in the concerto. The concerts will open with Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings.

Violinist Roger Shermont will be soloist at the Orchestra's concert on Jan. 24 and Alexander Uninsky, pianist, will be guest at the concerts of Jan. 27 and 28.

TODAY

MIECZYSLAW HORSZOWSKI, pianist, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m., on M.I.T. HUMANITIES Series. Sonatas by Mozart, Brahms, Dallapiccola, Beethoven. Tickets, UN 4-6900, Ext 3210.

JERONIMAS KACINSKAS will conduct St. Peter's Lithuanian Parish Choir of South Boston and the Melrose Symphony Orchestra at Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m., in a program observing the church's fiftieth jubilee. Gounod's St. Cecilia Concert Mass and other works.

MAX MILLER, organist, Organ Vespers, Marsh Chapel, Boston University, 4:30 p.m. Zipoli, Bach, Ibert, Krebs, Mendelssohn

VIENNA OCTET, Groton Music Association Series, Groton School Hall, 8:00 p.m. Mozart and Schubert. Only Boston area appearance.

LEXINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY, Cary Memorial Hall, Lexington, 8:30 p.m. Allen Lannom conducts Hovhaness Magnificat and Haydn "Lord Nelson" Mass, assisted by Philharmonia Symphony Orchestra. Soloists Ruth Lakeway, Rosalind Hupp, C. Ray Bryan, Robert Patterson. Admission free but by ticket.

MONDAY

LONGY SCHOOL faculty and guest artists concert, Livingstone, Stebbins Auditorium, 3 Church Street, Cambridge 8:30 p.m. Gregory Tucker, pianist, Fine Arts Woodwind Quintet, Richard Summers, oboe. Mozart, Barber, Poulenc. Admission free.

TUESDAY

MUSIC LOVERS CLUB of Boston, N.E. Mutual Hall, 11:00 a.m. Fiftieth anniversary program. Boris Goldovsky, pianist, Debrie Brown, mezzo soprano, George Shirley, tenor.

WEDNESDAY

BYRON JANIS, pianist on Boston Morning Musicales Series at Statler Hilton Ballroom, 11:00 a.m. promptly.

DAVID BARNETT, pianist, Jordan Hall 8:30 p.m. Performance devoted solely to Beethoven Diabelli Variations. Admission free.

"GREAT MUSIC" Series continues, Room 12, B.U. College of Liberal Arts, 7:15. Malloy Miller in illustrated lecture on Beethoven's chamber music. Public invited.

THURSDAY

FRIENDS OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER CONCERT in honor of his eighty-sixth birthday, with Harvard-Radcliffe Organ Society, Busch Reisinger Museum, Cambridge, 8:30 P.M. Melville Smith, organ; Louis Speyer, oboe, Noah Bielski, violin, and members of the Harvard University Choir. Bach, de Grigny, and Shepherd. Cards of free admission by sending a self addressed stamped envelope to Harvard Memorial Church, Cambridge.

N.E.C. A CAPPELLA CHOIR, directed by Richard Rosewall, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Early music, Brahms, Barber and Berger. Admission free.

FRIDAY

CHAMBER MUSIC presented by Alpha Chapter of Kappa Gamma Psi, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Mozart, Hovhaness, deCall, Beethoven. Admission free.

SATURDAY

JOAN BAEZ, Earl Scruggs, Lester Flatt and the Foggy Mountain Boys, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by M.A. Greenhill on Folklore Concert Series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
JAN 1 1961

Pianist Istomin Next Soloist At Symphony

Pianist Eugene Istomin will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Charles Munch, at the next concerts in Symphony Hall, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 13, 14 and 15. This coming week the Orchestra will be away on tour.

Mr. Istomin will play the B-flat Concerto of Brahms. The program will begin with Smetana's Overture to "The Bartered Bride," and will end with Symphony No. 4, in G major, by Dvorak.

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston this month at the personal invitation of the Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts, Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

118

Herald 1/8/61

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has revised the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program originally announced for the concerts this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 15. In place of the overture to "The Bartered Bride," by Smetana, Doctor Munch will open with the same composer's symphonic Poem, "The Moldau." The program will include Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 and pianist Eugene Istomin will be guest in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms. The Orchestra will repeat this program in Providence Jan. 17.

Francis Poulenc will be honored by the orchestra at its concerts Jan. 20 and 21 when the world premiere of his "Gloria" will be given. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will be heard in this work. Poulenc's Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed. Mr. Poulenc, with Evelyne Crochet, will be soloist in the concerto. The concerts will open with Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings.

Violinist Roger Shermont will be soloist at the Orchestra's concert on Jan. 24 and Alexander Uninsky, pianist, will be guest at the concerts of Jan. 27 and 28.

TODAY

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
JAN 7 1961

Music

Vienna Octet in Groton Music Assn. Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — The Vienna Octet, world-famed chamber ensemble composed of strings, woodwinds and French horn, will perform the second concert in the Groton Music association's 1960-61 series to be held at the Groton school hall tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock.

Compositions by Mozart and Schubert will highlight the program. By the former composer, there will be the Divertimento in D major, K. 136—(allegro, andante, presto); Clarinet Quintet in A major, K. 581 — (allegro, larghetto, menuetto, allegro con variazioni). By the latter composer, Octet in F major, Opus 166 — (adagio, allegro, andante un poco mosso, scherzo-allegro vivance, andante convariazioni, menuetto-allegretto, andante molto-allegro).

Earlier in the season the association presented Jan Smetelin, pianist, and for the final event, scheduled for March 19, the Harvard University Glee club under the direction of Elliot Forbes will appear in the series.

Eugene Istomin, pianist, will be the featured soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Charles Munch, conductor, in the concerts of Friday, Saturday and Sunday of next week. The gifted young artist who has been acclaimed by audiences everywhere will be heard in the Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, in B. flat major. It has been also announced that Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau" and Symphony No. 4, in G major by Anton Dvorak, will complete the program.

Eugene Istomin

Francis Poulenc will be honored by the orchestra at its concerts Jan. 20 and 21, when the world-premiere of his "Gloria" will be given. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will be heard in this work. Mr. Poulenc, with Evelyn Crochet, will be soloist in the Concerto for Two Pianos, D minor. Opening the program will be the Mendelssohn Octet for strings.

The coming appearance of Dame Myra Hess in Boston will again make the musical setting of the community most bright. For many, many years she has not only thrilled audiences, but has been influential in shaping the wishes and goals of countless young pianists. Her work has made her one of the greatest musicians of all time.

Birj Zamkochian, organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra will play an organ dedication program tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock in the chapel at the Veterans Administration hospital, Bedford. The general public is cordially invited to attend.

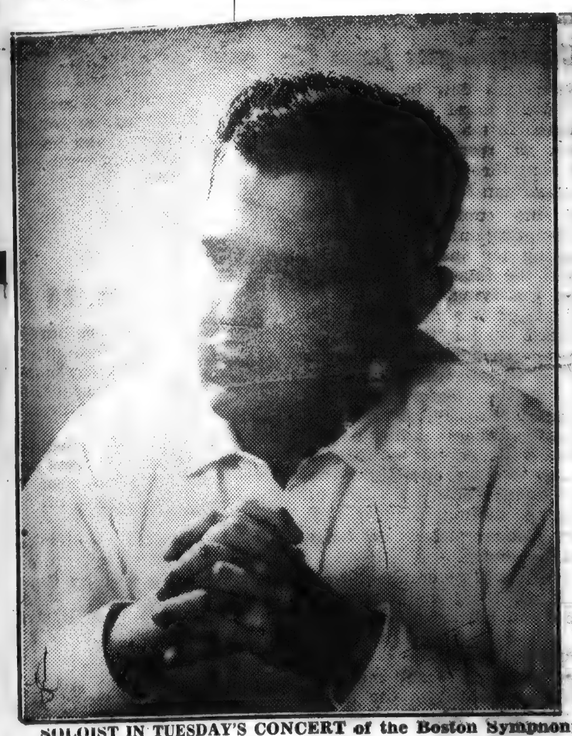
The newly created between the acts "biography of a star" instituted by Francis Robinson of the Metropolitan Opera, for presentation during the weekly broadcasts, is truly a listening event. It is informative, superbly offered and an inspiration to both the student and the listener who remembers the Golden Age of Opera.

The recent TV program featuring Boris Goldovsky whose theme was opera provided some surprising facts. To us, having heard and watched many of the greate singers, it was amazing to hear that the "old timers" had little to offer aside from the fact that they sang well. However, in summary, who today will be remembered five years following their retirement (that is among the singers appearing with small organizations); either for singing or acting? What young singer today has the talent to replace such artists as Antonio Scotti as Scarpia; Lawrence Tibbets as Iago; Madame Bori as Manon; Pinza as the Don; Deluca as Sharpless; Pens as Lakme; Schorr as Hans Sachs; Crooks as Faust; Martinelli as Canio to mention only a few?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,275

JAN 12 1961



SOLOIST IN TUESDAY'S CONCERT of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Providence will be Eugene Istomin, pianist. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in the following program: Smetan's Symphonic Poem; Dvorak's Fourth Symphony; and Brahm's Second Piano Concerto. Concert will take place in Veterans Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,063

JAN 10 1961

SOLOIST IN TONIGHT'S CONCERT of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Providence will be Eugene Istomin, pianist. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in the following program: Smetan's Symphonic Poem; Dvorak's Fourth Symphony; and Brahm's Second Piano Concerto. Concert will take place in Veterans Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

Boston Symphony Presents First 1961 Concert Here

The first 1961 concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence, on Tuesday evening Jan. 17 at 8:15 in Veterans' Memorial Auditorium, will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch with the young American virtuoso, Eugene Istomin, as piano soloist.

Sheer listening - appeal, will be afforded by Dr. Munch's program. It will consist of Smetana's charming symphonic poem, "The Moldau," Dvorak's melodious and sprightly Fourth Symphony, and that favorite of piano concertos, the Brahms Second.

In the l of this music and its composers are some fascinating facts. This year marks the centenary of Smetana's establishment as leader in the great nationalist musical movement in his native Bohemia (now Czechoslovakia), afer Austria had granted it autonomy in 1860. This also is the centenary of an important turn in the career of a poor young Bohemian violinist. He obtained his first job at decent pay, by playing viola in the opera performances conducted by Smetana. His name was Anton Dvorak. This practical experience, and the communicative example of Smetana in the use of Bohemian folk song and dance theme in his operatic and concert compositions, deeply influenced Dvorak in his development as a composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189

JAN 15 1961

Symphony Here Tuesday

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will play at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. Pianist Eugene Istomin will be soloist.

The program:

The Moldau ("Vltava") Symphonic Poem ..... Smetana
Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88 ..... Dvorak
- Allegro con brio
- Adagio
- Allegretto grazioso
- Andante
- Allegro ma non troppo

Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major Op. 83 ..... Brahms
- Allegro non troppo
- Allegro appassionato
- Andante
- Allegretto grazioso

PIANIST Eugene Istomin is Boston Symphony soloist.

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

JAN 14 1961

121

Kennedy Invites Charles Munch To Inauguration

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, received at Symphony Hall yesterday a telegram from President-elect and Mrs. John F. Kennedy inviting Dr. Munch to attend the inauguration.

The telegram read, in part: "During our forthcoming administration we hope to seek a productive relationship with our writers, artists, composers, philosophers, scientists and heads of cultural institutions. As a beginning, in recognition of their importance, may we extend to you our most cordial invitation to attend the inaugural ceremonies in Washington on Jan. 19 and 20."

Dr. Munch was obliged to decline the invitation since he will be occupied in Boston next week with the final rehearsals and world premiere performances of the new Gloria by French composer Francis Poulenc. Poulenc will be in Boston then.

Top Cultural Figures Get Inaugural Bid

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14 (AP)—President-elect Kennedy today invited to his inauguration 155 leading figures in the arts and sciences "in recognition of their importance."

They included a wide range of novelists, poets, playwrights, essayists, artists, composers, scientists and a sprinkling of diplomats, jurists and political scientists.

Also invited were the heads of a number of museums and symphony and opera conductors.

A special committee selected the names as representing "the most creative, eminent, and world-renowned" in their fields.

Among the novelists are Ernest Hemingway, Pearl Buck, William Faulkner and John Steinbeck. Poets included Archibald MacLeish, E. E. Cummings, Marianne Moore and Robert Frost.

Four dramatists were invited: William Inge, Arthur Miller, Thornton Wilder and Tennessee Williams. In the field of general literature there were Jacques Barzun, Edmund Wilson, John Hersey and the only journalist included, Walter Lippmann.

Artists and architects included Alexander Calder, Stuart Davis, Edward Hopper, Ludwig Mies van der Rohe and Eero Saarinen. Composers and conductors included Paul Hindemith, Igor Stravinsky, Leonard Bernstein, Fritz Reiner, Eugene Ormandy and Charles Munch.

A President Who Honors Talent!

Washington, Jan. 17.

Ushering culture to its new place in the sun under the Kennedy Administration, the President-elect had dispatched wires to 144 writers, artists, dramatists, musicians and scientists inviting them to Inaugural events this week.

Room accommodations and tickets for the Concert, Parade and Ball have been made for the cultural elite, who were selected by a special committee working with Kennedy's office.

The telegrams reflected Kennedy's reputed high regard for creative folk by saying: "During our forthcoming administration, we hope to seek a productive relationship with our writers, artists, composers, philosophers, scientists and heads of cultural institutions."

Dramatists invited were William Inge, Arthur Miller, Thornton Wilder and Tennessee Williams. Composers included Samuel Barber, Aaron Copeland, Roy Harris, Paul Hindemith, Douglas Moore, Robert Palmer, Walter Piston, William Schuman, Roger Sessions, Honors Talent

Continued from page 1

Igor Stravinsky and Virgil Thompson.

There were these further cultural figures: Leonard Bernstein, Rudolph Bing, Martha Graham, Lincoln Kirstein, Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy, Fritz Reiner, George Szell, Bruno Walter, Pierre Monteux, and Robert Shaw. Howard Mitchell, director of the National Symphony, and Zelad Fichandler of the Washington Drama Society and Arena Stage, local theatre-in-the-round, were among D.C. cultural leaders invited.

Kennedy Picks U. S. Music For Inauguration Concert

From the Herald Tribune Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—President-elect John F. Kennedy has chosen a serious musical program for his inauguration concert in Constitution Hall on Jan. 19 at 9:15 p. m., it was announced today by Huntington Cairns, chairman of the Inaugural Concert Committee.

The concert, part of the inaugural activities since President Washington's time, will feature Howard Mitchell and the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington. Mischa Elman, violinist, and Earl Wild, pianist, will be soloists, with the male choruses of Georgetown and Howard Universities also taking part.

American Music

President-elect Kennedy, according to Mr. Mitchell, chose a program indicating a strong interest in American music and composers. He is said to be one of the few American Presidents to select his own musical program. John La Montaine, young American composer and Pulitzer Prize winner, has written an orchestral overture, "From Sea to Shining Sea," to open the concert. George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" and Randall Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" are among the other American works to be presented.

The inaugural concert is part of the three-day ceremonies accompanying the inauguration itself on Jan. 20, which is expected to be witnessed by 500,000 persons. Costs of the inaugural activities—receptions, balls, parade and related events—will run $800,000. According to Edward H. Foley, committee chairman, this figure will be $134,000 below the cost of President Eisenhower's second inauguration four years ago.

Self-Supporting

Money to cover the costs will come from sale of programs, souvenirs, medallions, parade seats, tickets to the three inaugural balls and other events. Parade seats will cost from $3 to $25 each.

The Inaugural Committee expects to earn enough to pay for all costs, provide a charitable contribution and leave a reserve for the 1964 inauguration. Underwriters of the events have already pledged more than $800,000, according to Mr. Foley, who said he expects the total to reach $1,000,000.

Cadets from the United States Military, Naval, Air Force and Coast Guard Academies will march in the Jan. 20 inaugural parade. The cadets will be honored at a special dance that night, and a committee is now rounding up several thousand partners for the dance.

122

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 20, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN . . . . . Octet for Strings, in E-flat major, Op. 20

I. Allegro moderato ma con fuoco
II. Andante
III. Scherzo: Allegro leggierissimo
IV. Presto

POULENC . . . . . Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Finale: Allegro molto

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOISTS
FRANCIS POULENC and EVELYNE CROCHET
The soloists use the Steinway Piano

INTERMISSION

POULENC . . . . . Gloria, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra

I. Gloria
II. Laudamus Te
III. Domine Deus
IV. Domine fili unigenite
V. Domine Deus, Agnus Dei
VI. Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris

(First performance)

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor
SOLOIST
ADELE ADDISON

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[777]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 2 - 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420(

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
JAN 1 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

TCHEREPNIN PERFORMANCE AT BSO

Mr. Munch's program last week-end included Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture and his Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, the first Boston performance of Alexander Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer for Orchestra, Opus 93, and Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 3, with Alexander Uninsky as soloist.

Such a concert may not have been an event calculated to plumb the depths of introspection nor to scale the heights of exaltation, but it certainly made for an amiable enough two hours.

Works, like both of the Beethoven pieces here, which all hands on the stage could toss off in their sleep all too often manage to sound just as perfunctory as that. Not so this performance. The readings of both the Overture and the Symphony were straightforward and crisp, with a gratifying measure of spontaneity.

The new Tcherepnin opus was apparently composed as something of a Christmas offering, and like Samuel Barber's piece of last month it too has been recorded for submission to the contest for the American National Music Fund award. Despite its name, the new composition evokes no particular sentiments, sacred or profane. As is the case with a long list of other pieces Mr. Tcherepnin has written, this one also seems pleasantly undestined to secure a permanent place in the orchestral repertory. In its four short but well proportioned sections, it draws forth a number of sonorous noises, displays an exuberant inventiveness here and there, reveals a wide though not daring eclecticism, and then signs off after eight minutes. Nothing gained, nothing lost. The traversal, so far as could be determined on one hearing, seemed fluent and relaxed.

The sleeper on the program was the soloist, Alexander Uninsky. Mr. Uninsky is no coming young Janis, Cliburn or Gould. Already over fifty, he left Russia as a boy to study in Paris and came to this country as a fugitive from the war. This Prokofieff concerto is scarcely the vehicle for a pianist to display his full mettle, but even so it was abundantly clear that here indeed was an artist with immense elan, a crackling technique and a real capacity to point up the relatively few moments of true lyricism in the piece at the expense of its more pervasive coffee house characteristics. In short, Mr. Uninsky managed to get more out of the music than Prokofieff put into it — rather a rare occurence. May he return to Boston in short order.

Erich Leinsdorf appears here as guest conductor this week-end for a two-week stint. He has planned a program that includes Mozart's A major Symphony. Interludes from Strauss' opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten" and Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony.

Noted French Composer Will Attend Premiere

BOSTON — Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston the 20th at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

New Work

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston the 20th and 21st to hear Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the world premiere of Poulenc's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Mr. Poulenc as soloist, in Boston on Jan. 6, 1950. The first New York performance of this concerto, again performed from manuscript, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Poulenc as soloist in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 14, 1950.

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Mr. Poulenc during this visit to the United States.

BOSTON HERALD
January 23, 1961

MUSIC

Poulenc's Gloria Rare, Precious

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Friday's blizzard will pass; but yesterday afternoon's Symphony concert—put over because of the storm—proved one of those rare and precious events that may very well make enduring musical history.

It was the world premiere of Francis Poulenc's Gloria for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra. The composer himself was present, and earlier assumed the performer's role, with Evelyne Crochet, in the brilliant, effervescent Two Piano Concerto in D minor, which Poulenc wrote in 1932 and now proffered at these concerts for the first time.

SPARE AND ADROIT

Despite the quality of this score, however, the gallantry of the dual execution, the piquancy of the composer's presence, the Gloria dominated the afternoon. At first hearing it seems to me a major work, prominent in the career of a contemporary master and a significant addition to the repertory of 20th century music.

The Gloria is in six parts, using a free rhythmic beat and a chorus alternately tutti then reduced by half. The Latin text requires the soprano soloist—Adele Addison on this occasion in splendid estate—to undertake much vocalizing, though, save in the final maestoso, the line does not lie so high as to be unduly taxing. The orchestration follows conventional instrumental resources and is so spare and adroit that no bizarre colors are needed for sheer sound effect.

Coming as it did after the Concerto, the work allowed the audience an insight into the two aspects of Francis Poulenc that define his methods. In the first he is the witty, ironic and cultivated boulevardier, the member of Les Six who draws simultaneously from the classical tradition and "Parisian folklore." And in the other he is a mystic; the sounds of the steam-driven merry-go-rounds and mechanical organs vanishs before the ethereal modulations of plainsong.

But the religious mystic still remains the neo-classicist. The material and the concept of the Gloria unquestionably derive from the great masses of the 19th century. There is little in the idiom to distinguish it from Berlioz, Bruckner, from Verdi, the reminiscences, earlier, of Mozart and Cherubini—save for the individuality of Poulenc. He has no compulsion to be aggressively modern; he has cast his syntax in the grammar of the past; the clear pure art of an age of untroubled faith.

CAPTURES SPIRIT

Since most of Poulenc's compositions in the religious form for voice are a cappella, conveying fervent simplicity, it is of import that the Gloria turns to a more dramatic extension of resources. The use of the orchestra lends a chromatic array of colors to the unadorned voice; the rhythmic tensions are often fierce, passionate and minatory; yet throughout the score there runs a directness and radiance, a tonal fabric of arching sanctity. Poulenc has succeeded in capturing a spirit of human exaltation and the struggle for grace in the shadow of mortality.

In short, here is a neo-romantic rather than a classic inspiration; or at least more so than the composer has yet declared. The view appears more personal than the universal expression of the Gergorian chant, though lying well within the same mystical framework. One could cite many examples of the composer's grandeur—for instance, the sublime falling intervals of the fifth section—but I shall merely content myself this morning with the memory of the whole, an exceedingly lovely score and the finest of the Symphony season to date.

The performance of the Chorus Pro Musica in the Gloria equalled the resplence of the music. Alfred Nash Patterson has trained this group into the outstanding choir of the area; the dynamic level was never less than crystalline. Miss Addison, again, sang superbly; and the partnership of Mr. Poulenc and Miss Crichet, Dr. Munch and the orchestra during the exhilirating Mozartesque concerto was close-knit. The program opened with the Mendelssohn Octet pounding opulently with the massed strings; it is a comely item of juvenelia — juvenelia of genius, profiguring the Midsummer Night's Dream.

Next Friday Alexander Uninsky is soloist in the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26; Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer will have its local premiere; and Charles Munch has listed Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," and Symphony No. 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 12,847
DEC 29 1960

Poulenc Premiere Set For Boston

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston next month at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston on Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the world premiere of Poulenc's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Mr. Poulenc as soloist, in Boston on Jan. 6, 1950. The first New York performance of this concerto, again performed from manuscript, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Poulenc as soloist in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 14, 1950.

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Mr. Poulence during this visit to the United States.

TIME
NEW YORK,
V: 2,378,35
JA

Poulenc's
French Co
a favorite reli
Andrea Man corner of wh unaware of th the Mount o
the End of that Roman strives for in Last week th
duced U.S.
perhaps most compositions he tried "to glory of God
If the piece
it is closer to
"The colors clear, primar like the Pr Scored for of celestial Poulenc's 25
a work of s times deeply his opera D at times mi
Among its opening of Te," with horns follow of the cho section wi
"Domine D
ing in a m
Poulenc of his mus home in which can compose on intended Italian has a vo but at the part was Adele Addi that he int
"Parfait! P
plans to w and he religious children's opening of Both will completely done befor
music.
hat I am
c—it i
Christ
Mon
BOST
Circ.
JAN 23
Po
A
A good be too fu for the Listeners end Bos shovelle the snow tempted they like Poulenc
may pay piles of
On Jon
one f have writes ble m erly e we lis
Two P first p liar under tion:
mor, gency to an ment duced and S but M and write speaks which taneous
tic.
The writes times ear such tone
the These plays thori partn
The missi

122

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 20, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN.....Octet for Strings, in E-flat major, Op. 20

I. Allegro moderato ma con fuoco
II. Andante
III. Scherzo: Allegro leggierissimo
IV. Presto

POULENC.....Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos and Orchestra

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Finale: Allegro molto

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOISTS

FRANCIS POULENC and EVELYNE CROCHET

The soloists use the Steinway Piano

INTERMISSION

POULENC.....Gloria, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra

I. Gloria
II. Laudamus Te
III. Domine Deus
IV. Domine fili unigenite
V. Domine Deus, Agnus Dei
VI. Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris

(First performance)

CHORUS PRO MUSICA

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

SOLOIST

ADELE ADDISON

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 2 - 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

TCHEREPNIN PERFORMANCE AT BSO

Mr. Munch's program last week-end included Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture and his Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, the first Boston performance of Alexander Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer for Orchestra, Opus 93, and Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 3, with Alexander Uninsky as soloist.

Such a concert may not have been an event calculated to plumb the depths of introspection nor to scale the heights of exaltation, but it certainly made for an amiable enough two hours.

Works, like both of the Beethoven pieces here, which all hands on the stage could toss off in their sleep all too often manage to sound just as perfunctory as that. Not so this performance. The readings of both the Overture and the Symphony were straightforward and crisp, with a gratifying measure of spontaneity.

The new Tcherepnin opus was apparently composed as something of a Christmas offering, and like Samuel Barber's piece of last month it too has been recorded for submission to the contest for the American National Music Fund award. Despite its name, the new composition evokes no particular sentiments, sacred or profane. As is the case with a long list of other pieces Mr. Tcherepnin has written, this one also seems pleasantly undestined to secure a permanent place in the orchestral repertory. In its four short but well proportioned sections, it draws forth a number of sonorous noises, displays an exuberant inventiveness here and there, reveals a wide though not daring eclecticism, and then signs off after eight minutes. Nothing gained, nothing lost. The traversal, so far as could be determined on one hearing, seemed fluent and relaxed.

The sleeper on the program was the soloist, Alexander Uninsky. Mr. Uninsky is no coming young Janis, Cliburn or Gould. Already over fifty, he left Russia as a boy to study in Paris and came to this country as a fugitive from the war. This Prokofieff concerto is scarcely the vehicle for a pianist to display his full mettle, but even so it was abundantly clear that here indeed was an artist with immense elan, a crackling technique and a real capacity to point up the relatively few moments of true lyricism in the piece at the expense of its more pervasive coffee house characteristics. In short, Mr. Uninsky managed to get more out of the music than Prokofieff put into it — rather a rare occurence. May he return to Boston in short order.

Erich Leinsdorf appears here as guest conductor this week-end for a two-week stint. He has planned a program that includes Mozart's A major Symphony. Interludes from Strauss' opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten" and Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
JAN 1 1961

Noted French Composer Will Attend Premiere

BOSTON — Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston the 20th at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

New Work

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston the 20th and 21st to hear Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the world premiere of Poulenc's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Mr. Poulenc as soloist, in Boston on Jan. 6, 1950. The first New York performance of this concerto, again performed from manuscript, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Poulenc as soloist in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 14, 1950.

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Mr. Poulenc during this visit to the United States.

BOSTON HERALD
January 23, 1961

MUSIC

Poulenc's Gloria Rare, Precious

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Friday's blizzard will pass; but yesterday afternoon's Symphony concert—put over because of the storm—proved one of those rare and precious events that may very well make enduring musical history.

It was the world premiere of Francis Poulenc's Gloria for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra. The composer himself was present, and earlier assumed the performer's role, with Evelyne Crochet, in the brilliant, effervescent Two Piano Concerto in D minor, which Poulenc wrote in 1932 and now proffered at these concerts for the first time.

SPARE AND ADROIT

Despite the quality of this score, however, the gallantry of the dual execution, the piquancy of the composer's presence, the Gloria dominated the afternoon. At first hearing it seems to me a major work, prominent in the career of a contemporary master and a significant addition to the repertory of 20th century music.

The Gloria is in six parts, using a free rhythmic beat and a chorus alternately tutti then reduced by half. The Latin text requires the soprano soloist—Adele Addison on this occasion in splendid estate—to undertake much vocalizing, though, save in the final maestoso, the line does not lie so high as to be unduly taxing. The orchestration follows conventional instrumental resources and is so spare and adroit that no bizarre colors are needed for sheer sound effect.

Coming as it did after the Concerto, the work allowed the audience an insight into the two aspects of Francis Poulenc that define his methods. In the first he is the witty, ironic and cultivated boulevardier, the member of Les Six who draws simultaneously from the classical tradition and "Parisian folklore." And in the other he is a mystic; the sounds of the steam-driven merry-go-rounds and mechanical organs vanishs before the ethereal modulations of plainsong.

But the religious mystic still remains the neo-classicist. The material and the concept of the Gloria unquestionably derive from the great masses of the 19th century. There is little in the idiom to distinguish it from Berlioz, Bruckner, from Verdi, the reminiscences, earlier, of Mozart and Cherubini—save for the individuality of Poulenc. He has no compulsion to be aggressively modern; he has cast his syntax in the grammar of the past, the clear pure art of an age of untroubled faith.

CAPTURES SPIRIT

Since most of Poulenc's compositions in the religious form for voice are a cappella, conveying fervent simplicity, it is of import that the Gloria turns to a more dramatic extension of resources. The use of the orchestra lends a chromatic array of colors to the unadorned voice; the rhythmic tensions are often fierce, passionate and minatory; yet throughout the score there runs a directness and radiance, a tonal fabric of arching sanctity. Poulenc has succeeded in capturing a spirit of human exaltation and the struggle for grace in the shadow of mortality.

In short, here is a neo-romantic rather than a classic inspiration; or at least more so than the composer has yet declared. The view appears more personal than the universal expression of the Gregorian chant, though lying well within the same mystical framework. One could cite many examples of the composer's grandeur—for instance, the sublime falling intervals of the fifth section—but I shall merely content myself this morning with the memory of the whole, an exceedingly lovely score and the finest of the Symphony season to date.

The performance of the Chorus Pro Musica in the Gloria equalled the resplence of the music. Alfred Nash Patterson has trained this group into the outstanding choir of the area; the dynamic level was never less than crystalline. Miss Addison, again, sang superbly; and the partnership of Mr. Poulenc and Miss Crichet, Dr. Munch and the orchestra during the exhilirating Mozartesque concerto was close-knit. The program opened with the Mendelssohn Octet pounding opulently with the massed strings; it is a comely item of juvenelia — juvenelia of genius, profiguring the Midsummer Night's Dream.

Next Friday Alexander Uninsky is soloist in the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26; Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer will have its local premiere; and Charles Munch has listed Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," and Symphony No. 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847
DEC 29 1960

Poulenc Premiere Set For Boston

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston next month at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston on Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the world premiere of Poulenc's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Mr. Poulenc as soloist, in Boston on Jan. 6, 1950. The first New York performance of this concerto, again performed from manuscript, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Poulenc as soloist in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 14, 1950.

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Mr. Poulence during this visit to the United States.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
2 378 352

Poulenc's Maturity

...Poulenc has ... in ... routine ... design ... touch ... himself ... works. ... introduces ... and ... Poulenc's ... he says ... to the ... glory of ... mood, ... manner. ... are very ... violent ... Matisse." ... and a sort ... and strings, ... roved to be ... contrasts, at ... manner of ... Carmelites), ... almost jazzy. ... moments: the opening of the ... on. "Laudamus Te," with the ... ery of French horns followed ... y ... noted chanting of the chorus ... mo ugly lyric third section with its bell-like soprano solo, "Domine Deus," the quietly majestic ending in a mood of ... and peace."

Poulenc wrote Gloria, as he writes all of his music, in his 16th century country home in Touraine, because "like wine, which can grow only in its own soil, I can compose only in France." Originally, he intended it for one of his favorite singers, Italian Soprano Rosanna Carteri ("She has a voice with lipstick and powder"), but at the work's première the principal part was sung by U.S. Negro Soprano Adele Addison, who so impressed Poulenc that he interrupted a rehearsal to shout: "Parfait! Parfait! La perfection!" Poulenc plans to write a new opera for La Scala, and he is now working on yet another religious work, for a male chorus and children's chorus, to be performed at the opening of Manhattan's Lincoln Center. Both will be "completely, completely, completely different" from what he has done before. "Every age of man has its music," says Composer Poulenc. "Now that I am 62, my music is very lyric and tragic—it is my maturity."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
JAN 23 1961

Poulenc Plays in Boston

Boston Symphony Presents 'Gloria' in World Premiere

By Cyrus Burgin

BOSTON, Jan. 22. — The "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the week end, is one of the French composer's major scores and an exceedingly fine work. The cheers that Poulenc received at the conclusion of the performance yesterday afternoon were thoroughly merited.

While the orchestra's regular concert last night was presented as scheduled, the Friday concert had to be postponed to yesterday afternoon because of the blizzard. A great many of the subscribers, as well as members of the Chorus Pro Musica, which assisted in the "Gloria," could never have made it to Symphony Hall Friday.

This program brought not only Poulenc's "Gloria," but also for the first time by the Boston Symphony, his nearly thirty-year-old "D-Minor Concerto for Two Pianos." Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet played the solo parts deftly and with vivacity, making an exceedingly neat ensemble.

Poulenc's "Gloria," though a setting from the liturgical text, would not be heard in a church. Its manner is bright and joyous, a heartfelt uttering of glory to God. Its musical style is varied to the point of eclecticism, characterized by those two qualities found in all of Poulenc's music that I know: real diatonic melody that sometimes approaches a tune, and tonal harmony spiked with effective dissonance.

You can discern something of the pre-serial Stravinsky in the opening "Gloria." The rhythmic basis of the instrumental accompaniment in the "Laudamus Te" is jazzy syncopation. For the sake of his musical pattern, Poulenc switched the stress in the word "excelsis" from the second to the third syllable, which makes a peculiar but agreeable sound.

You can find touches of Faure here and there, and of the fin de siecle harmonic lushness of Debussy and Ravel. Nonetheless, the prevailing effect is of Poulenc. The softly reiterated soprano solo "Amen" at the close reminds one of Mahler and the repeated "ewig" at the close of "the song of the earth," though I doubt Poulenc was at all influenced by that work.

Beyond these details of technic and style is the musical aspect of the "Gloria," the completely human beauty that sounds from the heart. It takes courage to do that in these days when much contemporary music is academic and dehumanized. But Poulenc had the courage to do it, just as, when he composed his "Two Pianos" concerto in 1932, he was not afraid to write those melodic successions known as sequences, something the modern academics despise as old-fashioned. The "Gloria" leaves you with a genuine feeling of exaltation.

Adele Addison sang the solos in celestial fashion, never missing true pitch, though her part ranges high and is difficult. Alfred Nash Patterson had prepared the Chorus Pro Musica superbly, and their work had true professional worth, contributing a great deal to the total success. Last, the brilliant conducting of Dr. Munch and the equally brilliant playing by the gentlemen of the orchestra must have all to brief a word of unreserved praise.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
JAN 8 1961

123

Music

Poulenc Premiere Jan. 20 in Boston

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A composer of exceptional interest and importance will be in Boston this month to attend the premiere of his new work.

Francis Poulenc will hear performances on Jan. 20 and 21 of his "Gloria" for orchestra, soprano and chorus. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Chorus pro Musica. Soprano soloist is Adele Addison.

The "Gloria" was composed on commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. The composer and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

Only Appearances

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Poulenc during his visit to the United States.

Poulenc is one of a group of French musical and esthetic rebels known as "Les Six," which organized in Paris in 1920. The others were Milhaud, Honegger, Tailleferre (Germaine), Durey and Auric.

Their guideposts were Jean Cocteau, the poet, and Erik Satie, composer. And their chief enemies were the "die-hards" of Debussy impressionism and Cesar Franck romanticism.

"The Six" set out to prove that the composer need no longer be the erratic long-haired individual who lived apart and toiled, in hunger, in some obscure attic.

Aaron Copland, contemporary American composer, expressed it more succinctly:

"He was to be a regular fellow who liked to go to nightclubs like everyone else."

Poulenc's music is generally marked by a flair for melodic naturalness, dancelike animation—with a light vein of parody and burlesque.

Tickets are $3 for the series or $1 for individual programs. All seats are unreserved.

Organists to appear are Donald Willing (Jan. 15); John Ferris (Feb. 19); E. Power Biggs (March 19); Berj Zamkochian, (April 9).

Programs will include works from the classical to the contemporary pipe organ repertory.

Seldom Heard

"My feeling," Mr. Cabot states, "is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

Along with the announcement is a detailed description of the Symphony Hall instrument compiled by Biggs. The instrument was dedicated in 1950 and replaced the 1900 organ by Hutchings of Boston.

The new organ was built by the Aeolian-Skinner Co. of Boston.

Among many things, Biggs explains that no air passes through the top of organ pipes when they are played. Merely good for a laugh is the recent cartoon showing two little birds perched atop a mammouth organ.

Says one to the other: "The next piece on the program is Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor—and boy, does that cool you off!"

Asides

We haven't seen any report as to what kind of music practicing is scheduled to begin at the White House this month.

The last was the harmonica, President Eisenhower's favorite instrument. Prior to that . . . well, it doesn't require a concert chairman to expound on Harry S. Truman's pianistic diversions.

Other presidents had their fling at music too. Thomas Jefferson indulged in string quartets with friends; John Quincy Adams and his wife played duets together; Warren G. Harding was reported to be a "hot" trumpet player.

Expanded Service

On the initiative of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, a series of Symphony Hall, Boston organ recitals will begin at 6:00 p.m., one week from today.

There are to be four concerts.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 23 1961

Poulenc as Composer and

A Many-Faceted Musical Communicator

By Louis Chapin

A good composer's style should be too full of life to come apart for the convenience of critics. Listeners to the two weekend Boston Symphony concerts, shovelled into reverse order by the snow, may have been tempted to sort out the things they like (a lot) about Francis Poulenc and his music, and they may have found the resulting piles drifting a little.

On one point, at least, everyone in Symphony Hall would have been agreed: M. Poulenc writes wonderfully communicable music—given, that is, properly expert communicators. As we listened to his Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, in its first performance here, the familiar qualities quickly emerged under Charles Munch's direction: deft and sprightly good humor, with an Eulenspiegel pungency that gives way suddenly to an artless sounding beguilement that Strauss never produced. Comparisons with Ravel and Stravinsky are possible, too, but M. Poulenc, however French and technically sophisticated, writes his own music, and it speaks with his own smile, which can somehow be simultaneously witty and sympathetic.

The Concerto is quite sparely written, though it thickens at times into eloquent grunts. The ear can find delight in details such as the cello solo in overtones doubling an elusive line in the steadily rolling pianos. These, it should be added, were played with unpretentious authority by the composer and his partner Evelyne Crochet.

The new Poulenc work, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, was his Gloria, in which Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, whose director is Alfred Nash Patterson, joined the orchestra. There were no more surprises here than in the concerto, and those familiar with the composer's relatively early Mass heard some almost exact borrowing in the solo part. But M. Poulenc's continual attention to what he is saying, whether it be clothed in wit or reverence, guarantees more newness than sameness. If at times the music hall and the church seem on close terms, it is probably because they could very well contain the same people, and it is for those people that M. Poulenc is writing.

His close attention to the words is instanced in the second section of the Gloria, "Laudamus Te," which is generally lively and joyous. But as the chorus turns from words concerned with glorifying to those concerned with thanks ("gratias agimus tibi") the scene shifts impressively from outward jubilation to quiet inward contemplation.

Miss Addison joined with the chorus in three of the four remaining sections, and her controlled upper register was put to exquisite use. The melodic line given her was sometimes suave, sometimes angularly Romanesque, but even in high pianissimo attacks it never sounded strained. M. Poulenc writes rich clumps of sound for his chorus, though with intense linear accents at times, and all were clearly shaped.

The strongest line, perhaps, is at the start of the final section, "Qui Sedes," where first the altos and tenors, then all the voices sing in high unison. The effect is majestic and showed the ample tone and range of the chorus, but it is like the composer, later on, to suddenly slice off the bigness, and to give the soloist, gently, the final word.

It was entirely fitting that this lively and gracious program should have been opened with Mendelssohn's incredibly precocious Octet, written at the age of 16, yet perhaps his most consistently realized work. It was played by the strings of the orchestra with robust warmth and, where needed, with the limber delicacy of chamber music. The alert animation of Dr. Munch's direction anticipated, as we might have expected, what he did with the whole radiant program.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001
JAN 6 1961

French Composer Invited Here

Francis Poulenc Asked to Hear Work

The distinguished French composer, Francis Poulenc, has been invited to visit Springfield at the personal request of Robert Staffanson, music director of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Poulenc — whose "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra" will be performed here on the 24th by the Springfield Symphony with duo-pianists Whittemore and Lowe—will be in Boston this month to attend the world premiere of his "Gloria," and to perform his "Two-Piano Concerto" with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Staffanson hopes that Poulenc's schedule will permit a trip here to hear the Springfield Orchestra's performance.

Mr. Poulenc, considered to be one of the giants of contemporary classical music, will visit the United States on a one-month visa. At present, no public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony have been scheduled for him.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 7,669
DEC 28 1960

French Composer Visits Boston In January To Attend Opera Premiere

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston in January at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston on Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra" will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,378,352

JAN 27 1961

Poulenc's Maturity

French Composer Francis Poulenc has a favorite religious [illegible] the painting by Andrea Mantegna [illegible] in one corner of which a small rabbit crouches unaware of the tragedy being unfolded on the Mount of Olives ahead him. It is the Master of Olives [illegible] light [illegible] reverent touch the Lord [illegible] Poulenc himself that [illegible] works. strive [illegible] ony intro- Last [illegible] latest and duced [illegible] Poulenc's perhap [illegible] ich he says composition [illegible] ynn to the he tried [illegible] glory of God.

If the piece [illegible] ts M [illegible] in mood. it is closer to [illegible] ern pa [illegible] in manner. "The colors," says Poulenc, "are very clear, primary colors—[illegible] and violent like the Provence chapel of Matisse." Scored for chorus, soprano and a sort of celestial band of horns and strings, Poulenc's 25-minute Gloria proved to be a work of sharply profiled contrasts, at times deeply reverent (in the manner of his opera Dialogues of the Carmelites), at times mischievous and almost jazzy. Among its memorable moments: the opening of the second section, "Laudamus Te," with the dissonant cry of French horns followed by the syncopated chanting of the chorus; the movingly lyric third section with its bell-like soprano solo, "Domine Deus"; the quietly majestic ending in a mood of "pity and peace."

Poulenc wrote Gloria, as he writes all of his music, in his 16th century country home in Touraine, because "like wine, which can grow only in its own soil, I can compose only in France." Originally, he intended it for one of his favorite singers, Italian Soprano Rosanna Carteri ("She has a voice with lipstick and powder"), but at the work's première the principal part was sung by U.S. Negro Soprano Adele Addison, who so impressed Poulenc that he interrupted a rehearsal to shout: "Parfait! Parfait! La perfection!" Poulenc plans to write a new opera for La Scala, and he is now working on yet another religious work, for a male chorus and children's chorus, to be performed at the opening of Manhattan's Lincoln Center. Both will be "completely, completely, completely different" from what he has done before. "Every age of man has its music," says Composer Poulenc. "Now that I am 62, my music is very lyric and tragic—it is my maturity."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
JAN 23 1961

Poulenc Plays in' Boston

Boston Symphony Presents 'Gloria' in World Premiere

By Cyrus Burgin

BOSTON, Jan. 22. — The "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc, given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the week end, is one of the French composer's major scores and an exceedingly fine work. The cheers that Poulenc received at the conclusion of the performance yesterday afternoon were thoroughly merited.

While the orchestra's regular concert last night was presented as scheduled, the Friday concert had to be postponed to yesterday afternoon because of the blizzard. A great many of the subscribers, as well as members of the Chorus Pro Musica, which assisted in the "Gloria," could never have made it to Symphony Hall Friday.

This program brought not only Poulenc's "Gloria," but also for the first time by the Boston Symphony, his nearly thirty-year-old "D-Minor Concerto for Two Pianos." Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet played the solo parts deftly and with vivacity, making an exceedingly neat ensemble.

Poulenc's "Gloria," though a setting from the liturgical text, would not be heard in a church. Its manner is bright and joyous, a heartfelt uttering of glory to God. Its musical style is varied to the point of eclecticism, characterized by those two qualities found in all of Poulenc's music that I know: real diatonic melody that sometimes approaches a tune, and tonal harmony spiked with effective dissonance.

You can discern something of the pre-serial Stravinsky in the opening "Gloria." The rhythmic basis of the instrumental accompaniment in the "Laudamus Te" is jazzy syncopation. For the sake of his musical pattern, Poulenc switched the stress in the word "excelsis" from the second to the third syllable, which makes a peculiar but agreeable sound. You can find touches of Faure here and there, and of the fin de siecle harmonic lushness of Debussy and Ravel. Nonetheless, the prevailing effect is of Poulenc. The softly reiterated soprano solo "Amen" at the close reminds one of Mahler and the repeated "ewig" at the close of "the song of the earth," though I doubt Poulenc was at all influenced by that work.

Beyond these details of technic and style is the musical aspect of the "Gloria," the completely human beauty that sounds from the heart. It takes courage to do that in these days when much contemporary music is academic and dehumanized. But Poulenc had the courage to do it, just as, when he composed his "Two Pianos" concerto in 1932, he was not afraid to write those melodic successions known as sequences, something the "modern" academics despise as old-fashioned. The "Gloria" leaves you with a genuine feeling of exaltation.

Adele Addison sang the solos in celestial fashion, never missing true pitch, though her part ranges high and is difficult. Alfred Nash Patterson had prepared the Chorus Pro Musica superbly, and their work had true professional worth, contributing a great deal to the total success. Last, the brilliant conducting of Dr. Munch and the equally brilliant playing by the gentlemen of the orchestra must have all to brief a word of unreserved praise.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
JAN 8 1961

123

Music

Poulenc Premiere Jan. 20 in Boston

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A composer of exceptional interest and importance will be in Boston this month to attend the premiere of his new work. Francis Poulenc will hear performances on Jan. 20 and 21 of his "Gloria" for orchestra, soprano and chorus. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Chorus pro Musica. Soprano soloist is Adele Addison.

The "Gloria" was composed on commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. The composer and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

Only Appearances

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston have been scheduled for Poulenc during his visit to the United States.

Poulenc is one of a group of French musical and esthetic rebels known as "The Six," which organized in Paris in 1920. The others were Milhaud, Honegger, Tailleferre (Germaine), Durey and Auric.

Their guideposts were Jean Cocteau, the poet, and Erik Satie, composer. And their chief enemies were the "die-hards" of Debussy impressionism and Cesar Franck romanticism.

"The Six" set out to prove that the composer need no longer be the erratic long-haired individual who lived apart and toiled, in hunger, in some obscure attic.

Aaron Copland, contemporary American composer, expressed it more succinctly:

"He was to be a regular fellow who liked to go to nightclubs like everyone else."

Poulenc's music is generally marked by a flair for melodic naturalness, dancelike animation—with a light vein of parody and burlesque.

Expanded Service

On the initiative of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, a series of Symphony Hall, Boston organ recitals will begin at 6:00 p.m., one week from today.

There are to be four concerts. Tickets are $3 for the series or $1 for individual programs. All seats are unreserved.

Organists to appear are Donald Willing (Jan. 15); John Ferris (Feb. 19); E. Power Biggs (March 19); Berj Zamkochian (April 9).

Programs will include works from the classical to the contemporary pipe organ repertory.

Seldom Heard

"My feeling," Mr. Cabot states, "is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

Along with the announcement is a detailed description of the Symphony Hall instrument compiled by Biggs. The instrument was dedicated in 1950 and replaced the 1900 organ by Hutchings of Boston.

The new organ was built by the Aeolian-Skinner Co. of Boston.

Among many things, Biggs explains that no air passes through the top of organ pipes when they are played. Merely good for a laugh is the recent cartoon showing two little birds perched atop a mammouth organ.

Says one to the other: "The next piece on the program is Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor—and boy, does that cool you off!"

Asides

We haven't seen any report as to what kind of music practicing is scheduled to begin at the White House this month.

The last was the harmonica, President Eisenhower's favorite instrument. Prior to that . . . well, it doesn't require a concert chairman to expound on Harry S. Truman's pianistic diversions.

Other presidents had their fling at music too. Thomas Jefferson indulged in string quartets with friends; John Quincy Adams and his wife played duets together; Warren G. Harding was reported to be a "hot" trumpet player.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 23 1961

Poulenc as Composer and [illegible]

A Many-Faceted Musical Communicator

By Louis Chapin

A good composer's style should be too full of life to come apart for the convenience of critics. Listeners to the two weekend Boston Symphony concerts, shovelled into reverse order by the snow, may have been tempted to sort out the things they like (a lot) about Francis Poulenc and his music, and they may have found the resulting piles drifting a little.

On one point, at least, everyone in Symphony Hall would have been agreed: M. Poulenc writes wonderfully communicable music—given, that is, properly expert communicators. As we listened to his Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, in its first performance here, the familiar qualities quickly emerged under Charles Munch's direction: deft and sprightly good humor, with an Eulenspiegel pungency that gives way suddenly to an artless sounding beguilement that Strauss never produced. Comparisons with Ravel and Stravinsky are possible, too, but M. Poulenc, however French and technically sophisticated, writes his own music, and it speaks with his own smile, which can somehow be simultaneously witty and sympathetic.

The Concerto is quite sparely written, though it thickens at times into eloquent grunts. The ear can find delight in details such as the cello solo in overtones doubling an elusive line in the steadily rolling pianos. These, it should be added, were played with unpretentious authority by the composer and his partner Evelyne Crochet.

The new Poulenc work, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, was his Gloria, in which Adele Addison, and the Chorus Pro Musica, whose director is Alfred Nash Patterson, joined the orchestra. There were no more surprises here than in the concerto, and those familiar with the composer's relatively early Mass heard some almost exact borrowing in the solo part. But M. Poulenc's continual attention to what he is saying, whether it be clothed in wit or reverence, guarantees more newness than sameness. If at times the music hall and the church seem on close terms, it is probably because they could very well contain the same people, and it is for those people that M. Poulenc is writing.

His close attention to the words is instanced in the second section of the Gloria, "Laudamus Te," which is generally lively and joyous. But as the chorus turns from words concerned with glorifying to those concerned with thanks ("gratias agimus tibi") the scene shifts impressively from outward jubilation to quiet inward contemplation.

Miss Addison joined with the chorus in three of the four remaining sections, and her controlled upper register was put to exquisite use. The melodic line given her was sometimes suave, sometimes angularly Romanesque, but even in high pianissimo attacks it never sounded strained. M. Poulenc writes rich clumps of sound for his chorus, though with intense linear accents at times, and all were clearly shaped.

The strongest line, perhaps, is at the start of the final section, "Qui Sedes," where first the altos and tenors, then all the voices sing in high unison. The effect is majestic and showed the ample tone and range of the chorus, but it is like the composer, later on, to suddenly slice off the bigness, and to give the soloist, gently, the final word.

It was entirely fitting that this lively and gracious program should have been opened with Mendelssohn's incredibly precocious Octet, written at the age of 16, yet perhaps his most consistently realized work. It was played by the strings of the orchestra with robust warmth and, where needed, with the limber delicacy of chamber music. The alert animation of Dr. Munch's direction anticipated, as we might have expected, what he did with the whole radiant program.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001
JAN 6 1961

French Composer Invited Here

Francis Poulenc Asked to Hear Work

The distinguished French composer, Francis Poulenc, has been invited to visit Springfield at the personal request of Robert Staffanson, music director of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Poulenc — whose "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra" will be performed here on the [illegible] by the Springfield Symphony with duo-pianists Whittemore and Lowe—will be in Boston this month to attend the world premiere of his "Gloria," and to perform his "Two-Piano Concerto" with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Staffanson hopes that Poulenc's schedule will permit a trip here to hear the Springfield Orchestra's performance.

Mr. Poulenc, considered to be one of the giants of contemporary classical music, will visit the United States on a one-month visa. At present, no public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony have been scheduled for him.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 7,669
DEC 28 1960

French Composer Visits Boston In January To Attend Opera Premiere

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston in January at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Mr. Poulenc will be in Boston on Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra" will also be performed at these concerts. Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
JAN 23 1961

121

Gloria by Poulenc Given Premiere by Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Gloria by Francis Poulenc, given world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the past week-end, is one of the French composer's major scores and an exceedingly fine work. The cheers that Poulenc received at conclusion of the performance yesterday afternoon were thoroughly merited.

While the Orchestra's regular concert last Saturday evening was presented as scheduled, the Friday concert had to be postponed to yesterday because of the blizzard. A great many of the subscribers, as well as members of the Chorus Pro Musica, which assisted in the Gloria, could never have made it to Symphony Hall last Friday. As matters turned out, there were some empty seats yesterday, but not a great many.

This program brought not only Poulenc's Gloria, but also for the first time by the Boston Symphony, his nearly 30 years old D minor Concerto for Two Pianos. Though naturally quite different in mood and substance, largely cute, slick and amusing, the Concerto is quite as "French" and quite as expert as the Gloria.

Its three movements are lightly orchestrated and run in a bubbling flow of tunes and spicy harmony, the slow movement beginning, a bit waggishly, like a Mozart slow movement. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet played the solo parts deftly and with vivacity, making an exceedingly neat ensemble.

Poulenc's 'Gloria, though a setting of liturgical text, would not be heard in church. Its manner is bright and joyous, a heartfelt uttering of Glory to God. Its musical style is varied to the point of electicism, characterized by those two qualities found in all of Poulenc's music that I know: real diatonic melody that sometimes approaches a tune, and tonal harmony spiked with effective dissonance.

You can discern something of the pre-serial Stravinsky in the opening Gloria. The rhythmic basis of the instrumental accompaniment in the Laudamus Te is jazzy syncopation. For the sake of his musical pattern, Poulenc switched the stress in the world excelsis from the second to the third syllable, which makes a peculiar but agreeable sound.

You can find touches of Faure here and there, and of the fin de siecle harmonic lushness of Debussy and Ravel. Nonetheless, the prevailing effect is of Poulenc. The softly reiterated soprano solo "Amen" at the close reminds one of Mahler and the repeated "Ewig" at the close of "The Song of the Earth," though I doubt Poulenc was at all influenced by that work.

Beyond these details of technic and style is the musical aspect of the Gloria, the completely human beauty that sounds from the heart. It takes courage to do that in these days when much contemporary music is academic and dehumanized. But Poulenc had the courage to do it, just as, when he composed his Two Pianos Concerto in 1932, he was not afraid to write those melodic successions known as sequences, something the modern academics despise as old-fashioned. The Gloria leaves you with a genuine feeling of exaltation.

Adele Addison sang the solos in celestial fashion, never missing true pitch, though her part ranges high and is difficult. Alfred Nash Patterson had prepared the Chorus Pro Musica superbly, and their work had true professional worth, contributing a great deal to the total success.

Last, the brilliant conducting of Dr. Munch and the equally brilliant playing by the gentlemen of the Orchestra must have all too brief a word of unreserved praise.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday, the storm-delayed afternoon concert of the 13th pair in the Friday—Saturday series, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings in E flat; Poulenc's Concerto in D minor for Two Pianos (first performance at these concerts), the composer and Evelyne Crochet soloists, and Poulenc's Gloria (world premiere). The Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson assisted in the Gloria, whose soprano solo part was sung by Adele Addison.

AMUSEMENTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208
JAN 20 1961

Symphony Delayed

BOSTON, Jan. 20 (UPI)—Today's scheduled Boston symphony Orchestra concert was postponed to Sunday because of the blizzard.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
MAY 7 1961

ALSO CITED: 'GLORIA'

By ALLEN HUGHES

At 62, Francis Poulenc seems securely established in the Utopia of living composers. This is to say that every work he writes nowadays is almost automatically assured of immediate and eager attention on both sides of the Atlantic. Conductors and performers vie for first performance rights, and the press, along with a constantly broadening segment of the public, makes it a point to hear the latest product as soon as possible.

The recording industry, too, seems acutely conscious of Poulenc, and so, slightly more than three months after its world premiere, we are presented with a recording of his latest major composition, the Gloria (Angel 35953; stereo S 35953). Scored for soprano, chorus and orchestra, the work is long enough to fill one record side, and it is backed by a new interpretation of Poulenc's splendid Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani.

The "Gloria" has already been honored here with a citation from the Music Critics Circle of New York, an award made on the basis of a performance of the piece by the Boston Symphony in a Carnegie Hall concert a few weeks ago. Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, the work was given its world premiere by the Bostonians last Jan. 20.

The recording comes from Paris, where it was made on Feb. 15, the day after the first European performance of the "Gloria." Georges Prêtre is the conductor, Rosanna Carteri the soprano soloist, and the chorus and orchestra are those of the French National Radio.

This new composition probably ranks with the finest of Poulenc's major creations—the Mass and the song cycle "Tel jour, telle nuit" (both of 1937), the Organ Concerto (1938), "Les Mamelles de Tirésias" (1944), the "Stabat Mater" (1950), and "Dialogues des Carmélites" (1955) among them.

Indeed, it incorporates reminiscences of just about all these works. Unlike some composers, Poulenc does not change styles with seasons, decades, or anything else. His musical speech, being almost totally autobiographical in a sense, is too much a part of him to bear substantial alteration.

Thus, thematic fragments incorporated in the building of the Mass and "Tel jour, telle nuit," back in 1937, can be found in one or another of the six movements of the "Gloria." And in the rather astonishingly syncopated "Laudamus te" of the new piece, one hears echoes of the exuberant gaiety that gives "Les Mamelles de Tirésias" its infectious charm.

Own Personality

Still, the "Gloria" has a personality of its own, for Poulenc has once again combined all these familiar elements in such a way as to give them meaningful new relationships to each other.

The performance here is quite good, with the bulk of the credit going to conductor Prêtre and the orchestra. Miss Carteri has the voice to deal with the high tessitura of the soprano part.

The recording of the organ concerto is noteworthy in itself for it makes the work seem considerably more dramatic and tragic than E. Power Biggs' famous recording of many years ago did. Maurice Duruflé is the soloist here, and although his playing is poorly articulated in the rapid passages, damagingly so, in fact, the interpretation is otherwise powerful and vivid.

Mr. Prêtre, perhaps, is responsible for much of the intensity of the performance. In any event, the drama in the orchestra matches that of the organ.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
JAN 8 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

The success of soprano Eileen Farrell, who this season has made her debut at the Met in "Alcestis" and "La Gioconda," is scarcely surprising. Possessed of one of the musical world's most powerful and wide-ranged voices, she should have been invited to the Met years ago, anyway.

True, Miss Farrell is limited by her physical attributes in the roles she can play. A short woman who weighs in at 180, she is obviously destined for character roles in these days when, happily, opera companies do attempt to cast their productions realistically and to stay away from Don Joses with comfortable paunches or Mimis with excessive avoirdupois.

EARL J. DIAS

Although Miss Farrell is hailed by New York newspapers as a soprano from Staten Island, she actually grew up in Woonsocket, R. I. In fact, she once sang in "Pinafore" in Woonsocket High School's annual play, and when she made her Met debut in "Alcestis," 36 Woonsocketers attended the event—traveling by specially chartered bus.

Show business, incidentally, is in Miss Farrell's blood. Her father (a banjo player and singer) and mother were "The Singing O'Farrells" in small-time vaudeville prior to World War I.

French Composer, Francis Poulenc, to Visit Boston

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will be in Boston on Jan. 20 and 21. He will be on hand in Symphony Hall to hear the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

Besides the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, with Alfred Nash Patterson conducting, will participate in the performance. Poulenc's "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra" also will be heard at these concerts with Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

No public appearances other than those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been scheduled for Mr. Poulenc during this visit to the United States.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
DEC 31 1960

Tribune 2/12/61

A Rehearsal With Poulenc

By ROBERT W. DUMM

"Parfait! Absolument parfait!" cried Francis Poulenc to the chorus and orchestra from the balcony of Symphony Hall in Boston. The French composer, one of the "Six," had come to see his "Gloria" through rehearsals and its world premiere with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, with Adele Addison, soprano, and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

It was one of several times he had half risen from a listening crouch, in answer to Munch's inquiring glance from the podium. Meanwhile, he rested his elbow on the rail, tilted his head to one side, and seemed to forget the open score on his knee, his free hand absently waving with the music.

He was well pleased (and well he might be) with the musical forces Boston had marshaled for this, his latest work. The "Gloria" had been commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation of the Library of Congress, in memory of Serge and Nathalie Koussevitzky. It was composed between May, 1959, and June, 1960.

Five Trips to U. S.

In the green room backstage, the stocky, gray-haired composer settled into a sofa and recalled his trips to the United States, five in all, the more recent having to do with his later operas, the "Dialogues des Carmelites" (1956) and "La Voix Humaine" (1960), which he subtitled a "lyric tragedy in one act," sung by a sole interpreter. "It all goes on over the telephone. A woman calls her lover, and learns he is to marry some one else in a couple of days. She cries out, and after a desperate monologue, faints away. It is very sad, and all the ladies weep."

Poulenc's florid face is frank and kindly, and two bright eyes flank a strongly sculptured nose. His powerful hands are never still. Had he intended a change in his choral style since his early Mass in G Major, in which voices a capella are massed in dissonant, hammerhead chords? "The 'Gloria' is like the 'Sanctus' of that Mass," he decided, "but it is different now; more for the voice, the cantabile."

His face shone with excitement when he told of his "Sept Réponses des Ténèbres" for a chorus of children and men, boy-soprano soloist, and orchestra.

"It began, you know, in the style of Victoria, but by the time I had got to the fifth word of Christ, it was more like Monteverdi: dramatic. I remember a painting of Christ on the Cross, with all the things going on at the base of it. The soldiers were playing dice, and off in a corner, some one was eating—a strawberry!" The first hearing of this work is slated for New York, for it was commissioned by Leonard Bernstein for the opening of the Lincoln Center.

Was he concentrating solely on vocal works now? No, there was an "Elegie" for French horn and piano, in memory of the English horn player, Dennis Brain, who was killed in a car accident shortly after appearing in Poulenc's own Sextet at Edinburgh. The composer reached over and tapped a grand piano: "you never know——" And a set of solo sonatas for wind instruments was taking shape. The sonata for flute and piano is already published, and that for clarinet is nearly finished. Others, one each for oboe and bassoon, are on the way.

Did he plan more tours like those with Pierre Bernac, in which he introduced a considerable portion of his hundred-odd songs to the American public? "No, not now, nor with Denise Duval, for she is having such a success on the stage."

Composes at Piano

He composes at the piano, which shows when he performs. At a rehearsal of his Concerto for Two Pianos in D Minor (1932), part of the program, he showed the assertion of a composer who knows exactly what he wants.

Adele Addison To Have Role in Hub Premiere

Francis Poulenc, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston next month at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Poulenc will be in Boston Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

The Boston Symphony presented the world premiere of Poulenc's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Poulenc as soloist, in Boston on Jan. 6, 1950. The first New York performance of this concerto, again performed from manuscript, was given by the Boston Symphony with Poulenc as soloist in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 14, 1950.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
APR 29 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

New Voices for the Met—Poulenc's "Gloria"

WHEN Helen Feit, Brown Lozada, ...lon, or ...rther on would be ...wouldn't ...l to most ...pearance ...tropolitan ...audience, ...e was not ...rity of the ...ls of the ...d by the Metropolitan ...Distinguished ...ity (six) who ...ranging from ... Without fine-...roscope, one ... group, they ... Gilea, Gounod, ...er with a more ... vocal purpose, in ... fewer mannerisms and egocentricities, than some who have been paid for doing the same on this stage. It spoke well not only for the depth of the native talent pool, but also for the care with which their studies had been supervised.

Under the amended conditions of this year's competition (several regional winners were eliminated in a countdown prior to the public launching) the spread between winners and losers was somewhat narrower than last year. Indeed, the most remarkable voice per se belonged to Miss Saritelli, a plump Mrs. from Providence, Rhode Island, (looking somewhat like the pre-Meneghini Callas) whose "Pace, Pace" showed uncommon aptitude. Age (she is the mother of two) and displacement may make her audition-prize-proof, but I would be surprised if she did not come to notice some other way.

Of the favored minority, the selection of George Shirley to be the Metropolitan's first Negro tenor was unquestionably just. True, the Metropolitan needs tenors, but in selecting Shirley it honored his abilities as well as its needs. I confess, though, to a lasting bewilderment why the [illegible] auditions" should [illegible] to uncover a singer who has appeared at least twice this winter in Town Hall and just sung the B minor Mass with the Oratorio Society in Carnegie Hall. Likewise, Shirley Verrett-Carter, who has been launched in Carnegie Hall as a soloist with Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra in Falla's "Amor Brujo" (and has already earned the immortality of a recording). If the Metropolitan doesn't have its own regular, internal auditions for reviewing such exposed talent, it certainly should.

Among the others—Maria de Francesca, Billie Lynn Daniel, and Francesca Roberto (members of the soprano sorority) and Edna Mae Garabedian, mezzo—who were given money awards and scholarships, there was clearly an advantage, in personality and present abilities, for Miss Roberto. Her selection for an "apprentice contract" testified to welcome flexibility in the use of the opportunities provided by this procedure.

EARLIER in the week a more experienced American singer passed a different kind of Metropolitan entrance examination as part of what might be described as Operation Sink or Swim. This was Gianna d'Angelo (known to Hartford, Connecticut, as Jane Angelovich). Her debut role was Gilda ("Rigoletto") in keeping with the procedures of Operation SOS providing for a single performance before a paying audience which has, apparently, no choice in the matter. SOS (not to be confused with any other symbol for distress) has, this season, permitted operatic immersion for sopranos Gabriella Tucci, Dorothy Coulter and Nerina Santini, mezzos Jane Rhodes and Biserka Cvejic, and tenor Leonard Del Ferro.

Miss d'Angelo made herself welcome not so much for beauty of voice as for a well-developed technic and a good range of European experience. A tallish, slender person (aged about thirty), Miss d'Angelo met the challenges of "Caro nome" and "Tutte le feste" unflinchingly and with commendable accuracy. Her sound is a little larger than the average of Gildas, but it is neither very bright nor particularly resonant. Her stage department was little more than rudimentary, but she is equipped, vocally, to swim rather than sink. Jan Peerce and Robert Merrill contributed helpfully to her success, rather less conductor Nino Verchi.

Whatever else may be said about Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which brought to a close the Boston Symphony's seventy-fifth New York season, one thing is certain—it sings. It is consistently, almost insistently vocal, which should not be in the least surprising for a composer of as many fine songs (and other vocal works) as Poulenc. Nevertheless, the consideration it shows for the human voice is sufficiently uncommon to be commended. Furthermore it is intimately related to the purpose for which voices are raised in praise, and part of its ultimate effect, that the singers do so happily, joyfully, enthusiastically. There was rarely a sense of striving for supremacy among the choral, solo, and orchestral elements—the only contest, an eagerness to do justice to the allotted function.

(Continued on page 37)

Music to My Ears

Continued from page 30

What Poulenc has created is less a liturgical expression than a celebration in sound, arranged in a suite of movements (the first and last fast, the others fast, slow, fast, slow) based on the familiar texts—Gloria, Laudamus Te, Domine Deus, etc. But, as many of his predecessors borrowed from popular idioms of their time, so it sounds to me that Poulenc has not been constrained in his use of harmonies, rhythms, and melodic turns more commonly associated with the chanson, even the café chanson, than with either the church or the concert hall. I found much of it a delightfully sophisticated exercise in seeming naiveté, up to the concluding "Amen," which lolls about in a relaxed intellectual attitude more suggestive of Gounod and Franck than Poulenc. Just what it means doubtless will be clarified at a later hearing. This one profited immensely from the impassioned purity of Adele Addison's singing of the solo sections (especially the "Domine Deus"), her reverence for Music as well as meaning. The chorus trained by Alfred Nash Patterson was thoroughly responsive to Munch's animated direction.

Lorin Hollander was a much more interesting musical phenomenon as a sub-teen performer of Mozart with Thomas Scherman and the Little Orchestra in Hunter College a few years ago than he was as a sixteen-year-old soloist in the Khachaturian Piano Concerto with the New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein in Carnegie Hall a few days ago. The purity of his original musical impulse has been replaced by an adult calculation much more common, and far less worthwhile. He plays fast, loud, and hard, which may be good enough for Khachaturian, but not for music. In the preceding "Sinfonia India" of Chavez, Elyakum Shapira gave further evidence of the clarity, order, and penetration of his conductorial talent.

—IRVING KOLODIN.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
DEC 29 1960

Composer Poulenc Will Solo With Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Francis Poulenc, French composer, will visit Boston next month at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Poulenc will be in Boston Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
JAN 7 1961

Poulenc to Hear Boston Symphony Premiere "Gloria"

FRANCIS POULENC, distinguished French composer, will visit Boston Jan. 20 and 21 at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestras music director, Charles Munch, to hear the orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria."

The new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus was composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances. Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. The composer and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony came to Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7, for their second of five Saturday afternoon concerts. Conductor and orchestra were in rare form throughout the afternoon. The program opened with a glowing reading of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor. This was followed by the Bartok Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, which was left in sketch form at the composer's death and filled out by Tibor Serly, completed in June 1948. It is a compelling work, and it was competently, if somewhat timidly, performed by first desk violist Joseph de Pasquale. The high point of the program was Mr. Munch's inspired reading of Brahms' First Symphony, marked by a rich and free-flowing tonal texture and great dramatic intensity.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Francis Poulenc, noted French composer, will visit this country to hear the world premiere of his "Gloria" given by the Boston Symphony on Jan. 20 and 21 in that city; he will also appear as a pianist with Evelyne Crochet in his Concerto for Two Pianos at the same concerts. . . .

Jean Hubeau, pianist, and Maurice Fleuri, violinist, were heard in a sonata program at Maison Française at New York University on Nov. 3, playing works by Mozart, Fauré and other composers. . . .

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,378,352
JAN 27 1961

First Performers

Sir:

A sad mistake appears in your Jan. 13 issue. First New York performance of Barber's Die Natali was credited to New York Philharmonic whereas first New York performance was given by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.
Manager
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Boston

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
APR 22 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

New Voices for the Met—Poulenc's "Gloria"

WHETHER or not Helen Feit, Annamaria Saritelli, Brown Bradley, Jr., Angelica Lozada, Ferguson, Landon, or further on and McLaughlin it would be new vocal caroling all wouldn't to wager that has one memorable appearance at an audience Metropolitan House. Now, ... ving audience, ups, but one favor was not automatic ... seven were ... jority of the competitors in the ... s finals of the ... Auditions sponsored by the ... Council of the Metropolitan ... Association, as distinguished ... more elect minority (six) who ... encouragement ranging from scholarships to contracts. Without fine-tuning the critical microscope, one might observe that, as a group, they sang Puccini, Verdi, Cilèa, Gounod, Giordano, or whatever with a more conscious sense of vocal purpose, in some instances with fewer mannerisms and egocentricities, than some who have been paid for doing the same on this stage. It spoke well not only for the depth of the native talent pool, but also for the care with which their studies had been supervised.

Under the amended conditions of this year's competition (several regional winners were eliminated in a countdown prior to the public launching) the spread between winners and losers was somewhat narrower than last year. Indeed, the most remarkable voice per se belonged to Miss Saritelli, a plump Mrs. from Providence, Rhode Island, (looking somewhat like the pre-Meneghini Callas) whose "Pace, Pace" showed uncommon aptitude. Age (she is the mother of two) and displacement may make her audition-prize-proof, but I would be surprised if she did not come to notice some other way.

Of the favored minority, the selection of George Shirley to be the Metropolitan's first Negro tenor was unquestionably just. True, the Metropolitan needs tenors, but in selecting Shirley it honored his abilities as well as its needs. I confess, though, ... why ... as ... to uncover a singer who has appeared at least twice this winter in Town Hall and just sang the B minor Mass with the Oratorio Society in Carnegie Hall. Likewise, Shirley Verrett-Carter, who has been launched in Carnegie Hall as a soloist with Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra in "Le Fils de l'Amor Brujo" (and has already earned the immortality of a recording). If the Metropolitan doesn't have its own regular, internal auditions for reviewing such exposed talent, it certainly should.

Among the others—Maria de Francesca, Billie Lynn Daniel, and Francesca Roberto (members of the soprano sorority) and Edna Mae Garabedian, mezzo—who were given money awards and scholarships, there was clearly an advantage, in personality and present abilities, for Miss Roberto. Her selection for an "apprentice contract" testified to welcome flexibility in the use of the opportunities provided by this procedure.

EARLIER in the week a more experienced American singer passed a different kind of Metropolitan entrance examination as part of what might be described as Operation Sink or Swim. This was Gianna d'Angelo, (known in Hartford, Connecticut, as Jane Angelovich). Her debut role was Gilda ("Rigoletto") in keeping with the procedures of Operation SOS providing for a single performance before a paying audience which has, apparently, no choice in the matter. SOS (not to be confused with any other symbol for distress) has, this season, permitted operatic immersion for sopranos Gabriella Tucci, Dorothy Coulter, and Nerina Santini, mezzos Jane Rhodes and Biserka Cvejic, and tenor Leonard Del Ferro.

Miss d'Angelo made herself welcome not so much for beauty of voice as for a well-developed technic and a good range of European experience. A tallish, slender person (aged about thirty), Miss d'Angelo met the challenges of "Caro nome" and "Tutte le feste" unflinchingly and with commendable accuracy. Her sound is a little larger than the average of Gildas, but it is neither very bright nor particularly resonant. Her stage deportment was little more than rudimentary, but she is equipped, vocally, to swim rather than sink. Jan Peerce and Robert Merrill contributed helpfully ... rather less ... Nicolai.

Whatever else may be said about Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which brought to a close the Boston Symphony's seventy-fifth New York season, one thing is certain—it sings. It is consistently, almost insistently vocal, which should not be in the least surprising for a composer of as many fine songs (and other vocal works) as Poulenc. Nevertheless, the consideration it shows for the human ... is sufficiently uncommon to be commended. Furthermore it is intimately related to the purpose for which voices are raised in praise, and part of its ultimate effect, that the singers do so happily, joyfully, enthusiastically. There was rarely a sense of striving for supremacy among the choral, solo, and orchestral elements—the only contest, an eagerness to do justice to the allotted function.

(Continued on page 37)

Music to My Ears

Continued from page 30

What Poulenc has created is less a liturgical expression than a celebration in sound, arranged in a suite of movements (the first and last fast, the others fast, slow, fast, slow) based on the familiar texts—Gloria, Laudamus Te, Domine Deus, etc. But, as many of his predecessors borrowed from popular idioms of their time, so it sounds to me that Poulenc has not been constrained in his use of harmonies, rhythms, and melodic turns more commonly associated with the chanson, even the café chanson, than with either the church or the concert hall. I found much of it a delightfully sophisticated exercise in seeming naivete, up to the concluding "Amen," which lolls about in a relaxed intellectual attitude more suggestive of Gounod and Franck than Poulenc. Just what it means doubtless will be clarified at a later hearing. This one profited immensely from the impassioned purity of Adele Addison's singing of the solo sections (especially the "Domine Deus"), her reverence for Music as well as meaning. The chorus trained by Alfred Nash Patterson was thoroughly responsive to Munch's animated direction.

Lorin Hollander was a much more interesting musical phenomenon as a sub-teen performer of Mozart with Thomas Scherman and the Little Orchestra in Hunter College a few years ago than he was as a sixteen-year-old soloist in the Khachaturian Piano Concerto with the New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein in Carnegie Hall a few days ago. The purity of his original musical impulse has been replaced by an adult calculation much more common, and far less worthwhile. He plays fast, loud, and hard, which may be good enough for Khachaturian, but not for music. In the preceding "Sinfonia India" of Chavez, Elyakum Shapira gave further evidence of the clarity, order, and penetration of his conductorial talent.

—IRVING KOLODIN.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
DEC 29 1960

Composer Poulenc Will Solo With Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Francis Poulenc, French composer, will visit Boston next month at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch.

Poulenc will be in Boston Jan. 20 and 21 to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria," a new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus which he composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances.

Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists in the concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
JAN 7 1961

Poulenc to Hear Boston Symphony Premiere "Gloria"

FRANCIS POULENC, distinguished French composer, will visit Boston Jan. 20 and 21 at the personal invitation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, to hear the orchestra perform the world premiere of his "Gloria."

The new work for orchestra, soprano and chorus was composed on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate in the performances. Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra will also be performed at these concerts. The composer and Evelyne Crochet will be soloists.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1961

Boston Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony came to Carnegie Hall, Jan. 7, for their second of five Saturday afternoon concerts. Conductor and orchestra were in rare form throughout the afternoon. The program opened with a glowing reading of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor. This was followed by the Bartok Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, which was left in sketch form at the composer's death and filled out by Tibor Serly, completed in June 1948. It is a compelling work, and it was competently, if somewhat timidly, performed by first desk violist Joseph de Pasquale. The high point of the program was Mr. Munch's inspired reading of Brahms' First Symphony, marked by a rich and free-flowing tonal texture and great dramatic intensity.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1961

Francis Poulenc, noted French composer, will visit this country to hear the world premiere of his "Gloria" given by the Boston Symphony on Jan. 20 and 21 in that city; he will also appear as a pianist with Evelyne Crochet in his Concerto for Two Pianos at the same concerts. . . .

Jean Hubeau, pianist, and Maurice Fleuri, violinist, were heard in a sonata program at Maison Française at New York University on Nov. 3, playing works by Mozart, Fauré and other composers.

Buzzelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York
TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,378,352
JAN 27 1961

First Performers

Sir:

A sad mistake appears in your Jan. 13 issue. First New York performance of Barber's Die Natali was credited to New York Philharmonic whereas first New York performance was given by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.
Manager
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Boston

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

128

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 24, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA . . . . . "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

ELGAR . . . . . Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36

Enigma: Andante

Variations:

I. "C.A.E." L'istesso tempo
II. "H.D.S.–P." Allegro
III. "R.B.T." Allegretto
IV. "W.M.B." Allegro di molto
V. "R.P.A." Moderato
VI. "Ysobel" Andantino
VII. "Troyte" Presto
VIII. "W.N." Allegretto
IX. "Nimrod" Moderato
X. "Dorabella–Intermezzo" Allegretto
XI. "G.R.S." Allegro di molto
XII. "B.G.N." Andante
XIII. "•••–Romanza" Moderato
XIV. "E.D.U.–Finale"

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
ROGER SHERMONT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

JAN 25 1961

Shermont Fine Soloist In Concerto of Brahms

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall, last night, the fifth concert of the Tuesday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted "The Moldau," by Smetana; Elgar's "Enigma" Variations, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Roger Shermont of the Orchestra as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The fifth Tuesday concert by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall last night, was most pleasant, and in the matter of its final number, truly distinguished.

Roger Shermont, a member of the Orchestra's first violin section for a decade past, was soloist in the D major Concerto of Brahms, and performed it superbly. Many accounts of this work, by numerous artists, exist in the memory over a span of more than 30 years, but none exceeds, for sheerly musical qualities, for proportion and exact, unforced execution this playing by Shermont.

In the first place it was scrupulously neat and clear in technic, precisely on pitch, sounding in a fine and ample resaonance. The bowing was masterfully controlled and every phrase turned gracefully.

Although this large masterwork has its dramatic moments (prevailingly in the orchestra), it is essentially a lyrical concerto, which demands to be sung all the way. This Shermont accomplished, and he did it with seeming ease and simplicity and unstinted warmth.

Furthermore, his solo performance had a noble distinction as a matter of overall expression and style. The cadenza was set forth not only as virtuoso display, which any cadenza is bound to be, but also as a continuation of the musical solo line.

At the end, Shermont received the ovation he so well merited, one in which cheers mingled with applause. He was called out to bow repeatedly, and the acclaim orchestra matched that of the audience.

Dr. Munch and the Orchestra furnished a whole-hearted and glowing accompaniment. Here I must enter a small caveat: Dr. Munch prefers more movement than the marking in the score suggests.

"The Moldau" was almost rousing in its hearty but polished reading, and Elgar's lovely "Enigma" Variations lacked nothing to please the ear and elevate the spirit.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

JAN 25 1961

Roger Shermont was heard as soloist last night in the Brahms Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076

JAN 25 1961

THE SYMPHONY

Shermont Earns Plaudits In Solo with Orchestra

By JULES WOLFFERS

More often than not a symphony orchestra is a graveyard of amibtions and hopes. Here are the former underkinder whose parents held out glittering hopes for future fame to pay for the unending hours of practise.

Here are the prizewinners from the greatest schools, conservatories and studios in the world. Here in the unending routine of rehearsal, the constant subjection of self to another, the added teaching, the burden of extra jobs, here the will to practice falls by the wayside, the solo playing experiences get fewer and fewer until the routined player becomes content to be a member of a great orchestra.

But there are the exceptions to the rule, the players who add the burden of hours of daily practice to their crowded schedules, who seek for constant self-improvement, who will not let the dream vanish.

To the credit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra let it be noted that there are so many exceptions as to prove the rule to its breaking point. To the credit of its conductor, Charles Munch, let it be said that he holds the door encouragingly open to give the prized opportunity of a solo appearance with the orchestra to any player who can earn it.

Flying Colors

Last night at Symphony Hall, Roger Shermont was given this opportunity to come front and center out of the ranks to perform the Brahms Violin Concerto. The young player from the Paris Conservatoire, who has completed ten years with the orchestra, came through with flying colors to indicate the conductor's faith in his abilities.

Particularly lovely was the second movement with its flowing lyrical sentiment so admirably expressed. There were one or two sots in the massive first movement and the dashing finale where there was an ever so lightly wavering from absolute certitude. But both movements went splendidly on the whole to draw a near-ovation after the first section and prolonged, hearty applause at the end.

As ever in his role of accompanist, Mr. Munch was a tower of strength with his clear beat and sympathetic support aiding the soloist in every way. And Mr. Shermont's colleagues gave him unstinting, whole-hearted support and their own generous applause, for they, more than any others, know how hard it is.

For the rest, the orchestra played Smetana's "The Moldau," and Mr. Munch provided a sensitive and understanding interpretation of Elgar's "Enigma" Variations to make this a completely satisfactory evening.

The Program

The fifth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series was presented last night at Symphony Hall. Roger Shermont was violin soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

"The Moldau" Symphonic Poem . . Smetana
Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36 Elgar
Violin Concerto in D maior, Op. 77 Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 22 1961

Music Events This Week

Roger Shermont will be guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday evening when Charles Munch conducts the fifth program of the Tuesday Series. This concert will mark Mr. Shermont's first appearance as soloist with the Orchestra. Born in Paris and a student of Boucherit and Charmy at the Paris Conservatory, he was soloist with the Orchestre National and the Radio Symphonique prior to his United States residence an dappointment to the Boston Symphony in 1950.

Mr. Shermont will be heard in Brahms' Violin Concerto. Doctor Munch will also conduct Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau," and the "Enigma Variations" by Elgar.

Pianist Alexander Uninsky will make his first appearance with the Orchestra Friday and Saturday as soloist in Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3. Mr. Munch will include the first Boston performance of Alexander Tcherepnin's "Symphonic Prayer" plus Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and his Symphony No. 4.

Richard Burgin will conduct the next concert in Cambridge on Tuesday, Jan. 31 in "The Moldau" by Smetana, Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, the Tcherepnin "Symphonic Prayer" and Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 with Mr. Uninsky.

Alexander Uninsky was born in Kiev an dhad his early training at the Conservatory there before his family moved to Paris where he was a pupil of Isidor Philipp. Awarded first prize at the International Chopin Competition at Warsaw in 1932, Mr. Uninsky performed throughout Europe before he made his first South American tour in 1940. From South America Mr. Uninsky came to the United States and he has since performed with many orchestras in this country.

Erich Leinsdorf will be the Orchestra's guest conductor at the concerts to be given Feb. 3 through 21.

TODAY

MILDRED MILLER, Met. Opera mezzo soprano, Jordan Hall, 3:00 p.m., to benefit the New England Conservatory Scholarship Fund. Tickets at box office.

LOIS MARSHALL, Canadian soprano, Newton High School, 4 p.m. Newton Community Concerts Series. Sold out. Admission by card only.

GREATER BOSTON YOUTH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Marvin Rabin conductor, at B.U. Sargent Gym, 205 Univerr. Road., 2:30 p.m. Informal concert. Admission free.

N.E.C. TOUR CHORUS AND BRASS CHOIR, conducted by Lorna Cooke de Varon and Roger Voisin, Jewett Arts Center, Wellesley College, 8:30 p.m. Open to the public.

COMMUNITY CHORUS of Wayland, Sudbury and Lincoln, Kalman Nyiregyvak, conductor in rare unheard Emanuel by Bach and other works. Wayland Junior High School Auditorium, Wayland Center, 3:00 p.m. Nominal price tickets at door.

WEDNESDAY

N.E. JEWISH MUSIC FORUM, second concert, Temple Israel House, Longwood Avenue at Riverway, 8:30 p.m. Joseph Silverstein, violin; Cantor Gregor Sheikar, tenor. Reservation cards at door.

STUDENT RECITAL, N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

THURSDAY

QUARTETTO ITALIANO, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Final chamber music concert on the B.U. Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Mozart, E-flat maior, K. 428; Chopin, Quartet, No. 2 (first Boston performance); Schumann, A maior. Remaining seats at box office.

FRIDAY

MOZART FESTIVAL ORCHESTRA, Baird Hastings, conductor, Recital Hall, New England Conservatory, 8:30 p.m. First performance (concert version) of Mr. Hastings's translation of Mozart's first three-act opera, 'La Finta Semplice,' called in English, 'The Clever Flirt.' Singers include Antonia Dalapas, Jenneke Barron, Phyllis Juster, Richard Conrad, John Morabito, David Bennett and Edward Durbeck.

128

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 24, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA.....“The Moldau” (“Vltava”), Symphonic Poem

ELGAR.....Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36

Enigma: Andante

Variations:

I. “C.A.E.” L'istesso tempo
II. “H.D.S.–P.” Allegro
III. “R.B.T.” Allegretto
IV. “W.M.B.” Allegro di molto
V. “R.P.A.” Moderato
VI. “Ysobel” Andantino
VII. “Troyte” Presto
VIII. “W.N.” Allegretto
IX. “Nimrod” Moderato
X. “Dorabella–Intermezzo” Allegretto
XI. “G.R.S.” Allegro di molto
XII. “B.G.N.” Andante
XIII. “–Romanza” Moderato
XIV. “E.D.U.–Finale”

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS.....Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST

ROGER SHERMONT

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076

JAN 25 1961

THE SYMPHONY

Shermont Earns Plaudits In Solo with Orchestra

By JULES WOLFFERS

More often than not a symphony orchestra is a graveyard of amibtions and hopes. Here are the former underkinder whose parents held out glittering hopes for future fame to pay for the unending hours of practise.

Here are the prizewinners from the greatest schools, conservatories and studios in the world. Here in the unending routine of rehearsal, the constant subjection of self to another, the added teaching, the burden of extra jobs, here the will to practice falls by the wayside, the solo playing experiences get fewer and fewer until the routined player becomes content to be a member of a great orchestra.

But there are the exceptions to the rule, the players who add the burden of hours of daily practice to their crowded schedules, who seek for constant self-improvement, who will not let the dream vanish.

To the credit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra let it be noted that there are so many exceptions as to prove the rule to its breaking point. To the credit of its conductor, Charles Munch, let it be said that he holds the door encouragingly open to give the prized opportunity of a solo appearance with the orchestra to any player who can earn it.

Flying Colors

Last night at Symphony Hall, Roger Shermont was given this opportunity to come front and center out of the ranks to perform the Brahms Violin Concerto. The young player from the Paris Conservatoire, who has completed ten years with the orchestra, came through with flying colors to vindicate the conductor's faith in his abilities.

Particularly lovely was the second movement with its flowing lyrical sentiment so admirably expressed. There were one or two sots in the massive first movement and the dashing finale where there was an ever so lightly wavering from absolute certitude. But both movements went splendidly on the whole to draw a near-ovation after the first section and prolonged, hearty applause at the end.

As ever in his role of accompanist, Mr. Munch was a tower of strength with his clear beat and sympathetic support aiding the soloist in every way. And Mr. Shermont's colleagues gave him unstinting, whole-hearted support and their own generous applause, for they, more than any others, know how hard it is.

For the rest, the orchestra played Smetana's “The Moldau,” and Mr. Munch provided a sensitive and understanding interpretation of Elgar's “Enigma” Variations to make this a completely satisfactory evening.

The Program

The fifth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series was presented last night at Symphony Hall. Roger Shermont was violin soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

“The Moldau” Symphonic Poem..Smetana
Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 36 Elgar
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77 Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 22 1961

Music Events This Week

Roger Shermont will be guest artist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday evening when Charles Munch conducts the fifth program of the Tuesday Series. This concert will mark Mr. Shermont's first appearance as soloist with the Orchestra. Born in Paris and a student of Boucherit and Charmy at the Paris Conservatory, he was soloist with the Orchestre National and the Radio Symphonique prior to his United States residence an dappointment to the Boston Symphony in 1950.

Mr. Shermont will be heard in Brahms' Violin Concerto. Doctor Munch will also conduct Smetana's Symphonic Poem, “The Moldau,” and the “Enigma Variations” by Elgar.

Pianist Alexander Uninsky will make his first appearance with the Orchestra Friday and Saturday as soloist in Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3. Mr. Munch will include the first Boston performance of Alexander Tcherepnin's “Symphonic Prayer” plus Beethoven's Overture to “Coriolan” and his Symphony No. 4.

Richard Burgin will conduct the next concert in Cambridge on Tuesday, Jan. 31 in “The Moldau” by Smetana, Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, the Tcherepnin “Symphonic Prayer” and Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 with Mr. Uninsky.

Alexander Uninsky was born in Kiev an dhad his early training at the Conservatory there before his family moved to Paris where he was a pupil of Isidor Philipp. Awarded first prize at the International Chopin Competition at Warsaw in 1932, Mr. Uninsky performed throughout Europe before he made his first South American tour in 1940. From South America Mr. Uninsky came to the United States and he has since performed with many orchestras in this country.

Erich Leinsdorf will be the Orchestra's guest conductor at the concerts to be given Feb. 3 through 21.

TODAY

MILDRED MILLER, Met. Opera mezzo soprano, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m., to benefit the New England Conservatory Scholarship Fund. Tickets at box office.

LOIS MARSHALL, Canadian soprano, Newton High School, 4:00 p.m. Newton Community Concerts Series. Sold out. Admission by card only.

GREATER BOSTON YOUTH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Marvin Rabin, conductor, at B.U. Sargent Gym, 203 University Road, 2:30 p.m. Informal concert. Admission free.

N.E.C. TOUR CHORUS AND BRASS CHOIR, conducted by Lorna Cooke de Varon and Roger Voisin, Jewett Arts Center, Wellesley College, 8:00 p.m. Open to the public.

COMMUNITY CHORUS of Weston, Wayland, Sudbury and Lincoln, Kalman Novak, conductor in rarely-heard F major by Bach and other works. Wayland Junior High School Auditorium, Wayland Center, 3:00 p.m. Nominal price tickets at door.

WEDNESDAY

N.E. JEWISH MUSIC FORUM, season's second concert, Temple Israel Meeting House, Longwood Avenue at Riverway, 8:30 p.m. Joseph Silverstein, violinist, Cantor Gregor Shelkan, tenor. Entrance cards at door.

STUDENT RECITAL, N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

THURSDAY

QUARTETTO ITALIANO, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Final chamber music event on the B.U. Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Mozart, E-flat major, K. 428; Chedini, Quartet No. 2 (first Boston performance); Schumann, A major. Remaining seats at box office.

FRIDAY

MOZART FESTIVAL ORCHESTRA, Baird Hastings, conductor, Recital Hall, New England Conservatory, 8:30 p.m. First performance (concert version) of Mr. Hasting's translation of Mozart's first three-act opera, “La Finta Semplice,” called in English, “The Clever Flirt.” Singers include Antonia Dalapes, Jenneke Barron, Phyllis Juster, Richard Conrad, John Morabito, David Bennett and Edward Durbeck.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

JAN 25 1961

Shermont Fine Soloist In Concerto of Brahms

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall, last night, the fifth concert of the Tuesday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted “The Moldau,” by Smetana; Elgar's “Enigma” Variations, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Roger Shermont of the Orchestra as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The fifth Tuesday concert by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall last night, was most pleasant, and in the matter of its final number, truly distinguished.

Roger Shermont, a member of the Orchestra's first violin section for a decade past, was soloist in the D major Concerto of Brahms, and performed it superbly. Many accounts of this work, by numerous artists, exist in the memory over a span of more than 30 years, but none exceeds, for sheerly musical qualities, for proportion and exact, unforced execution this playing by Shermont.

In the first place it was scrupulously neat and clear in technic, precisely on pitch, sounding in a fine and ample resaonance. The bowing was masterfully controlled and every phrase turned gracefully. Although this large masterwork has its dramatic moments (prevailingly in the orchestra), it is essentially a lyrical concerto, which demands to be sung all the way. This Shermont accomplished, and he did it with seeming ease and simplicity and unstinted warmth.

Furthermore, his solo performance had a noble distinction as a matter of overall expression and style. The cadenza was set forth not only as virtuoso display, which any cadenza is bound to be, but also as a continuation of the musical solo line.

At the end, Shermont received the ovation he so well merited, one in which cheers mingled with applause. He was called out to bow repeatedly, and the acclaim orchestra matched that of the audience.

Dr. Munch and the Orchestra furnished a whole-hearted and glowing accompaniment. Here I must enter a small caveat: Dr. Munch prefers more movement than the marking in the score suggests.

“The Moldau” was almost rousing in its hearty but polished reading, and Elgar's lovely “Enigma” Variations lacked nothing to please the ear and elevate the spirit.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

JAN 25 1961

Roger Shermont was heard as soloist last night in the Brahms Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony.

BLANK PAGE

130

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... *Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

TCHEREPNIN ..... Symphonic Prayer
(First performance in Boston)

PROKOFIEV ..... Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26

I. Andante; Allegro
II. Theme: Andantino
Variation I. L'istesso tempo
Variation II. Allegro
Variation III. Allegro moderato
Variation IV. Andante meditativo
Variation V. Allegro giusto
Theme: L'istesso tempo
III. Finale: Allegro ma non troppo

SOLOIST
ALEXANDER UNINSKY
MR. UNINSKY uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[841]

BALDWIN
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 28 1961

La musique

A Boston, avec Charles Munch et Uninsky

par Edgard FEDER

NOUS présentons nos humbles excuses à notre éminent confrère de Boston pour avoir envahi son fief, la semaine dernière, afin d'écouter "chez eux", dans le cadre du magnifique "Symphony Hall", les merveilleux musiciens de l'Orchestre de Boston, dirigés par Charles Münch. L'affiche était si pleine de promesses que son attrait rendait le voyage inévitable. Nous n'avons pas à le regretter, car nous eûmes ainsi l'occasion d'assister à l'un des concerts les plus remarquables dont nous ayons souvenir.

D'abord, l'orchestre même. Nous l'avons entendu d'innombrables fois, à Carnegie Hall, et toujours avec une admiration sans réserves. Mais dans l'austère et digne "Symphony Hall", dont l'acoustique est étonnante de résonance veloutée et où les musiciens se sentent sans doute plus à leur aise, la cohésion instrumentale, la fusion de sonorités, l'ampleur et la richesse des timbres, la netteté d'articulation — bref, toutes les qualités dont s'enorgueillit si justement cet orchestre unique furent mieux encore mises en valeur, réaffirmant ainsi la suprématie absolue d'une phalange symphonique sans rivale dans le monde.

Charles Münch, dans une forme sensationnelle, étincelant de jeunesse et d'entrain, commença la soirée par l'ouverture "Coriolan" et la IVème Symphonie de Beethoven. Ce fut un Beethoven robuste, expressif, imbu tout à la fois de la tendresse virile et du souffle gigantesque correspondant à l'image idéale que l'on pourrait se faire du Titan. La IVème Symphonie est l'une de celles qui, pour des raisons mystérieuses, est moins fréquemment jouée, moins connue, voire moins appréciée que les autres. Pour nous, c'est l'une des plus miraculeusement belles, peut-être même notre favorite.

Elle n'est affublée d'aucun titre ou histoire posthume — elle n'est ni "héroïque", ni "pastorale", ni "fatidique", ni "dionysiaque" — ni même "neuvième"! C'est de la musique pure, du plus noble cru concevable.

AVEC la même éloquence héroïque, M. Münch fit entendre, en première audition à Boston, l'"Oraison symphonique" d'Alexandre Tcherepnine, le grand compositeur contemporain dont, après avoir écouté la IVème Symphonie, il y a deux ans, nous admirions tellement l'immense talent et la vaste érudition. L'"Oraison" non seulement nous confirme dans cette attitude, mais nous laisse persuadé que M. Tcherepnine appartient à l'Histoire universelle de la Musique.

Il s'exprime avec une puissance extraordinaire. Sa pensée est précise, concentrée, d'une concision remarquable; en effet, l'oeuvre ne dure que huit ou neuf minutes, malgré une abondance de matériel qui aurait facilement servi de prétexte à de longs discours. Mais Alexandre Tcherepnine, comme tous les vrais et grands créateurs, connaît l'importance de ces deux notions essentielles: choix et discipline. Il en a fait le plus heureux des usages et, en conséquence, l'"Oraison symphonique" est un réel chef-d'oeuvre.

ENFIN, le célèbre pianiste Alexandre Uninsky joua le IIIème Concerto de Prokofieff. Les mots nous font défaut pour rendre pleine justice à la façon phénoménale dont M. Uninsky interprète ce formidable Concerto. Alexandre Uninsky possède une virtuosité absolument ahurissante, cependant il n'en abuse jamais. Ses doigts d'acier savent faire chanter une cantilène lyrique comme si c'était une douce caresse. Son sens rythmique est d'une "plasticité" incroyable, qui oblige pratiquement ses auditeurs à emboîter son pas, tellement son jeu est mesmérique.

Quant à son acuité d'esprit, elle lui permet de trouver pour chaque phrase l'équilibre sonore qui lui convient. Et, grâce à ses moyens illimités, il réalise ses intentions avec la plus grande aisance, comme si quelque bonne fée se trouvait à son service. La bonne fée existe bien: c'est son prodigieux talent — un talent d'une qualité et d'une envergure rares, qui a trouvé dans cette mémorable et féconde collaboration avec Charles Münch l'occasion bénie de s'épanouir dans toute sa splendeur.

'Symphonic Prayer' Given Boston Première

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
FEB 5 - 1961

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 26 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

SCREEN—"The Children will have a good time," was the verdict for "Swiss Family Robinson," at the Met. Jack Lemmon's performance was "a delight from start to finish" in Keith Memorial's "Wackiest Ship." At the Fenway, "The World of Apu" was the highest expression of great art. "The Misfits," at Lowe's Orpheum was an exciting swan song for Clark Gable.

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony Tcherepnine premiere and pianist Uninsky provided an excellent program. The Mozart Anniversary concert by the Mozart Festival Orchestra fell short in performance. Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin were "superb" in violin-piano sonatas at Symphony Hall. Early Italian music was enjoyed at the Museum of Fine Arts as presented by the Chorus Pro Musica. At John Hancock Hall, the Tamburitzans of Duquesne put on an exciting "perpetual motion" show. "Giddy but often commendable," was the verdict for the NEOT "Carmen" at the Wilbur. Lisa della Casa was "surperior in almost every way" at the Morning Musicales. Good playing but poor material marked Claudio Arrau's piano recital at Symphony Hall.

Symphony Program

The Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Symphony will contain two first Boston hearings. Alexander Uninsky will have his debut with the orchestra, playing Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto, and Alexander Tcherepnin's "Symphonic Prayer" will be given its first local performance.

The other works are Beethoven's: the Overture to "Coriolan" and the Fourth Symphony.

Munch Guides Performance Of New Work by Tcherepnin

By Louis Chapin

In most respects yesterday's Boston Symphony concert was an emblem of programatic balance and splendor. Its early half consisted of Beethoven, from the second level of performance frequency, and its latter half began with a new work and concluded with a "classic modern" by Prokofiev.

The Beethoven Overture to "Coriolan" made its instant proclamation with energy. Even under the cantabile of the second subject there persisted with more than the usual emphasis a periodic throb in the basses, as though the dramatic necessities of the story were refusing to be put aside by mere melody.

Looking to the next Beethoven on the program, his Fourth Symphony, the usual "even-numbered" associations came to thought, encouraged by Mr. Burk's program notes, richly informative as always. But Schumann's reference to this symphony as a "Greek maiden between two Norse giants" would suggest either that he and Charles Munch think of the work from different perspectives or that the latter's picture of Greek maidenhood was somewhat Amazonian in aspect.

* * *

Also, listening to the near-fury of the first movement, one could easily speculate as to how this symphony might stand critically with the Second and "Pastoral" as neighbors instead of the "Eroica" and Fifth.

Whatever one's preferences, this attitude toward Beethoven prepared the atmosphere superbly for a splendid new work by Alexander Tcherepnin, entitled "Symphonic Prayer." This brief but full-bodied orchestral statement has something to say, and says it with eloquent ingenuity. Its character was confirmed during a quick conversation with the composer immediately following the concert.

* * *

The work describes, for him, what happens to a man between the time he approaches a church, conscious of its detached immensity, and the time, after entering and praying, when he finds his more subjective sense of its meaning liberating him from the weight of his problems. His music effectively combines the objective approach, as its first section piles up shimmering tonal architecture on the basis of a carefully distributed nine-note series or scale, with the subjective realization of the prayer itself, in the third section, intimately sonorous as it explores the orchestra's voice from unearthly violin overtones to sombre bass brass. The path between, in the second section, moves through a series of searching rhythms and sounds, and the fourth section recapitulates the first, but this time growing from within to a tremendous "alleluia" (the composer's word).

Alexander Uninsky, who next played Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto with his quiet command of the instrument's and the music's strong resources, deserves for his achievement some of the space given here to Beethoven and Tcherepnin. But the brilliance of his music was, in its way, having to change the subject, even though it filled out the program impressively. And the subject, as Mr. Tcherepnin adds his musical observations to those last week of M. Poulenc, seems to resist change.

130

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... *Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

TCHEREPNIN ..... Symphonic Prayer
(First performance in Boston)

PROKOFIEV ..... Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26

I. Andante; Allegro
II. Theme: Andantino
Variation I. L'istesso tempo
Variation II. Allegro
Variation III. Allegro moderato
Variation IV. Andante meditativo
Variation V. Allegro giusto
Theme: L'istesso tempo
III. Finale: Allegro ma non troppo

SOLOIST
ALEXANDER UNINSKY
Mr. UNINSKY uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

France Amérique 2/12/61

La musique

A Boston, avec Charles Munch et Uninsky

par Edgard FEDER

NOUS présentons nos humbles excuses à notre éminent confrère de Boston pour avoir envahi son fief, la semaine dernière, afin d'écouter "chez eux", dans le cadre du magnifique "Symphony Hall", les merveilleux musiciens de l'Orchestre de Boston, dirigés par Charles Münch. L'affiche était si pleine de promesses que son attrait rendait le voyage inévitable. Nous n'avons pas à le regretter, car nous eûmes ainsi l'occasion d'assister à l'un des concerts les plus remarquables dont nous ayons souvenir.

D'abord, l'orchestre même. Nous l'avons entendu d'innombrables fois, à Carnegie Hall, et toujours avec une admiration sans réserves. Mais dans l'austère et digne "Symphony Hall", dont l'acoustique est étonnante de résonance veloutée et où les musiciens se sentent sans doute plus à leur aise, la cohésion instrumentale, la fusion de sonorités, l'ampleur et la richesse des timbres, la netteté d'articulation — bref, toutes les qualités dont s'enorgueillit si justement cet orchestre unique furent mieux encore mises en valeur, réaffirmant ainsi la suprématie absolue d'une phalange symphonique sans rivale dans le monde.

Charles Münch, dans une forme sensationnelle, étincelant de jeunesse et d'entrain, commença la soirée par l'ouverture "Coriolan" et la IVème Symphonie de Beethoven. Ce fut un Beethoven robuste, expressif, imbu tout à la fois de la tendresse virile et du souffle gigantesque correspondant à l'image idéale que l'on pourrait se faire du Titan. La IVème Symphonie est l'une de celles qui, pour des raisons mystérieuses, est moins fréquemment jouée, moins connue, voire moins appréciée que les autres. Pour nous, c'est l'une des plus miraculeusement belles, peut-être même notre favorite.

Elle n'est affublée d'aucun titre ou histoire posthume — elle n'est ni "héroïque", ni "pastorale", ni "fatidique", ni "dionysiaque" — ni même "neuvième"! C'est de la musique pure, du plus noble cru concevable.

AVEC la même éloquence héroïque, M. Münch fit entendre, en première audition à Boston, l'"Oraison symphonique" d'Alexandre Tcherepnine, le grand compositeur contemporain dont, après avoir écouté la IVème Symphonie, il y a deux ans, nous admirions tellement l'immense talent et la vaste érudition. L'"Oraison" non seulement nous confirme dans cette attitude, mais nous laisse persuadé que M. Tcherepnine appartient à l'Histoire universelle de la Musique.

Il s'exprime avec une puissance extraordinaire. Sa pensée est précise, concentrée, d'une concision remarquable; en effet, l'oeuvre ne dure que huit ou neuf minutes, malgré une abondance de matériel qui aurait facilement servi de prétexte à de longs discours. Mais Alexandre Tcherepnine, comme tous les vrais et grands créateurs, connaît l'importance de ces deux notions essentielles: choix et discipline. Il en a fait le plus heureux des usages et, en conséquence, l'"Oraison symphonique" est un réel chef-d'oeuvre.

ENFIN, le célèbre pianiste Alexandre Uninsky joua le IIIème Concerto de Prokofieff. Les mots nous font défaut pour rendre pleine justice à la façon phénoménale dont M. Uninsky interprète ce formidable Concerto. Alexandre Uninsky possède une virtuosité absolument ahurissante; cependant il n'en abuse jamais. Ses doigts d'acier savent faire chanter une cantilène lyrique comme si c'était une douce caresse. Son sens rythmique est d'une "plasticité" incroyable, qui oblige pratiquement ses auditeurs à emboîter son pas, tellement son jeu est mesmérique.

Quant à son acuité d'esprit, elle lui permet de trouver pour chaque phrase l'équilibre sonore qui lui convient. Et, grâce à ses moyens illimités, il réalise ses intentions avec la plus grande aisance, comme si quelque bonne fée se trouvait à son service. La bonne fée existe bien: c'est son prodigieux talent — un talent d'une qualité et d'une envergure rares, qui a trouvé dans cette mémorable et féconde collaboration avec Charles Münch l'occasion bénie de s'épanouir dans toute sa splendeur.

nic Prayer' Given Boston Première

Box 2078, Bo...
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
FEB 5- 1961

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 26 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

SCREEN—"The Children will have a good time," was the verdict for "Swiss Family Robinson," at the Met. Jack Lemmon's performance was "a delight from start to finish" in Keith Memorial's "Wackiest Ship." At the Fenway, "The World of Apu" was the highest expression of great art. "The Misfits," at Lowe's Orpheum was an exciting swan song for Clark Gable.

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony Tcherepnine premiere and pianist Uninsky provided an excellent program. The Mozart Anniversary concert by the Mozart Festival Orchestra fell short in performance. Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin were "superb" in violin-piano sonatas at Symphony Hall. Early Italian music was enjoyed at the Museum of Fine Arts as presented by the Chorus Pro Musica. At John Hancock Hall, the Tamburitzans of Duquesne put on an exciting "perpetual motion" show. "Giddy but often commendable," was the verdict for the NEOT "Carmen" at the Wilbur. Lisa della Casa was "superior in almost every way" at the Morning Musicales. Good playing but poor material marked Claudio Arrau's piano recital at Symphony Hall.

Symphony Program

The Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Symphony will contain two first Boston hearings. Alexander Uninsky will have his debut with the orchestra, playing Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto, and Alexander Tcherepnin's "Symphonic Prayer" will be given its first local performance.

The other works are Beethoven's the Overture to "Coriolan" and the Fourth Symphony.

Munch Guides Performance Of New Work by Tcherepnin

By Louis Chapin

In most respects yesterday's Boston Symphony concert was an emblem of programatic balance and splendor. Its early half consisted of Beethoven, from the second level of performance frequency, and its latter half began with a new work and concluded with a "classic modern" by Prokofiev.

The Beethoven Overture to "Coriolan" made its instant proclamation with energy. Even under the cantabile of the second subject there persisted with more than the usual emphasis a periodic throb in the basses, as though the dramatic necessities of the story were refusing to be put aside by mere melody.

Looking to the next Beethoven on the program, his Fourth Symphony, the usual "even-numbered" associations came to thought, encouraged by Mr. Burk's program notes, richly informative as always. But Schumann's reference to this symphony as a "Greek maiden between two Norse giants" would suggest either that he and Charles Munch think of the work from different perspectives or that the latter's picture of Greek maidenhood was somewhat Amazonian in aspect.

* * *

Also, listening to the near-fury of the first movement, one could easily speculate as to how this symphony might stand critically with the Second and "Pastoral" as neighbors instead of the "Eroica" and Fifth.

Whatever one's preferences, this attitude toward Beethoven prepared the atmosphere superbly for a splendid new work by Alexander Tcherepnin, entitled "Symphonic Prayer." This brief but full-bodied orchestral statement has something to say, and says it with eloquent ingenuity. Its character was confirmed during a quick conversation with the composer immediately following the concert.

* * *

The work describes, for him, what happens to a man between the time he approaches a church, conscious of its detached immensity, and the time, after entering and praying, when he finds his more subjective sense of its meaning liberating him from the weight of his problems. His music effectively combines the objective approach, as its first section piles up shimmering tonal architecture on the basis of a carefully distributed nine-note series or scale, with the subjective realization of the prayer itself, in the third section, intimately sonorous as it explores the orchestra's voice from unearthly violin overtones to sombre bass brass. The path between, in the second section, moves through a series of searching rhythms and sounds, and the fourth section recapitulates the first, but this time growing from within to a tremendous "alleluia" (the composer's word).

Alexander Uninsky, who next played Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto with his quiet command of the instrument's and the music's strong resources, deserves for his achievement some of the space given here to Beethoven and Tcherepnin. But the brilliance of his music was, in its way, having to change the subject, even though it filled out the program impressively. And the subject, as Mr. Tcherepnin adds his musical observations to those last week of M. Poulenc, seems to resist change.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
JAN 28 1961

Tcherepnin Work, Pianist Uninsky at Symphony Hall

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA [illegible] at Symphony Hall [illegible] afternoon, and will repeat [illegible] at 8. The 14th [illegible] Saturday series [illegible] Munch, music director, [illegible] the [illegible] program: Beethoven: "Coriolan" Overture and Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major; Tcherepnin: Symphonic Prayer, first performance in Boston; Prokofieff: Piano Concerto No. 3, Alexander Uninsky soloist (Boston debut).

By CYRUS DURGIN

There were two aspects of unusual interest at the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. One was a work new to Boston, the Symphonic Prayer by Alexander Tcherepnin, and a soloist who had not appeared here before, pianist Alexander Uninsky.

Tcherepnin's composition, though brief, is a powerhouse of energy and dissonance. It will not win immediate acceptance among those to whom music is a casual pleasure, but it surely will attract the attention of musicians and those of the public with both an ear and a mind for music.

It impressed me as a fine piece of work, though not one whose qualities will be assimilated all in one quick hearing. There is a great deal of technic beneath the bristling surface of the score, notably a serial technic exercised upon a scale of nine intervals, subsequently manipulated in the various devices of counterpoint.

Musicians may read the score, which already has been published, to their leisurely and lingering satisfaction. The music-liking laymen, having no such recourse, may wonder upon the purpose of this powerful and involved work, which seems to go from chaotic tension and pressure through supplication to ultimate resolution and calm. In doing so, they will be sensing, not objectively perceiving, its goal.

But if, as they do so, they recognize the purely musical means whereby the Symphonic Prayer makes its effect, they will be upon the right track. This work is not music of transparent simplicity but of extraordinary complexity, a difficult idiom, whose heart will be arrived at only by repeated and devoted listening. More than this I could not say upon casual acquaintance, except that its power is evident and its serious, wholehearted purpose equally apparent. But it is possible — and pleasant — to record that the Friday subscribers gave the Symphonic Prayer, and its composer when he appeared on stage, a sustained and cordial ovation.

Pianist Uninsky, an American citizen by way of Russian birth and Paris residence in youth, is a formidable technician of the keyboard. The Prokofieff Concerto No. 3 is a test piece for virtuosity as well as an example of earlier 20th Century music which mingles lyrical beauty and percussive energy. Uninsky passed the test triumphantly, and in doing so, impressed as a musician who ought to be heard here in other and older piano literature.

Until we have further opportunity to hear him, let us be thankful that we have heard this large and difficult Concerto performed with such mastery of fingers, muscles and musical brain—and with such a sweeping command of rhythm. The performance was spectacularly effective, even though Dr. Munch and the Orchestra parted company with Uninsky for a time in the second movement, they lagging a little behind the beat he maintained. At the end, Uninsky was rapturously received.

Beethoven began the afternoon, and, Dr. Munch at his best with this composer, was heard in a marvelously precise and vital performance of the B-flat Symphony. Commonly regarded as one of the "valley" symphonies (those between the dynamic peaks of the "Eroica", Fifth and Seventh) the Fourth is nonetheless a magnificently wrought symphonic score. This fact was, again, made abundantly plain in the constant statement-and-answer which make the fabric of the work.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf will be heard for the first time as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. His program will consist of Mozart's A major Symphony (K. 201). Interludes from Richard Strauss' Opera, "The Woman Without a Shadow", and the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
JAN 28 1961

FASTIDIOUS, INTRIGUING SCORE BY SYMPHONY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Alexander Nikolaievich Tcherepnin, the Russian-born, Chicago-based composer whose Fourth Symphony was heard here in a world premiere two years ago, yesterday contributed another fastidious and intriguing score played for the first time locally by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Unlike the Fourth Symphony, Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer is a work of compressed scope, approximately eight and one-half minutes duration: a musical statement of directness and simplicity. There are four sections within a single movement; and the whole is designed, patently, as an expression of doubt and despair resolved by faith. On the copy of the music received by Charles Munch is the inscription: "Glory to God in the highest and peace on earth, good will to men." Tcherepnin leaves no question that his is a testament of hope.

Brooding Notes

It begins austerely. A series of nine brooding notes opens the work, and these intervals are employed in steadily mounting tensions rather like the blows of a fist. Dissonant harmonies mark the second section preceded by a menacing timpani solo; and here the atmosphere becomes increasingly dark and tortured, a crescendo of woe finally shattered by the crash of the tam-tam. In the final episodes a liturgical theme is voiced by an orchestra divided like a cathedral choir into antiphonal parts; the timbre is hushed and mysterious, and the same nine notes are heard again now mounting as praise and affirmation.

The Symphonic Prayer is not a "big" work, nor does it scale the exalted heights of, say, the Poulenc Gloria, offered for the first time last week. The range is narrower; the idiom one of tension and release, a contemporary syntax punctuated by the composer's subjective touch-marks of harmony. But within a restricted and succinct form it says what it has to say briefly and well.

Formal Problems

The orchestration is resourceful. It calls for field drum and xylophone, among other percussive colors, yet these have a place in the scheme and are not merely exotic. One admires the clarity of Mr. Tcherepnin's textures, indeed of the musical thought, behind his sounds. The melodic inspiration of the Prayer is slight; however, the rhythmic modelling, the handling of formal problems, is expert. While personal emotional warmth seems distant, the reflective quality of the score and a skillful finish commend it as a solid, mature structure.

The composer, a tall, stooping, dark-haired man of 61, appeared onstage to acknowledge cordial applause, bowing to Charles Munch, the orchestra and the audience, now and then placing his palms together before him in a manner reminiscent of Hindu salutation.

Alexander Uninsky, appearing as soloist with the orchestra for the first time, delivered a flashing account of the difficult and masterly Prokofiev Piano Concerto. Although one can never reach absolute judgments on the basis of one concerta, Mr. Uninsky's architecture, control and singing tone declare the seasoned artist.

Romantic, Lyrical

His way with Prokofiev is definitely "Russian," That is, more romantic and lyrical than the wiry European and American approach, we have learned from the recent tours of such Soviet performers as Richter that the Russians tend to regard Prokofiev as more of a late romantic than we do (this is especially notable in the work of the younger generation of pianists like Bashkiroff) and to give his music a legato rather than a percussive character.

Mr. Uninsky (who is, incidentally, a naturalized American) brought to his pianism sufficient agility to preserve the concerto's fiery momentum. In concept, though, he stressed the gentler aspects of the piece. He made no attempt at bold theatricalism, and at all dynamic levels was conscious of sensitive poetic flow. The line lay close to the orchestra; generally, the artist held back aggressiveness in favor of pliant understatement. This was an extremely fine-grained interpretation.

The afternoon got underway with Dr. Munch offering a "Coriolan" overture devoid of fustian; and a gracious treatment of Beethoven's sunny Fourth Symphony. If there were a few questionable rallentandos in the finale of the latter, the conductor's reading was otherwise spacious and detailed and satisfying in proportion. I found it charming.

Next week-end Erich Leinsdorf will be guest conductor. He has scheduled the BSO premiere of Strauss's Interludes from "Die Frau ohne Schatten," Mozart's Symphony in A, No. 29 (K. 201), and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, Op. 100.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 14th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Alexander Uninsky was the piano soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62	Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60	Beethoven
Symphonic Prayer, Op. 93	Tcherepnin
Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26	Prokofiev

Advertisement
CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 546,862 S. 637,572
FEB 2 1961

Tcherepnin Work Hailed

The "Symphonic Prayer" of Alexander Tcherepnin was hailed as "a splendid new work" when performed by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last weekend.

Writing in the Christian Science Monitor, critic Louis Chapin commented: "This brief, full-bodied orchestral statement has something to say and says it with eloquent ingenuity."

Tcherepnin, a Chicago resident for much of the year and member of the De Paul University music faculty, describes the work as "what happens to a man between the time he approaches a church . . . and the time, after suffering and praying, when he finds his more subjective sense of its meaning liberating him from the weight of his problems."

BLANK PAGE

132

BLANK PAGE

134

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY–SIXTY-ONE

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:30 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

STRAUSS ..... Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten"
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 100

I. Andante
II. Allegro moderato
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro giocoso

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[905]

MAMARONECK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 8,436
FEB 8 1961

WORLD RENOWNED symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf, shown above in his Larchmont home with two of his five children, twelve - year - old Hester, left, and eight-year-old Jenny, is now on a concert tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Hester attends Mamaroneck Junior High School, and Jenny is a pupil at the Chatsworth Avenue School. The conductor and his attractive wife, Anne, are also the parents of eighteen-year-old David, a Columbia University student, and sixteen-year-old Gregor and fifteen-year-old Joshua, both students at Mamaroneck High School.—Staff Photo by Paul Byrne.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1961

-Leinsdorf as Boston Symphony Guest

Scores Triumph in Prokofiev's Fifth

By Harold Rogers

Music emanates from Erich Leinsdorf in a lyrical line, whether aurally in a well-turned phrase, or visibly in his well-turned body. He has the grace of a premier danseur, yet his conducting is not balletic. He does nothing to stand between the music and his listeners.

This is not to say that he has no sense of the dramatic. Indeed he does, and his movements accordingly lead the way as the conflict thickens. His feet take root; his fists beat the air; with a raised arm he flings a thunderbolt. Yet he is incapable of an ungraceful gesture.

Bostonians have had many opportunities to appraise Mr. Leinsdorf's fine work in the past when he has appeared here while on tour with the Metropolitan Opera Association. Yesterday afternoon, however, they were given their first opportunity to see him in action on the Symphony Hall podium. The Boston Symphony musicians played their hearts out. It would have been impossible to do otherwise.

* * *

Mr. Leinsdorf's approach seems to be a simple one: he lets the music take its own shape. A tempo may be a little faster than we have been used to—as in the Allegro moderato of the Prokofiev Fifth Symphony, for instance—or the Adagio may have lacked a little interest that it has had for us in the past. But the sense of rightness prevailed throughout. He is obviously a man who serves the music.

He served Mozart superbly in the little 29th Symphony. Using a smaller orchestra, he brought forth a clarity of sound that was covered by a glowing patina of blend.

He then conducted the first Boston performance of a concert piece that he has extracted from Richard Strauss's opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten." Though two earlier concert versions have been prepared (one of them by Strauss himself), Mr. Leinsdorf explained earlier in the week that he felt they did not serve as well as they might.

He accordingly set to work to assemble certain portions, especially the interludes, into a unified whole. By careful juggling he found he could link them together without need of modulations; in fact, there is not a single note that was not composed by Strauss.

* * *

The acerb portions of the score hark back to "Elektra" and the limpid portions to the love scenes in "Der Rosenkavalier." Though Mr. Leinsdorf is to be commended for giving us some fine Straussian music that may not otherwise be heard in the concert hall (and seldom in the opera house), the piece naturally does not paint the kind of a picture that it would have, had Strauss intended it for a tone poem.

He concluded with the Prokofiev Fifth, a symphony that is doubtless an old friend to most Bostonians. That it is a great symphony is surely understood by now, and Mr. Leinsdorf, as stated above, let it have the reins until the finale. Then he took a tighter hold, spurred it on, and drove it across the double bar a winner.

The crowd cheered. Mr. Leinsdorf had scored a triumph at his Boston symphonic debut.

20 B THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, FEB. 4, 1961

LEINSDORF AT LAST IN SYMPHONY HALL

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Culminating in as stirring a performance of Prokofiev's craggy Fifth Symphony as one is apt to hear in a lifetime, the program of Erich Leinsdorf at yesterday's Boston Symphony concert was masterfully conducted.

It offered two very able readings plus one inspired account, the Prokofiev—and the debut of Mr. Leinsdorf with the BSO. For nearly a quarter-century this short, wiry, balding man, who celebrates his 49th birthday today, has been a puissant force in American music, both in the concert and opera. We know him best here for his work with the Metropolitan; too many years have been allowed to pass before he reached the stage of Symphony Hall; but yesterday proved worth the wait.

He is a conductor—though an American citizen of long standing—in the Central European tradition. Under his hands the Boston sound achieves unusual sonority, darkness and mellow sheen, although Mr. Leinsdorf does not cultivate lushness. His interpretations have character. The efficiency of his art is a joy.

Opera Technique

Something of the technique of the operatic conductor appears in his visual moulding of phrase. He has one of the most eloquent left hands imaginable, capable of summoning the spirit of the score by pure mime. But no player can miss the significance of his cues. The orchestral lines are tight, sonorities unblurred, tempos appropriate: his workmanship is meticulous. Clarity defines his methods.

Erich Leinsdorf abjures the ecstatic and the theatrical large romantic, gesture, and perhaps this is a limitation. On the other hand, he conveys the impression that he knows what he wants to express, has the sympathetic response of the ensemble, and says it with the blessed virtue of economy and grace. His is the classic sense of proportion.

The charming little Mozart symphony, a product of the composer's 18th year, exhibited a supple balance of parts in his design; the "Frau ohne Schatten," received enough opulent color to satisfy even the most insistent Strauss-ophile; while the diverse segments of the Prokofiev Fifth were integrated on a level worthy of Koussevitzky, the ultimate interpreter in my opinion. Firmness and control stamped each, and without metronomic rigidity.

Superior Strauss

Mr. Leinsdorf's version of Strauss's operatic interludes using the composer's orchestration, is superior to the master's own concert fantasy. When Strauss arranged the score for orchestra he emphasized those enchanting episodes reminiscent of his early style; he made it soud a second-cousin to "Rosenkavalier;" but Mr. Leinsdorf's work is closer to the truth about the opera, which is a mainstream composition, heading out of the late 19th century and youth, toward the 20th and age.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor, presented the 15th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30, and Tuesday at the same hour. Tomorrow it is repeated at 3 p.m.

Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201), Mozart
Interludes from the opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten"....Strauss
Symphony No. 5, Op. 100.....Prokofiev

It contains some of Strauss's most idyllic music, touched by a sunset glow of incandescent nostalgia. It also contains throbbing dissonances, harmonies of the most advanced nature, a dry, cutting edge. The Leinsdorf interludes capture this; but one finds the magnificent writing, despite lilt and color and percussionist Harold Thompson cranking the wind machine, vaporous and inconclusive. It cries out for the missing element: the stage. The libretto, which reads absurdly, is said to play well. Alas, no concert version quite suffices.

The Prokofiev Fifth, however, was in its proper sphere, and touched exalted heights. I note that I have called the Fifth "slapdash and uneven" during the past; and now exert a reviewer's innate right to inconsistency. Mr. Leinsdorf endowed the music with grandeur.

More Tortured

One was reminded of the Beethoven Ninth's scope and excitement and similar exaltation of mankind in this account. But the Prokofiev is more tortured, reflecting wartime tensions. The music surged forward irresistably yesterday, building gigantic climaxes; yet the inner voices of darkness were present, too. To give this symphony's contrasts (such as the tragic adagio, muscularly classic scherzo and bravura finale) a coherent form is a test; Mr. Leinsdorf added intensity, vitality and passion to logic. At the close audience bravos broke out. It's his birthday, but we get the presents.

Next week finds the first Boston performance of Ballanciced's Variations for Orchestra scheduled by Erich Leinsdorf in his guest conductor; Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Op. 84; and Brahms's Fourth Symphony, in E minor, Op. 98; and Excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" will also be heard.

Times 2/26/61

REPRISE

OPERA: Leontyne Price's Aida at the Met bids fair to being "one of the great Aidas of history." Lucine Amara made a favorable impression in her first Leonora in "Trovatore." In "Rigoletto," Robert Merrill was "wonderfully resonant and resplendent" in the title role and Mattiwilda Dobbs made her "Caro nome" an "elaborate and superb showpiece."

COMPOSERS: Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 was "smoothly constructed." . . . Barney Child's Symphony No. 2 was "a strong one-movement work." . . . Benjamin Lees' "Six Ornamental Etudes" were colorful and lively to the ear." . . . William Sydeman's Variations for Oboe and Harpsichord was "an ingratiating, even lyric work."

ORCHESTRAS: Erich Leinsdorf made "a distinct hit" conducting the Boston Symphony for the first time. . . . Thomas Schippers closed his engagement with the New York Philharmonic with a fine performance of Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra. . . . The Clarion Concert orchestra, under Newell Jenkins; the New York Sinfonietta, led by Max Goberman, and the "Music Forgotten and Remembered" ensemble, under Frederic Waldman, all rendered admirable service to early music.

RECITALISTS: Zino Francescatti gave an outstanding violin recital, as well as playing brilliantly with the Philadelphia Orchestra. . . . Among singers, the soprano voice of Martina Arroyo was "as luscious as ever" and Douglas Bredt, bass-baritone, sang with "assurance and musicality." . . . Gifted pianists were Phillip Evans, Zita Carno, Robert MacDonald and Joseph Bloch.

134

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:30 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

MOZART . . . . . Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

STRAUSS . . . . . Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten"
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Symphony No. 5, Op. 100

I. Andante
II. Allegro moderato
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro giocoso

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

MAMARONECK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 8,436
FEB 8 1961

WORLD RENOWNED symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf, shown above in his Larchmont home with two of his five children, twelve-year-old Hester, left, and eight-year-old Jenny, is now on a concert tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Hester attends Mamaroneck Junior High School, and Jenny is a pupil at the Chatsworth Avenue School. The conductor and his attractive wife, Anne, are also the parents of eighteen-year-old David, a Columbia University student, and sixteen-year-old Gregor and fifteen-year-old Joshua, both students at Mamaroneck High School.—Staff Photo by Paul Byrne.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1961

-Leinsdorf as Boston Symphony Guest

Scores Triumph in Prokofiev's Fifth

By Harold Rogers

Music emanates from Erich Leinsdorf in a lyrical line, whether aurally in a well-turned phrase, or visibly in his well-turned body. He has the grace of a premier danseur, yet his conducting is not balletic. He does nothing to stand between the music and his listeners.

This is not to say that he has no sense of the dramatic. Indeed he does, and his movements accordingly lead the way as the conflict thickens. His feet take root; his fists beat the air; with a raised arm he flings a thunderbolt. Yet he is incapable of an ungraceful gesture.

Bostonians have had many opportunities to appraise Mr. Leinsdorf's fine work in the past when he has appeared here while on tour with the Metropolitan Opera Association. Yesterday afternoon, however, they were given their first opportunity to see him in action on the Symphony Hall podium. The Boston Symphony musicians played their hearts out. It would have been impossible to do otherwise.

* * *

Mr. Leinsdorf's approach seems to be a simple one: he lets the music take its own shape. A tempo may be a little faster than we have been used to—as in the Allegro moderato of the Prokofiev Fifth Symphony, for instance—or the Adagio may have lacked a little interest that it has had for us in the past. But the sense of rightness prevailed throughout. He is obviously a man who serves the music.

He served Mozart superbly in the little 29th Symphony. Using a smaller orchestra, he brought forth a clarity of sound that was covered by a glowing patina of blend.

He then conducted the first Boston performance of a concert piece that he has extracted from Richard Strauss's opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten." Though two earlier concert versions have been prepared (one of them by Strauss himself), Mr. Leinsdorf explained earlier in the week that he felt they did not serve as well as they might.

He accordingly set to work to assemble certain portions, especially the interludes, into a unified whole. By careful juggling he found he could link them together without need of modulations; in fact, there is not a single note that was not composed by Strauss.

* * *

The acerb portions of the score hark back to "Elektra" and the limpid portions to the love scenes in "Der Rosenkavalier." Though Mr. Leinsdorf is to be commended for giving us some fine Straussian pages that may not otherwise be heard in the concert hall (and, seldom in the opera house), the piece naturally does not paint the kind of a picture that it would have, had Strauss intended it for a tone poem.

He concluded with the Prokofiev Fifth, a symphony that is doubtless an old friend to most Bostonians. That it is a great symphony is surely understood by now, and Mr. Leinsdorf, as stated above, let it have the reins until the finale. Then he took a tighter hold, spurred it on, and drove it across the double bar a winner.

The crowd cheered. Mr. Leinsdorf had scored a triumph at his Boston symphonic debut.

20 B THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, FEB. 4, 1961

LEINSDORF AT LAST IN SYMPHONY HALL

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Culminating in as stirring a performance of Prokofiev's craggy Fifth Symphony as one is apt to hear in a lifetime, the program of Erich Leinsdorf at yesterday's Boston Symphony concert was masterfully conducted.

It offered two very able readings plus one inspired account, the Prokofiev—and the debut of Mr. Leinsdorf with the BSO. For nearly a quarter-century this short, wiry, balding man, who celebrates his 49th birthday today, has been a puissant force in American music, both in the concert and opera. We know him best here for his work with the Metropolitan; too many years have been allowed to pass before he reached the stage of Symphony Hall; but yesterday proved worth the wait.

He is a conductor—though an American citizen of long standing—in the Central European tradition. Under his hands the Boston sound achieves unusual sonority, darkness and mellow sheen, although Mr. Leinsdorf does not cultivate lushness. His interpretations have character. The efficiency of his art is a joy.

Opera Technique

Something of the technique of the operatic conductor appears in his visual moulding of phrase. He has one of the most eloquent left hands imaginable, capable of summoning the spirit of the score by pure mime. But no player can miss the significance of his cues. The orchestral lines are tight, sonorities unblurred, tempos appropriate; his workmanship is meticulous. Clarity defines his methods.

Erich Leinsdorf abjures the ecstatic and the theatrical large romantic gesture, and perhaps this is a limitation. On the other hand, he conveys the impression that he knows what he wants to express, has the sympathetic response of the ensemble, and says it with the blessed virtue of economy and grace. His is the classic sense of proportion.

The charming little Mozart symphony, a product of the composer's 18th year, exhibited a supple balance of parts in its design; the "Frau ohne Schatten," received enough opulent color to satisfy even the most insistent Strauss-ophile; while the diverse segments of the Prokofiev Fifth were integrated on a level worthy of Koussevitzky, the ultimate interpreter in my opinion. Firmness and control stamped each, and without metronomic rigidity.

Superior Strauss

Mr. Leinsdorf's version of Strauss's operatic interludes using the composer's orchestration, is superior to the master's own concert fantasy. When Strauss arranged the score for orchestra he emphasized those enchanting episodes reminiscent of his early style; he made it sound a second cousin to "Rosenkavalier;" but Mr. Leinsdorf's work is closer to the truth about the opera, which is a mad, gaudy composition, heading out of the late 19th century and youth, toward the 20th and age.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor, presented the 15th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30, and Tuesday at the same hour. Tomorrow it is repeated at 3 p.m.

Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201) . . . Mozart
Interludes from the opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten" . . . Strauss
Symphony No. 5, Op. 100 . . . Prokofiev

It contains some of Strauss's most idyllic music, touched by a sunset glow of iridescent nostalgia. It also contains throbbing dissonances, harmonies of the most advanced nature, a dry, cutting edge. The Leinsdorf interludes capture this; but one finds the magnificent writing, despite lilt and color and percussionist Harold Thompson cranking the wind machine, vaporous and inconclusive. It cries out for the missing element: the stage. The libretto, which reads absurdly, is said to play well. Alas, no concert version quite suffices.

The Prokofiev Fifth, however, was in its proper sphere, and touched exalted heights. I note that I have called the Fifth "slapdash and uneven" during the past; and now exert a reviewer's innate right to inconsistency. Mr. Leinsdorf endowed the music with grandeur.

More Tortured

One was reminded of the Beethoven Ninth's scope and excitement and similar exaltation of mankind in this account. But the Prokofiev is more tortured, reflecting wartime tensions. The music surged forward irresistibly yesterday, building gigantic climaxes; yet the inner voices of darkness were present, too. To give this symphony's contrasts (such as the tragic adagio, muscularly classic scherzo and bravura finale) a coherent form is a test; Mr. Leinsdorf added intensity, vitality and passion to logic. At the close audience bravos broke out. It's his birthday, but we get the presents.

Next week finds the first Boston performance of Gallaplcida's Variations for Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf in his final current appearances as guest conductor; Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 3, Op. 72; Brahms's Fourth Symphony, in E minor, Op. 98; and Excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" will also be heard.

Times 2/26/61

REPRISE

OPERA: Leontyne Price's Aida at the Met bids fair to being "one of the great Aidas of history." . . . Lucine Amara made a favorable impression in her first Leonora in "Trovatore." In "Rigoletto," Robert Merrill was "wonderfully resonant and resplendent" in the title role and Mattiwilda Dobbs made her "Caro nome" an "elaborate and superb showpiece."

COMPOSERS: Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 was "smoothly constructed." . . . Barney Child's Symphony No. 2 was "a strong one-movement work." . . . Benjamin Lees' "Six Ornamental Etudes" were colorful and lively to the ear." . . . William Bydeman's Variations for Oboe and Harpsichord was "an ingratiating, even lyric work."

ORCHESTRAS: Erich Leinsdorf made "a distinct hit" conducting the Boston Symphony for the first time. . . . Thomas Schippers closed his engagement with the New York Philharmonic with a fine performance of Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra. . . . The Clarion Concert orchestra, under Newell Jenkins; the New York Sinfonietta, led by Max Goberman, and the "Music Forgotten and Remembered" ensemble, under Frederic Waldman, all rendered admirable service to early music.

RECITALISTS: Zino Francescatti gave an outstanding violin recital, as well as playing brilliantly with the Philadelphia Orchestra. . . . Among singers, the soprano voice of Martina Arroyo was "as luscious as ever" and Douglas Brault, bass-baritone, sang with "assurance and musicality." . . . Gifted pianists were Phillip Evans, Zita Carno, Robert MacDonald and Joseph Bloch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
FEB 5 - 1961

Piano Enhances Leinsdorf's Chat

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Although he's appeared here for more than two decades now, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony's guest conductor during the next fortnight, in a sense is a stranger to Boston audiences. The key man, the pivot, the wondersmith of any operatic performance, is the conductor; and also the most ubiquitous personality in the house. Mr. Leinsdorf has forged his reputation in the formidable and somewhat anonymous medium of the opera.

Currently, however, Bostonians are viewing him in a different role, of course, where he is by no means a stranger. In his 20's, Erich Leinsdorf's symphonic conducting received the imprimatur of Bruno Walter's approval, and of Toscannini, whose assistant he became in the Salzburg Festival in 1934. He has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras and has concertized for years throughout Europe.

It has been a long, distinguished career running parallel to his achievements in opera from the magnificent Wagnerian performances with which his name was associated in the early period at the Metropolitan, down to such latter-day triumphs as his "Godovon," "Arabella," and Mozart repertory; last year's splendid recorded "Turandot," and American premiere of Poulenc's "Dialogues of the Carmelites" and Walton's "Troilus and Crossida." The range is immense.

Strauss 'Frau'

Last week we chatted with Mr. Leinsdorf, a bald, wiry man of medium height, in the conductor's room of Symphony Hall between rehearsals. Appropriately, a signed portrait of Toscannini stood on the rim of a neatly-ordered desk; and Mr. Leinsdorf, inpeccably-tailored and thoughtful, sat with his hands folded, elbows jutting on leather arm-rests, the image of reflective solitude hemmed by a quartet of Boston music reviewers. It proved a deceptive image: the conductor expresses his views forcefully and well, but when he reaches the limitations of the verbal as one does in musical conversations, his enthusiasm propels him toward the piano to supply some apt musical illustration.

He told us that he had prepared the version of the Interludes from the opera "The Woman Without A Shadow," (Die Frau ohne Schatten) the Boston Symphony is playing at the concerts of this weekend and Tuesday evening. "Two suites have been made from this score," he said, "one published by Boosey and Hawkes and the other by Strauss. I have not transposed or altered any of this material; and my own view of this music seeks to capture the revolutionary qualities integral to the opera. Have you heard the Strauss? I have tried to avoid the lush, ripe aspects—I find that I grow tired of overly-sweet things — in order to convey both the lyric sweep and the astringent dissonances of this remarkably advanced work.

Musical Originality

"There are elements of "Die Frau ohne Schatten" that go back to Bethoven—like the D major of the Ninth Symphony." Here Mr. Leinsdorf hummed the Straussian passage and provided its equivalent in a swift Beethoven-esque trip to the piano.) "And we find other elements that penetrate far into the future. This troubled me the other day while I was studying the interludes: how could work so contemporary be so traidtional at the same time? What is originality in music? Surely the suite even today is remarkable. I concluded that musical originality is less a matter of means than of feeling; it is the feeling that is original, not the method of construction.

"For that reason I'm glad to be introducing Luigi Dallapiccola's work for the first time here. Dallapiccola is a Row composer—he uses the 12-tone technique—but he isn't merely constructing. He listens; you can find evidence that his inspiration derives from sources other than sheer mechanics; he listens. Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra" — it isn't varitions on a theme, but for orchestra—uses 13 simple devices which he inverts, turns this way and that, like a person looking into several mirrors, the images floating upside down, melting together; but the spirit is classic really, and wonderful in its clarity."

Mr. Leinsdorf again illustrated, and when he had finished declared with a grin: "I don't get much chance to play the piano any more in public, except when the Metropolitan goes on tour. I don't play the harpsichord during the New York Mozart performances; but when we tour the Met can't risk bringing a harpsichord along and uses a piano for 18th century recitativo. I was scheduled for the new "Turandot," but then this opportunity in Boston came along, and I went to Mr. Bing and said I'd have to be a mental case to turn it down. He agreed. So here I am.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 28 1961

Leinsdorf to Conduct

The Boston Symphony, during its next two weekends and on a subsequent tour, will be conducted, for the first time, by Erich Leinsdorf, who is at present musical consultant at the Metropolitan Opera. Mr. Leinsdorf, for his first series, will program Mozart, Strauss, and Prokofiev (Symphony No. 5).

This Tuesday at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Richard Burgin will conduct a program including Tcherepnin's "Symphonic Prayer" and Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto, with Alexander Uninsky as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 9 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: ERICH LEINSDORF CONDUCTS

Erich Leinsdorf made his first appearance here last weekend as guest conductor. His first program, as a guest's well might, smartly embraced a goodly range of styles and periods and carried the bonus of at least a quasi-novelty. His command of his musical material was evident, although one can only assume that a conductor on tour would make that his sine qua non. His command of the orchestral forces, however, was similarly evident, and this is a capacity that a conductor either possesses or doesn't—he can't store it up to draw upon while riding circuit.

For the benefit of those who set store by podium style, I can report that his beat is clear, that he uses a music stand but no score, that he eschews a baton and that his general conductorial manner is delicately terpsichorean. More to the point, he achieved a notably good balance among the choirs, produced crisp attacks, restrained the brass, infused life in the strings and achieved the aura of tension that marks the difference between just another concert and an occasion. If the results were not so electrifying as William Steinberg's first concert here last year, they nonetheless were an undoubted succes d'estime.

The quasi-novelty aforementioned was the first Boston performance of Mr. Leinsdorf's own concert version of Richard Strauss' almost forgotten opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten" ("The Woman Without a Shadow"). This opera is one Strauss-von Hofmannsthal collaboration that never quite came off, partly no doubt because its composition was interrupted by the First World War, but much more so due to the mystical and over intricate convolutions of the libretto and to the unevenness of the qualfty of the music. For by the time this work was completed, Strauss was well beyond the peak of his powers and had begun to echo his earlier works, as Eric Blom has pointed out, virtually to the point of self-plagiarism. Snatches that could have been taken right out of "Der Rosenkavalier," "Ein Heldenleben," "Don Quixote" and contrasting bits in the manner of "Elektra," are all very much in evidence. Had Mr. Leinsdorf put this suite together twenty years ago, when Strauss was far more in vogue, it might even have achieved some permanence in the orchestral repertory. As it is, it will probably be written off as gorgeously hued and easy to take but an out-of-date period piece.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened his concert with Mozart's A major Symphony, No. 29, K. 201, written when the composer was eighteen. This is an abrupt little work, but its melodic richness, refinement of detail, thematic unity and sturdiness of development mark it as perhaps the finest product of the first period of Mozart's career prior to his departure for Mannheim and Paris. Its scoring is about as far from Strauss' as it is possible to get—strings with two oboes and two horns—and Mr. Leinsdorf employed a reduced orchestra of about thirty-five players to maximum advantage. I would tend to cavil, though, with his penchant for taking the second subjects at so sharply a reduced tempo, thereby impairing to some extent the integrity of the musical line.

The concert concluded with the Fifth Symphony of Prokofiev. How clearly can I recall the impact of this work when Dr. Koussevitsky introduced it to America in two different performances in the autumn of 1945. It was unmistakable from the very outset that this first work in the symphonic form that Prokofiev had attempted in fifteen years possessed beyond all question a tragic sense, a warmth of communication and a spaciousness of concept that stamped it as one of the few great symphonies that had been written in two decades.

In the Fifth Symphony Prokofiev took leave of much of the dry angularity and percussive exuberance that had marked his earlier years and returned to an outwardly conservative form, but the prodigies of imagination that one associates with him are still to be found in the passage work. Indeed, that Prokofiev could maintain so meaningful a line directly back to the great western symphonic tradition is one of the more awesome aspects of this symphony. At the same time there were long tawdry patches of the Fifth presaging, as it turned out, a precipitant decline in his creative powers. If subsequently Prokofiev, like Strauss, lost his creative elan vital, or was robbed of it by the sinister edicts of Zhdanov, and so in the end barely could be distinguished from Shostakovitch or even Kabalevsky, the Fifth remains something of a modern classic. An obviously moved audience rendered prolonged homage to a deep probing performance of one of the finer musical evocations of the recent past.

Mr. Leinsdorf concludes his two-week stint this week-end with a program of Beethoven, Brahms and Wagner, featuring the first Boston performance of Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
FEB 6 - 1961

Symphony Tonight

The Boston Symphony's Saturday night concert, canceled on account of the snow, will take place tonight at 8:30 at Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 29, Strauss's Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten," and Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
FEB 5 - 1961

CONCERT POSTPONED

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for Saturday night in Symphony Hall was postponed to Monday night because of the storm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
JAN 21 1961

Symphony Reset

Yesterday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, postponed by the weather conditions, will be given tomorrow afternoon at Symphony Hall starting at 3:00.

All Friday subscribers' tickets will be honored tomorrow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
FEB 4 1961

135

Strauss Opera Excerpts Introduced by Leinsdorf

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 15th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera, as guest, conducted Mozart's Symphony in A major (K. 201), Interludes from the Opera "The Woman Without a Shadow" (first performance in Boston), by Richard Strauss, and the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Erich Leinsdorf enjoyed a complete triumph yesterday afternoon as he made his first appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Friday subscribers in Symphony Hall welcomed him without reservation, and at concert's end recalled him several times to the stage.

He brought with him some Richard Strauss very rare, indeed unknown in this city except for recordings: a sequence of Interludes from Richard Strauss' Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten," which translates literally into English as "The Woman Without a Shadow."

Though composed more than 40 years ago, this opera has been produced but once in the United States, at San Francisco in 1959. The Interludes which Leinsdorf himself put together (without any changes of orchestration or bridge passages) take up the time for scene changes in "The Woman Without a Shadow." How much of musical commentary or how quasi-descriptive they may be, one who has not heard the whole opera cannot tell.

A huge orchestra, with such unusual instruments as basset horn, four Wagner tubas, and much percussion including wind machine (which can just barely be heard through Strauss' oceanic wave of sonority!) is required. The music itself is extraordinarily beautiful, some of it a trifle reminiscent of other Strauss from "Zarathustra" to "Rosenkavalier" and "Don Quxiote."

But some is of a Strauss unfamiliar to an American without extensive knowledge of his many operas. The orchestration is a marvel of ingenuity, color contrasts and blends, the texture equally a marvel of weaving counterpoint.

We were prepared for fine performance, for Leinsdorf is an exceedingly expert, practical conductor who gets at once to the heart of things. As with opera, he has symphonic music in his head, technic with him is taken for granted, and with such an orchestra as the Boston Symphony he need only poetize the music.

This he did. Playing Mozart's youthful miniature of a symphony with a much reduced body of strings (the right way!) Leinsdorf produced a reading of gentle flexibility within firm rhythm. His degrees of loud and soft for Mozart were very finely calculated, and his care for detail was exacting without overfussiness. In a phrase, this was a mellow "Viennese" performance.

Leinsdorf also has that quality rare among conductors, of being able to transform the sound of an orchestra in but few rehearsals. The Boston Symphony had a quite different resonance yesterday, especially in the silken sheen and richness of strings, and a blended sonority among the brass.

Yesterday we were able to perceive Leinsdorf at full-length. Previously we had seen only the upper half, with his snapping dark eyes and waving arms, above the pit rails of the old Boston Opera House and the Metropolitan Theater.

Accordingly, with the remembrance of his taut, classic style with opera, a baton in firm and unmistakable beat, we were not prepared for his occasional heel-stampings, dance steps and knee-bendings. Nor did we expect the free, dynamic and highly individual conducting style he showed yesterday. He used no baton, only those muscular hands at the end of notably long arms, hands whose expressive resources ran from plastic gesture to waving clenched fists, as in the fast and thumping codas of Prokofieff's wonderful Fifth.

Next week Leinsdorf will present Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, the E minor Symphony of Brahms, Luigi Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra (new here), and excepts from "Goetterdaemmerung," by Wagner.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427

FEB 5 - 1961

136

Music

'78-Minute Keyboard Festival'

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

One practical problem confronting the budding concert pianist is how much of a repertory he should acquire and maintain for practical purposes.

He will receive no help from the programs of two celebrated pianists—Artur Rubinstein's with the Cleveland Orchestra last weekend and Dame Myra Hess' in Boston on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 19.

Rubinstein played three concertos in a "78-minute festival of keyboard music." They were Mozart's in G major, K. 453; Chopin's Concerto No. 2 in F minor, Opus 21, and Lsizt' Concerto No. 1 in E flat fajor ("Triangel")

Dame Myra's Symphony Hall program is a carbon copy of what she has played so many, many times — including Schumann's "Papillons" and Beethoven's Sonata No. 32 in C minor, Opus 111.

Hess Synonymous

We've been listening to these works played by Dame Myra for 30 years. Most recently, she played the Beethoven at Symphony Hall four years ago and included it in her Carnegie Hall recital last season.

Certain works have become synonymous with a Hess recital — the last three Beethoven sonatas (or Opus 57; Opus 31, No. 2), Schumann's Symphonic Studies or "Carnaval," Brahms' F-minor Piano Sonata and Bach partitas or suites.

Rubinstein's recordings alone include more than a dozen concertos, Chopin's complete mazurkas, preludes, scherzi, polonaises and nocturnes, sonatas galore and a large number of miscellaneous works.

The utilized repertory of the now-retired Vladimir Horowitz doesn't match this by any means. Nor do any of them equal Wanda Landowska, who performed the 48 preludes and fugues of Bach, Artur Schnabel's playing from memory of Beethoven's 32 piano sonatas, or Alexander Brailowsky's concert-cycle of the entire piano works of Chopin.

Among the younger group have been some amazing memories. We recall spending several hours with the late William Kapell studying a dozen different programs that he was to play on a South American tour. His problem was not if he could remember them, but in what order the programs should be given.

A few years ago, a younger pianist was dismayed at being engaged to play an old "war-horse" concerto at the Worcester Festival. He had 30 concertos in his repertory, including the one by Ravel for the left hand alone, and Falla's "Nights in the Gardens of Spain," which he had learned the previous season.

Possibly the most prolific is a Puerto Rican pianist who always carries a little book listing his repertory. It pleases him to have compositions mentioned. He promptly looks in his book and can tell where and how often he has played it.

In the final analysis, what counts is how well the pianist plays what . . . which explains Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 111, in two movements, appearing again on a Myra Hess program.

Peters Bach

A United Press International writer was impressed recently with the fact that Roberta Peters (whom he calls "the reigning sweetie-pie among the prima donnas at the Met) sang Bach with the Bach Aria Group in a New York recital.

The only reason Miss Peters hasn't been singing Bach at the Met is that the revered old Johann Sebastian never wrote an opera!

Joan Moynagh

Worcester soprano, Joan Marie Moynagh received excellent notices for her recent appearance with the symphony orchestra of the University of Illinois, where she is a faculty member.

Critics described her voice of "unusual beauty . . . certain excellence of vocal brilliance . . . sure technique and admirable in matters of pitch and tonal production."

Leinsdorf in Boston

Erich Leinsdorf has selected a brave program with which to make his current debut as guest conductor of the B.S.O. at Symphony Hall.

It is Mozart's Symphony No. 29; Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera, "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5.

Leinsdorf conducted the Cleveland Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic on Worcester Civic Music at the Auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

FEB 2 - 1961

Eric Leinsdorf To Be BSO Guest Conductor Friday

At the invitation of Charles Munch, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concerts to be given in Boston the next two weeks as well as the Orchestra's concerts to be given on tour the week of February 13.

For his first program, to be performed tomorrow at 2:15 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m., and Sunday at 3:00 p.m., and Tuesday, February 7, at 8:30 p.m., Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 29, Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten," and the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who has not previously conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has, in Europe, been guest conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the London Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic. In this country he has made appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and the NBC Symphony in addition to his terms as permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Continued on Page Five

Eric Leinsdorf 3

Continued from Page One

Also active as an operatic conductor, Mr. Leinsdorf is now in his third season as Musical Consultant at the Metropolitan Opera where, in addition to his conducting assignments, he is principal musical advisor to the general manager on technical problems. In the present season at the Metropolitan Mr. Leinsdorf has conducted the revival of Gluck's "Alcestis", the first stage performance in the United States of the Shostakovich version of Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunuv" as well as works from the regular repertoire.

After his engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf will go to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony followed by concerts in Florence and Milan. In May he will return to Amsterdam, where he directed a Mahler Centennial program last year, to conduct Beethoven's First and Ninth Symphonies with the Concertgebouw in their annual Beethoven Cycle.

At the concerts on February 10 and 11, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on February 8, Mr. Leinsdorf's program will consist of compositions by Beethoven, Brahms, Dallapiccola and Wagner.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

FEB 3 - 1961

ERICH LEINSDORF makes his debut as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for the two weeks starting today and tomorrow, continuing Sunday and Tuesday, and finally on tour with the orchestra.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

MAR 1961

Boston Revives Three Operatic Rarities

■ Keen interest centered in Boris Goldovsky's revival of Massenet's opera "The Juggler of Notre Dame," or rather "of Our Lady." Topping an impressive list of "firsts" in the 15-year life of the New England Opera Theater, this work is based on Anatole France's story, "Etui de Nacre," which tells about an unlettered jongleur who takes refuge in a monastery and suffers pangs of inadequacy when it comes time to pay homage to the Virgin. He does this in his own way by juggling before her shrine in the Cathedral, and this causes consternation among the other brothers. But instead of burning for his sacrilege, he is transfigured by the protective hands of Mary's image. It is grand theater and the company made the work seem believable. The cast was headed by Tommy Rall, who was required to sing, serve as acrobat and juggle, and who carried off his first opera assignment with éclat. The composer's music strikes the right "tone" by adopting a Renaissance-like idiom, without jarring the ordinary listener. Mr. Goldovsky had trained his cast with their backs to the conductor, it is said. In any case, their matched teamwork has the fluency of an old repertory troupe and their invention of undistracting detail made one glad.

Earlier in the season, the same team had given us a refreshing "Carmen," which nearly coincided with Sarah Caldwell's production of "Falstaff" with her Opera Group. This version was spirited, but had some of the roughness incident to a huge theatre and tricky ensembles.

■ Other opera news was made at the Boston Conservatory of Music in their premiere of Rameau's "Pygmalion," an "Acte de ballet" first given in Paris, 1748. The aroma of this master's still-living art had reached across the Atlantic when Nadia Boulanger served us palatable discs of his ensemble works. The music is made of searching harmonies and high-floating melodies that are metrically molded by the vigor of the French language. The ballet sections link dance after courtly dance—gavotte, passepied, pavane—a challenge brilliantly met by the choreography of Jan Veen and Ruth Sandholm Ambrose. On the same program, Mozart's sparkling juvenile opera, "Bastien and Bastienna," was given.

Neophyte Mozart was heard again Baird Hasting's revival of "Le Semplice," in a concert version Mozart Festival Orchestra "neophyte" never really fit branded teenager, of whom said, as of Lao-tze, "He was sage."

Opera visibly took to the p the person of Erich Leinsdorf, w his first appearance with the Symphony. Most notable in t weeks of concerts was his r Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony an teresting rescue for the concert toire of music from Strauss' op Woman Without Shadows."

■ An important premiere was ed under the approving nod of poser when Francis Poulenc from Paris for the performan "Gloria," for soprano, chorus chestra, which had been com by the Koussevitsky Foundation Addison sang radiantly to background of singing and p the Chorus Pro Musica and the tra men. The music is sweet seductively listenable, but an ea patchwork can sort out bits of Pou much earlier Mass in G Major. spersed with shades of other comp now departed. The composer's sad-s ing face was seen to lean over a cony as he shouted "Parfait! Abs ment parfait!"

The Warsaw Symphony, touring un Witold Rowicki, showed in their con cert that will does not make all of th way; it had slight uncertainties and tendency to crowded big climaxes. However, some beautifully webby sounds were spun in the poetic reading of Szymanowski's Violin Concerto by Wanda Wilkomirska.

Off the regular beat was the Museum of Fine Arts' Camerata concert, which featured Monteverdi's cantata "The Combat of Tancredi and Clorinda," replete with the crummhorns and beetling old woodwinds which give this music the iridescence of a silken chasuble. Also among viable curiosities was the revival of a "Melodrama" by Richard Strauss, the piano score he set to a reading of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," given on the Boston Conservatory Fenway Series. . . . Maria Saritelli, of Providence, was chosen nearly by acclaim in the Regional contest of the Metropolitan Opera here.

ROBERT W. DUMM

Journal (m)
VIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

FEB 22 1961

USIC LAST N

oston Sym onducted

By RUTH TRIPP

n Leinsdorf was gu
tor for the fourth
r the Boston Symph
tra series here last
His audience at Veter ial Auditorium gave tion after the fine
He embraced the con in appreciation of playing of the orche turn, all the music
ded Leinsdorf. The as complete. The eve great musical succes selection of scores lly discerning. It wo-thirds unfamiliar.
ad the Prokofiev S
No. 5 programmed nterludes from Ric
' opera, "Die Frau en" and the Varia
hestra by Luigi Dall
ere new.
hing Erich Lein
t is no small part o e of one of his conc d no score during evening. His unders the styles of the ers was communi ingly. His concern
uty of line and the f the works was his interpretations to contrast tone d many dramatic during the evening
ra played with its l tone quality.
Dallapiccola Varia
harming miniatur ie were skillfully
the twelve

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
FEB 5 - 1961

136

Music

'78-Minute Keyboard Festival'

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

One practical problem confronting the budding concert pianist is how much of a repertory he should acquire and maintain for practical purposes.

He will receive no help from the programs of two celebrated pianists—Artur Rubinstein with the Cleveland Orchestra last weekend and Dame Myra Hess in Boston on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 19.

Rubinstein played three concertos in a "78-minute festival of keyboard music." They were Mozart's in G major, K. 453; Chopin's Concerto No. 2 in F minor, Opus 21, and Liszt' Concerto No. 1 in E flat fajor ("Triangel")

Dame Myra's Symphony Hall program is a carbon copy of what she has played so many, many times — including Schumann's "Papillons" and Beethoven's Sonata No. 32 in C minor, Opus 111.

Hess Synonymous

We've been listening to these works played by Dame Myra for 30 years. Most recently, she played the Beethoven at Symphony Hall four yedrs ago and included it in her Carnegie Hall recital last season.

Certain works have become synonymous with a Hess recital — the last three Beethoven sonatas for Opus 57; Opus 31, No. 2), Schumann's Symphonic Studies or "Carnaval," Brahms' F-minor Piano Sonata and Bach partitas or suites.

Rubinstein's recordings alone include more than a dozen concertos, Chopin's complete mazurkas, preludes, scherzi, polonaises and nocturnes, sonatas galore and a large number of miscellaneous works.

The utilized repertory of the now-retired Vladimir Horowitz doesn't match this by any means. Nor do any of them equal Wanda Landowska, who performed the 48 preludes and fugues of Bach, Artur Schnabel's playing from memory of Beethoven's 32 piano sonatas, or Alexander Brailowsky's concert-cycle of the entire piano works of Chopin.

Among the younger group have been some surprising memories. We recall spending several hours with the late William Kapell studying a dozen different programs that he was to play on a South American tour. His problem was not if he could remember them, but in what order the programs should be given.

A few years ago, a younger pianist was dismayed at being asked to play an old "war-horse" concerto at the Worcester Festival. He had 30 concertos in his repertory, including the one by Ravel for the left hand alone, and Falla's "Nights in the Gardens of Spain," which he had learned the previous season.

Possibly the most prolific is a Puerto Rican pianist who always carries a little book listing his repertory. It pleases him to have compositions mentioned. He promptly looks in his book and can tell where and how often he has played it.

In the final analysis, what counts is how well the pianist plays what . . . which explains Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 111, in two movements, appearing again on a Myra Hess program.

Peters Bach

A United Press International writer was impressed recently with the fact that Roberta Peters (whom he calls "the reigning sweetie-pie among the prima donnas at the Met) sang Bach with the Bach Aria Group in a New York recital.

The only reason Miss Peters hasn't been singing Bach at the Met is that the revered old Johann Sebastian never wrote an opera!

Joan Moynagh

Worcester soprano, Joan Marie Moynagh received excellent notices for her recent appearance with the symphony orchestra of the University of Illinois, where she is a faculty member.

Critics described her voice of "unusual beauty . . . certain excellence of vocal brilliance . . . sure technique and admirable in matters of pitch and tonal production."

Leinsdorf in Boston

Erich Leinsdorf has selected a brave program with which to make his current debut as guest conductor of the B.S.O. at Symphony Hall.

It is Mozart's Symphony No. 29; Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera, "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. Leinsdorf conducted the Cleveland Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic on Worcester Civic Music at the Auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly. Circ. 14,500
FEB 2 - 1961

Eric Leinsdorf To Be BSO Guest Conductor Friday

At the invitation of Charles Munch, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concerts to be given in Boston the next two weeks as well as the Orchestra's concerts to be given on tour the week of February 13.

For his first program, to be performed tomorrow at 2:15 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m., and Sunday at 3:00 p.m., and Tuesday, February 7, at 8:30 p.m., Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 29, Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten," and the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who has not previously conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has, in Europe, been guest conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the London Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic. In this country he has made appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and the NBC Symphony in addition to his terms as permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Continued on Page Five

Eric Leinsdorf 3

Continued from Page One

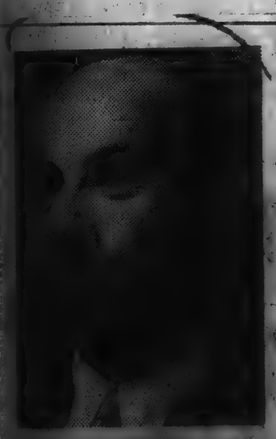
Also active as an operatic conductor, Mr. Leinsdorf is now in his third season as Musical Consultant at the Metropolitan Opera where, in addition to his conducting assignments, he is principal musical advisor to the general manager on technical problems. In the present season at the Metropolitan Mr. Leinsdorf has conducted the revival of Gluck's "Alcestis", the first stage performance in the United States of the Shostakovich version of Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunuv" as well as works from the regular repertoire.

After his engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf will go to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony followed by concerts in Florence and Milan. In May he will return to Amsterdam, where he directed a Mahler Centennial program last year, to conduct Beethoven's First and Ninth Symphonies with the Concertgebouw in their annual Beethoven Cycle.

At the concerts on February 10 and 11, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on February 8, Mr. Leinsdorf's program will consist of compositions by Beethoven, Brahms, Dallapiccola and Wagner.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
FEB 3 - 1961



ERICH LEINSDORF makes his debut as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for the two-week—starting today and tomorrow, continuing Sunday and Tuesday, and finally on tour with the orchestra.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
MAR 1961

Boston Revives Three Operatic Rarities

■ Keen interest centered in Boris Goldovsky's revival of Massenet's opera "The Juggler of Notre Dame," or rather "of Our Lady." Topping an impressive list of "firsts" in the 15-year life of the New England Opera Theater, this work is based on Anatole France's story, "Etui de Nacre," which tells about an unlettered jongleur who takes refuge in a monastery and suffers pangs of inadequacy when it comes time to pay homage to the Virgin. He does this in his own way by juggling before her shrine in the Cathedral, and this causes consternation among the other brothers. But instead of burning for his sacrilege, he is transfigured by the protective hands of Mary's image. It is grand theater and the company made the work seem believable. The cast was headed by Tommy Rall, who was required to sing, serve as acrobat and juggle, and who carried off his first opera assignment with éclat. The composer's music strikes the right "tone" by adopting a Renaissance-like idiom, without jarring the ordinary listener. Mr. Goldovsky had trained his cast with their backs to the conductor, it is said. In any case, their matched teamwork has the fluency of an old repertory troupe and their invention of undistracting detail made one glad.

Earlier in the season, the same team had given us a refreshing "Carmen," which nearly coincided with Sarah Caldwell's production of "Falstaff" with her Opera Group. This version was spirited, but had some of the roughness incident to a huge theatre and tricky ensembles.

■ Other opera news was made at the Boston Conservatory of Music in their premiere of Rameau's "Pygmalion," an "Acte de ballet" first given in Paris, 1748. The aroma of this master's still-living art had reached across the Atlantic when Nadia Boulanger served us palatable discs of his ensemble works. The music is made of searching harmonies and high-floating melodies that are metrically molded by the vigor of the French language. The ballet sections link dance after courtly dance—gavotte, passepied, pavane—a challenge brilliantly met by the choreography of Jan Veen and Ruth Sandholm Ambrose. On the same program, Mozart's sparkling juvenile opera, "Bastien and Bastienna," was given.

Neophyte Mozart was heard again in Baird Hasting's revival of "La Finta Semplice," in a concert version with the Mozart Festival Orchestra. However, "neophyte" never really fits this star-branded teenager, of whom it could be said, as of Lao-tze, "He was born a sage."

Opera visibly took to the podium in the person of Erich Leinsdorf, who made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. Most notable in his two weeks of concerts was his reading of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony and an interesting rescue for the concert repertoire of music from Strauss' opera, Woman Without Shadows."

■ An important premiere was released under the approving nod of its composer when Francis Poulenc flew from Paris for the performance of his "Gloria," for soprano, chorus, and orchestra, which had been commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation. Adele Addison sang radiantly to an expert background of singing and playing by the Chorus Pro Musica and the orchestra men. The music is sweetly and seductively listenable, but an ear for patchwork can sort out bits of Poulenc's much earlier Mass in G Major, interspersed with shades of other composers now departed. The composer's sad-smiling face was seen to lean over a balcony as he shouted "Parfait! Absolument parfait!"

The Warsaw Symphony, touring under Witold Rowicki, showed in their concert that will does not make all of the way; it had slight uncertainties and a tendency to crowded big climaxes. However, some beautifully webby sounds were spun in the poetic reading of Szymanowski's Violin Concerto by Wanda Wilkomirska.

Off the regular beat was the Museum of Fine Arts' Camerata concert, which featured Monteverdi's cantata "The Combat of Tancredi and Clorinda," replete with the crummhorns and beetling old woodwinds which give this music the iridescence of a silken chasuble. Also among viable curiosities was the revival of a "Melodrama" by Richard Strauss, the piano score he set to a reading of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," given on the Boston Conservatory Fenway Series. . . . Maria Saritelli, of Providence, was chosen nearly by acclaim in the Regional contest of the Metropolitan Opera here.

ROBERT W. DUMM

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872
FEB 22 1961

MUSIC LAST NIGHT

Boston Symphony Concert Conducted by Leinsdorf

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf was guest conductor for the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra series here last evening. In addressing a Vote at the Memorial Auditorium gala him and [illegible] gram the [illegible] of the music [illegible] and [illegible] applause [illegible] the evening cult [illegible] was a great musical success.

The [illegible] of course was unusually discerning. It was also [illegible] unfamiliar. We have had the Prokofiev Symphony No. 5 programmed here. The Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten" and the Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola were new.

Watching Erich Leinsdorf conduct is no small part of the pleasure of one of his concerts. He used no score during the entire evening. His understanding of the styles of the three composers was communicated convincingly. His concern for the beauty of line and the structure of the works was one facet of his interpretations. His ability to contrast tone color provided many dramatic moments during the evening. The orchestra played with its most beautiful tone quality.

The Dallapiccola Variations were charming miniatures in tone which were skillfully constructed in the twelve-tone technique. Leinsdorf permitted us to savor every luscious sound effect from the many unusual tones which the composer had contrived. The work is one of the Louisville Orchestra commissions. Heard in the superb interpretation which we were given, it provided a strong argument for the contemporary music which deals in the materials imitated by the composers who use tape recorders instead of the legitimate musical instruments. Dallapiccola gave us some fascinating sound effects.

The Strauss score was rich in the opulence of his musical idiom. At times, there were arid portions to endure but their drabness only served to accentuate the luxurious passages, which followed each other in an unending succession of complex writing.

The Prokofiev Symphony was delivered with the utmost skill. Rhythmic effects were arresting and in sections, there was a lyrical beauty about the music which almost seemed to place it back in the era of pure romanticism.

Erich Leinsdorf is a great conductor and last evening he was conducting a great orchestra. We were fortunate to have heard this rare combination of unusual music so well presented.

138

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 5, at 3:00 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

STRAUSS ..... Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten"

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 100

I. Andante
II. Allegro moderato
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro giocoso

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

FEB 11 1961

ARCH-ROMANTIC HAS SYMPHONY TRIUMPH

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf as arch-romantic triumphed yesterday in Symphony Hall. His impact was no less complete because his program included the Boston premiere of Luigi Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra," a work written according to the austere principles of the 12-tone school. It, too, proved romantic.

I was surprised because, given the strict application of dodecaphony — the method of Dallapiccola's composition — I thought one should expect something ascetic: a fabrication, an exercise. This, of course, is a fallacy. Twelve-tone composition is as capable of compassing infinite varieties of expression as the diatonic mode. In fact, most contemporary composers use it in a subjective, personal way to take advantage of exotic coloration.

Vast Bulk

The listener, however, does fall into the habit of regarding 12-tone works as objective and classical, because so many seem ferociously cerebral. For passion they substitute technique; but this is true of the vast bulk of contemporary writing of any period. Mr. Dallapiccola's "Variations" are different — they have the authority of communicated feeling.

There are 11 Variations based, so the program notes inform us, on a dodecaphonic notebook for piano, "Annalibera's Notebook," named after the composer's small daughter. The music yesterday was an orchestral treatment of the material. No special devices are accented in the orchestration, although Mr. Dallapiccola does call for celesta, vibraphone and other delicately-shaded sounds.

The atmosphere of the music is plangent; and the 11 Variations are generally muted and gently contemplative. Here is no battery of sound effects qua sound effect, and if the score occasionally offers striding tensions, Strauss, for instance, far exceeds Dallapiccola in abrasive dissonance.

I think the work goes on too long for its content. The chromatic suavity of the opening variations, the ingenuity of the composer's inversions and floating tonal imagery finally becomes tedious. It tries to spin out what is basically simple, tranquil rumination into a more ambitious pattern; and in the end, the means of composition masters what the composer has to say. Nevertheless I was impressed by the lucidity of Mr. Dallapiccola's work, and by the amount of urgency, rare in 12-tone-system compositions. There is a humanity to this score until resourcefulness gains the upper hand.

Tepid Applause

A smattering of applause greeted the Variations; but the Friday audience was virtually unrestrained in its appreciation of the others, and no wonder, for Mr. Leinsdorf endowed Brahms and Wagner with soaring magnificence, while the Schubert Overture to "Rosamunde"—substituted happily at the last minute for the overplayed "Egmont"—sparkled infectiously.

The Brahms Fourth held a resonance and spaciousness,, an exuberance and songfulness, a warmth, that bestowed vivid life. The conductor gave the Wagnerian excerpts equal persuasiveness, together with the electric immediacy of actual performance of opera, a very unusual dimension in the concert hall. For once, so total was the musical definition, one did not miss the stage drama.

During this part of works it struck me that Boston during the fortnight has heard Erich Leinsdorf, the superb interpreter of the romantic tradition, most authoritatively. Save for his Mozart, a clean, bright account at his opening appearance, he has devoted himself to the moving visions of the romantic masters.

Tonal Beauty

Exquisitely lyrical, the Brahms Fourth exhibited, for me, the absolute qualities inherent in the structure. The tempos were judicious enough to allow both repose and vigor; tonal beauty prevailed; the detail was intricate yet solidly-patterned. Everything fell in its proper place and the result was transcendent. Similarly, with Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" excerpts, the organic unity of this vast tissue of leitmotiv did not prevent the work from assuming the colossal and dynamic imaginative ecstacy that makes the mythic legend of the composer real to us. At the close cheers rang out, and the audience accorded Erich Leinsdorf a standing ovation. His response at the end of the Brahms, wringing Richard Burgin's hand, was to turn again and again to the orchestra, as if he himself was amazed at the glory of the interpretation on such an instrument.

Next week the Boston Symphony will be on tour. Charles Munch has scheduled Milhaud's "Creation du monde," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," ballet at the concerts of Feb. 24-25.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf guest conductor, presented the 16th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.
Overture to "Rosamunde" ..... Schubert
Sphony No. 4, in E minor ..... Brahms
Variations for Orchestra ..... Dallapiccola
Excerpts for "Gotterdamm..." ..... Wagner

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 11 1961

—Leinsdorf's Second Week as Symphony Guest

Lenscraft Photos

Erich Leinsdorf at a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony, which he will conduct tonight in Symphony Hall and on tour to New York next week.

Dallapiccola Variations in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

If one were to judge by the extended applause and cheers after yesterday's concert—and one certainly can—then Erich Leinsdorf made many listeners happy in this, his second program with the Boston Symphony in two weeks.

His conducting indeed wears well. He is thoroughly musical; it flows, in fact, through every fiber of his being. The effect is gracious, stirring, dynamic, serene, according to the composers' demands. He is evidently interested in what the music says for itself; he does not appear to be concerned with what he—Leinsdorf—can make it say. He maintains a fine balance between intellectual control and emotional expression. He is selfless without being self-effacing.

These are extraordinary qualities in a conductor; and if they have not been noted heretofore, it may be that Mr. Leinsdorf, still under 50, is now hitting the stride of his maturity. We in Boston are also having our first opportunity to appraise him as a symphonic conductor; we have long since known full well, of course, of his abilities in the opera house.

He opened his Symphony Hall program with Schubert's balletic Overture to "Rosamunde," illuminating its graces with his own graceful, batonless hands. His reading of the Brahms' Fourth Symphony was different from what we have been used to, but it was different because he ignored all the traditional ritards or accelerations and held the tempo more or less constant. It plays well this way—perhaps not so dramatically, but more honestly. It was Brahms at his most benevolent.

The Dallapiccola Variations for Orchestra, composed in 1954 on commission by the Louisville Orchestra, are having their first Boston performances. This Italian is well enough known at Tanglewood, having headed the composition department there for two summers; but Bostonians have been deprived of his admirable efforts. He is a twelve-tonalist, though of the classification that should frighten nobody these days. He follows in the vein of Berg and Webern in what can now be thought of as the classical school of atonalism. He employs the four mutually exclusive triads into which a tone row can be divided, thus producing atonal music with a diatonic flavor. It's more palatable this way. The ear is not wrenched completely off its customary base.

Then, too—as Mr. Leinsdorf pointed out in an interview with the press—Dallapiccola is an Italian, and it is almost impossible for an Italian to write music without taking his own heart into consideration. The Germans and the Austrians can do it, of course; they can cerebrate tone rows that add up to nothing but sterility; but Dallapiccola writes not with a mathematical chart, but with a listening ear. For him the music must "sound," and in these 11 variations he projects many identifiable moods—lullabies, serenades, poems. May this short work serve to introduce more of Dallapiccola's writings to Boston.

Mr. Leinsdorf ended with excerpts from Wagner's "Götterdämmerung" — including Dawn, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Seigfried's Death, and the wonderfully watery conclusion when the Rhine overflows the ruins of Valhalla. He let the music surge and swell, spilling over into plangent climaxes of giddy noise. It was glorious. Here we witnessed a synthesis of Mr. Leinsdorf's talents, a blend of his operatic and symphonic gifts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427

FEB 5 1961

CONCERT POSTPONED

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for Saturday night in Symphony Hall was postponed to Monday night because of the storm.

Leinsdorf's Second Week

Erich Leinsdorf's second weekend as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony will include the first Boston performances of the Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola, commissioned by the Louisville Orchestra in 1954. The Friday and Saturday concerts, to be preceded by a Wednesday open rehearsal, will also include Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Brahms' Fourth Symphony, and excerpts from Wagner's "Die Götterdämmerung."

This evening's concert will repeat Mr. Leinsdorf's program of Mozart, Strauss, and Prokofiev.

138

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fourth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 5, at 3:00 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

STRAUSS ..... Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten"

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 100

I. Andante
II. Allegro moderato
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro giocoso

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
FEB 11 1961

ARCH-ROMANTIC HAS SYMPHONY TRIUMPH

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf as arch-romantic triumphed yesterday in Symphony Hall. His impact was no less complete because his program included the Boston premiere of Luigi Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra," a work written according to the austere principles of the 12-tone school. It, too, proved romantic.

I was surprised because, given the strict application of dodecaphony — the method of Dallapiccola's composition — I thought one should expect something ascetic: a fabrication, an exercise. This, of course, is a fallacy. Twelve-tone composition is as capable of compassing infinite varieties of expression as the diatonic mode. In fact, most contemporary composers use it in a subjective, personal way to take advantage of exotic coloration.

Vast Bulk

The listener, however, does fall into the habit of regarding 12-tone works as objective and classical, because so many seem ferociously cerebral. For passion they substitute technique; but this is true of the vast bulk of contemporary writing of any period. Mr. Dallapiccola's "Variations" are different — they have the authority of communicated feeling.

There are 11 Variations based, so the program notes inform us, on a dodecaphonic notebook for piano, "Annalibera's Notebook," named after the composer's small daughter. The music yesterday was an orchestral treatment of the material. No special devices are accented in the orchestration, although Mr. Dallapiccola does call for celesta, vibraphone and other delicately-shaded sounds.

The atmosphere of the music is plangent; and the 11 Variations are generally muted and gently contemplative. Here is no battery of sound effects qua sound effect, and if the score occasionally offers striding tensions, Strauss, for instance, far exceeds Dallapiccola in abrasive dissonance.

I think the work goes on too long for its content. The chromatic suavity of the opening variations, the ingenuity of the composer's inversions and floating tonal imagery finally becomes tedious. It tries to spin out what is basically simple, tranquil rumination into a more ambitious pattern; and in the end, the means of composition masters what the composer has to say. Nevertheless I was impressed by the lucidity of Mr. Dallapiccola's work, and by the amount of urgency, rare in 12-tone-system compositions. There is a humanity to this score until resourcefulness gains the upper hand.

Tepid Applause

A smattering of applause greeted the Variations; but the Friday audience was virtually unrestrained in its appreciation of the others, and no wonder, for Mr. Leinsdorf endowed Brahms and Wagner with soaring magnificence, while the Schubert Overture to "Rosamunde"—substituted happily at the last minute for the ever-played "Egmont"—sparkled infectiously.

The Brahms Fourth held a resonance and spaciousness, an exuberance and songfulness, a warmth, that bestowed vivid life. The conductor gave the Wagnerian excerpts equal persuasiveness, together with the electric immediacy of actual performance of opera, a very unusual dimension in the concert hall. So vivid, so total was the musical definition, one did not miss the stage drama.

During this [illegible] it struck me that Boston during the fortnight has heard Erich Leinsdorf, the superb interpreter of the romantic tradition, most authoritatively. Save for his Mozart, a clean, bright account at his opening appearance, he has devoted himself to the moving visions of the romantic masters.

Tonal Beauty

Exquisitely lyrical, the Brahms Fourth exhibited, for me, the absolute qualities inherent in the structure. The tempos were judicious enough to allow both repose and vigor; tonal beauty prevailed; the detail was intricate yet solidly-patterned. Everything fell in its proper place and the result was transcendent. Similarly, with Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" excerpts, the organic unity of this vast tissue of leitmotiv did not prevent the work from assuming the colossal and dynamic imaginative ecstacy that makes the mythic legend of the composer real to us. At the close cheers rang out, and the audience accorded Erich Leinsdorf a standing ovation. His response at the end of the Brahms, wringing Richard Burgin's hand, was to turn again and again to the orchestra, as if he himself was amazed at the glory of the interpretation on such an instrument.

Next week the Boston Symphony will be on tour. Charles Munch has scheduled Milhaud's "Creation du monde," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," ballet at the concerts of Feb. 24-25.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf guest conductor, presented the 16th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.
Overture to "Rosamunde" ..... Schubert
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ..... Brahms
Variations for Orchestra ..... Dallapiccola
Excerpts from "Gotterdammerung" ..... Wagner

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
FEB 7 - 1961

Leinsdorf's Second Week

Erich Leinsdorf's second weekend as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony will include the first Boston performances of the Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola, commissioned by the Louisville Orchestra in 1954. The Friday and Saturday concerts, to be preceded by a Wednesday open rehearsal, will also include Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Brahms' Fourth Symphony, and excerpts from Wagner's "Die Götterdämmerung."

This evening's concert will repeat Mr. Leinsdorf's program of Mozart, Strauss, and Prokofiev.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
FEB 11 1961

—Leinsdorf's Second Week as Symphony Guest

Lenscraft Photos

Erich Leinsdorf at a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony, which he will conduct tonight in Symphony Hall and on tour to New York next week.

Dallapiccola Variations in Boston Premiere

By Harold Rogers

If one were to judge by the extended applause and cheers after yesterday's concert—and one certainly can—then Erich Leinsdorf made many listeners happy in this, his second program with the Boston Symphony in two weeks.

His conducting indeed wears well. He is thoroughly musical; it flows, in fact, through every fiber of his being. The effect is gracious, stirring, dynamic, serene, according to the composers' demands. He is evidently interested in what the music says for itself; he does not appear to be concerned with what he—Leinsdorf—can make it say. He maintains a fine balance between intellectual control and emotional expression. He is selfless without being self-effacing.

♩ ♩ ♩

These are extraordinary qualities in a conductor; and if they have not been noted heretofore, it may be that Mr. Leinsdorf, still under 50, is now hitting the stride of his maturity. We in Boston are also having our first opportunity to appraise him as a symphonic conductor; we have long since known full well, of course, of his abilities in the opera house.

He opened his Symphony Hall program with Schubert's balletic Overture to "Rosamunde," illuminating its graces with his own graceful, batonless hands. His reading of the Brahms' Fourth Symphony was different from what we have been used to, but it was different because he ignored all the traditional ritards or accelerations and held the tempo more or less constant. It plays well this way—perhaps not so dramatically, but more honestly. It was Brahms at his most benevolent.

The Dallapiccola Variations for Orchestra, composed in 1954 on commission by the Louisville Orchestra, are having their first Boston performances. This Italian is well enough known at Tanglewood, having headed the composition department there for two summers; but Bostonians have been deprived of his admirable efforts. He is a twelve-tonalist, though of the classification that should frighten nobody these days. He follows in the vein of Berg and Webern in what can now be thought of as the classical school of atonalism. He employs the four mutually exclusive triads into which a tone row can be divided, thus producing atonal music with a diatonic flavor. It's more palatable this way. The ear is not wrenched completely off its customary base.

♩ ♩ ♩

Then, too—as Mr. Leinsdorf pointed out in an interview with the press—Dallapiccola is an Italian, and it is almost impossible for an Italian to write music without taking his own heart into consideration. The Germans and the Austrians can do it, of course; they can cerebrate tone rows that add up to nothing but sterility; but Dallapiccola writes not with a mathematical chart, but with a listening ear. For him the [illegible] must "sound," and in these 11 variations he projects many identifiable moods—lullabies, serenades, poems. May this short work serve to introduce more of Dallapiccola's writings to Boston.

Mr. Leinsdorf ended with excerpts from Wagner's "Götterdämmerung" — including Dawn, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Siegfried's Death, and the wonderfully watery conclusion when the Rhine overflows the ruins of Valhalla. He let the music surge and swell, spilling over into plangent climaxes of giddy noise. It was glorious. Here we witnessed a synthesis of Mr. Leinsdorf's talents, a blend of his operatic and symphonic gifts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
FEB 5 - 1961

CONCERT POSTPONED

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for Saturday night in Symphony Hall was postponed to Monday night because of the storm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
FEB 11 1961

Music

Lowell Sun 2/11/61

Leinsdorf Casts Spell At Symphony Rehearsal

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — It was rather unusual, but it must be told — a duo in the form of Richard Wagner and Erich Leinsdorf controlled the spot light at the latest open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Leonie Rysanek

The occasion, Thursday evening, attracted a grand turnout of those who are sympathetic to symphony and those who adhere to the operatic tradition. Strangely, this was not the purpose of anyone concerned, but music lovers allowed their imagination to suggest something rather different in the offing.

However, to the credit of everyone on stage, and especially the conductor, never has the Boston orchestra's tradition been more truthfully upheld Mr. Leinsdorf who ranks with the best in the field of interpreters, held his ensemble well within every dimension.

True, he spent more than a mere bit of time with the "Gotterdammerung" Excerpts, but how rewarding it was to every listener! The quiet and fully attentive audience appeared at times to be influenced by a "spell music" that is not listed among Wagner's works.

A master at the German school and a believer in complete tonal blend at all times, the conductor almost provided the gods with a pathway of roses as he interpretatively led them to their ultimate doom. This was Wagner at its best and not even the Met opera house has ever been so royally treated by a German wing.

If there was any little musical point that was not properly taken we would suggest the accidental "one note" that escaped from a certain instrument and resulted in as weird an interval as you would ever want to hear. As a final touch let us say that the strings and woodwinds were not guilty at the time.

IN A SHARP CONTRAST TO bring back the audience to reality was the Dallapiccola "Variations for Orchestra." Now here is a composition that poses many problems. Many will take it in stride, others not quite sure, and a remaining few, dead-set against what they were hearing.

We were middle-roaders during these moments. The variations are amazingly clever, certainly original and almost lost as they struggle toward the point marked RESOLVED. The entire piece whose whole contains eleven tiny creations is an excellent work but not something that could grow on the listener. At the evening's end it was easy to sum up the happy affair with such thoughts as what an orchestra — what a conductor, and lastly — thanks so much for music such as Wagner composed!

Leoine Rysanek who created a sensation at the Metropolitan Opera company's opening this season in the premiere of Verdi's early masterpiece, "Nabucco," will again assume the role of Abigaille as the 27th annual Boston season bows on Monday evening, April 17. She will share honors with such known artists as MacNeil and Rosalind Elias of this city.

A gala performance of "La Traviata" will be presented on Tuesday. Puccini's "Turandot" which will be premiered at the Met is listed for Wednesday evening the 19.

Another Puccini favorite, "Manon Lescaut" featuring Dorothy Kirsten in the title role will be given on Thursday evening. As a local sidelight the lovely and gifted soprano is well remembered here for a brilliant duo-recital in the Community Concert series with Eugene Conley.

Verdi's "Rigoletto" returns to the stage on Friday evening while Saturday matinee will highlight Donizetti's "L'Elisir D'Amore," and in the evening, "La Boheme" with the Salem, Mass., born soprano, Mary Curtis-Verna. The closing on Sunday afternoon brings to the stage another revival, the lovely "Martha." Miss Elias will appear in this production and joining her will be such celebrated singers as Victoria de Los Angeles, Georgio Tozzi and with Verchi as conductor.

Myra Hess, the eminent pianist, has been suddenly stricken with a severe virus and is, at the order of her doctor, cancelling all immediate concert dates, including her Sunday afternoon, Feb. 19 appearance in Symphony Hall. Tickets for her February concert will be honored at the postponed date which will be announced shortly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
FEB 9 1961

Leinsdorf Alters Symphony Program

Guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, has altered slightly the program he will present in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night. For Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture he will substitute the "Rosamunde" Overture by Schubert.

The remainder of the program remains unchanged: Brahms' E minor Symphony; Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra, and excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung," by Wagner.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
FEB 5 - 1961

Erich Leinsdorf Cheered As Symphony Visit Ends

By CYRUS DURGIN

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 16th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Erich Leinsdorf, as guest conductor, presented Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture; the Symphony in E minor, No. 4, by Brahms; Luigi Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra (first time in Boston), and excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung," by Wagner.

Cheers for Erich Leinsdorf —and the Boston Symphony Orchestra — echoed again in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon. For the guest conductor and for the instrumental virtuosi who responded magnificently in a sequence of excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung," there was an ardent and long-cointinued ovation.

As he was recalled to the stage, Leinsdorf performed a homage of his own, by three times bowing deeply to the Orchestra who had played for him with the extreme respect they show only to a master, and with the magic fire which only a master can kindle in them.

Leinsdorf has brought us a sunlit freshness and exhilaration during his two weeks in Boston. He may feel certain, as he departs for a third week, on tour, with the Boston Symphony, that he has well won our general admiration.

Such Wagner as he performed we have not heard for many years, Wagner in a precise rectitude of sound and manner, the Orchestra singing and glowing, the "Ring" music boiling up in a glorious wave of multi-colored sonority Much of this was due to Leinsdorf's fabulous ear for balance, both between single instruments and sections.

The "Goetterdaemmerung" excerpts were most ingeniously spliced together for maximum smoothness and minimum evidence of splicing. It was, however, a little frustrating to hear the opening measures of the Immolation Scene but no soprano to enter, and then a quick transition to the point where the orchestra thunders its peroration after Bruennhilde has galloped into the flames.

Brahms of the Fourth Symphony was poetically grave and classic as Leinsdorf conducted him. This was a notably vigorous performance, too, the scherzo going very fast. Leinsdorf's transformation of the brass into a mellow ensemble was evident in the finale, as it was later with Wagner.

Under circumstances less exciting, Luigi Dallapiccola's 12-tone Variations would claim more space. Here is a work in serial technic which is clever and musical. An orchestral extension of the composer's piano "Annalibera's Notebook," the Variations are a fascinating blend of technical mathematics and a certain eerie mood of fantasy and grotesque colors. Some variations are slow and rhythmically amorphous, others fast and of hard rhythmic outline, with a meter of five beats sounding like five and not like a combination of three-and-two.

The harmonic texture resulting from the various devices of counterpoint and the 12-tone row has a surprising variety, all the way from impressionistic echoes to grinding dissonance. Dallapiccola's Variations make more sense than most serial music I have heard. They also make more music.

Leinsdorf again conducted without stick or score, often making the tiniest motions of hands, even fingers, and seemingly permitting the Orchestra to go upon its own. There was one new aspect: to emphasize the force of a drum roll, Leinsdorf's entire body quivered, from head to feet. You might call it a "full-length vibrato," something I had never experienced.

After next week's tour, Charles Munch will return for the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 24 and 25. Milhaud's "The Creation of the World," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe," by Ravel, will make the program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
FEB 11 1961

139

Music

Leinsdorf Casts Spell At Symphony Rehearsal

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — It was rather unusual, but it must be told — a duo in the form of Richard Wagner and Erich Leinsdorf controlled the spot light at the latest open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Leonie Rysanek

The occasion, Thursday evening, attracted a grand turnout of those who are sympathetic to symphony and those who adhere to the operatic tradition. Strangely, this was not the purpose of anyone concerned, but music lovers allowed their imagination to suggest something rather different in the offing.

However, to the credit of everyone on stage, and especially the conductor, never has the Boston orchestra's tradition been more truthfully upheld Mr. Leinsdorf who ranks with the best in the field of interpreters, held his ensemble well within every dimension.

True, he spent more than a mere bit of time with the "Gotterdammerung" Excerpts, but how rewarding it was to every listener! The quiet and fully attentive audience appeared at times to be influenced by a "spell music" that is not listed among Wagner's works.

A master at the German school and a believer in complete tonal blend at all times, the conductor almost provided the gods with a pathway of roses as he interpretatively led them to their ultimate doom. This was Wagner at its best and not even the Met opera house has ever been so royally treated by a German wing.

If there was any little musical point that was not properly taken we would suggest the accidental "one note" that escaped from a certain instrument and resulted in as weird an interval as you would ever want to hear. As a final touch let us say that the strings and woodwinds were not guilty at the time.

IN A SHARP CONTRAST TO bring back the audience to reality was the Dallapiccola "Variations for Orchestra." Now here is a composition that poses many problems. Many will take it in stride, others not quite sure, and a remaining few, dead-set against what they were hearing.

We were middle-roaders during these moments. The variations are amazingly clever, certainly original and almost lost as they struggle toward the point marked RESOLVED. The entire piece whose whole contains eleven tiny creations is an excellent work but not something that could grow on the listener. At the evening's end it was easy to sum up the happy affair with such thoughts as what an orchestra — what a conductor, and lastly — thanks so much for music such as Wagner composed!

Leoine Rysanek who created a sensation at the Metropolitan Opera company's opening this season in the premiere of Verdi's early masterpiece, "Nabucco," will again assume the role of Abigaille as the 27th annual Boston season bows on Monday evening, April 17. She will share honors with such known artists as MacNeil and Rosalind Elias of this city.

A gala performance of "La Traviata" will be presented on Tuesday. Puccini's "Turandot" which will be premiered at the Met is listed for Wednesday evening the 19.

Another Puccini favorite, "Manon Lescaut" featuring Dorothy Kirsten in the title role will be given on Thursday evening. As a local sidelight the lovely and gifted soprano is well remembered here for a brilliant duo-recital in the Community Concert series with Eugene Conley.

Verdi's "Rigoletto" returns to the stage on Friday evening while Saturday matinee will highlight Donizetti's "L'Elisir D'Amore," and in the evening, "La Boheme" with the Salem, Mass., born soprano, Mary Curtis-Verna. The closing on Sunday afternoon brings to the stage another revival, the lovely "Martha." Miss Elias will appear in this production and joining her will be such celebrated singers as Victoria de Los Angeles, Georgio Tozzi and with Verchi as conductor.

Myra Hess, the eminent pianist, has been suddenly stricken with a severe virus and is, at the order of her doctor, cancelling all immediate concert dates, including her Sunday afternoon, Feb. 19 appearance in Symphony Hall. Tickets for her February concert will be honored at the postponed date which will be announced shortly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
FEB 5 - 1961

Leinsdorf Will Conduct Dallapiccola Variations

Erich Leinodorf, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present for the first time in Boston the Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola at the concerts in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m.

The program otherwise will consist of Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture; Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, and, from Wagner's concluding music-drama of the "Nibelungen Ring," "Gotterdammerung," Morning Dawn, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Siegfried's Funeral March, and the Immolation Scene.

Dallapiccola, who taught at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1951 and 1952, composed his Variations for Orchestra on commission from the Louisville, Ky., orchestra. They were first performed there Oct. 2, 1954.

Mr. Leinsdorf also will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts this afternoon at 3, and Tuesday at 8:30. The program will be the same for each: Mozart's Symphony in A major (K. 201); Interludes from the opera "The Woman Without a Shadow," by Richard Strauss, and Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

FEB 5 - 1961

140

Music Events This Week

Erich Leinsdorf the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor who made his first Boston appearances this week, will repeat his opening program today and Tuesday. The concerts will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29, the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff and Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten."

The concerts Friday and Saturday preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday include the first Boston performance of the Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Center in 1951 and 1952. The concerts also will include the Egmont Overture by Beethoven, Brahms' Symphony No. 4 and excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung."

In addition to his career as a symphony conductor Mr. Leinsdorf has been closely associated with major opera houses. In 1959 when he directed "Die Meistersinger" at Bayreuth he was the first conductor from the Metropolitan Opera staff to have been engaged for the Wagner Festival.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will be on tour the week of Feb. 13

MAUREEN FORRESTER, Canadian contralto, Jordan Hall, 3:30 P.M. B.U. Celebrity Series. Remaining seats after 2:00 P.M. at box office. Program includes songs and cycles by Handel, Purcell, Schumann, Barber, Poulenc, Nordoff and Rorem.

MAX MILLER, organist, Marsh Chapel, 4:30 p.m. Bach, Douglass Green, Widor. Public invited.

YUKO HAYASHI, organist, Old North Church, 4:30 p.m. Arne, Martini, Bach, Franck. Public invited.

NICHOLAS VAN SLYCK, pianist, All Saints Church, Brookline, 3:30 p.m. Haydn, Schumann, Martin, Brahms, Van Slyck.

KAREN TYSE JOHNSTAD, organist, Second Congregational Church, West Newton, 3:30 p.m. Norwegian works, Franck, Bach, Bloch and others. Public invited.

MONDAY

VICTORIA SIMONI, pianist, in senior recital, Concert Hall, Boston University, 857 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:15 p.m. Admission free.

TUESDAY

CAMERATA of the Museum of Fine Arts, Museum Lecture Hall, 8:30 p.m. "Music for Lent and Carnival," played with early instruments and reproductions. Program includes Monteverdi scenic cantata.

WEDNESDAY

GREAT MUSIC, B.U. College of Liberal Arts, Room 12, 7:15 p.m. Schubert's Instrumental Music, with John Hasson in illustrated lecture. Public invited.

N.E.C. STUDENT RECITAL of piano music by Bach, Chopin, Debussy, Prokofieff. Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

THURSDAY

SYMPHONIC WIND ENSEMBLE, N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Dean Dixon conducts Berger, Rorem, Hervig, Webern, Ives. Admission free.

FRIDAY

CARLOS MONTOYA, guitarist, presented by Aaron Richmond on B.U. Celebrity Series, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Program includes flamenco, folk song treatments from various Spanish regions, Gypsy music, old regional rhythms and types. Remaining tickets daily at box office.

NEW MUSIC, Paine Hall, Harvard Music Building, 8:30 p.m. Cathy Berberian, mezzo; Jacques Castonr, flute; Francis Pierre, harp; Alain Jacquet, percussion; J. P. Drouet, percussion. Works by Boucourechliev, Stockhausen, Haubenstock-Ramati, Maderna, Varese, Berio. Admission free.

SATURDAY

WILLIAM CLAUSON, folk singer, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by Manuel Greenhill, or Folklore Concert Series.

YOUTH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA of Greater Boston, Marvin Rabin, conductor; Wellesley Junior High School, Children's Concert, 2:00 p.m.

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 7, at 8:30 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 29, in A major (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

STRAUSS ..... Interludes from the Opera "Die Frau ohne Schatten"

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 100

I. Andante
II. Allegro moderato
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro giocoso

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BLANK PAGE

148

BLANK PAGE

1430

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 10, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, at 8:30 o'clock

ERICH LEINSDORF, Guest Conductor

SCHUBERT ..... Overture to "Rosamunde"

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Andante moderato
III. Allegro giocoso
IV. Allegro energico e passionato

INTERMISSION

DALLAPICCOLA ..... Variations for Orchestra
(First performance in Boston)

WAGNER ..... Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"
Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Siegfried's Death — Conclusion

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664

FEB 12 1961

144

LEINSDORF TO DIRECT HUB GROUP ON TOUR

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour several eastern cities in the next two weeks with Erich Leinsdorf in the role of tour guest conductor for the first time.

Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic and now a staff conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, concluded a two-week guest appearance in Boston Saturday night.

He will lead the Boston musicians in concerts at Storrs and New London, Conn.; New York City, including Brooklyn; Washington, D. C. and Providence, R. I.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

FEB 12 1961

Symphony Away on Tour This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be away this week on tour in New York and other cities with guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Charles Munch will return to the conductor's stand at the Symphony Hall concerts of Feb. 24 and 25. He then will present Milhaud's "The Creation of the World," and the complete ballet score of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe." The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, will assist.

For the Symphony Hall concerts of Mar. 3 and 4, Dr. Munch has chosen Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture and Violin Concerto, the latter with Henryk Szeryng as soloist; Honegger's First Symphony, and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Richard Strauss.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447

FEB 12 1961

Boston Symphony To Tour East Cities

BOSTON, Feb. 11 (UPI) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour several eastern cities in the next two weeks with Erich Leinsdorf in the role of tour guest conductor for the first time.

Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic and now a staff conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, concluded a two-week guest appearance in Boston tonight. He will lead the Boston musicians in concerts at Storrs and New London, Conn.; New York City, including Brooklyn; Washington and Providence

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 26,618

FEB 13 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN COLLEGE CONCERT

NEW LONDON, Feb. 12—Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston symphony in a concert at Connecticut college Tuesday at 8:30 p. m., under the auspices of the college concert series.

The program, which will be heard in Palmer auditorium follows: Schubert, Overture to Rosamunde; Mozart, Symphony No. 29 in A major; Dallapiccola, Variations for Orchestra: and Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

FADED TEXT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 12,421
FEB 6 1961

"THE WAY I HEARD IT"

by John Gruber

There are two symphonic concerts coming up in the near future, which are of considerable interest to lovers of this type of music. One is the Hartford Symphony's program for this Wednesday, Feb. 8. The other is the UConn appearance of the Boston Symphony, on Feb. 13th. Both offer seldom heard compositions.

The Hartford program will present Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, which is common enough, but it will also offer Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." The latter composition is seldom offered, yet it is Mahler's most enduring claim to fame. It consists of six symphonic settings of poems by Hans Bethge, who in his turn, was paraphrasing Chinese poems of the 8th century.

Mahler never lived to hear them performed. He died in the spring of 1911, six months before Bruno Walter premiered the work in November of the same year. The six poems are sung alternately by tenor and contralto, (or baritone in some cases) and are quite oriental in character.

Mahler died full of honors as a conductor but he has remained a controversial figure as a composer. Many conductors realize this, and accord his works rather timid and watery performances. Not so Fritz Mahler, the composer's Hartford kinsman. The local conductor is convinced of the composer's greatness and accords his compositions readings that carry a great deal of conviction.

The late Arnold Schoenberg, himself a controversial figure in music, described Mahler, the composer, as "a man in torment, struggling toward inward harmony." I think this is a very fair summation of Mahler's works. The struggle is sometimes titanic, and sometimes too much for the composer's powers; the "inward harmony" is seldom or never realized, but the music remains dramatic, and uncompromising in its search for truth.

A contemporary of Mahler's was Richard Strauss. They are frequently thought of as rivals, but each had a very healthy respect for the other's abilities. Both were excellent conductors, and something less than top-flight composers. The Boston Symphony is offering some rarely heard Strauss music.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct this program at Jorgenson Auditorium. He is noted as an operatic conductor as well as a symphonic conductor, and it is his operatic experience that doubtless leads to his inclusion of excerpts from Strauss's "Frau ohne Schatten," on the UConn program.

This opera suffers from an almost impossible plot, which precludes its popularity. Loyally, the Munich Opera regularly produces the work, since it had its premiere there, and Strauss is intimately associated with that city. But nowhere else can you find this opera produced.

The "Met" has never done it, and it runs in my mind that the only American production it ever had was under Walter Damrosch many years ago, but I'm not certain of that. I have heard the Munich presentation, by the way.

This opera is Chinese in basis, and partakes of legend and fairytale as to plot. Spots of the music are tedious, but others are really fine. Since no soloists are listed for this performance, I assume the excerpts Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen will be orchestral in character.

Actually the opera, like Wagner's operas, depends more on the orchestra than the singers for its emotional appeal, anyway. The music is not much more oriental than Mahler's. True, both of them wrote in an unusual style, but neither really achieved a truly oriental flavor.

Anyway, I'm happy to have the opportunity of hearing definitive performances of both works. Both are bound to be well done, both are seldom heard, and both represent turn-of-the-century composers trying to express German philosophy in music using Chinese inspiration.

I strongly urge you to attend both concerts, for such an opportunity of comparison and performance is rare in the extreme.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 6,682
FEB 14 1961

Boston Symphony Outstanding

No introduction is needed for the Boston Symphony which presented an interesting, if somewhat unconventional, program at the Albert N. Jorgensen Auditorium of The University of Connecticut Monday night. The orchestra was conducted by Erich Leinsdorf formerly with the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras and now concentrating his attentions to a considerable extent on opera productions.

The orchestra performed admirably for Leinsdorf and the listener was again reminded that this is one of the great virtuoso organizations of our times. The program opened with the Overture to "Rosamunde" by Schubert. The singing qualities of the strings were impressive, and it was evident, from the beginning, that the conductor was in full command of his musical forces for the evening. This was the lyrical offering of the evening and a fine, if all too short, offering it was.

This was followed by Variations for Orchestra by Luigi Dallapiccola, a contemporary Italian composer who has been experimenting with the 12-tone system. The Variations might be termed as an interesting, although quite unorthodox, essay in sound, but to this reviewer at least, it would be stretching the point too much to call it a solid musical composition.

For a first hearing it seemed to be too self-conscious an attempt at tonal expression in a "new" vein. The traditional ingredients of music, namely rhythm, melody, and harmony, were indeed difficult to find in this new and difficult modern idiom in which the composer was writing.

The first half of the program was completed with Interludes from Richard Strauss' opera "Die Frau ohne Shatten" — the Woman without a Shadow. The hand of a master composer was evident, but at the same time this does not appear to be one of Strauss' stronger compositions.

The lyrical qualities of Strauss emerge from time to time, but the constant attempts to reach the climax after another fail to attain cohesion and line generally sound in the writing of Strauss. It was, nevertheless, interesting to hear a work which is seldom performed, at least in this country.

Following the intermission came the major presentation of the evening, the Symphony No. 5, Op. 100 of Sergei Prokofiev. Here, if anywhere, the ability of the individual members of the orchestra as well as the collective whole, were clearly in evidence. After a rather sumptuous and climactic opening movement, there follows an Allegro Moderato which has some of the characteristics of the classical Scherzo.

There is a persistent reiteration of a short staccato phrase followed by a trio-like middle section, which is, in turn, followed by a return of the first section of the movement. The third movement is an Adagio, both tense and sensuous, and the symphony is concluded by an Allegro finale in which the final climax is reached, again, is a persistent theme and rhythm seemingly designed to fully impress upon the listener the total mood of the composition.

It is an exciting work, one which leaves the listener a bit breathless at the conclusion. It is a strenuous work which calls forth the best efforts of the orchestra, efforts which, on Monday evening, Mr. Leinsdorf and the members of the Boston Symphony were fully prepared to give. Following such a powerful, if not bombastic, climax to the concert, the listener might well try a bit of Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, for "A Little Night Music" with which to relax might be advisable before concluding his evening.

M.T.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
ROCKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Republican
Circ. 3,584
FEB 9 1961

Boston Symphony To Play At Uconn Monday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its sixth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgenson Auditorium Monday at 8:15 p.m.

Pinch hitting for Conductor Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf, one of the nation's leading operatic and symphonic conductors.

Leinsdorf has sandwiched in a tour as conductor of the Rochester Symphony between two assignments as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

For his concert at the UofC, Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony performances of "Variations for Orchestra" by Dall Piccola; Interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss and the "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100" by Prokofief.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
FEB 18 1961

BSO in Its Sixth Concert at UConn

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its sixth annual appearance at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Feb. 13 (8:15).

Pinch-hitting as conductor for Dr. Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert features "Variations for Orchestra" by Dalla Piccola; Interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss and the Symphony No. 5, Opus 100 by Prokofief.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367
FEB 10 1961

Orchestra Sets Appearance In Connecticut

STORRS, Conn. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its sixth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgenson auditorium at 8:15 p.m. Monday.

Pinchhitting for conductor Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf, an operatic and symphonic conductor, who has sandwiched in a tour as conductor of the Rochester Symphony between two assignments as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

For his concert at the University, Leinsdorf will lead the Boston Symphony performances of "Variations for Orchestra" by Dall Piccola; interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss; and the "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100" by Prokofief.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 6,682
FEB 1 1961

Boston Symphony At Storrs Feb. 13

STORRS — The mighty Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its sixth annual concert at The University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Monday, Feb. 13 at 8:15 p.m.

Pinch - hitting for Conductor Dr. Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf, one of the nation's leading operatic and symphonic conductors.

Leinsdorf has sandwiched in a tour as conductor of the Rochester Symphony between two assignments as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

For his concert at UConn, Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony performances of "Variations for Orchestra" by Dall Piccola; Interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss and the "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100" by Prokofief.

The Boston Symphony, which is currently embarking on its 80th season, is one of the oldest as well as one of the greatest orchestras in the world. Only such aggregations as the London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris outrank it in age but none surpass it in quality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
FEB 1 1961

Boston Symphony At UConn Feb. 13

Special to the Hartford Times

Storrs—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its sixth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Feb. 13 at 8:15 p. m.

Pinch - hitting for Dr. Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf, one of the nation's leading operatic and symphonic conductors.

The symphony will perform "Variations for Orchestra" by Dall Piccola; interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss, and the "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100" by Prokofief.

The Boston Symphony is embarking on its 80th season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 148,332
FEB 5 1961

Boston Symphony at Uconn Feb. 13

STORRS (Special) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its sixth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Feb. 13 at 8:15 p.m.

Pinch - hitting for Conductor Charles Munch will be Erich Leinsdorf, one of the nation's leading operatic and symphonic conductors.

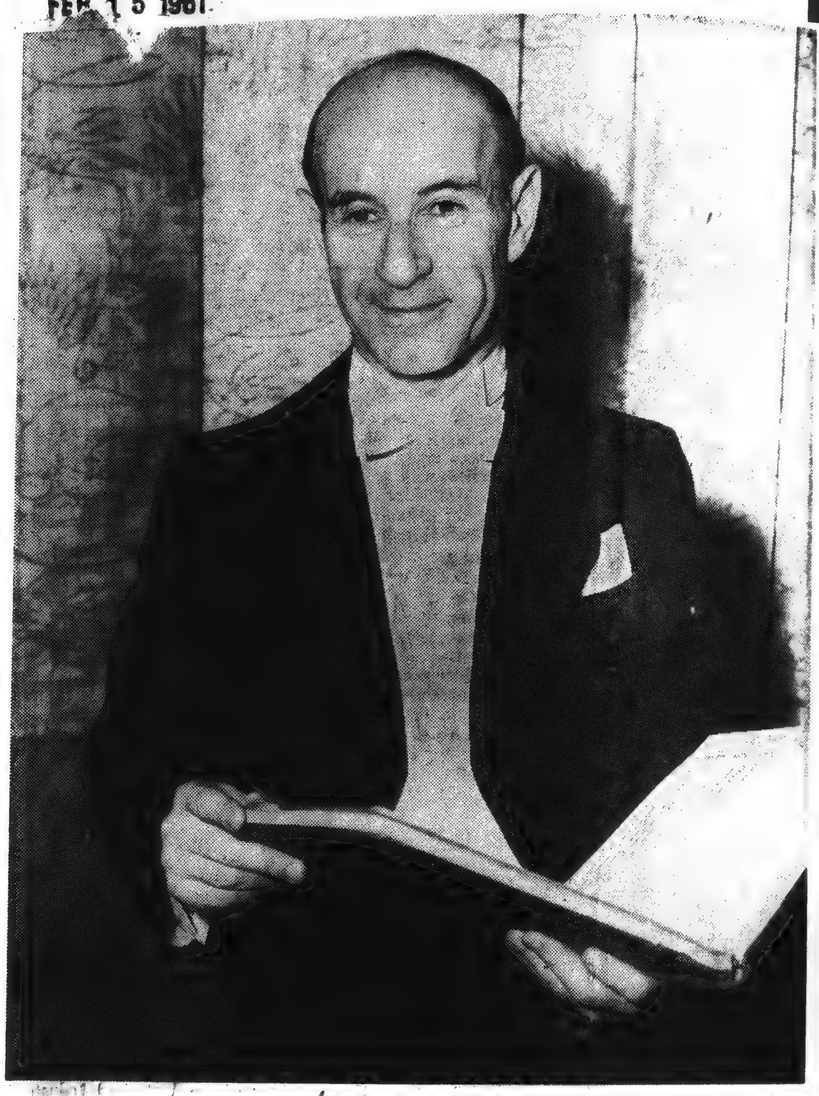
For his concert at the UofC, Leinsdorf, will conduct "Variations for Orchestra" by Dall Piccola; Interludes from the opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" by Johann Strauss and the "Symphony No. 5, Opus 100" by Prokofief.

146

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 27,132

FEB 15 1961

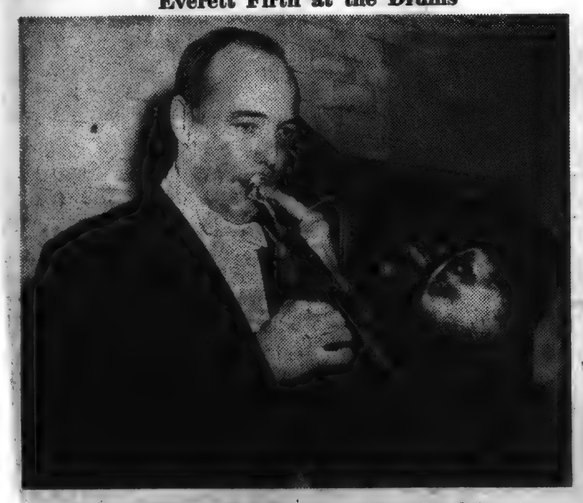


Eric Leinsdorf, Guest Conductor

Everett Firth at the Drums

Sherman Walt, Bassoonist

Georges Moleux and Double Bass



Kauko Kahila, Bass Trombonist

Julius Schulman, Violinist

Harold Faberman, Drummer

News
In Wings
By BRUCE

When the baton was rais night at Connecticut C Palmer Auditorium, th body of musicians in whit and tails began pouring for kind of music which has concert-goers from Japan Zealand.

Individually, the mem
the Boston Symphony Or present quite a differen melange of personalities.
sober, some happy-go-luck
all dedicated to the art o
And nothing reveals dividuality of the orchestra than a walk around the the musicians prepare concert.

One of the first men on-stage for pre-concert is Georges Edmond Mol earnest Frenchman who double-bass. Georges proudly of his upcoming in Jordan Hall, Boston,
5; (he had been practici p.m.). His son, Peter high school sophomore in Mass.

What does he do on th noon before a concert?

"Sometimes I take a w sometimes I go to the Usually though, I concen practicing," he says.

Julius Schulman, a com rookie in his first season orchestra, also insists on practice, "to stay in sh he says. A violinist, he times spends six hours a ing over his music unti satisfied.

"When we travel abro become regular tourists.
to gravitate tow
musicians in other cities.
ng their musicales or student groups," he s
Rock Hudson Double

Sherman Walt, a b who could pass for Rock may qualify as the most member of the group.
oncert tours and helping ises three children,
nds little time for his

Newsman Goes In Wings with Symphony

By BRUCE McCABE, Day Staff Writer

When the baton was raised last night at Connecticut College's Palmer Auditorium, a dignified body of musicians in white ties and tails began pouring forth the kind of music which has pleased concert-goers from Japan to New Zealand.

Individually, the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra present quite a different side: A melange of personalities, some sober, some happy-go-lucky, but all dedicated to the art of music. And nothing reveals the individuality of the orchestra more than a walk around the stage as the musicians prepare for their concert.

One of the first men to come on-stage for pre-concert practice is Georges Edmond Moleux, an earnest Frenchman who plays the double-bass. Georges speaks proudly of his upcoming recital in Jordan Hall, Boston, on May 15; (he had been practicing since 3 p.m.). His son, Peter, is a high school sophomore in Newton, Mass.

What does he do on the afternoon before a concert?

"Sometimes I take a walk and sometimes I go to the movies. Usually though, I concentrate on practicing," he says.

Julius Schulman, a comparative rookie in his first season with the orchestra, also insists on lots of practice, "to stay in shape" as he says. A violinist, he sometimes spends six hours a day going over his music until he is satisfied.

"When we travel abroad, we become regular tourists. Usually we gravitate toward the musicians in other cities, attending their musicales or speaking to student groups," he says.

Rock Hudson Double

Sherman Walt, a bassoonist who could pass for Rock Hudson, may qualify as the most relaxed member of the group. Between concert tours and helping his wife raise three children, Sherman finds little time for his hobbies: Skiing, fishing and sports car racing.

What did he do yesterday afternoon before the concert?

"I took a nap," he said contentedly.

The novelty of traveling around has begun to wear off for Mrs. Doriot Dwyer, a flutist and one of the Boston Symphony's three feminine musicians.

"Traveling's not such a great lark when you do it all the time. Like everything else, it can become routine," she says.

Some of the Others

There are countless others who make the orchestra tick.

Leslie Martin, who plays the bass and whose ambition is to go on a submarine ride from the Base; Kauko Kahila, a bass trombonist of Finnish descent, who says it's not so difficult to tear himself away from home when his three young children get to fighting with each other; Harold Farberman, the man behind the snare drums who conducts his own orchestra and who will premier his own opera, Medeia, March 26 in Boston; Henry Freeman, who plays the double bass and likes the concert tours because they leave him no time for teaching music ("I let my wife do the teaching."); Dan Moriarty and Al Robertson, the baggage-toters in charge of a 38 foot van which hauls nine tons of musical instruments from city to city.

Eric Leinsdorf

The man who raised the baton last night is probably the most important of all. Eric Leinsdorf (acting as guest conductor for the vacationing Charles Munch) is a wryly humorous man whose love of travel is so great that a friend once asked him if he was born a gypsy. The father of three boys and two girls, Leinsdorf likes to rest during the afternoon of a concert "because I don't like to overcome fatigue when I am conducting."

How does he feel before a performance?

"Anyone who is not a stone feels his ups and downs," said Leinsdorf.

Has he ever felt like giving his musicians a pep talk before their performance?

"There is no resemblance between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a college football team," he added crisply.

The Senior Man

It is probably an irrepressible violinist, Samuel Diamond, who is the most obvious about enjoying his work. Samuel tops the orchestra's seniority list with 43 years in the group and says he is the only native Bostonian in the bunch.

"The stage-hands keep asking me when I'm going to retire," he said. "But I tell them I can't until I buy a car."

Samuel still savors the experience of traveling to new places and recalls his days as a youth when he traveled with Victor Herbert. Perhaps, more than anything else, his parting remark testifies to the individuality of the musicians comprising the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Well, I've got to run off and tune up my ukelele."

Review of Concert

By WILLIAM MEREDITH

The appearance last night at Palmer Auditorium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of America's great musical organizations was exceptional even of its kind. In recent years this has been the chief musical event of the community in social, but not always in artistic terms. This reviewer has not heard, in the mere six years he has attended the Connecticut College Concert Series, a concert of higher quality. Erich Leinsdorf's conducting was the special triumph of the evening, but technique of the orchestra and the program itself were unusual too.

The program was perhaps the contraversial point. There are hearers who surely took offense at the strong, difficult work of one of the few significant composers writing today, Luigi Dallapiccola. There were others to whom Brahms' 4th Symphony is too familiar to invite such splendid replaying. Both sorts should have been appeased, if not converted, by the force and elegance of Maestro Leinsdorf's work. The Dallapiccola was at the least exciting to any attentive first listener, while the Brahms was more interesting in last night's brilliant reading than most anti-romantics would have been ready to admit.

As soon as the first work, Schubert's charming overture to Rosamunde, was under way it was clear that the conductor was concerned with a broad range of color. The tempi and the dynamics which were to make for an evening of very energetic music were established in this relatively undemanding work. The second work was Mozart's delicate 29th Symphony in A major, played by a much-reduced orchestra of 34 strings, two horns and two oboes.

Has Special Skill

Leinsdorf has a special skill with Mozart, as those who heard his recently broadcast Marriage of Figaro from the Metropolitan will testify, but it is an unobtrusive skill. He is faithful to the score, but avoids dryness or strictness and finds all the variety of Mozart's mood. This is not one of Mozart's greatest works, but it made clear his stature among the composers heard last night.

There are several things to be said about Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra, which concluded the first half of the program, although none of these will soothe the old-fashioned music-lover. It is good that the Boston Symphony has come to treat New London as if it were as sophisticated as New York, if not Boston. Dallapiccola is still a musician's composer, perhaps, but the texture of last night's beautifully played work was as authoritative as anything on the program. Many hearers said, "I don't like it" or "I don't understand it," which has often all been said of some pretty distinguished works, but no one seemed disposed to say, "This is a fraud." The Variations are a strongly percussive work, and what melodic content they have is disguised to most ears by the 12 - tone theory that begot the composer's style. Whether this work is a little monotonous, or a little pretentious ,as this hearer was inclined to feel, could not honestly be decided on one hearing.

Second Half

The second half of the program was given to Brahms' Fourth Symphony. Nowhere did Erich Leinsdorf's energy appear to greater effect. The languor and sameness of Brahms, qualities that have put his symphonic works a little out of fashion, were quite dispelled. As in the Mozart Symphony, a tremendous variety of tones and rhythms emerged. The texture of the orchestration was both stronger and more articulate than is usually audible. Part of this is due to the virtuoso quality of the orchestra—the kettle-drums and the solo flute, for example — but much was due to the fresh imagination of the conductor.

Leinsdorf, who conducts without baton or score, has variety of gestures ranging from the least perceptible shaping motion of the hand to body movements like a shot-putter's. They were all getting through to the musicians without ambiguity last night. It was an evening of fine music, as the capacity audience very well knew.

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 27,132
FEB 10 1961

Boston Symphony Here Next Week

Erich Leinsdorf will be guest conductor when the Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard in a concert at Palmer Auditorium at 8:30 p. m. next Tuesday.

The program will include: Schubert, Overture to Rosamunde; 2 Mozart, Symphony No. 29 in A major, K. 201; Dallapiccola, Variations for Orchestra; and Brahms, Symhpony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

FEB 16 1961

148

Music: Erich Leinsdorf

He Conducts Boston Symphony 1st Time

By ROSS PARMENTER

ERICH LEINSDORF led the Boston Symphony for the first time last night at Carnegie Hall. He made a distinct hit and at the conclusion of the program the members of the orchestra joined the audience in applauding him.

In recent years Mr. Leinsdorf's appearances here have been chiefly with the Metropolitan Opera and he has not had much opportunity to lead symphonic concerts. But he has had lots of symphonic experience and last night, one, remembering his earlier orchestral appearances, could gauge the influence on him of his recent immersion in opera.

One would say it has made him warmer. Last night there was all the old precision of control, the same clear-cut ideas and the same structural grasp. But there was also more pulsing humanity. The operatic influence was especially notable in the performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. At times it was almost Verdian in its dramatic intensity. But it was all so well laid-out that the work was not distorted by the injection of this note of drama.

•

Between the closing Brahms and the opening "Rosamunde" Overture, Mr. Leinsdorf led two modern works: Luigi Dallapiccola Variations for Orchestra, which dates from 1954, and the conductor's own concert version of Interludes from Richard Strauss' "Die Frau ohne Schatten."

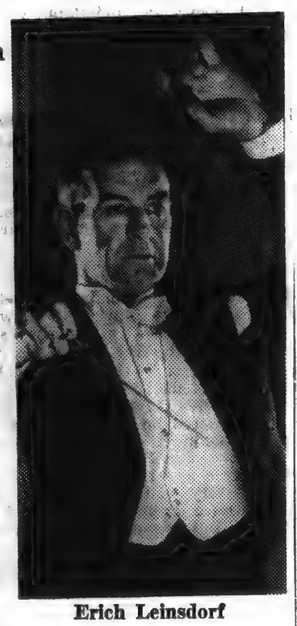
This was the New York première for the fourteen-minute Dallapiccola work. The program notes of the composer explained that the piece used the same twelve-tone row that he had used in "Annaliberas Notebook," and that in each variation the row is varied in a different way. And clearly each change rung on it was for an expressive purpose. It is a work of haunting personal intimacy.

Its opening suggests a muted march to the scaffold and throughout the music was moody and atmospheric. Occasionally it called for large sonorities, but more often the scoring was for a limited number of instruments, each obviously employed for the special coloration it could give. But for this listener it never sounded thin, because of the intensity of the controlled feeling.

Then came the Strauss. As the master's inimitable style surged up in the orchestra one longed to hear the whole of "Die Frau" in the opera house. But even these twenty-two minutes of it, wtihout the human voice, were lovely. And Mr. Leinsdorf, who has shown his affinity for Strauss in leading "Arabella" at the Met, led the interludes with expansive affection.

•

The orchestra played well all evening. And besides retaining its own special richness of sonority that makes it so individual in sound, it proved itself sufficiently responsive to the conductor to communicate his wishes, one sensed, almost exactly as he wanted them. Thus the concert fused two personalities: Mr. Leinsdorf's and the orchestra's.



Erich Leinsdorf

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. At Carnegie Hall.

Overture to Rosamunde	Schubert
Variations for Orchestra (first New York performance)	Dallapiccola
Interludes from Die Frau ohne Schatten	Strauss
Symphony No. 4	Brahms

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121

FEB 16 1961

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program:

Overture to "Rosamunde"	Schubert
Variations for Orchestra	Dallapiccola
Interludes from the Opera, "Die Frau ohne Schatten"	Strauss
Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op 98	Brahms

By Ronald Eyer

Erich Leinsdorf was guest pilot for this concert of the Boston Symphony, and, musician extraordinaire though he is, not much of real incandescence came to pass during the evening.

Possibly it was the program It was pleasant to hear the charming old-fashioned overture to "Rosamunde" again. It doesn't turn up often on symphonic programs any more, except at "pop" concerts, and it makes us wish all over again that Schubert had found time in his short span of years to give some attention to opera. It does not contain his most distinguished melodic inspiration, but it shows his true bent for dramatic music and his innate ability to build impressively in theatrical terms.

Dallapicolla's Variations for Orchestra, played here for the first time, are by turn grim, apochryphal and emotionally sentient. Because of their twelve-tone base of construction they are, perhaps, most successful when they are being grim and stentorian. It is not easy to be emotional—sentient or otherwise—in a serial row. But it is really astringent only occasionally. The percusion instruments particularly the vibraphone, play a major role, and every type of variation is employed—melodic, harmonic, rhythmic and coloristic. The audience received the work politely but no signs were discernable that many were deeply moved.

Things came to life with the Interludes from Strauss' "Die Frau ohne Schatten." This is Mr. Leinsdorf's own concert version of a string of interludes that link the eleven scenes of the opera and they come off most successfully as a kind of operatic tone poem (they are played without pause and blend into each other perfectly from the point of view of mood and tempo as well as tonality). The piece gives a broad view of the opera in miniature and it should become a good repertoire number for conductors who are looking for something besides the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes and the standard orchestral works of Strauss. It calls, of course, for a big and virtuosic orchestra complete with wind-machine.

The Brahms Fourth, though Mr. Leinsdorf drove it hard, sounded rather wooden and academic and in want of a warm heart.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S: 778,562

FEB 16 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT CARNEGIE HALL

Efficiency Wins, Charm Loses

By MILES KASTENDIECK

IN THE PARADE of orchestras through Carnegie Hall this week, the Boston Symphony passed in review last night. Leading it was Erich Leinsdorf as guest conductor. Within a framework of Schubert and Brahms, he chose to play Dallapiccola and Strauss for novelty.

The first N. Y. performance of Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra" held attention intermittently. Stylish in its fragmentary aspect and in its 12-tone context, it sounded like thin stuff without any special charm.

Its generally somber nature needed something ingratiating to relieve the grayness created in spite of the color in orchestration. When this came, it turned out to be only a wisp of expressiveness.

A glimpse into the interludes from Strauss' opera "Die Frau Ohne Schatten" let the audience bask in the sunlight of flowing melody and a lushness in orchestration typical of the composer.

Presented as a kind of symphonic synthesis, these may not have attained complete identity. What was missing resolved itself into inhibited expression of the glory that is Strauss.

Bluntly Efficient

Thus Mr. Leinsdorf presented himself as a very solid musician, over-serious and conscientious to the point of blunt efficiency.

Except for his choreographic gestures (he competes favorably with Leonard Bernstein in this field), he conducted like a businessman. All his knee-bending, dictatorial pointing and geometric gesturing brought little magic to the performances.

Without the leavening of imaginative insight, the music in general remained earthbound. For all his bouncing around, Mr. Leinsdorf conveyed little theatre in the overture to Schubert's "Rosa Munde." The performance had its suave moments but no special lilt.

A sluggish reading of the opening movement of Brahms' Fourth Symphony defined most earnest striving toward an honest straightforward presentation of the score. The greatness of Brahms became obscured as it was 40 years ago through sheer weight of sound.

Paradoxically, Mr. Leinsdorf stepped up the tempo of the third movement to such a degree than the bucyancy of the music slipped away because of pace. The orchestra left an impression of playing dutifully rather than joyfully.

All the groundwork of performance had been carefully plotted; what was needed was inspired conducting.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121

FEB 17 1961

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

By Ronald Eyer

Erich Leinsdorf was guest pilot for this concert of the Boston Symphony, and, musician extraordinaire though he is, not much of real incandescence came to pass during the evening.

Possibly it was the program It was pleasant to hear the charming old-fashioned overture to "Rosamunde" again. It doesn't turn up often on symphonic programs any more, except at "pop" concerts, and it makes us wish all over again that Schubert had found time in his short span of years to give some attention to opera. It does not contain his most distinguished melodic inspiration, but it shows his true bent for dramatic music and his innate ability to build impressively in theatrical terms.

Dallapicolla's Variations for Orchestra, played here for the first time, are by turn grim, apochryphal and emotionally sentient. Because of their twelve-tone base of construction they are, perhaps, most successful when they are being grim and stentorian. It is not easy to be emotional—sentient or otherwise—in a serial row. But it is really astringent only occasionally. The percusion instruments particularly the vibraphone, play a major role, and every type of variation is employed—melodic, harmonic, rhythmic and coloristic. The audience received the work politely but no signs were discernable that many were deeply moved.

Things came to life with the Interludes from Strauss' "Die Frau ohne Schatten." This is Mr. Leinsdorf's own concert version of a string of interludes that link the eleven scenes of the opera and they come off most successfully as a kind of operatic tone poem (they are played without pause and blend into each other perfectly from the point of view of mood and tempo as well as tonality). The piece gives a broad view of the opera in miniature and it should become a good repertoire number for conductors who are looking for something besides the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes and the standard orchestral works of Strauss. It calls, of course, for a big and virtuosic orchestra complete with wind-machine.

The Brahms Fourth, though Mr. Leinsdorf drove it hard, sounded rather wooden and academic and in want of a warm heart.

Tribune 2/12/61

3 New Works for Symphony

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Three visiting major orchestras will introduce three contemporary works to New York in a symphonically crowded week which offers one or more concerts of this kind every day. The Cleveland Orchestra will present Easley Blackwood's Symphony No. 2 in its second and last Carnegie Hall concert of the season under George Szell's direction tonight. The Philadelphia Orchestra will give the local premiere of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 on Tuesday night, and the program for Erich Leinsdorf's New York debut as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony on Wednesday will include Luigi Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra.

Mr. Blackwood's symphony, first played in Cleveland on Jan. 5, was commissioned by the G. Schirmer music publishing firm for the celebration of its hundredth anniversary. Mr. Piston's symphony is the first of five American works to be commissioned by the Philadelphians through an anonymous gift. Mr. Dallapiccola's work is also the fruit of a commission; this was awarded by the Louisville Orchestra, which first played it in October, 1954.

In tomorrow's musical Valentine to Leonard Bernstein, the Philharmonic is contributing to the week's list of contemporary novelties with the first performance of a set of Symphonic Dances from his "West Side Story." This work has been orchestrated under the composer's supervision by Sid Ramin and Irwin Kostal, who performed a similar function for the original music drama.

Double Concerto

One of the several unfamiliar earlier works on this week's schedule is Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach's Double Concerto in E flat for Cembalo and Fortepiano, to be played in Saturday night's "Music For Forgotten and Remembered" series at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Albert Fuller will be the harpsichordist and Mieczyslaw Horszowski will be the pianist in this unusual concurrence of keyboard instruments. Its previous performances in this country seem to be limited to one several years ago at Columbia University under Howard Shanet and another last summer at Chautauqua with Blanche Winogron and Walter Hendl as the soloists.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879

FEB 12 1961

Leinsdorf to Conduct Here

Erich Leinsdorf will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. The program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 in A major. Interludes from Strauss' rarely heard opera, "Woman Without Shadow", Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra and excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4300
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 16 1961

Erich Leinsdorf

Boston Symphony Guest Conductor

By Allan Sly

Time was when Boston's symphonic diet regularly flew the trade-in-Germany pennant. But those who vociferously applauded Erich Leinsdorf last Saturday were probably approving his fine craftsmanship, not trying to put the clock back. After all, such musical fundamentalism — Schubert's Rosamunde overture, Brahms' fourth, scenes from Gotterdammerung — send some of us home feeling chiefly that we have done our duty. Even Dallapiccola's (11-12-tone) Variations hewed to the same line.

Doing one's duty yields its own rewards, of course. It is instructive to notice the inner workings of the Brahms fourth, its superb drawing and its relentless logic, but such a tectonic approach rather hobbles the B.S.O., which could so easily have leapfrogged over such preoccupations and, with a Barbirolli, a Beecham or a Bernstein shown us the incandescent miracle of creation rather than the operation of its physical laws.

Besides, it all sounded so black and white — quite a trick, to view Schubert's transports as if color blind, to indulge Brahms's elegiac frame of mind in monochrome.

At my age I should know better than to expect perfection, but surely we might come a little nearer to it in some respects. Must the house management forever indulge the latecomers in their inner-directed compulsions to be seated regardless? During the course of the Brahms second movement a substantial citizen crashed into a vacant seat behind mine, setting up seismic waves that spread out for yards in all directions. A dozen or more heads turned; after some labored breathing a voice demanded (loudly, under the circumstances) to know what part of the program was in progress — all this taking up many times, I could not but reflect, the five or six beats of Mr. Leinsdorf's broad andante that the price of a seat pays for. With an effort, we were able to rejoin Brahms for the rest of his discourse, but the golden bowl had a crack in it by this time.

The orchestra spared no effort to meet Mr. Leinsdorf more than half-way and apparently enjoyed doing so. I never heard better timpani playing. But we had the usual phenomena, on occasion, from clarinet and horn departments and also less than unanimity among tutti violins.

The Dallapiccola should surely remind the most reluctant listener that we are living in an age of constantly shifting cosmologies — expanding concepts: who is to say, this is final, unalterable? To watch Mr. Leinsdorf and the B.S.O. so devotedly penetrating to the heart of a piece is edifying in itself. The audience held on valiantly; if in the past Symphony Hall used to have an exit "in case of Brahms," it must have been bricked up, for today's concertgoers do not panic.

The Wagner ran to large proportions, reminding one of the marvelous tidying-up Mr. Leinsdorf effected at the Met 20 years ago, keeping the stage hands waiting for the final curtain eight, nine minutes longer than his predecessor. Such courage, such convictions, sweep all before them — like the Panzer division that he set up for what Bernard Shaw, in his best Dublin, used to call "Siegfried's little traht along the Rhoin." This was the single touch of humor the evening afforded; but then humor isn't everything.

Carnegie Hall

Zweimal das Boston Orchester: klassisch, romantisch und modern

Für seinen dritten Besuch dieser Saison in der Carnegie Hall hatte sich das Boston Symphonie-Orchester einen alten New Yorker als Gast mitgebracht: Erich Leinsdorf von der Metropolitan-Oper, der einige Wochen Urlaub genommen hat, um sich mit den Bostonern und anderen Orchestern symphonischer Musik zu widmen.

Das Programm dieser beiden Konzerte war abwechslungsreich und überaus geschickt, und es gab Leinsdorf die Möglichkeit, sich als das zu präsentieren, was er in der Tat ist: Ein Dirigent, der in Klarheit und treffender Sicherheit jedem Stil — sei es Klassik, sei es die Musik der Romantiker oder der zeitgenössischen Komponisten gerecht wird, und dessen natürliche Begabung es ihm erlaubt, seine eigenen musikalischen Ideen herauszuheben, ohne die Originalität der gespielten Werke auch nur in der kleinsten Weise zu beeinträchtigen.

Daß Leinsdorf in der Wiedergabe von Opernmusik sein Lieblingsfeld sieht, ist nicht weiter verwunderlich. So fanden sich in den beiden Programmen am Sonnabend und am Mittwoch die Ouvertüre zu Schuberts "Rosamunde", eine Erich Leinsdorf - Konzertversion der Musik aus der Oper "Die Frau ohne Schatten" von Richard Strauß, in der die Höhepunkte einzelner Szenen des Werks mit treffenden Übergängen in Gefühl und Tempo symphonisch zusammengestellt sind, und schließlich Auszüge aus Wagners "Götterdämmerung". Dies war der interessanteste Programmteil. Leinsdorf hat hier, ganz im Stil Wagners eigene Zusätze und Übergänge gefunden, um Siegfrieds Rheinfahrt, seinen Tod und den gewaltigen Schluß des "Rings" als Ganzes wirken zu lassen. Die bekannten Motive sind ausnahmslos in dieser Bearbeitung verwendet worden, vom Gesang der Rheintöchter bis zu der erschütternden Trauermusik, eine vollendete Darbietung.

*

Ferner brachte Leinsdorf die nicht oft gehörte Symphonie Nr. 29 in A-Dur von Mozart, von einem verkleinerten Orchester entzückend frei, leicht und beschwingt ausgeführt. Prokofieffs 5. Symphonie bildete den Abschluß des Gastkonzerts, in dessen Programm am Mittwoch noch die 4. Symphonie von Brahms gespielt wurde. Die wuchtige und zu gleicher Zeit lyrische Melodie des ersten Satzes des Prokofieff-Werkes ist ganz verblüffend orchestriert, und erweckte, wie stets wenn dieses Werk auf dem Programm steht, das stärkste Interesse; ebenso die elegische Melodie des 3. Satzes, die nach der Wiedergabe durch einzelne Instrumente in einem wuchtigen, volltönenden Zusammenklang endet.

E. St.

Michigan spielt in Moskau

MOSKAU, 22. Feb. (AP) — Die Kapelle der Universität Michigan eröffnete eine auf acht Wochen berechnete Konzertreise in der Sowjetunion mit einem Konzert im hiesigen Sportpalast, wo die Zuhörer von Gershwin-Melodien gar nicht genug bekommen konnten.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Feb. 15.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. SCHUBERT: Overture to Rosamunde. DALLAPICCOLA: Variations for Orchestra (New York Premiere). STRAUSS: Interludes from Die Frau ohne Schatten. BRAHMS: Symphony No. 4.

Despite all the mournful talk about the imminent death of the symphony orchestra as an institution, there is still plenty of life in a great orchestra at the top of its form led by a conductor of vision and vitality. That was the situation at this concert, and some of those final bravos were mine. Mr. Leinsdorf's way with the Brahms was tremendously exciting. It was a conception of immense energy, clarity and insight, swift but beautifully controlled. His superb sense of orchestral balance lightened many of the murkier aspects of Brahms's orchestration, giving much of the work an almost chamberish feeling, all very much to its advantage. It seemed as if Mr. Leinsdorf were guiding his orchestra on a voyage of rediscovery and re-creation, and I was most happy to be along.

Dallapiccola's set of Variations, his most extensive twelve-tone composition for orchestra to date, is actually a reworking of the Quaderno Musicale di Annalibera, an extremely intricate piano work of the late 1940s. He made the new version for the famous Louisville project, and it is easily one of the finest scores commissioned for the orchestra. Delicately and suavely scored, marvelously lyric for all its complexity, it should circulate widely. Among all members of the post-Webern school of atonalists, Dallapiccola has chosen a unique path, very close to basic principles of emotion and communication. This work is one of his masterpieces. The performance was eminently cognizant of its special and haunting message.

The Strauss Suite, on the other hand, is nobody's masterpiece, but simply a succession of meandering, inconclusive chunks torn from a pretentiously dull work that continues to enjoy an incomprehensible vogue in Central Europe. Musically, it was a blot on an otherwise superbly planned program, and it received far more than its due from Mr. Leinsdorf and the Bostonians.

—Alan Rich

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
FEB 16 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Leinsdorf Leads Boston Symphony

Because Luigi Dallapiccola is a composer of imagination and feeling, his "Variations for Orchestra," given their first performance here by the Boston Symphony last night in Carnegie Hall didn't leave me unmoved. But with a different approach to the development of his ideas, far more beauty could have been communicated.

Erich Leinsdorf, stalwart of the Metropolitan Opera, both as musical consultant and as one of its principal conductors, was on the podium as guest maestro. He conducted the "Variations" from memory with perception and obvious sympathy.

Knowing that Dallapiccola's devotion to the 12-tone idiom would make the music difficult listening to many in the audience, he expended every effort to extract the ultimate in meaning and color from it.

Dallapiccola has suffered through the two World Wars and he reflects the pain of his experiences. The undercurrent of tragedy is there even though his idiom is esoteric. He has the Italian gift of melody in his blood but he has become so addicted to atonal dissonance that its loveliness is dissipated.

It gasps for life in a barren country, dry, like Steinbeck's Oklahoma in "Grapes of Wrath."

Some composers, like Alban Berg, have moulded atonality far more successfully into their own musical personalities. In Dallapiccola it is like an annex, not a part of his own building.

The "Variations," for instance, despite their incidental moments of poignancy, sound for the most part as if the composer were an essayist. Yet the titles of his sections indicate that he intended to be more emotionally direct and dramatic, for instance, Poco allegretto, alla Serenata, or Adantino amoroso; or Allegro, con violenza. At its source, the atonal idiom is vague; it lacks contrast, and Dallapiccola is not able to overcome this handicap. The "Variations" end up being self conscious.

'Faru Ohne Schatten'

Because of its allegorical, abstruse libretto, and its many other problems of performance, Strauss' "Die Frau ohne Schatten" has never been performed here, but the interludes from the opera which followed the Dallapiccola, illustrated the power and beauty of the score.

The Brahms Fourth Symphony which closed the program was disappointing. Leinsdorf forced the sound of the ensemble, the balance was often not clearly established, the attacks were ragged, and subtlety after subtlety bypassed. Diminuendos indicated by Brahms were ignored, passages marked piano were played louder. In general the interpretation was hurried, lacking grandeur and sensitivity.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
APR 1961

Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor, Carnegie Hall, Feb. 15, E—Leinsdorf made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony in this city. The program began with Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, proceeded to two contramporary scores, Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra" (1954) and Mr. Leinsdorf's concert version of excerpts from Richard Strauss' "The Woman without a Shadow," and concluded with the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Greatest interest centered in the New York premiere of the Dallapiccola work, which reputedly employed the same twelve-note row that the composer used in his "Annalibera's Notebook." The variations have a wide scope of color and expressiveness, with the original row undergoing various transformations, achieving an effect of great intensity at times. The Strauss work contains some of that composer's best music. The transcription was given with a broad and persuasive manner, suggesting that Mr. Leinsdorf would be an ideal conductor to lead the work at the "Met."

Times 2/12/61

Erica

LEADS VISITORS—Erich Leinsdorf conducts Boston Symphony here this week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 16 1961

Erich Leinsdorf
Boston Symphony Guest Conductor

By Allan Sly

Time was when Boston's symphonic diet regularly flew the made-in-Germany pennant. But those who vociferously applauded Erich Leinsdorf last Saturday were probably approving his fine craftsmanship, not trying to put the clock back. After all, such musical fundamentalism — Schubert's Rosamunde overture, Brahms' fourth, scenes from Gotterdammerung — send some of us home feeling chiefly that we have done our duty. Even Dallapiccola's (11#12-tone) Variations hewed to the same line.

Doing one's duty yields its own rewards, of course. It is instructive to notice the inner workings of the Brahms fourth, its superb drawing and its relentless logic, but such a tectonic approach rather hobbles the B.S.O., which could so easily have leapfrogged over such preoccupations and, with a Barbirolli, a Beecham or a Bernstein shown us the incandescent miracle of creation rather than the operation of its physical laws.

Besides, it all sounded so black and white — quite a trick, to view Schubert's transports as if color blind, to indulge Brahms's elegiac frame of mind in monochrome.

At my age I should know better than to expect perfection, but surely we might come a little nearer to it in some respects. Must the house management forever indulge the latecomers in their inner-directed compulsions to be seated regardless? During the course of the Brahms second movement a substantial citizen crashed into a vacant seat behind mine, setting up seismic waves that spread out for yards in all directions. A dozen or more heads turned; after some labored breathing a voice demanded (loudly, under the circumstances) to know what part of the program was in progress — all this taking up many times, I could not but reflect, the five or six beats of Mr. Leinsdorf's broad andante that the price of a seat pays for. With an effort, we were able to rejoin Brahms for the rest of his discourse, but the golden bowl had a crack in it by this time.

The orchestra spared no effort to assist Mr. Leinsdorf more than half - way and apparently enjoyed doing so. I never heard better timpani playing. But we had the usual phenomena on occasion, from clarinet and horn departments and also less than unanimity among tutti violins.

The Dallapiccola should surely remind the most reluctant listener that we are living in an age of constantly shifting cosmologies — expanding concepts: who is to say this is final, unalterable? To watch Mr. Leinsdorf and the B.S.O. so devotedly penetrating to the heart of a piece is edifying in itself. The audience held on valiantly; if in the past Symphony Hall used to have an exit "in case of Brahms," it must have been bricked up, for today's concertgoers do not panic.

The Wagner ran to large proportions, reminding one of the marvelous tidying-up Mr. Leinsdorf effected at the Met 20 years ago, keeping the stage hands waiting for the final curtain eight, nine minutes longer than his predecessor. Such courage, such convictions, sweep all before them — like the Panzer division that he set up for what Bernard Shaw, in his best Dublin, used to call "Siegfried's little trait along the Rhoin." This was the single touch of humor the evening afforded; but then humor isn't everything.

Carnegie Hall

Zweimal das Boston Orchester: klassisch, romantisch und modern

Für seinen dritten Besuch dieser Saison in der Carnegie Hall hatte sich das Boston Symphonie-Orchester einen alten New Yorker als Gast mitgebracht: Erich Leinsdorf von der Metropolitan - Oper, der einige Wochen Urlaub genommen hat, um sich mit den Bostonern und anderen Orchestern symphonischer Musik zu widmen.

Das Programm dieser beiden Konzerte war abwechslungsreich und überaus geschickt, und es gab Leinsdorf die Möglichkeit, sich als das zu präsentieren, was er in der Tat ist: Ein Dirigent, der in Klarheit und treffender Sicherheit jedem Stil — sei es Klassik, sei es die Musik der Romantiker oder der zeitgenössischen Komponisten gerecht wird, und dessen natürliche Begabung es ihm erlaubt, seine eigenen musikalischen Ideen herauszuheben, ohne die Originalität der gespielten Werke auch nur in der kleinsten Weise zu beeinträchtigen.

Daß Leinsdorf in der Wiedergabe von Opernmusik sein Lieblingsfeld sieht, ist nicht weiter verwunderlich. So fanden sich in den beiden Programmen am Sonnabend und am Mittwoch die Ouvertüre zu Schuberts "Rosamunde", eine Erich Leinsdorf - Konzertversion der Musik aus der Oper "Die Frau ohne Schatten" von Richard Strauß, in der die Höhepunkte einzelner Szenen des Werks mit treffenden Übergängen in Gefühl und Tempo symphonisch zusammengestellt sind, und schließlich Auszüge aus Wagners "Götterdämmerung". Dies war der interessanteste Programmteil. Leinsdorf hat hier ganz im Stil Wagners eigene Zusätze und Übergänge gefunden, um Siegfrieds Rheinfahrt, seinen Tod und den gewaltigen Schluß des "Rings" als Ganzes wirken zu lassen. Die bekannten Motive sind ausnahmslos in dieser Bearbeitung verwendet worden, vom Gesang der Rheintöchter bis zu der erschütternden Trauermusik, eine vollendete Darbietung.

•

Ferner brachte Leinsdorf die nicht oft gehörte Symphonie Nr. 29 in A-Dur von Mozart, von einem verkleinerten Orchester entzückend frei, leicht und beschwingt ausgeführt, Prokofieffs 5. Symphonie bildete den Abschluß des Gastkonzerts, in dessen Programm am Mittwoch noch die 4. Symphonie von Brahms gespielt wurde. Die wuchtige und zu gleicher Zeit lyrische Melodie des ersten Satzes des Prokofieff-Werkes ist ganz verblüffend orchestriert, und erweckte, wie stets wenn dieses Werk auf dem Programm steht, das stärkste Interesse; ebenso die elegische Melodie des 3. Satzes, die nach der Wiedergabe durch einzelne Instrumente in einem wuchtigen, volltönenden Zusammenklang endet.

E. St.

Michigan spielt in Moskau

MOSKAU, 23. Feb. (UP) — Die Kapelle der Universität Michigan eröffnete eine auf acht Wochen berechnete Konzertreise in der Sowjetunion mit einem Konzert im hiesigen Sportpalast, wo die Zuhörer von Gershwin-Melodien gar nicht genug bekommen konnten.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Feb. 15.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. SCHUBERT: Overture to Rosamunde. DALLAPICCOLA: Variations for Orchestra (New York Premiere). STRAUSS: Interludes from Die Frau ohne Schatten. BRAHMS: Symphony No. 4.

Despite all the mournful talk about the imminent death of the symphony orchestra as an institution, there is still plenty of life in a great orchestra at the top of its form led by a conductor of vision and vitality. That was the situation at this concert, and some of those final bravos were mine. Mr. Leinsdorf's way with the Brahms was tremendously exciting. It was a conception of immense energy, clarity and insight, swift but beautifully controlled. His superb sense of orchestral balance lightened many of the murkier aspects of Brahms's orchestration, giving much of the work an almost chamberish feeling, all very much to its advantage. It seemed as if Mr. Leinsdorf were guiding his orchestra on a voyage of rediscovery and re-creation, and I was most happy to be along.

Dallapiccola's set of Variations, his most extensive twelve-tone composition for orchestra to date, is actually a reworking of the Quaderno Musicale di Annalibera, an extremely intricate piano work of the late 1940s. He made the new version for the famous Louisville project, and it is easily one of the finest scores commissioned for the orchestra. Delicately and suavely scored, marvelously lyric for all its complexity, it should circulate widely. Among all members of the post-Webern school of atonalists, Dallapiccola has chosen a unique path, very close to basic principles of emotion and communication. This work is one of his masterpieces. The performance was eminently cognizant of its special and haunting message.

The Strauss Suite, on the other hand, is nobody's masterpiece, but simply a succession of meandering, inconclusive chunks torn from a pretentiously dull work that continues to enjoy an incomprehensible vogue in Central Europe. Musically, it was a blot on an otherwise superbly planned program, and it received far more than its due from Mr. Leinsdorf and the Bostonians.

—Alan Rich

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
FEB 16 1961

WORDS and MUSIC
By Harriett Johnson

Leinsdorf Leads Boston Symphony

Because Lukas Dallapiccola is a composer of imagination and feeling, his "Variations for Orchestra," given their first performance here by the Boston Symphony last night in Carnegie Hall didn't leave me unmoved. But with a different approach to the development of his ideas, far more beauty could have been communicated.

Erich Leinsdorf, stalwart of the Metropolitan Opera, both as musical consultant and as one of its principal conductors, was on the podium as guest maestro. He conducted the "Variations" from memory with perception and obvious sympathy.

Knowing that Dallapiccola's devotion to the 12-tone idiom would make the music difficult listening to many in the audience, he expended every effort to extract the ultimate in meaning and color from it.

Dallapiccola has suffered through the two World Wars and he reflects the pain of his experiences. The undercurrent of tragedy is there even though his idiom is esoteric. He has the Italian gift of melody in his blood but he has become so addicted to atonal dissonance that its loveliness is dissipated.

It gasps for life in a barren country, dry, like Steinbeck's Oklahoma in "Grapes of Wrath."

Some composers, like Alban Berg, have moulded atonality far more successfully into their own musical personalities. In Dallapiccola it is like an annex, not a part of his own building.

The "Variations," for instance, despite their incidental moments of poignancy, sound for the most part as if the composer were an essayist. Yet the titles of his sections indicate that he intended to be more emotionally direct and dramatic (for instance, Poco espressivo, alla Serenata, or Adagio amoroso, or Allegro, con violenza. At its source, the atonal idiom is vague; it lacks contrast, and Dallapiccola is not able to overcome this handicap. The "Variations" end up being self conscious.

Text Ohne Schatten

Because of its allegorical, abstruse libretto, and its many other problems of performance, Strauss' "Die Frau ohne Schatten" has never been performed here, but the interludes from the opera which followed the Dallapiccola, illustrated the power and beauty of the score.

The Brahms—Fourth Symphony which closed the program was disappointing. Leinsdorf forced the sound of the ensemble, the balance was often not clearly established, the attacks were ragged, and subtlety after subtlety bypassed. Diminuendos indicated by Brahms were ignored, passages marked piano were played loudly. In general the interpretation was hurried, lacking grandeur and sensitivity.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
APR 1961

Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor, Carnegie Hall, Feb. 15, E—Leinsdorf made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony in this city. The program began with Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture, proceeded to two contramporary scores, Dallapiccola's "Variations for Orchestra" (1954) and Mr. Leinsdorf's concert version of excerpts from Richard Strauss' "The Woman without a Shadow," and concluded with the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Greatest interest centered in the New York premiere of the Dallapiccola work, which reputedly employed the same twelve-note row that the composer used in his "Annalibera's Notebook." The variations have a wide scope of color and expressiveness, with the original row undergoing various transformations, achieving an effect of great intensity at times. The Strauss work contains some of that composer's best music. The transcription was given with a broad and persuasive manner, suggesting that Mr. Leinsdorf would be an ideal conductor to lead the work at the "Met."

N. D.

Times 2/12/61

LEADS VISITORS—Erich Leinsdorf conducts Boston Symphony here this week.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 284,717 S: 299,840

FEB 17 1961

150

NEWS OF MUSIC

Leinsdorf Pacifies Boston Symphony

By IRVING LOWENS
Star Music Critic

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor; at Constitution Hall. Program: Overture to Rosamunde, Schubert; Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98, Brahms; Variations for Orchestra, Dallapiccola; Excerpts from Gotterdammerung, Wagner.

It is an astonishing thing to hear a familiar symphony orchestra change its character.

Last night at Constitution Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played under guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf instead of Charles Munch, and I must say that were it not for the familiar faces in the orchestra and the printed program assuring me that this was actually the BSO, I would have guessed that it was a different organization.

With Munch directing, the BSO is a brilliant virtuoso group, exciting to hear, nervous, constantly keyed up and tense. Everything is driving.

Under Leinsdorf, the orchestra is amazing placid—calm, relaxed, and unfortunately just a little boring.

Standard Fare

Of course, the players are the same—there are the same wonderful brass and wind choirs, the same supple and elegant string tone. But so magnificent a musical instrument is this orchestra that, just as a Steinway changes character in the hands of different pianists, so does the BSO mirror its conductor.

Mr. Leinsdorf's program was standard fare with the exception of a 12-tone work by Luigi Dallapiccola, a set of Variations for Orchestra commissioned by the Louisville Orchestra and first performed some six years ago.

The difficult score was set forth with limpid clarity. It proved to be quite interesting, full of striking orchestral effects, and surprisingly easy to take on first hearing.

For their pains, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were rewarded by the most tepid smattering of applause I have heard in Constitutional Hall in many a day.

An Odd Note

Perhaps the audience was somewhat bemused by the almost totally incomprehensible program note for which I suppose Mr. Dallapiccola himself was partly to blame, as his own remarks were quoted at length.

A characteristic sentence reads:

"Outside the works of Schoenberg, Berg and Webern, I have received very extraordinary explanations (exactly in the 12-tone domain) through the literature of Proust and James Joyce."

This sort of manhandling of English as she is spoke is unfortunate — could not our program book annotator have found something less like gibberish to say about so fascinating a work?

The evening began with a careful reading of the Schubert Rosamunde Overture. This was followed by a too tame Brahms Fourth which sparked an ovation. To close the concert, Mr. Leinsdorf illuminated the familiar orchestral excerpts from Gotterdammerung with a neat restraint that underlined their impressive splendor.

As is standard when the visitors from the Athens of America play Constitution Hall, the house was full.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 393,718 S. 446,764

FEB 17 1961

Postlude

Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony Shine

By Paul Hume

It has been a long time since a conductor has programmed an extended sequence of orchestral music from Wagner's "Gotterdaemmerung." It has been even longer since a major orchestra has played Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture in Constitution Hall.

Hume

Last night Erich Leinsdorf, currently making his first appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, did both. Constitutional Hall was full to the last seat as the famed opera and symphony conductor began the evening with the Schubert which had a pleasant kind of old-fashioned feeling, along with some less than precise playing from the violins. The suspicion was pretty strong that the Boston Symphony hasn't played "Rosamunde" for quite a while. Even under its correct name of "The Magic Harp."

There was nothing hesitant or less than splendid however in a memorable reading of the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Here Leinsdorf had scrubbed away players' habits of years' standing to give us the symphony in a series of long lines, formed by a plastic but firm adherence to basic concepts of fundamental tempos. No celestial vision of Brahms has caused Leinsdorf to add ritards where the composer did not write them.

The music had life, a life unhampered by violent pullings and haulings. The scherzo found the Bostonians on their toes, as one expected ritard after another was passed up to hold the line that Brahms laid down. It was exciting and it sounded right. The direct line from the scherzo to the closing passacaglia was another proper joy. The audience loved it and demanded the conductor's return a number of times, during which the orchestra joined in the applause.

Luigi Dallapiccola wrote his Orchestral Variations for the Louisville Orchestra in the early '50s. It shows the 12-tone composer in mellow wood. Its 11 sections take only slightly over 11 minutes to perform. Within that time they range from an ingenious exercise on the notes B.A.C.H., through the pointillist sounds of the Webern miniaturist. There is exoticism, and there are reminiscences of Debussy and even, in the cellos of Wagner. Whether or not the music will remain in the mind is had to tell, though having heard it a number of times, I must confess it all sounded totally unfamiliar last night. It was marvelously played.

So was the big, sunburst and sunset of Wagner's most eloquent Ring opera. The horns and trombones of the Boston Symphony make a glorious ensemble, one that even overshadowed the strings occasionally. The first trumpet, however, is an irreconcilable opposite to a proper Wagnerian tone. Leinsdorf is one of the Wagner chieftains of the day. He kept the music clear even when he let it ride the biggest crests.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

APR 1961

Leinsdorf Leads
Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Feb. 18, 2:30 p.m.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting. MOZART: Symphony No. 29 in A, K.201. WAGNER: Excerpts from Götterdämmerung. PROKOFIEFF: Symphony No. 5, Op. 100.

For his second and final concert here as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf chose a program that was a model of its kind.

If there were any doubts that the Fifth Symphony is one of the towering masterpieces of the 20th century, Mr. Leinsdorf dispelled them. The first ominous, Dante-esque rumblings of the opening built up with heightening tension until the suspense became almost unbearable. The Adagio was unutterably moving, and the sardonic mockery of the final Allegro giocoso was dispatched with breathtaking orchestral virtuosity.

Mr. Leinsdorf's Wagner harked back to an older, more romantic, leisurely paced and personal type of interpretation. While every note, phrase, nuance, and color variation was under perfect control, the over-all impression was that of pure inspiration.

The Mozart Symphony, played with a reduced orchestra, received a lucid, beautifully proportioned, lyrically persuasive and rhythmically infectious performance that caught not only the very spirit of Mozart, but of the 18th century as well. —Rafael Kammerer

Times 2/22/61

LEINSDORF LEADS VARIED PROGRAM

Directs Boston Symphony Here in Classic, Modern and Romantic Music

By ALLEN HUGHES

Erich Leinsdorf returned to Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon for his second guest-conducting stint and led a handsomely balanced program. It consisted of Mozart's Symphony No. 29, excerpts from Wagner's "Die Goetterdammerung" and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5.

There it was—classic, romantic, and modern—and Mr. Leinsdorf moved from style to style so naturally, and with such aplomb, that the concert was a joy from start to finish.

His work was clean and precise at all times, but there was nothing prim about it. And Mr. Leinsdorf's music-making was surely the result of keen intellectual control, but intellect never stood in the way of communication. Still, nothing was forced or bombastic, nothing was prettified, nothing was cute.

Orchestra Reduced

The Mozart symphony, which was played with a reduced orchestra, was deliciously free, easy, and tuneful in performance as well as in concept, for the Bostonians responded magnificently to Mr. Leinsdorf's precise indications.

But how many notions and disciplines had he really imposed upon the instrumentalists in this case? To the listener, it seemed that Mozart's music was merely being allowed to move along at its own rightful pace, unpushed or unchecked by human caprice.

In a sense, Wagner, too, was accorded the same honor. There is certainly enough passionate expression built into "Die Goetterdaemmerung" to satisfy almost anyone, but some conductors seem to feel that audiences are too obtuse to appreciate it without a bit of nudging. So they stretch it, push it, sometimes exhaust it.

Rhythms Buoyant

Mr. Leinsdorf kept the counterpoint clear, saw to it that the rhythms remained buoyant and flexible, and then more or less let Wagner and the Boston Symphony speak for themselves. This they did superbly, and if the audience's emotions were not in tatters at the conclusion, they had at least been well exercised.

Interestingly, the conductor did more "conducting" in the Prokofieff than in anything else. Could it be that Prokofieff was not the master Mozart, or Wagner, was? Whatever the answer, Mr. Leinsdorf did well with the Fifth Symphony, underscoring—gently, but sufficiently—its pathos and wit, and building up some rousing climaxes.

It was, therefore, a fine day for the Boston Symphony and Mr. Leinsdorf and, most importantly, for Mozart, Wagner and Prokofieff. This means that it was a fine day for the audience, too.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NO
MAR

ston Symphony
Erich Leinsdorf, conduc
gie Hall, Feb. 18, prese ee works offered: clas e insight, Mr. Leinsdor morable results. He op in A major, K. 201. En boes, 2 horns), Leinsd an earlier era. The je oduced by a conductor ch excellent musicians agner's Gotterdammer proportion, but the N (Contin nstrumenta f Wagner' illing clar kofieff's Fi

d and 4th
tor's art—s ping with to really e cannot his abil
ing qualities in allov
ach composer; his re
most important of al t of the music in the phony played for hi
he good news is that led to seven weeks
Both the Berkshire
ter have added the center's composition a German composer ant from the Ford F has made their visi
e faculty, and Luka position department.
cation forms for th
lewood are available on 15, Mass.

2/21/61 N. Y. Staats-Zeitung

Erich Leinsdorf und die Zauberer aus Boston willkommene Gäste

Die Carnegie Hall-Gastkonzerte des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters sind seit je höchst willkommene Beiträge zum New Yorker Musikwinter gewesen. Ob es der unvergessene und unvergeßliche Serge Koussewitzky war, der vor dem Orchester stand, ob Pierre Monteux oder nun seit vielen Jahren Charles Munch — immer waren Dirigent und Musiker so phänomenal aufeinander abgestimmt und eingestellt, daß eigentlich jedes der Konzerte zu einem Höhepunkt wird.

Man war mithin doppelt gespannt, ob sich dieses Wunder der Wechselwirkung, dieses Wunder des Klangs, unter einem Gastdirigenten wiederholen würde. Erich Leinsdorf von der "Met" hat das Orchester für einige Wochen übernommen und war nun mit dieser Gruppe zum erstenmal in der Carnegie Hall. Um es gleich vorwegzunehmen: Das Wunder hat sich wiederholt, und man erlebte einen Abend beglückenden, verinnerlichten Musizierens. Leinsdorf dirigierte mit seinem gewohnten Elan und der herzlichen Wärme, die diesem großen Dirigenten eigen ist.

*

Den Auftakt des Abends bildete Schuberts "Rosamunde"-Ouvertüre, und Leinsdorf brachte ihr schönes Singen, ihre stete, stille Trauer, ihr Wissen vom Scheiden, ehe der Herbst die Blätter färbt, einfach und mit genialer Musikalität und holte besonders aus den Streichern das makellos Schöne, die unendliche Zartheit dieser Musik heraus.

*

Die New Yorker Erstaufführung von Luigi Dallapicolas "Variations for Orchestra" folgte in diesem beglückenden Auftakt. Wie in anderen Werken verrät der Komponist auch hier ansehnliche Beherrschung der Zwölfton-Technik. Wer aber heute im Stil der Spätromantik komponiert, setzt sich der Gefahr aus, als Eklektiker gebrandmarkt zu werden, ein Vorwurf, von dem — unlogischerund ungerechtfertigterweise — der Zwölftöner verschont bleibt. Trotzdem muß gesagt werden, daß Dallapicolas Werk sich stellenweise, besonders in seiner Lyrik, an zeitgenössische Vorbilder hält. Seinen intimen Stil und seine Stärke zeigt es in erster Linie, wo rhythmische Bewegtheit und rauhe Harmonik überwiegen. Wir waren nicht übermäßig begeistert von diesem Werk, wohl aber von seiner Wiedergabe.

*

Erich Leinsdorf hat eine Schwäche für Richard Strauß. Seine "Arabella"-Interpretation an der Met hat Aufsehen weit über New York hinaus erregt, und so ist es nicht weiter verwunderlich, daß er eine Orchestersuite aus "Frau ohne Schatten" zusammengestellt hat und dieses Werk, das vielleicht die dramatisch stärkste Musik enthält, die Richard Strauß schrieb, meisterhaft zu Gehör brachte.

Den Abschluß des Abends bildete die "Vierte Symphonie" von Brahms, die Leinsdorf machtvoll aufbaute und deren Düsterheit er zu einem erregenden Erlebnis werden ließ. Hier spürte man den Meister, der alle Pracht, allen Klangzauber, jede Stimmung, die ein Komponist seinem Werk gegeben hat, in allen Nuancen wiederzuerleben scheint und der in diesen Werken lebt.

Es war ein großer Abend, für den das Publikum mit enthusiastischem Beifall dankte.

E. St.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 284,717 S: 288,848
FEB 17 1961

150

NEWS OF MUSIC

Leinsdorf Pacifies Boston Symphony

By IRVING LOWENS
Star Music Critic

It is an astonishing thing to hear a familiar symphony orchestra change its character. Last night at Constitution Hall the Boston Symphony orchestra, played under guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf instead of Charles Munch, and I must say that were it not for the familiar faces in the orchestra and the printed program assuring me that this was actually the BSO, I would have guessed that it was a different organization.

With Munch directing, the BSO is a brilliant virtuoso group, reaching to hear, nervous, constantly keyed up and tense. Everything is driving.

Under Leinsdorf, the orchestra is amazing placid—calm, relaxed, and unfortunately just a little boring.

Standard Fare

Of course, the players are the same—there are the same wonderful brass and wind choirs, the same supple and elegant string tone. But so magnificent a musical instrument is this orchestra that, just as a Steinway changes character in the hands of different pianists, so does the BSO mirror its conductor.

Mr. Leinsdorf's program was standard fare with the exception of a 12-tone work by Luigi Dallapiccola, a set of Variations for Orchestra commissioned by the Louisville Orchestra and first performed some six years ago.

The difficult score was set forth with limpid clarity. It proved to be quite interesting, full of striking orchestral effects, and surprisingly easy to take on first hearing.

For their pains, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were rewarded by the most tepid smattering of applause I have heard in Constitutional Hall in many a day.

An Odd Note

Perhaps the audience was somewhat bemused by the almost totally incomprehensible program note for which I suppose Mr. Dallapiccola himself was partly to blame, as his own remarks were quoted at length.

A characteristic sentence reads:

"Outside the works of Schoenberg, Berg and Webern, I have received very extraordinary explanations (exactly in the 12-tone domain) through the literature of Proust and James Joyce."

This sort of manhandling of English as she is spoke is unfortunate — could not our program book annotater have found something less like gibberish to say about so fascinating a work?

The evening began with a careful reading of the Schubert Rosamunde Overture. This was followed by a too tame Brahms Fourth which sparked an ovation. To close the concert, Mr. Leinsdorf illuminated the familiar orchestral excerpts from Götterdammerung with a neat restraint that undermined their impressive splendor.

As is standard when the visitors from the Athens of America play, Constitution Hall the house was full.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 393,718 S. 446,764
FEB 17 1961

Postlude

Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony Shine

By Paul Hume

It has been a long time since a conductor has programmed an extended sequence of orchestral music from Wagner's "Gotterdaemmerung." It has been even longer since a major orchestra has played Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture in Constitution Hall.

Hume

Last night Erich Leinsdorf, currently making his first appearances as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, did both. Constitutional Hall was full to the last seat as the famed opera and symphony conductor began the evening with the Schubert which had a pleasant kind of old-fashioned feeling, along with some less than precise playing from the violins. The suspicion was pretty strong that the Boston Symphony hasn't played "Rosamunde" for quite a while. Even under its correct name of "The Magic Harp."

There was nothing hesitant or less than splendid however in a memorable reading of the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Here Leinsdorf had scrubbed away players' habits of years' standing to give us the symphony in a series of long lines, formed by a plastic but firm adherence to basic concepts of fundamental tempos. No celestial vision of Brahms has caused Leinsdorf to add ritards where the composer did not write them.

The music had life, a life unhampered by violent pullings and haulings. The scherzo found the Bostonians on their toes, as one expected ritard after another was passed up to hold the line that Brahms laid down. It was exciting and it sounded right. The direct line from the scherzo to the closing passacaglia was another proper joy. The audience loved it and demanded the conductor's return a number of times, during which the orchestra joined in the applause.

Luigi Dallapiccola wrote his Orchestral Variations for the Louisville Orchestra in the early '50s. It shows the 12-tone composer in mellow wood. Its 11 sections take only slightly over 11 minutes to perform. Within that time they range from an ingenious exercise on the notes B.A.C.H., through the pointillist sounds of the Webern miniaturist. There is exoticism, and there are reminiscences of Debussy and even, in the cellos of Wagner. Whether or not the music will remain in the mind is had to tell, though having heard it a number of times, I must confess it all sounded totally unfamiliar last night. It was marvelously played.

So was the big, sunburst and sunset of Wagner's most eloquent Ring opera. The horns and trombones of the Boston Symphony make a glorious ensemble, one that even overshadowed the strings occasionally. The first trumpet, however, is an irreconcilable opposite to a proper Wagnerian tone. Leinsdorf is one of the Wagner chieftains of the day. He kept the music clear even when he let it ride the biggest crests.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1961

Leinsdorf Leads Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Feb. 18; 2:30 p.m.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting. MOZART: Symphony No. 29 in A, K.201. WAGNER: Excerpts from Gotterdaemmerung. PROKOFIEFF: Symphony No. 5, [illegible]

For his second and final concert here as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf chose a program that was a model of its kind.

If there were any doubts that the Fifth Symphony is one of the towering masterpieces of the 20th century, Mr. Leinsdorf dispelled them. The first ominous, Dante-esque rumblings of the opening built up with heightening tension until the suspense became almost unbearable. The Adagio was unutterably moving, and the sardonic mockery of the final Allegro giocoso was dispatched with breathtaking orchestral virtuosity.

Mr. Leinsdorf's Wagner harked back to an older, more romantic, leisurely paced and personal type of interpretation. While every note, phrase, nuance, and color variation was under perfect control, the over-all impression was that of pure inspiration.

The Mozart Symphony, played with a reduced orchestra, received a lucid, beautifully proportioned, lyrically persuasive and rhythmically infectious performance that caught not only the very spirit of Mozart, but of the 18th century as well. —Rafael Kammerer

Times 2/21

LEINSDORF LEADS VARIED PROGRAM

Directs Boston Symphony Here in Classic, Modern and Romantic Music

By ALLEN HUGHES

Erich Leinsdorf returned to Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon for his second guest-conducting stint and led a handsomely balanced program. It consisted of Mozart's Symphony No. 29, excerpts from Wagner's "Die Goetterdaemmerung" and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5.

There it was—classic, romantic, and modern—and Mr. Leinsdorf moved from style to style so naturally, and with such aplomb, that the concert was a joy from start to finish.

His work was clean and precise at all times, but there was nothing prim about it. And Mr. Leinsdorf's music-making was surely the result of keen intellectual control, but intellect never stood in the way of communication. Still, nothing was forced or bombastic, nothing was prettified, nothing was cute.

Orchestra Reduced

The Mozart symphony, which was played with a reduced orchestra, was deliciously free, easy, and tuneful in performance as well as in concept, for the Bostonians responded magnificently to Mr. Leinsdorf's precise indications.

But how many notions and disciplines had he really imposed upon the instrument lists in this case? To the listener, it seemed that Mozart's music was merely being allowed to move along at its own rightful pace, unpushed or unchecked by human caprice.

In a sense, Wagner, too, was accorded the same honor. There is certainly enough passionate expression built into "Die Goetterdaemmerung" to satisfy almost anyone, but some conductors seem to feel that audiences are too obtuse to appreciate it without a bit of nudging. So they stretch it, push it, sometimes exhaust it.

Rhythms Buoyant

Mr. Leinsdorf kept the counterpoint clear, saw to it that the rhythms remained buoyant and flexible, and then more or less let Wagner and the Boston Symphony speak for themselves. This they did superbly, and if the audience's emotions were not in tatters at the conclusion, they had at least been well exercised.

Interestingly, the conductor did more "conducting" in the Prokofieff than in anything else. Could it be that Prokofieff was not the master Mozart, or Wagner, was? Whatever the answer, Mr. Leinsdorf did well with the Fifth Symphony, underscoring—gently, but sufficiently—its pathos and wit, and building up some rousing climaxes.

It was, therefore, a fine day for the Boston Symphony and Mr. Leinsdorf and, most importantly, for Mozart, Wagner and Prokofieff. This means that it was a fine day for the audience, too.

2/21/61 N. Y. Staats-Zeitung

Erich Leinsdorf und die Zauberer aus Boston willkommene Gäste

Die Carnegie Hall-Gastkonzerte des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters sind seit je höchst willkommene Beiträge zum New Yorker Musikwinter gewesen, und es der unvergessene und unvergeßliche Serge Koussewitzky war, der vor dem Orchester stand, ob Pierre Monteux oder nun seit vielen Jahren Charles Munch — immer waren Dirigent und Musiker phänomenal aufeinander abgestimmt, und eingestellt, daß eigentlich jedes der Konzerte zu einem Höhepunkt wird.

Man war mithin doppelt gespannt, ob sich dieses Wunder der Wechselwirkung, dieses Wunder des Klangs, unter einem Gastdirigenten wiederholen würde. Erich Leinsdorf von der "Met" hat das Orchester für einige Wochen übernommen und war nun mit dieser Gruppe zum erstenmal in der Carnegie Hall. Um es gleich vorwegzunehmen: Das Wunder hat sich wiederholt, und man erlebte einen Abend beglückenden, verinnerlichten Musizierens. Leinsdorf dirigierte mit seinem gewohnten Elan und der herzlichen Wärme, die diesem großen Dirigenten eigen ist.

*

Den Auftakt des Abends bildete Schuberts "Rosamunde"-Ouvertüre, und Leinsdorf brachte ihr schönes Singen, ihre stete, stille Trauer, ihr Wissen vom Scheiden, ehe der Herbst die Blätter färbt, einfach und mit genialer Musikalität und holte besonders aus den Streichern das makellos Schöne, die unendliche Zartheit dieser Musik heraus.

*

Die New Yorker Erstaufführung von Luigi Dallapicolas "Variations for Orchestra" folgte in diesem beglückenden Auftakt, wie in anderen Werken versteht der Komponist auch hier anschauliche Beherrschung der Zwölfton-Technik. Wer aber heute im Stil der Spätromantik komponiert, setzt sich der Gefahr aus, als Eklektiker gebrandmarkt zu werden, ein Vorwurf, von dem — tunlicherweise — der Zwölftöner verschont bleibt. Trotzdem muß gesagt werden, daß Dallapicolas Werk sich stellenweise, besonders in seiner Lyrik, an zeitgenössische Vorbilder hält. Seinen intimen Stil und seine Stärke zeigt es in erster Linie, wo rhythmische Bewegtheit und rauhe Harmonik überwiegen. Wir waren nicht übermäßig begeistert von diesem Werk, wohl aber von seiner Wiedergabe.

*

Erich Leinsdorf hat eine Schwäche für Richard Strauß. Seine "Arabella"-Interpretation an der Met hat Aufsehen weit über New York hinaus erregt, und so ist es nicht weiter verwunderlich, daß er eine Orchestersuite aus "Frau ohne Schatten" zusammengestellt hat und dieses Werk, das vielleicht die dramatisch stärkste Musik enthält, die Richard Strauß schrieb, meisterhaft zu Gehör brachte.

Den Abschluß des Abends bildete die "Vierte Symphonie" von Brahms, die Leinsdorf machtvoll aufbaute und deren Düsterheit er zu einem erregenden Erlebnis werden ließ. Hier spürte man den Meister, der alle Pracht, allen Klangzauber, jede Stimmung, die ein Komponist seinem Werk gegeben hat, in allen Nuancen wiedererleben scheint und der in diesen Werken lebt.

Es war ein großer Abend, für den das Publikum mit enthusiastischem Beifall dankte.

E. St.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Boston

Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, F[illegible] presented a wide range of music in the romantic, contemporary. With [illegible] captured the essence of each with [illegible] He opened with Mozart's Symphony No. [illegible] ving reduced orchestra (strings, [illegible] oked the elegance and charm [illegible] ke preciseness could only be [illegible] musual integrity working with [illegible] There were excerpts from [illegible] not overblown, pulled out of [illegible] speaking with its own per-

ew York

(continued from page 2)

[illegible] olor is a very important element [illegible] usic, and as Leinsdorf conducted, [illegible] in the instrumentation. Finally, [illegible] Symphony, with its particularly [illegible] vements. Here was another facet [illegible] energetic and forceful interpretation [illegible] e composer's intent. It is not possible [illegible] ve an impression of the sound of a [illegible] speak too highly of Mr. Leinsdorf [illegible] ility to encompass each style; his self-effacement [illegible] showing the full expression of the music [illegible] markable attention to every detail; and [illegible] of all, his ability to engender the excitement [illegible] heart of the listener. How the Boston Symphony [illegible] for him!

The [illegible] is that the Tanglewood season has been extended [illegible] weeks this year, instead of the customary six. Both the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have added the extra week to the season. Guests at the center's composition department will be Wolfgang Fortner, a German composer, and Roberto Gerhard, a Spaniard. A grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program has made their visit possible. Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty, and Lukas Foss will again be members of the composition department. A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
FEB 19 1961

Leinsdorf Ends His Stay With Carnegie Hall Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Erich Leinsdorf completed his engagement as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor with yesterday afternoon's concert at Carnegie Hall, where he illustrated his well known insight as a Wagnerian interpreter in excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung." He also gave an impression of authority, experience and communicative knowledge of widely differing styles elsewhere in the diversified program which began with Mozart's brief Symphony No. 29 (K. 201, in A major), and closed with Serge Prokofiev's much more extensive Symphony No. 5.

The closing music drama of Wagner's "Ring" cycle was represented by the familiar series of excerpts plus the finale of this incomparable musical epic. Such a string of extracts involves compromises, even if the transitions are skillfully sutured, but it gives at least a partial idea of the power and eloquence of this opera, and did so with particular persuasion in this performance.

The generosity of the interpretation's emotional span was matched by its range of color; the climaxes had a memorable impact and sonority and the close gave an appropriate sense of resolution and finality. For the well proportioned performance of the Mozart symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf wisely reduced his instrumental forces. The faster movements were set forth with spirit and momentum, although the finale seemed to miss the full espirt of the music by a hair's breadth degree, while the andante, played with a luminous delicacy, was completely rewarding.

Prokofiev's fifth Symphony, which was first played here by this orchestra fifteen seasons ago, deserved its place as a regular member of the contemporary repertory; it can be classed as one of the foremost products of its kind in twentieth century music.

It is generous in the cogency and diversity of its musical ideas and in its gamut of emotions; its scoring and array of hues are equally impressive. It is, perhaps, slightly over extended; a listener's attentive capacity can lose a little of its sharpness before the end, but this is a minor drawback in music of this scale and stature.

Mr. Leinsdorf's understanding of this work, in general and in detail, was exhibited with imposing conviction in a performance of thorough responsiveness and memorable orchestral tone which was particularly lyric in the sustained music of the slower movements; it ranged from rich opulence to delicacy of instrumental tints with thorough lucidity at all times; the scale of the interpretation matched the scale of the music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15,719
FEB 18 1961

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 11,909
FEB 18 1961

Erich Leinsdorf, who first won recognition as a protege of Arturo Toscanini and catapulted to world fame as a conductor of major symphony orchestras and opera companies, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, February 17, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

Mr. Leinsdorf was invited by Dr. Charles Munch to act as guest-conductor during Munch's mid-season vacation.

Leinsdorf's program is typical of his musical interests and includes works chosen from the categories in which he has won his greatest reputation. When he first came to the Metropolitan Opera, he conducted the Wagnerian repertoire. From the Metropolitan, he went on to conduct symphony orchestras. Since his return to the Metropolitan Opera, he has won particular attention and critical praise for his conducting of operas by Mozart and Richard Strauss.

(Continued on Page 7)

On February 17, at the Academy, he will interpret Mozart's Symphony No. 29, in A major, Interludes from Strauss' opera, "Woman Without Shadow," Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra, and excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." The Strauss opera has never been performed in New York, but it is popular in Central Europe and last season it was given its American premiere by the San Francisco Opera.

Dallapiccola has risen to world-wide prominnnce in recent years. He taught for two seasons at the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood and recently has divided his time between Florence, Italy, and New York, where he taught at Queens College. This will be the first performance in New York for his "Variations for Orchestra."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is famous throughout the world for its renditions of the great classic masterpieces in the standard symphonic literature. Musical connoisseurs and critics, however, are aware of the fact that the presentation of new or rarely-heard music is consistent with the fine traditions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra was pre-eminent in its introduction of new and significant works. Its present musical director, Charles Munch, has continued this policy and now Erich Leinsdorf, as the principal guest-conductor for the 1960-61 season, is also blazing new trails for audiences in presenting these works of Strauss and Dellapiccola.

Tickets for the February 17 concert are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music. Mail orders must be accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope for return of tickets.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, Feb. 18, presented a wide range of music in the three works offered: classic, romantic, contemporary. With rare insight, Mr. Leinsdorf captured the essence of each with memorable results. He opened with Mozart's Symphony No. 29, in A major, K. 201. Employing reduced orchestra (strings, 2 oboes, 2 horns), Leinsdorf evoked the elegance and charm of an earlier era. The jewel-like preciseness could only be produced by a conductor of unusual integrity working with such excellent musicians. Then there were excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdaemmerung"—not overblown, pulled out of all proportion, but the music speaking with its own persuasive instrumental color is a very important element in the proper Wagner's music, and as Leinsdorf conducted, there was clarity in the instrumentation. Finally, there was Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, with its particularly ingratiating 3rd and 4th movements. Here was another facet of the conductor's art—an energetic and forceful interpretation in full accord with the composer's intent. It is not possible, in words, to really give an impression of the sound of a concert, but one cannot speak too highly of Mr. Leinsdorf on this occasion: his ability to encompass each style; his self-effacing quality in allowing the full expression of the music of each composer; his remarkable attention to every detail; and most important of all, his ability to engender the excitement of the music in the heart of the listener. How the Boston Symphony played for him!

New York

(Continued from page 2)

The good news is that the Tanglewood season has been extended to seven weeks this year, instead of the customary six. Both the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have added the extra week to the season. Guests at the center's composition department will be Wolfgang Fortner, a German composer, and Roberto Gerhard, a Spaniard. A grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program has made their visit possible. Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty, and Lukas Foss will again be members of the composition department. A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
FEB 19 1961

Leinsdorf Ends His Stay With Carnegie Hall Concert

By Francis D. Perkins

Erich Leinsdorf completed his engagement as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor with yesterday afternoon's concert at Carnegie Hall, where he illustrated his well known insight as a Wagnerian interpreter in excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung." He also gave an impression of authority, experience and communicative knowledge of widely differing styles elsewhere in the diversified program which began with Mozart's brief Symphony No. 29 (K. 201, in A major), and closed with Serge Prokofiev's much more extensive Symphony No. 5.

The closing music drama of Wagner's "Ring" cycle was represented by the familiar series of excerpts plus the finale of this incomparable musical epic. Such a string of extracts involves compromises, even if the transitions are skillfully sutured, but it gives at least a partial idea of the power and eloquence of this opera, and did so with particular persuasion in this performance.

The generosity of the interpretation's emotional span was matched by its range of color; the climaxes had a memorable impact and sonority and the close gave an appropriate sense of resolution and finality. For the well proportioned performance of the Mozart symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf wisely reduced his instrumental forces. The faster movements were set forth with spirit and momentum, although the finale seemed to miss the full espirt of the music by a hair's breadth degree, while the andante, played with a luminous delicacy, was completely rewarding.

Prokofiev's fifth Symphony, which was first played here by this orchestra fifteen seasons ago, deserved its place as a regular member of the contemporary repertory; it can be classed as one of the foremost products of its kind in twentieth century music.

It is generous in the cogency and diversity of its musical ideas and in its gamut of emotions; its scoring and array of hues are equally impressive. It is, perhaps, slightly over extended; a listener's attentive capacity can lose a little of its sharpness before the end, but this is a minor drawback in music of this scale and stature.

Mr. Leinsdorf's understanding of this work, in general and in detail, was exhibited with imposing conviction in a performance of thorough responsiveness and memorable orchestral tone which was particularly lyric in the sustained music of the slower movements; it ranged from rich opulence to delicacy of instrumental tints with thorough lucidity at all times; the scale of the interpretation matched the scale of the music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,719
FEB 18 1961

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 11,909
FEB 18 1961

Erich Leinsdorf, who first won recognition as a protege of Arturo Toscanini and catapulted to world fame as a conductor of major symphony orchestras and opera companies, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, February 17, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

Mr. Leinsdorf was invited by Dr. Charles Munch to act as guest-conductor during Munch's mid-season vacation.

Leinsdorf's program is typical of his musical interests and includes works chosen from the categories in which he has won his greatest reputation. When he first came to the Metropolitan Opera, he conducted the Wagnerian repertoire. From the Metropolitan, he went on to conduct symphony orchestras. Since his return to the Metropolitan Opera, he has won particular attention and critical praise for his conducting of operas by Mozart and Richard Strauss.

(Continued on Page 7)

On February [illegible] the Academy, he will interpret Mozart's Symphony No. 29, in A major, Interludes from Strauss' opera, "Woman Without Shadow," Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra, and excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." The Strauss opera has never been performed in New York, but it is popular in Central Europe and last season it was given its American premiere by the San Francisco Opera.

Dallapiccola has risen to world-wide prominence in recent years. He taught for two seasons at the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood and recently has divided his time between Florence, Italy, and New York, where he taught at Queens College. This will be the first performance in New York for his "Variations for Orchestra."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is famous throughout the world for its renditions of the great classic masterpieces in the standard symphonic literature. Musical connoisseurs and critics, however, are aware of the fact that the presentation of new or rarely-heard music is consistent with the fine traditions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra was pre-eminent in its introduction of new and significant works. Its present musical director, Charles Munch, has continued this policy and now Erich Leinsdorf, as the principal guest-conductor for the 1960-61 season, is also blazing new trails for audiences in presenting these works of Strauss and Dallapiccola.

Tickets for the February 17 concert are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music. Mail orders must be accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope for return of tickets.

152
TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W: 2,378,352
FEB 24 1961

MUSIC

Atonalist with Passion

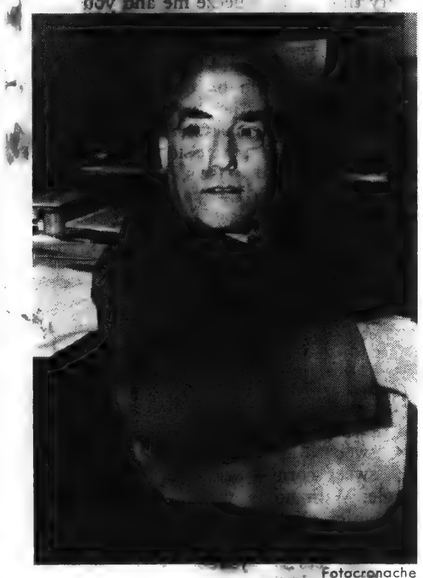
For Italian Composer Luigi Dallapiccola, 57, life has by his own testimony been "one long suffer." The suffer is apparent in the sparse, abrasively powerful twelve-tone music that has flowed steadily from his pen through years of poverty, persecution and neglect. But Dallapiccola is neglected no longer: even his severest critics in Italy acknowledge his influence as the patriarch of the Italian twelve-tone school. Manhattan audiences last week had a first chance to hear one of the patriarch's finest works—the 13-minute Variations for Orchestra as performed by the visiting Boston Symphony under Guest Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Although Dodecaphonist Dallapiccola believes that his spiritual brother is James Joyce (he has read Ulysses eight times), Variations sounds more like a page out of Kafka. It opens with a funereal, ghostlike theme in the strings, erupts in a chilling shower of brasses, sinks to a series of restless, enervated whispers. Percussive and rhythmically complex throughout, it is scored sparely, skillfully using small instrumental combinations in strange, exhilarating blends of sound. What sets it apart from much of the desiccated twelve-tone music of the Viennese school is its sense of passion. Dallapiccola, however his music may suffer, always seems to care.

Night Flights. The composer was introduced to the twelve-tone idiom in 1924 at the Florence premiere of Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire. "Only two people in the hall were impressed by the music," he recalls. "One was a very unimportant young man. Me. The other was Giacomo Puccini." Dallapiccola, who for a time composed in a largely traditional, tonal style (he has always been an ardent Wagner fan), gradually started learning twelve-tone technique, teaching himself by studying Schoenberg's scores. "But in those days nobody appreciated my music," and he and his wife were sometimes reduced to a diet of water and one roll a day.

Teaching helped keep Dallapiccola going, but his name began to be heard after the 1940 première of his first opera, Night Flight, based on the book by Antoine de Saint Exupéry. During the war Dallapiccola went into hiding in the mountains to protect his Jewish wife from the German forces in Italy. Since the war, his reputation has steadily grown as he has added to his small body of work a number of impressive vocal compositions: Five Fragments from Sappho for Voice and Chamber Orchestra, Five Songs for Baritone, Two Anacreon Songs and Requiescat (set to words by St. Matthew, Oscar Wilde and James Joyce).

Hate Duets. A tiny man (5 ft. 3 in.), grey-maned Composer Dallapiccola is affectionately known in Italian musical circles as "Il Bruttino"—The Ugly One. He now lives in Florence in a musty, 17th century palazzo. There he is hard at work on a gigantic, twelve-tone grand opera to be based on Joyce's Ulysses. The trouble with modern opera, says Dallapiccola, is that composers "seem to have come to a mutual agreement to eliminate the love element which has delighted audiences for a century. The love duet was axed, and it would now be appropriate to introduce a new term, the 'hate duet.' The new operatic hero is the man without love and is hopelessly alone." In his Ulysses, Composer Dallapiccola hopes to come to terms with opera's new hero. The work will take him, he thinks, five years to finish, but it will, I hope, be the culmination of my search for my soul."



Fotocronache

COMPOSER DALLAPICCOLA
He suffers and his music cares.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 37,868
FEB 22 1961

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Concert Draws Critic's Disapproval

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the hands of guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf (he uses no baton and no score), played a program of music last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence, that caused many listeners to remark that they wished they had stayed home.

After opening with Luigi Dallapiccola's "Variations For Orchestra" I was tempted to remark that he conducts without music. Never have I heard such a hashed-up assortment of noises come from such beautiful sounding instruments. He certainly did not need these sterling musicians to produce that cacophony; the same tones could be had from tin cans, oil drums, washboards and whiskey jugs.

✦✦✦

IN THE PROGRAM notes, Dallapiccola attempts to explain the 12-tone "music" it was supposed to express. He said, in part: "Symbol (where, in spite of the difficulties of the 12-tone system I could base the piece on the name of B.A.C.H.) Accents, Contrapuntal primus, Lines, Contrapuntal secundus, Friezes, Andantino amoroso and contrapuntus tertius, Rhythms, Color Shadows ending with a quartrain like a strophe of four verses. . . ." And so to me, that's the way it sounded!

✦✦✦

THERE IS NO doubt but what Mr. Leinsdorf is a conductor whose musical direction is thoroughly assured and that he is admirably adroit in clarifying the composers' statements. Also that he has the heart to understand and the spirit to respond to the emotions of thematic compositions, coupled with the gift to communicate to the musicians and the audience. But the Variations, and the following number, Richard Strauss' "Interludes from Die Frau Ohne Schatten" (The Woman Without a Shadow) provoked intermission comments, thus: "Interesting but not entertaining;" "It sounded better when they were tuning up before the concert;" "It sounded like a prac-tice room in one of our high schools."

✦✦✦

THE ONLY WORTHWHILE part of the Strauss was the meaningful and richly lyric violin solo by Richard Burgin.

The after-intermission work was Prokofiev's "Symphony No. 5" and here was a lavish bounty of melody, and magic in harmonies. The orchestra seemed more attuned to that and to the impassioned tone paintings of the adagio, third movement. But the enjoyment came too late. The two previous numbers were most impoverished in substance and negligible in design, but oh, so tediously lengthy when you must listen to them. The whole program made you long for a rousing tuba solo.

C. H. L.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
FEB 19 1961

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Boston Symphony Tuesday

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will appear at Veterans Memorial Auditorium Tuesday at 8:15 p.m., with Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor.

Born in Vienna, where he studied music, Leinsdorf has had a career in symphonic and operatic conducting. When he was 22 years old he was assistant conductor of the Salzburg Festivals, then under the direction of Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. He was made conductor of German operas at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1938.

He has been conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He is now in his third season as musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Company and one of its principal conductors.

After his engagement with the Boston Symphony, he will conduct in Chicago, Houston, London, Milan, Florence and Amsterdam.

The program:

Variations for Orchestra.....Dallapiccola
Interludes from the opera
"Die Frau ohne Schatten".....Strauss
Symphony No. 5, Op. 100.....Prokofiev
Andante
Allegro moderato
Adagio
Allegro giocoso

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 42,319
FEB 10 1961

WORLD RENOWNED symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf, shown above in his Larchmont home with two of his five children, 12-year-old Hester, left, and 8-year-old Jenny. He is on a concert tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Hester attends Mamaroneck Junior High School, Jenny is a pupil at the Chatsworth Avenue School. The conductor and his attractive wife, Anne, are also the parents of David, 18, a Columbia University student and Gregor, 16, and Joshua, 15, students at Mamaroneck High School. — Staff Photo by Paul Byrne.

Leinsdorf Shunned Decision By Mother For Music Career

By ELAINE McMAHON

LARCHMONT—

The world of music is indeed richer because of a Vienna mother's decision during the 1920s. She decided her son, because she and her husband were of modest means, should "learn a trade." Perhaps in Vienna in the 1920s this made sense. The son chose a career of music. And in this case it was a wise choice.

Larchmonter Erich Leinsdorf, now conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Washington, Providence, New London and Brooklyn, has been associated for the past two decades with the world's great symphonic organizations. The impressive list includes the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the London Philharmonic, Israel Philharmonic, Philadelphia Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic, NBC Symphony, Rochester Philharmonic, and a term as permanent conductor of the Cleveland Symphony.

Equally at home in the opera houses of the world, Mr. Leinsdorf last month completed his third season as musical consultant at the Metropolitan Opera House where, in addition to conducting, he is Rudolph Bing's principal musical adviser. He is considered a specialist in the operas and symphonic works of Mozart and Strauss, and was musical director in 1956 of the first Mozart Festival at the Shakespeare Theater in Stratford, Conn.

His Home Dramatic

His home at 25 Larchmont Ave., quite obviously without intention, sets a dramatic scene for the conductor. The large, high-ceilinged rooms and heavily carpeted floors seem to float in some quietly charged suspension. Two telephones, one of quaint Danish extraction and the other strictly of AT&T variety, tinkle softly but constantly.

The scene changes as the conductor enters. He quickly flicks on lamps, offers a bowl of peppermints, picks up first one phone and then the other, and in bright flecks of Viennese accent, rapidly discharges the duties of his portion of the musical world much in the way a corporation president handles the thousand and one details of tremendous business.

"Yes," he comments, "I studied the piano and the 'cello. I play the piano but not as a pianist would. No, I play it like a conductor, as though it were an entire orchestra. You cannot do it any other way, for after years of studying orchestral scores, you hear all of the music, all of the sections."

Over 40 Recordings

When reference was made to his more than 40 recordings since 1952, (his most recent in the early autumn conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra) he threw his hands high and laughed.

"A recording session is very harrassing. We record on tape now and it is all pieced together. But perhaps it is better than before LP's (long playing recordings), because then we had four minutes and ten seconds of playing, and if we made a 'blooper' all four minutes were ruined. And now if a famous singer, and I know of one specific case where this happened, can't hit high C, another singer who can, hits it for her. This is only an example of what can be done on tape. But it's a very harrassing experience."

Following his series with the Boston Symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Chicago Symphony, then fly to London where he will direct the BBC Orchestra in six concerts. Then to Florence and Milan for appearances, returning here in March where he will direct the Houston Symphony. In April he will go on tour with the Metropolitan Opera to Boston, Cleveland, Atlanta and Chicago, and in the middle of May he will fly to Holland for four concerts in Amsterdam.

Larchmont For Family

Because of his back-breaking schedule and difficult hours, he finds it inconvenient living in Larchmont. However, he also finds that the advantages for his family more than compensate for the disadvantages he suffers.

"And while I am in New York, I do most of my work here at home, in an upstairs studio. I have another piano there, recording equipment, record players, everything I need."

The second phone was tinkling, so we tiptoed out.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25, at 8:30 o'clock

MILHAUD . . . . . "La Création du monde"

INTERMISSION

RAVEL . . . . . *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet in One Act

Introduction et Danse religieuse
Nocturne — Interlude — Danse guerrière
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 28, at 8:30 o'clock

MILHAUD . . . . . "La Création du monde"

PROKOFIEV . . . . . *Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante assai
III. Allegro ben marcato

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

FEB 26 1961

Silverstein and Szeryng Symphony Violin Soloists

Charles Munch has invited two violinists to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall, this week.

Joseph Silverstein will be heard in Prokofieff's Concerto No. 2, in G minor, at the seventh Tuesday evening concert, Feb. 28 at 8:30.

Winner of the Naumburg Award last Fall and the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, Mr. Silverstein has been a member of the Orchestra since 1955.

At Tuesday's concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Milhaud's "La Creation du monde" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4.

Henryk Szeryng, the Polish violinist who was last heard with the Boston Symphony in February, 1959, as part of his first transcontinental tour of the United States, will be soloist at the concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Mr. Szeryng will play the seldom-heard violin concerto by Schumann.

Doctor Munch's program, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 Thursday, also includes Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and the Tone Poem, "Till Eulenspiegel," by Richard Strauss.

Messrs. Silverstein and Szeryng will be soloists on tour with the Orchestra next week when concerts will be given in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAR 2 1961

Henryk Szeryng, Polish violinist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 25 1961

Whitestone Photo

Joseph Silverstein will be soloist in a Boston Symphony performance of Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto Tuesday evening at 8:30.

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25, at 8:30 o'clock

MILHAUD . . . . . "La Création du monde"

INTERMISSION

RAVEL . . . . . *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet in One Act

Introduction et Danse religieuse
Nocturne — Interlude — Danse guerrière
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 28, at 8:30 o'clock

MILHAUD . . . . . "La Création du monde"

PROKOFIEV . . . . . *Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante assai
III. Allegro ben marcato

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major, Op. 88

I. Allegro con brio
II. Adagio
III. Allegretto grazioso
IV. Allegro ma non troppo

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
FEB 26 1961

Silverstein and Szeryng Symphony Violin Soloists

Charles Munch has invited two violinists to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall, this week.

Joseph Silverstein will be heard in Prokofieff's Concerto No. 2, in G minor, at the seventh Tuesday evening concert, Feb. 28 at 8:30.

Winner of the Naumburg Award last Fall and the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, Mr. Silverstein has been a member of the Orchestra since 1955.

At Tuesday's concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Milhaud's "La Creation du monde" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4.

Henryk Szeryng, the Polish violinist who was last heard with the Boston Symphony in February, 1959, as part of his first transcontinental tour of the United States, will be soloist at the concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Mr. Szeryng will play the seldom-heard violin concerto by Schumann.

Doctor Munch's program, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 Thursday, also includes Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and the Tone Poem, "Till Eulenspiegel," by Richard Strauss.

Messrs. Silverstein and Szeryng will be soloists on tour with the Orchestra next week when concerts will be given in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 2 1961

Henryk Szeryng, Polish violinist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
FEB 25 1961

Whitestone Photo

Joseph Silverstein will be soloist in a Boston Symphony performance of Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto Tuesday evening at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, M
Circ. 175,07
FEB 25 1961

Admira
But Sub

Yesterday's was admirable fr
two ballet scores, much substance
soufflé; not even must have faintly for Wagner.

The outstanding item was Charles Munch's count of the full-length and Chloe" music by 58-minute suite, which er considered "a ch symphony." (Ravel's
tors not unnaturally phasis on other specia and theater, with ine cord resulting) contain mittent brilliance. With conjuring passionate in the dionysiac passages tra responding magni
the New England C
Chorus producing a blend, the entire ver
tually definitive.

Jazz Idiom

Disappointment lingered. Part o yesterday lay in two works that mi effective separately text of a more "sym gram. The image often literary rathe
cal. While it is pos to either "La C
"Daphnis" without le connotations.
self-conscious jaz former and the ins of the latter to so pulse.

The first two sect nis and Chloe," f repetitive and of a ness—and this ma
the demands of the
If the scale seems is not due to mis-ju part of Ravel, who lous craftsman, but to the fact that the set a classical sce motifs for the leadi propel a series of m
the latter being al variations on a th appearing and drivi herds; emissaries o appearing and d pirates. And so on.

With the final f
suite, the felicities meandering openi gathered together in a stupendous almost as though of deferring to tir convention, and s the chorus. Inde of "Daphnis an that while the ballet initially, it comes to a su
and the voices

Use of Ch

The use of enforcing im mately as the work is suit for the ensem
lessly throu
Cooke de Va
ers of the C delicate sha highly com
ure.

This was sensitively ure, in s and perc flute ex theory,

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 25 1961

—Munch Conducts Two Ballets at Symphony

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

FEB 25 1961

The Symphony

Admirable Execution, But Substance Lacking

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Yesterday's program of the Boston Symphony was admirable from the standpoint of execution. But two ballet scores, however masterful, do not provide much substance in the concert hall. After such a souffle diet even the most determined traditionalist must have faintly yearned, if not for Bartok, at least for Wagner.

The outstanding item, of course, was Charles Munch's stunning account of the full-length "Daphnis and Chloe" music by Ravel. This 58-minute suite, which the composer considered "a choreographic symphony" (Ravel's collaborators not unnaturally put the emphasis on other specialties, dance and theater, with inevitable discord resulting) contains an intermittent brillance. With Dr. Munch conjuring passionate intensity from the dionysiac passages, the orchestra responding magnificently, and the New England Conservatory Chorus producing a refined tonal blend, the entire version was virtually definitive.

Jazz Idiom

Disappointment, nontheless, lingered. Part of the trouble yesterday lay in the mating of two works that might have been effective separately in the context of a more "symphonic" program. The imagery here was often literary rather than musical. While it is possible to listen to either "La Creation" or "Daphnis" without programmatic connotations, I attribute the self-conscious jazz idiom of the former and the inordinate length of the latter to non-musical impulse.

The first two sections of "Daphnis and Chloe," for instance, are repetitive and of a coloristic sameness—and this may be traced to the demands of the ballet libretto. If the scale seems over-blown it is not due to mis-judgment on the part of Ravel, who was a meticulous craftsman, but simply due to the fact that the score has to set a classical scene, introduce motifs for the leading dancers, and propel a series of mimed actions, the latter being all too frequent variations on a theme. (Pirates appearing and driving away shepherds; emissaries of the god Pan appearing and driving away pirates. And so on.)

With the final familiar second suite, the felicities that stud the meandering opening part are gathered together and resolved in a stupendous climax. It is almost as though Ravel wearied of deferring to tiresome theatrical convention, and settled down to the chorus. Indeed, examination of "Daphnis and Chloe" shows that while the music needs the ballet initially, the plot practically comes to a subsequent standstill and the voices are dominant.

Use of Chorus

The use of the chorus as a reinforcing instrument and ultimately as the protagonist of the work is subtle and demanding, for the ensemble vocalizes wordlessly throughout. Under Lorna Cooke de Varon, the young singers of the Conservatory attained delicate shadings of tone and a highly communicative clear timbre.

This was stylistically apt and sensitively wrought. The orchestra, in particular the timpani and percussion and the limpid flute cadenzas of Doriot Anthony, demonstrated a lively virtuosity, and over it all presided Charles Munch giving a performance of dramatic power. The balance between the golden Watteau highlights of this work and its primitive moods proved noteworthy.

I fear, though, "Daphnis and Chloe," is rather superficial to sustain its length. Milhaud's "Creation du Monde" has even less emotional weight.

Composed at a time when African culture was in the air, when Picasso was creating his Negro masks and the cubists rediscovering the creative powers of non-western civilizations, the score has a valuable historical place. It antedates Gershwin, with whom the themes have an affinity. Today Milhaud's symphonic jazz seems dated; the conception of jazz in it is the work of a talented man seeking material the way certain journalists seek copy. Milhaud's idea of American jazz must evoke a smile from anyone with the slightest acquaintance with that field.

He realized a creative potential there, and his orchestration is adroit, but "La Creation du Monde" suffers the fate of a work of art that consciously leans on the topical; and yesterday seemed no more than a museum piece from an intellectual European's American jazz, an art of wah-wah mutes, jungle barbarism and funny hats.

Next weekend Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in Schumann's Violin Concerto in D minor. Dr. Munch has also scheduled Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel, Op. 28.

Symphony Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 17th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The New England Conservatory Chorus was under the direction of Lorna Cooke de Varon. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"La Creation du monde" ..... Milhaud
"Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet in One Act ..... Ravel

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

MAR 2 1961

BSO in Stirring

Performance of Daphnis and Chloe

By ALLAN SLY

If the B.S.O. audience does not panic in case of twelve-tone rows, it did indeed Pan-ic in another sense last Saturday. As Dr. Munch shepherded the orchestra and Lorna Cooke de Varon's fine N.E. Conservatory Chorus through Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe — complete — which culminates in a tumultuous invocation of the god Pan, great yells of bravo were unleashed, converting Boston's sedate Symphony Hall into a Lesbian grove. The parking problem was forgotten. It is no good for Mr. Burk to tell us this is "only" Versailles. Not on Saturday night it wasn't!

What happened was this: most of us had heard that this Diaghilev ballet had "failed" and that Ravel rescued enough of his score to give us the two famous suites. Last week Dr. Munch laid before us the complete work, and it is abundantly clear now that Ravel had created a superb symbolic work that we have taken half a century to grow up to. No wonder the bravos! Vive La France!

The Ravel had been preceded by an elegant Creation du Monde (Milhaud). Both works had been performed here by Dr. Munch and the B.S.O. but on different programs. Put together they packed a terrific punch.

Which sets one reflecting about the state of Boston's symphonic affairs in the 1960's. If we are disposed to taking stock of the post-Strauss era, why stop at Ravel, Rachmaninoff, Scriabin? In a city of fine choruses willing to sing oohs and ahs, let us hear Delius' Song of the High Hills; if we willingly invoke Pan why not give us Bax's Garden of Fand? If we like Walton's viola and cello concertos, why not his violin concerto (far more interesting than the Schumann, announced for this week)? New York has just heard Walton's second symphony; has Boston heard even his first? And then there's Vaughan Williams. Let's not wait until the 70's before we find out what homo musicalis Europeans entered in his diary before Sputnik.

And according to reports from New York we've got to take heed lest the Cleveland Orchestra lays all of us Easterners by the heels. They don't have a Doriot Anthony Dwyer, and they couldn't have better percussion than we have, but apparently their strings are making news and I'm sure their clarinets play in tune. But they don't have Symphony Hall acoustics either. They don't have John N. Burk, but Boston gave them Klaus Roy and he's coming along. The B.S.O. won't be easily overtaken, but obviously we can't let the urban renewal of the next decade catch us unawares on Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues. And before we go serial, or electronic, before we automate or something equally horrible let's take another look at the world's capital music between Mahler and Martinu. There's still time.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

FEB 26 1961

Milhaud's 'Création' Paired With Ravel's 'Daphnis'

By Harold Rogers

It was what could almost be called one of Charles Munch's favorite programs—all French, of course: Milhaud and Ravel. One is compelled to say "almost" because Dr. Munch has not put his shoulder to Milhaud's wheel in the past—that is, not with what might be called strain. No one is more keenly aware of this than M. Milhaud himself. One need only ask him to get his answer.

Well, Dr. Munch paired two ballets—one before intermission, the other after. He led off with Milhaud's "La Création du monde" and followed with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé."

It may have been that Dr. Munch feels no strong affinity for Milhaud, or else none for jazz: the music came forth neither cool nor hot. One cannot have heard Leonard Bernstein's version, also with the Boston Symphony, without sustaining a searing impression of what this music can be. As Cleo Brown once said to an aspiring pianist: "Why do you want to play boogie? You got no feelin' for it." Had she been in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, she might have said the same thing about Dr. Munch's jazz.

♪ ♪ ♪

What Dr. Munch has got feelin' for is Ravel, of that there is no doubt. This is the second time in Boston he has conducted the complete version of "Daphnis et Chloé," the first being in 1955; and one might even hazard a guess that this performance will also find its way to a Victor disc as did the first.

The trouble with the full-length version, heard but not seen, is that much of the music has been composed for the background and simply will not come to the fore. Ravel himself understood this, or he would never have fashioned the score into two concert pieces, the Suites Nos. 1 and 2. His selection of the more dramatic portions was especially accurate in the second.

Thus some of us are compelled to engage in a sort of mental thumb-twiddling while waiting for the dawn, the Lever du Jour, when we can really feel that a night of fitful dreams is over and we can settle down to the general jubilation of the finale.

Dr. Munch took the Pantomime more slowly than usual, not a bad idea since it gave Dariot Anthony Dwyer's flute more time to spin out its lovely tune. And the choral work by Lorna Cooke de Varon's New England Conservatory Chorus was, as usual, amiably balanced and polished to a radiant sheen.

♪ ♪ ♪

No, Dr. Munch is not a combo man: the smaller orchestra he chose for the Milhaud "Création" just never cut loose; not even Roland Tapley's saxophone could do the trick. Neither he, nor they, nor we, nor Dr. Munch were "sent."

But give Dr. Munch 105 men and a chorus, playing Ravel, and a gorgeous miracle takes place. It is not a Brahms miracle, nor a Beethoven miracle. The Ravel miracle is always earthbound, always a canvas of sunrises, night moods, pastoral joys, love scenes, and dithyrambs.

But with Dr. Munch on the podium it were paradise enow.

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has invited two violinists to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this week.

Joseph Silverstein will be guest Tuesday evening in a performance of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Winner of the Naumburg Award this fall and the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, Mr. Silverstein has been a member of the Orchestra since 1955. At Tuesday's concert, the seventh of the regular Tuesday Evening Series, Doctor Munch will also conduct Milhaud's "La Creation du monde" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4.

Henryk Szeryng, the Polish Violinist who was last heard with the Boston Symphony in February, 1959, as part of his first transcontinental tour of the United States, will be soloist Friday and Saturday in the seldom-heard violin concerto by Schumann. Doctor Munch's program, which will have an open rehearsal at 7:30 P. M. Thursday, also includes Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and the tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel" by Richard Strauss.

Messrs. Silverstein and Szeryng will be soloists on tour with the orchestra next week when concerts will be given in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York.

TODAY

COLUMBUS BOY CHOIR, Donald T. Bryant, conductor, Kresge Auditorium, 8:00 p.m. M.I.T. Choral Society Guest Artist Series. Tickets at box office.

CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY of Wellesley College, Jewett Auditorium, Wellesley, 8:00 p.m. Handel, Vivaldi, Haydn, Milhaud.

TUESDAY

B.U. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Marvin Rabin, conductor, Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30 p.m. Haydn Symphony No. 102; Bach Cantata No. 51, Ruth Lakeway, soprano soloist; Vaughan Williams Scherzo; Milhaud Suite Provencale; Brahms Academic Festival Overture. Admission free.

"FORGOTTEN OPERAS" presented by Boston Conservatory, Fenway Series, 26 Fenway, 8:30 p.m. Excerpts from seldom heard operas with commentary.

WEDNESDAY

NICOLAI GEDDA, tenor, Boston Morning Musicales Series, Statler Hilton Ballroom, 11:00 a.m. Handel, Schubert, Duparc, Lalo, Grieg, Rachmaninoff, Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky, Szymanowski. Werner Singer at the piano.

CLAUDIO ARRAU, pianist, Newton High School Auditorium, 8:30 p.m. Newton Community Concerts Series.

MARIE — CLAIR ALAIN, organist, Kresge Auditorium, 8:30 p.m. M.I.T. Organ Concerts Series. First American tour and Boston debut. Program includes improvisations by Miss Alain and works by Blow, Arauxo, Frescobaldi, Grigny Bach, Brahms, Liszt. Tickets UN4-6900, Ext. 2910.

GREAT MUSIC SERIES continues, B.U. College of Liberal Arts, Room 12, 7:15 P.M. Robert Croan, illustrated lecture on Berlioz program symphonies. Public invited.

PIANO ENSEMBLE MUSIC by piano class faculty of New England Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Varied program. Admission free.

FRIDAY

BOSTON FINE ARTS QUARTET assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, viola, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. presented by Harvard Department of Music. First of two programs of all Mozart's string quintets—C minor, K. 406; D major, K. 593; G minor, 516. Naumberg concert. Admission free.

SATURDAY

SHOSHANA DAMARI, Israeli folk singer, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. presented by M. A. Greenhill on Folklore Concert Series. Tickets at box office.

BROOKLINE YOUTH CONCERT, Brookline High School Auditorium, 2:00 p.m. Boston Symphony members conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, guest conductor, John D. Corley, Jr. Varied program includes student choirs and soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

FEB 25 1961

Munch Conducts Milhaud And Ravel at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 17th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted "The Creation of the World", by Darius Milhaud, and the complete Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe", by Ravel. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by its conductor, Lorna Cooke de Varon, assisted in Ravel.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a remarkable occasion —a French program of Milhaud and Ravel, the sort of music in which the French conductor Charles Munch is at his best. It was an afternoon of a certain novelty and many dazzlements, ending in the orgiastic abandon of the general dance in Ravel's great ballet.

This was further an occasion of Gallic precision, warm colors and endless nuances, and of that remarkably civilized French imagination of the early 20th Century at a peak of fruitful invention. In addition these were but the second performances by the Boston Symphony of "The Creation of the World" and the entire "Daphnis."

No one is obliged to warp his psyche in attempt to grasp the order of the day as the world was created according to Milhaud's notion. Nor is it essential to get into a lather over that "purely classical feeling" Milhaud claimed he conveyed by means of 17 solo jazz instruments such as he had heard in Harlem of 1922. To quote that other Gershwin, the brother of George whose manner peeks out of Milhaud's music, "it ain't necessarily so."

Listening to "The Creation of the World" is no more and no less than the pleasure of absorbing a clever excursion into the symphonic uses of jazz—an excursion down a short primrose-lined thoroughfare at the dead end of which is a heap of discarded objects, such as a lot of other and wild music written shortly after World War I, such as Prohibition and the Locarno Treaty. (Visit it a few years from now and you will find these covered over with musique concrete and several tons of strict 12-tone pieces assembly-lined by the academic boys with mathematics in their heads and dust in their souls.)

"The Creation of the World" is a museum piece now, an artistic fossil in an idiom and a spirit very, very dead. Nevertheless, it is also a charming fossil, with tunes, harmonic, piquance, bouncy rhythms. But considered as art it is lifeless, abandoned if not yet disiscated, and all but forgotten.

How different is Ravel's vast musico-dramatico-kinetic ballet, unlimited of idiom and manner, like flashing jewels in its expert facture, full of drive and passion! Much of it, to be sure, is color—harmonic, rhythmic and tonal, but as much is superb symphonic manipulation.

The public knows "Daphnis" principally by the second instrumental suite, and occasionally hears the first suite. These leave out the choral voices which, though they serve as expressive and color background, add enormously to the total effect.

The New England Conservatory Chorus, most admirably prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, supplied this thrilling vocal effect to the full. There was remarkable technical control as they sang, notable flexibility in the surge and ebb of choral sound.

With Dr. Munch in his element and the Boston Symphony responding like the virtuoso instrument it continues, fundamentally, to be, the concert was indeed a matter of excitements and dazzlements. They brought a rousing ovation from the Friday audience.

Rolland Tapley, who temporarily had left his place at the second stand of first violins, was singled out by Dr. Munch for a solo bow after he had given a fine performance of the saxophone solo in Milhaud. Mrs. de Varon deservedly shared in the approving tumult after Ravel.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture and Violin Concerto; Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and "Till Eulenspiegel," by Richard Strauss. Henryk Szeryng will be violin soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 18 1961

Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony returning from a tour which has included Washington and New York, will be rejoined by Charles Munch for the concert pair of Feb. 24 and 25.

The first half of each program will consist of Milhaud's "La Création du monde," one of the early instances of jazz rhythms in serious composition, and for the second half the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will combine with the orchestra in Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" Ballet Suite.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

MAR 1 1961

Joseph Silverstein Is Soloist In Prokofiev Concerto

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed the 7th concert in the Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall last night. Dr. Munch conducted the program: Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist; Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4.

By KEVIN KELLY

Joseph Silverstein was the violin soloist last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 7th concert in the Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall. Mr. Silverstein stepped from his usual place at the fifth chair in the first violin section to distinguish himself as a soloist in the Prokofiev Second Violin Concerto. Since he is a thoroughly trained musician the spill of spotlight as he stood to the left of Dr. Munch caused him no hesitation. He is an execellent violinist, technically accomplished and genuinely perceptive, and the burst of applause which came both from his colleagues and the audience at the conclusion of the concerto was eminently deserved.

Mr. Silverstein projected the entire work with rare feeling and insight, not simply a ravishing passage here and a glint of perception there, but an evenly paced interpretation carried out with disciplined ease that did ful justice to Prokoev. The initial statement of the concerto's theme is voiced by the solo violin, reworked by the orchestra until a second theme is introduced by the violin over murmurings from the strings. From the outset the intonation of Mr. Silverstein's instrument was remarkably accurate with perfect security in shifts and accents. His phrasing had bredth and flexibility. The legato in the second movement was beautifully sustained with a coloristic sense etched from note to note, phrase to phrase.

The brilliance and rhythmic invention of the finale were set forth with the clarity of perceptive imagination. The distinction of Mr. Silverstein's solo performance was clearly marked by the orchestral balance which Dr. Munch maintained, never a blurring of soloist over orchestra, or vice versa. The line between theme and countermelody was never confused or outweighed, but cleanly held.

The program also included Milhaud's jazzy ballet suite "LaCreation du monde" which was played with a zest hardly to be equalled at Birdland or Storyville, and Dvorak's Fourth Symphony which was eloquent, pesonant and perfectly projected.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Music

Lowell Sun 2/18/61

Zeitlin Highlights Local Musical Season

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—One of the most important events of the local musical season is scheduled for Thursday evening, Feb. 23, when the celebrated young violinist, Zvi Zeitlin, presents the second program of the current series of community concerts. He is scheduled to appear this month with the New York Philharmonic at which time he will play the rarely-performed and extremely difficult Violin Concerto by Stravinsky.

Paul Franke

Though it will not be played here, it is an interesting sidelight to know that Mr. Zeitlin is now the "owner of a new violin concerto which has been especially commissioned for him by the American-Israel cultural foundation from the noted Israel composer Paul Ben-Haim. This unique mark of recognition has been described as "to an artist of rare ability and exceptional attainments" whose life has been as colorful as his violin playing.

Another important point concerning Community Concerts is the coming campaign for the 1961-62 season. The general committee have already completed the basic details and from indications it is expected that another gala season of leading stars in their most favorable artistic element will create a series of entertainment highlights.

Lowell State college has again made a tremendous contribution to the musical life of this city. The newly established series of youth concerts which will be held in the Little Theater, played by 50 instrumentalists from the college's music department, and conducted by faculty member, Robert Shaughnessy, promises big things in the way of creative doing and interest on the part of the community's younger set.

Prof. Shaughnessy who brings to the podium a fine background in the various fields connected with the medium of orchestral music, has planned the complete program schedule for the series.

Dr. Charles Munch returns to the Boston Symphony orchestra this coming week for an open rehearsal on Thursday evening, plus the regular week-end concerts of Friday and Saturday. The rehearsal and concert program will include Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" in which the New England Conservatory chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will participate. The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde." Joseph Silverstein has been invited by Charles Munch to be soloist at the Orchestra's concert on Tuesday, Feb. 27. Mr. Silverstein, a member of the orchestra since 1955, will be heard in Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 2." Henryk Szeryng will be guest at the Orchestra's concerts on March 3 and 4, which will be preceded by an open rehearsal on March 2.

Paul Franke, tenor, of the Metropolitan Opera company will sing the role of Abdallo in Boston's spring season of the Metropolitan Opera company's production of Verdi's "Nabucco" which is the opening night vehicle. This will be on Monday April 17. Mr. Franke who has become one of the company's leading supporting artists has achieved the distinction of having appeared in more productions in a single season than any other singer of equal standing.

He is not new to Boston opera goers, having been prominently connected with both Alfredo Anzalone, director of the Boston-New England Opera theater. It was with the former company that the young tenor made his debut as the Messenger in Verdi's "Aida" in a performance held in Worcester during which time Kurt Bohm, leading tenor of the Metropolitan, sang his initial Rhadames in this country. Paul Franke soon appeared at the Met and became associated with the role of Borsa in Verdi's "Rigoletto."

The Met's gala spring season will be highlighted by premieres of such scores as Puccini's "Turandot;" Donizetti's "L'Elisir D'Amore" and von Flotow's "Martha." Rosaland Elias of this city will star in both "Nabucco" and the last named production.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

FEB 19 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

FEB 19 196

Munch to Conduct 'Creation Of the World' and 'Daphnis'

Charles Munch will return to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Symphony Hall concerts of next Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. They will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The program will consist of Milhaud's "The Creation of the World," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" by Ravel. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, will assist in the latter.

Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Orchestra since 1955, will be soloist at the Tuesday evening Symphony Hall concert, Feb. 28 at 8:30, in the Second Violin Concerto by Prokofieff.

Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in the Schumann Violin Concerto at the Symphony Hall concerts Mar. 3 and 4. Dr. Munch also will conduct Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, the First Symphony by Honegger, and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Richard Strauss. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal Thursday evening, Mar. 2, at 7:30.

Herald 3/1/61

MUSIC

Mr. Silverstein Again Charms at Symphony

By JULES WOLFFERS

Ascribed to Richard Strauss is the saying, "there are no orchestras, only conductors." And it is true that a great conductor can inspire mediocre players to astonishing results. And it is just as true that a mediocre conductor can ruin the finest orchestra.

But it does no harm to have superlative musicians present in the ranks. Then great leadership plus splendid playtrs adds up to the last word in performance.

With pardonable pride Charles Munch has been showing off the paces of some of his men. Last night at Symphony Hall was another of these occasions with Joseph Silverstein temporarily leaving his place in the first violin section to come front and centtr as solist in the Prokofieff Violin Concerto No. 2.

It was only six years ago that Mr. Silverstein join the orchestra as its youngest member at the age of 23. He had already been assistant concertmaster of the Houston Orchestra, concermaster of the Denver Symphony and a member of the Philiadelphit Orchestra. Nevertheless he was given the customary place of beginners with the Boston Symphony—last stand, inside, second fiddles.

The orchestra can often be a millstone that grinds its players exceedingly small. In Mr. Silverstein's case his qualities have brought him to the surface as one of the most distinguished among younger American violinists. Last May he won third prize at the International Competition in Brussels being the only American finalist. Soo after he wo the largest award ever given to a string player in this country—some $20,000 in cash, contracts and engagements.

Last nigh the musicianly and violinistic qualities that have brought him these honors were markedly in evidence during his suave polished and effective performance of the difficult concerts.

This is a work that can stand much rehearsal and indeed the performance would have been still more exciting had there beene enough time to achieve exact rhythmic snap and complete integration between the interweaving solo and orchestral parts.

WELL, ANYHOW . . .

But it was a splendid performance with Mr. Munch cleverly adjusting the strands and with Mr. Silverstein singing poetically in the cantilena passages and fitting his counter melodies and pizzicato accompaniments beautifully into the orchestral fabric.

All three movements are a varied delight from beginning to end. In this work Prokofieff shows us his kinder mood with the irony, sarcasm and protest notably absent.

Both the audience and Mr. Silverstein's colleagues gave the young violinist a warm reception with more than a few cheers and bravos thrown in for good measure.

Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde," and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4, repeated from recent concerts, made up the remainder.

BLANK PAGE

160

BLANK PAGE

162

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN ..... Overture to "Genoveva"

SCHUMANN ..... Concerto for Violin in D minor
- I. In kräftigem, nicht zu schnellem Tempo
- II. Langsam
- III. Lebhaft doch nicht schnell

INTERMISSION

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 1
- I. Allegro marcato
- II. Adagio
- III. Presto

STRAUSS ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo form, Op. 28

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 4 1961

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
MAR 9 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERK

BSO: SZERYNG IN SCHUMANN CONCERTO

Last week's program consisted of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" and his Violin Concerto, Honegger's First Symphony and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." The soloist was Henryk Szeryng. A performance of the Schumann Violin Concerto is a rare event and a few sentences about its history are in order.

At the very end of his career Schumann composed the work for his friend, the eminent violinist Joseph Joachim but immediately thereafter was committed to an asylum, where he died without its ever having been played in public. Joachim, recognizing that the work was destined for failure, arrived at an oral understanding with Schumann's widow, Clara, and Brahms to withhold it from publication, and Joachim's heirs in due course sold the manuscript to the Berlin State Library with the stipulation that publication be further withheld until 1956. Then, in 1936, the heirs for some reason removed the restriction and the following year a publisher arranged for performances by Yehudi Menuhin.

As I vaguely recall, Menuhin's exhumation created considerable excitement in musical circles at that time, and he played the Concerto around a great deal, including in Boston in 1938. It was however, poorly received and quickly fell into desuetude. The instant concert was its first revival here since then.

Though familiar with the piece from phonograph records this was the only occasion I had ever heard it in live performance. To hear the concerto thus is to appreciate the acuity of Joachim's judgment. Absent is virtually every one of Schumann's strengths: the freshness of his ideas; the radiance of his improvisation; the lyricism of this themes; the closely knit qualities of his thematic relationships. What remains is a collection of really banal themes, an incredibly heavy-footed development and a general mood redolent of habit without zest, all done up in the classical concerto mold.

Yet, one ought to listen to it, say, every decade-and-a-half, if only as an interesting museum curio. As such, this concerto might prove more rewarding to listen to than yet another routine performance of the Mendelssohn, Tchiakowsky, Bruch, etc. Especially if so much magnificent sound, technique, intelligence, refinement and feeling is lavished upon it as did Mr. Szeryng in this performance. This Polish-born artist, now a citizen of Mexico, established his credentials with the orchestra two years ago with the Tchaikowsky and nothing has happened to impair them since. He shouldered his burden, presumably self-imposed, as though it were a work of incandescent genius. May he soon return with something a bit more worthy of his attainments.

This is a Honegger town, yet the First Symphony is also something of a rarity. Would it were not, for here is really an impressive piece of music whose qualities of dramatic strength, strikingly acerb instrumental effects and wide range of moods would be far more appreciated with familiarity. In particular, the epilogue in the last movement is hauntingly beautiful writing. Mr. Munch's affinity for Honegger's music, is well established, and he gave the Symphony a taut and understanding reading.

So much can be said of the performance of the "Genoveva" Overture. But the traversal of the seriously over-worked "Till Eulenspiegel" did little but provide a raucus Roman holiday for our uninhibited trumpet section.

12-60
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 11 1961

Symphony Programs

Henryk Szeryng will be soloist with the Boston Symphony as they return from their tour to perform at Sanders Theater Tuesday evening, March 14, at 8:30. In addition to the Schumann Violin Concerto, Charles Munch will conduct Milhaud's "La Création du monde" and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor for Symphony Hall concerts Friday, March 17, Saturday, March 18, and Tuesday, March 21. Mr. Schippers' weekend program, preceded by an open rehearsal Thursday, March 16, at 7:30, will include Verdi's overture to "La Forza del Destino," Schubert's Symphony No. 4, and Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra.

Romanticism on Symphony Program

Szeryng Soloist in Rare Schumann

By Louis Chapin

Musical people sometimes find themselves wandering, in conversation, into the game of Transplanting Composers. "If Bach were writing today. . . ." "Supposing Stravinsky, instead of Haydn, had composed for the Esterhazys. . . ." The possibilities are infinite and alluring, the useful results are doubtful. Music is not the warp of a man and the woof of his times made into tapestry, but a multitude of decisions to dispose measurable sounds for partly immeasurable reasons.

Reminding myself firmly of this yesterday, in the presence of the Boston Symphony and three differently romantic composers, it was still tempting to play the game a little as we passed from the two little-heard Schumann pieces to Honegger's First Symphony to the gusty pranks of Till Eulenspiegel.

Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" offered no temptations to transplant. Charles Munch and his players made the most of what is for this composer a fairly wide tonal spectrum, including a sprightly theme for the horn choir. We were shown what Schumann could do when he had an opera in mind, but before he began maneuvering his characters.

♩ ♩ ♩

"Genoveva" was a late work, and the Violin Concerto, following it on the program, was Schumann's last major composition. It was unperformed publicly until 1937, after an 80-year Rip Van Winkle sleep imposed on it by the composer's widow and the violinist Joachim, for whom it was written. These two apparently had severe doubts as to the work's caliber; yesterday's Symphony Hall performance showed reasons, in the first and third movements, to justify the doubts and send the ear to other composers, foraging for sturdy and lively sounds to transplant. But it also showed reasons, in between, to be grateful for Rip's awakening.

Schumann gave us, in his slow movement, what must be one of the most affectingly lyrical in concerto literature. He conceived it, in the main, as a kind of duet, one part given to the soloist and the other, at different times, to a single cello or to muted violins. Everyone concerned yesterday made this movement a truly lovely discovery: Henryk Szering, in his tone and his senstive phrasing, brough dignity and pathos to the solo line, with an air of interpretive hospitality which made room for Samuel Mayes' warm cello and to the dark softness of first violins. It seems likely that Brahms (who knew this work) made a mental note which later materialized as the cello solo in his Second Piano Concerto. But this Schumann treasure is still unique in its melody-against-melody, and Mr. Szering apparently knows just why.

♩ ♩ ♩

The two outside movements were pleasant, and finely played, with a gracious "Traumerei"-like theme in the first. Yet when Honegger came along, after intermission, he brought with him the temptation to transplant.

This French composer's First Symphony was written for this orchestra's fiftieth anniversary and first performed by it in 1931. With it Honegger found a stride (sometimes syncopated) which was to become surer in the style of his later symphonies, but it is hard to imagine a more sympathetic embodiment of it than the one provided yesterday under Dr. Munch's direction.

Honegger piles up his brass and woodwinds through almost the same range as the strings. From piccolo to contrabassoon, from penetrating trumpet line to tuba, they give him the firm grip on the sound that he needed and that Schumann (even with his slenderer orchestra) might have used.

♩ ♩ ♩

Dr. Munch and the orchestra took a few measures to agree as to the throbbing pace of the second movement, but otherwise the crustacean sound, belonging to a shellfish with throbbing grunts, was superbly realized. The shellfish, incidentally, also has a tail that dwindles delightfully at the end of the first movement, whose description yesterday was a genuine tour de force.

And finally came Strauss, crackling and whimpering his way from one prank to another, with as infectious a performance as one could ask, and with one or two further temptations to transplant. But the game isn't needed. We've got Strauss, we've got Honegger, and we've got a wonderfully tender movement by Schumann.

162

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN ..... Overture to "Genoveva"

SCHUMANN ..... Concerto for Violin in D minor
- I. In kräftigem, nicht zu schnellem Tempo
- II. Langsam
- III. Lebhaft doch nicht schnell

INTERMISSION

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 1
- I. Allegro marcato
- II. Adagio
- III. Presto

STRAUSS ..... Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo form, Op. 28

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1097]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 4 19[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
MAR 9 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. [illegible]

BSO: SZERYNG IN SCHUMANN CONCERTO

Last week's program consisted of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" and his Violin Concerto, Honegger's First Symphony and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." The soloist was Henryk Szeryng. A performance of the Schumann Violin Concerto is a rare event and a few sentences about its history are in order.

At the very end of his career Schumann composed the work for his friend, the eminent violinist Joseph Joachim but immediately thereafter was committed to an asylum, where he died without its ever having been played in public. Joachim, recognizing that the work was destined for failure, arrived at an oral understanding with Schumann's widow, Clara, and Brahms to withhold it from publication, and Joachim's heirs in due course sold the manuscript to the Berlin State Library with the stipulation that publication be further withheld until 1956. Then, in 1936, the heirs for some reason removed the restriction and the following year a publisher arranged for performances by Yehudi Menuhin.

As I vaguely recall, Menuhin's exhumation created considerable excitement in musical circles at that time, and he played the Concerto around a great deal, including in Boston in 1938. It was however, poorly received and quickly fell into desuetude. The instant concert was its first revival here since then.

Though familiar with the piece from phonograph records this was the only occasion I had ever heard it in live performance. To hear the concerto thus is to appreciate the acuity of Joachim's judgment. Absent is virtually every one of Schumann's strengths: the freshness of his ideas; the radiance of his improvisation; the lyricism of this themes; the closely knit qualities of his thematic relationships. What remains is a collection of really banal themes, an incredibly heavy-footed development and a general mood redolent of habit without zest, all done up in the classical concerto mold.

Yet, one ought to listen to it, say, every decade-and-a-half, if only as an interesting museum curio. As such, this concerto might prove more rewarding to listen to than yet another routine performance of the Mendelssohn, Tchiakowsky, Bruch, etc. Especially if so much magnificent sound, technique, intelligence, refinement and feeling is lavished upon it as did Mr. Szeryng in this performance. This Polish-born artist, now a citizen of Mexico, established his credentials with the orchestra two years ago with the Tchaikowsky and nothing has happened to impair them since. He shouldered his burden, presumably self-imposed, as though it were a work of incandescent genius. May he soon return with something a bit more worthy of his attainments.

This is a Honegger town, yet the First Symphony is also something of a rarity. Would it were not, for here is really an impressive piece of music whose qualities of dramatic strength, strikingly acerb instrumental effects and wide range of moods would be far more appreciated with familiarity. In particular, the epilogue in the last movement is hauntingly beautiful writing. Mr. Munch's affinity for Honegger's music, is well established, and he gave the Symphony a taut and understanding reading.

So much can be said of the performance of the "Genoveva" Overture. But the traversal of the seriously over-worked "Till Eulenspiegel" did little but provide a raucus Roman holiday for our uninhibited trumpet section.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 11 1961

Symphony Programs

Henryk Szeryng will be soloist with the Boston Symphony as they return from their tour to perform at Sanders Theater Tuesday evening, March 14, at 8:30. In addition to the Schumann Violin Concerto, Charles Munch will conduct Milhaud's "La Création du monde" and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor for Symphony Hall concerts Friday, March 17, Saturday, March 18, and Tuesday, March 21. Mr. Schippers' weekend program, preceded by an open rehearsal Thursday, March 16, at 7:30, will include Verdi's overture to "La Forza del Destino," Schubert's Symphony No. 4, and Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra.

Romanticism on Symphony Program

Szeryng Soloist in Rare Schumann

By Louis Chapin

Musical people sometimes find themselves wandering, in conversation, into the game of Transplanting Composers. "If Bach were writing today. . . ." "Supposing Stravinsky, instead of Haydn, had composed for the Esterhazys. . . ." The possibilities are infinite and alluring, the useful results are doubtful. Music is not the warp of a man and the woof of his times made into tapestry, but a multitude of decisions to dispose measurable sounds for partly immeasurable reasons.

Reminding myself firmly of this yesterday, in the presence of the Boston Symphony and three differently romantic composers, it was still tempting to play the game a little as we passed from the two little-heard Schumann pieces to Honegger's First Symphony to the gusty pranks of Till Eulenspiegel.

Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" offered no temptations to transplant. Charles Munch and his players made the most of what is for this composer a fairly wide tonal spectrum, including a sprightly theme for the horn choir. We were shown what Schumann could do when he had an opera in mind, but before he began maneuvering his characters.

♩ ♩ ♩

"Genoveva" was a late work, and the Violin Concerto, following it on the program, was Schumann's last major composition. It was unperformed publicly until 1937, after an 80-year Rip Van Winkle sleep imposed on it by the composer's widow and the violinist Joachim, for whom it was written. These two apparently had severe doubts as to the work's caliber; yesterday's Symphony Hall performance showed reasons, in the first and third movements, to justify the doubts and send the ear to other composers, foraging for sturdy and lively sounds to transplant. But it also showed reasons, in between, to be grateful for Rip's awakening.

Schumann gave us, in his slow movement, what must be one of the most affectingly lyrical in concerto literature. He conceived it, in the main, as a kind of duet, one part given to the soloist and the other, at different times, to a single cello or to muted violins. Everyone concerned yesterday made this movement a truly lovely discovery: Henryk Szering, in his tone and his senstive phrasing, brough dignity and pathos to the solo line, with an air of interpretive hospitality which made room for Samuel Mayes' warm cello and to the dark softness of first violins. It seems likely that Brahms (who knew this work) made a mental note which later materialized as the cello solo in his Second Piano Concerto. But this Schumann treasure is still unique in its melody-against-melody, and Mr. Szering apparently knows just why.

♩ ♩ ♩

The two outside movements were pleasant, and finely played, with a gracious "Traumerei"-like theme in the first. Yet when Honegger came along, after intermission, he brought with him the temptation to transplant.

This French composer's First Symphony was written for this orchestra's fiftieth anniversary and first performed by it in 1931. With it Honegger found a stride (sometimes syncopated) which was to become surer in the style of his later symphonies, but it is hard to imagine a more sympathetic embodiment of it than the one provided yesterday under Dr. Munch's direction.

Honegger piles up his brass and woodwinds through almost the same range as the strings. From piccolo to contrabassoon, from penetrating trumpet line to tuba, they give him the firm grip on the sound that he needed and that Schumann (even with his slenderer orchestra) might have used.

♩ ♩ ♩

Dr. Munch and the orchestra took a few measures to agree as to the throbbing pace of the second movement, but otherwise the crustacean sound, belonging to a shellfish with throbbing grunts, was superbly realized. The shellfish, incidentally, also has a tail that dwindles delightfully at the end of the first movement, whose description yesterday was a genuine tour de force.

And finally came Strauss, crackling and whimpering his way from one prank to another, with as infectious a performance as one could ask, and with one or two further temptations to transplant. But the game isn't needed. We've got Strauss, we've got Honegger, and we've got a wonderfully tender movement by Schumann.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

MAR 4 1961

The Symphony

MANY VIRTUES, BUT NOT VERY EXCITING

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Philip Hale said the last word on yesterday's Symphony concert some years ago while commenting upon one of the items in it, the overture to "Genoveva": "The music, however beautiful or noble it may be, lacks the most essential quality: it is never dramatic."

Substitute the word "program" for music, and you have the epigraph for this occasion. The afternoon was unexceptionable: Charles Munch and the ensemble were in good estate; and a fine soloist, Henryk Szeryng (pronounced 'Shearing') returned to offer an eloquent account of the seldom-heard Schumann Violin Concerto. One could remark many virtues. The afternoon was unexceptionable . . . and not very exciting, either.

Not Rousing

Of the four scores, three represented minor writing from masters, and the fourth, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," demanded a different sort of interpretive temperament. On the other hand, there was the limpid purity of Mr. Szeryng's tone; the lovely contributory 'cello solo in the Schumann, by Samuel Mayes; Dr. Munch's well-proportioned readings; and the appeal, of much of the music.

This appeal must be tempered by ambiguity, alas. If the "Genoveva" overture sparkles, as Philip Hale indicated it is not at all rousing. The Schumann concerto contains moments of transcendent songfulness; it is also diffuse. Two movements of the Honegger seem to me static and turgid; and yet the Presto of the First reaches a profund and haunting resolution. As for "Till," Dr. Munche's' treatment was cautious and correct, but the result was an overly-refined Frenchified Strauss.

Welcoming back Henryk Szeryng, last heard in the Tchaikowsky Concerto two years ago, presented no problem, for his playing was seraphic. It had the fluidity and freedom and rhapsodic grace appropriate to the expressive, veiled romanticism of this score. He followed concert practice, I believe in transporting certain segments an octave higher; for if anyone is to make the violin stand out from the tutti here, alterations are necessary. Even the first version, published by Schott, is heavily edited.

Mr. Szeryng's stops, his tone, rhythmical ease and subtle phrasing proved lyrical and exquisite. The subdued interpretive approach showed his awareness of style. The last thing to be communicated is bravura, virtuoso power in Schumann's Concerto; the music displays a luscious and wistful charm, totally lacking in virility yet startling one with fragments of delicate splendor.

Always fragments: like Emerson's in his last days, this is a statement of beclouded genius. The most brilliant themes are started, but the subject dies; the composed gropes around a dominant seventh, repeats himself in the finale, finally remembers what he was saying. To some degree, he frees himself of the two bar melodic restrictions of his work, yet he cannot sustain, and the result is a glorious ruin.

At the conclusion, Mr. Szeryng received a cordial reception and shook the hand of Samuel Mayes; both merited distinction.

Honegger's First Symphony, composed for the 50th Anniversary of the orchestra, suffers from uncertainty of style. Prior to writing it, he had already established his original identity in "King David" and "Pacific 231," and one suspects his entry into the symphonic form led him to strain for effect. The strong rhythmic element, free tonality, harmonic cragginess of the earlier work here becomes academic and lifeless for two movements.

Broad, Sublime

With the third, however, artifice gives way to feeling, and a composer who has been constructing and fabricating a self-conscious structure, offers a grave, hushed, emotional close to a nimble scherzo. The material bears little relation to the dissonant opening, but is broad and sublime all the same.

The performance here was colorful and intense and the "Genoveva" also went a meticulous way. One cannot declare Charles Munch's Strauss, which was equally meticulous, to be as idiomatic. The playing needed more weight, and a conception of "Till Eulenspiegel" as a grotesque right out of Hieronymous Bosch.

There is color enough in Dr. Munch's version, of a specifically Gallic kind, adroit and pale and fragile. The idea is that of a kindly Alsatian chimney-corner tale. He just doesn't believe in trolls, I'm afraid.

The orchestra goes on tour next week. Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor March 17-18, and his program, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, No. 4 in C minor, and Verdi's overture to "La Forza del destino."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 18th program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Henryk Szeryng, violin soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Overture to "Genoveva" ..... Schumann
Concerto for Violin in B minor ..... Schumann
Symphony No. ..... Honegger
"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Op. 28 ..... Strauss

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAR 1 1961

Joseph Silverstein Symphon

Young Violinist Heard In Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2

By Harold Rogers

Joseph Silverstein's days in the first violin section of the Boston Symphony are numbered, there's no question about it. He may not leave this year, nor the next, nor would it be wise for him to launch himself as a full-fledged concert artist one moment too soon.

But a day will come when he will know—and we will know—that he is ready. After hearing his performance of the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 last night, one might easily leap to the conclusion that he is ready right now. Only the slightest reservation would hold back an unqualified recommendation.

And this reservation? Well, he is only 29 and still emotionally young. As far as intelligence is concerned, he is not in the least wanting; he is as mentally cool as they come. As far as technique is concerned, he has it down cold; name the problem, and he'll doubtless toss it off with aplomb.

* * *

But a cool head must be balanced by a warm heart, as can be noted in a Francescatti or a Milstein; and at present Mr. Silverstein tends to stand outside the emotional content of what he is playing. The key to true greatness can be easily handed to any promising young musician; it is simply that he must himself enter into the heart of the music, and by doing so take his listeners along with him.

The difficulty always lies in his ability to take the key and open the lock. The theory is simple; the practice is something the majority of musicians never attain, and those who do attain it seem to do so in their maturer years. Youth can manage it (Glenn Gould can) but it is the exception rather than the rule.

Yet Mr. Silverstein is so close to it that he may step across the line at any moment and find himself there. One of these days he will toss intellectual processes to the winds (they go on by themselves anyway, once established) and simply let himself feel. Then he will have won his place with the Francescattis and the Milsteins.

* * *

His accurate ear brings forth a pitch that hits the note squarely in the middle; his tone is serene, buoyant, clear; his bowing neat; his fingering a fantasy of skill. Charles Munch gave his usual adroit support as he guided the orchestra in its accompanying role. At the conclusion Mr. Silverstein was heartily applauded not only by his Symphony Hall listeners, but by his fellow musicians as well—and there's no higher compliment than that.

Dr. Munch opened the concert last night with Milhaud's "La Création du monde," achieving a more incisive reading of this jazz-influenced ballet music than he did last Friday afternoon. He closed with a magnificently warm traversal of Dvořák's Fourth Symphony, allowing his heart to ride the crest of Dvořák's wondrous melodic flow. Is there anything quite like that waltz movement in symphonic literature?

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

MAR 4 1961

Szeryng Violin Soloist In Schumann Concerto

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 18th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture and Violin Concerto; Symphony No. 1, by Honeggar, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." Henryk Szeryng was violin soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

You never can tell in this life. I had thought that the Violin Concerto by Robert Schumann, performed just twice here by Yehudi Menuhin and the Boston Symphony in 1938, would not come our way again. But lo! here it is this very week, again at the Symphony concerts and with Henryk Szeryng as soloist.

This was the last work of Schumann in a large form, created in 13 days, less than five months before insanity prompted Schumann to attempt suicide in the River Rhine. It was written for Joseph Joachim, who never played it in public, and who with Brahms persuaded Clara Schumann against its publication. Only in 1936, after removal of legal restrictions, was it available to be played.

In the light of these extraordinary and pathetic circumstances, objective appraisal of the Violin Concerto is hardly possible. This is peculiarly undeveloped music for a German, even Schumann; it is notably repetitive, and though of a wan melodic charm, it is not incontestably "violinistic."

In short, I do believe, the Concerto betrays the encroaching mental darkness of the composer, and is pitifully lacking in the passion, vigor and imaginative sunglow of the man who wrote the great piona pieces, the four symphonies and the A minor Piano Concerto. It is difficult to listen to the Violin Concerto without thinking of the personal tragedy of one of the noblest natures in music. "O World, O Life, O Time. . . ."

Nonetheless, any music by a man once a master should be heard, whatever its value. In this present instance, Henry Szeryng, a virtuoso who is also a superb musician, must be praised for his courage, for the Schumann oCncerto will not add luster to the public repute of him who plays it. No one could have give nit more tender, loving care than did Szerng, whose performance was most beautiful, most devoted.

Dr. Munch addressed himself, after intermission, to an extraordinarily fine work, if perhaps not the greatest masterpiece, of the late Arthur Honegger, and to Strauss' mordant "Till." With the latter he accomplished marvels of brilliance and virtuoso orchestral detail in a performance which, though loud, was not without sensitivity and which surely was masterly in execution.

Some of the Friday subscribers walked out on Honegger. Understandable this is, if one does not possess, at the least, a stubborn curiosity in the hearing, time and again of music initially hard to take. The first movement of this First Symphony, whatever its interior logic, pierces and cuts in its fierce dissonance. Thereafter the texture becomes clearer, the mood more tarctable, the feeling softer, and the conclusion is tender and luminous.

In its finest pages—and I would not omit portions of that first movement, either—Honegger's First Symphony reveals some of the finest attributes of French abstract modernity. This is music that lives in vital rhythm and which moves constantly from one after another of engaging blends and contrasts of instrumental function.

With Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, Munch wrought dramatically. It cannot compare with that Romantic jewel, the "Manfred" Overture, but it is worth occasional hearing. Munch, let us not forget, is the only Boston Symphony conductor who has performed it since 1883!

Next week the Orchestra will be on tour. Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor at the next Symphony Hall "regular" concerts, Mar. 17 and 18. He will present the Overture to Verdi's "La Forza del Destino"; Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Globe 2/26/61

Silverstein and Szeryng Symphony Violin Soloists

Charles Munch has invited two violinists to be soloists at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall, this week.

Joseph Silverstein will be heard in Prokofieff's Concerto No. 2, in G minor, at the seventh Tuesday evening concert, Feb. 28 at 8:30.

Winner of the Naumburg Award last Fall and the only American to place in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition, Mr. Silverstein has been a member of the Orchestra since 1955.

At Tuesday's concert Dr. Munch will also conduct Milhaud's "La Creation du monde" and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4.

Henryk Szeryng, the Polish violinist who was last heard with the Boston Symphony in February, 1959, as part of his first transcontinental tour of the United States, will be soloist at the concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Mr. Szeryng will play the seldom-heard violin concerto by Schumann.

Doctor Munch's program, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 Thursday, also includes Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Honegger's Symphony No. 1, and the Tone Poem, "Till Eulenspiegel," by Richard Strauss.

Messrs. Silverstein and Szeryng will be soloists on tour with the Orchestra next week when concerts will be given in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York.

BLANK PAGE

164

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

MAR 5 1961

Symphony Away Touring This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng as soloists, are on tour this week in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia and New York.

Dr. Munch, who will conduct the Orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre Mar. 14, has invited Thomas Schippers to lead the next Symphony Hall concerts.

For his program Mar. 17, 18 and 21, Mr. Schippers will conduct Verdi's Overture to "La Forza del Destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. There will be an open rehearsal of this program Thursday, Mar. 16, at 7:30 p.m.

Charles Munch has invited the American pianist, Byron Janis, to be soloist at the concerts of Mar. 24, 25 and 26. The program will be in observance of the 150th anniversity of the birth of Franz Liszt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
MAR 7 1961

Hub Symphony Plays Honegger At Smith College

By WILLARD M. CLARK

NORTHAMPTON — Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra paid its annual visit to Smith College Monday night and played before a large and cordial audience.

Munch was in a most eloquent mood and led his virtuosi through Honegger's first symphony, an admirable work commissioned by the orchestra for its 50th anniversary year. It was one of the few really fine works received by the orchestra.

Like Prokofieff, Honegger seemed to write with calculated aggressiveness to make for controversy. The first symphony is witty and grotesque in the first movement, and absolutely dissonant, but in the following two movements, the mood changes, and there are glimpses of truly lovely melodies and an orchestral texture opalescent in quality.

The final movement is bravura to the hilt, calling for the utmost skill of the players. This was given in abundance, and the result was a piece of music curiously haunting in the memory.

Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor" was played by the 29-year-old assistant concertmaster of the orchestra, Joseph Silverstein. The young musician played it with greater assurance than when we last heard him and brought to it his manifold talents and interpretive abilities.

The opening movement is gusty, often dissonant, but the middle movement has a poignant beauty, almost Schumanesque in its quality. Silverstein produced a beautiful tone and in a smooth, unassuming manner let the music sing its own song.

The final movement is a challenge to any violinist, but Silverstein tossed it off with disarming ease. The orchestral collaboration was splendid, and the applause which followed the performance was heart-warming.

Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 in G major concluded this vital program, and Munch let loose his charm in a gracious and colorful interpretation which brought out every beauty in this work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAR 5 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng as soloists, are on tour this week to present concerts in Northampton, New Haven, Philadelphia and New York.

Doctor Munch, who will conduct the orchestra at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre on Mar. 14, has invited Thomas Schippers to lead the next Symphony Hall concerts.

For his program on Mar. 17, 18 and 21 (Friday at 2:15, Saturday and Tuesday at 8:30; Mr. Schippers will conduct Verdi's Overture to "La Forza del destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. There will be an Open Rehearsal of this program on Thursday, Mar. 16, at 7:30 p.m.

Charles Munch has invited the American pianist, Byron Janis, to be his guest at the concerts of Mar. 24, 25 and 26 (Friday, Saturday and Sunday). The program at these concerts will be in observance of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt.

TODAY

OBERNKIRCHSEN CHILDREN'S CHOIR, Symphony Hall, 3:30 p.m. Boston University Celebrity Series. Brahms, Schubert, Smetana, Bruckner and folk songs from around the world. Box office opens at 1:30 p.m.

VIENNA OCTET, Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m. Final event of M.I.T. Humanities Series. Michael Haydn, Mozart, Schubert. Tickets at box office prior to concert.

BOSTON FINE ARTS QUARTET, with Joseph de Pasquale, viola, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. Free Walter W. Naumburg concert. Three Mozart Quintets.

MAX MILLER, organist, Marsh Chapel, Boston University, 4:30 p.m. Organ vespers. Public invited.

MELROSE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Jeronimas Kacinskas, conductor, Alice Farnsworth Boffetti, soprano soloist. Mendelssohn, Massenet, Bertok. Tickets at box office, Memorial Hall, Melrose, prior to concert.

GEORGE KENT, WILLIAM MacGOWAN, trumpet and organ, Maple Street Congregational Church, Danvers, 4:30 p.m. Varied program for both instruments. Public invited.

TUESDAY

LUISE VOSGERCHIAN, pianist, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Mendelssohn, Billy Jim Layton, Chopin, Bach, Stravinsky. Tickets at box office.

FENWAY SERIES, at Boston Conservatory, 26 Fenway, continues with Serge Conus, composer-pianist and a chorus of Harvard students directed by James Sloane. 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

COMPOSERS' FORUM, Brookline Public Library Music Association, 8:30 p.m. Works by Louis Cohen, William Wilder, Melville Smith, Harris Poor, Bartholomeus Kool, performed by Linda Sanford, soprano; Martha Bentley, soprano; Elinor Preble, flute; Donna Klimoski, clarinet; Ann Haugen, piano; Francis Burnett, piano. Public invited.

OPERA DEPARTMENT of the New England Conservatory, Boris Goldovsky director, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Mozart's "Magic Flute," conducted by Thomas Phillips and Ross Reismueller.

GREAT MUSIC series continues, Room 12, Boston University, 725 Commonwealth Avenue, 7:15 p.m. Edith Vogl illustrated lecture on "Songs of Schumann and Mendelssohn," Patricia Connor, soprano, Erna V. Fisher, soprano. Public invited.

THURSDAY

OPERA DEPARTMENT of N.E. Conservatory, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Repeat performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute."

FRIDAY

JUILLIARD STRING QUARTET, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Mason Music Foundation concert. Admission free but by ticket, 50 Fayerweather Street, Cambridge. Rush seats without ticket at 8:30 night of concert.

BEVERLY SILLS, soprano, Andover Celebrity Series, Phillips Andover Academy, 8:00 p.m. The leading soprano of the N. Y. City Center Opera replaces Griller Quartet originally scheduled for the series final event this season.

ADELE ADDISON, soprano, Country School Auditorium, 8:00 p.m. On Weston Country Evening Concert Series.

HARVARD-RADCLIFFE ORCHESTRA, Michael Senturia, conductor, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Premiere of "Essay on a Subject by Anton Webern," by David Lewen; Concerto da Camera for Flute and English Horn, by Hindsmith, Brahms Symphony No. 3. Tickets at door and at Harvard Coop.

SATURDAY

CHORUS PRO MUSICA, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, Symphony Hall, 8:00 p.m. St. Matthew Passion, by J. S. Bach. Soloists, Margaret Kalil, Eunice Alberts, Charles Bressler, Donald Gramm. Cambridge Festival Orchestra, Robert Brink, concertmaster, Daniel Pinkham, harpsichord. Tickets at box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 12,847

FEB 28 1961

Boston Symphony Feature Of Smith March Schedule

The March schedule of concerts at Smith College opens Sunday with a student recital at 8 p. m. in Sage Hall, followed on Monday by the Boston Symphony concert under Charles Munch at 8:15 in John M. Greene Hall.

Mr. Munch this year has included in his program a violin concerto, the Prokofieff Second, with the distinguished violinist Joseph Silverstein. The Honegger First Symphony will open the concert, and the final work will be the Dvorak Fourth Symphony.

On Sunday, March 12, at 4 and at 8 p.m., in John M. Greene Hall, the Amherst and Smith Glee Clubs under the direction of J. Heywood Alexander and Iva Dee Hiatt will present in two parts the Bach St. Matthew Passion.

"An evening of lyric theatre" will be given by the After Dinner Opera Company in Sage Hall as the third and last concert in the Chamber Series Thursday, March 16, at 8. Tickets are available for this performance, which will present three lighthearted one-act operas by Offenbach, Horovitz and Chabrier in English translations, with colorful scenery and costumes, under the direction of George Walston.

The singers are Claire Simmons, Norman Riggins and Paul Dixon, and the works to be mounted are Offenbach's "66"; "Gentleman's Island" by Horovitz, based on the delightful poem of W. S. Gilbert in "Bab Ballads," and Chabrier's "An Incomplete Education."

Also on Thursday, March 16, at 5, Dean Doris Silbert will give an open lecture on the Haydn "Creation," which will be given a single performance on Sunday, March 19, at 3 in John M. Greene Hall. This noble work, the climax of the year for the Smith-Amherst Orchestra and the choral groups, will be under the direction of Marion DeRonde and will be performed with the orchestra by the Smith College Choir (Iva Dee Hiatt, director), the Haverford College Glee Club (William H. Reese, director), and three distinguished soloists: Benita Valente, soprano, Johann Karatzas, tenor, and Thomas Beveridge, bass.

Mr. Beveridge has been heard as soloist with the Smith College Choirs and Glee Club, but this will be the first Northampton appearance of Mr. Karatzas and Miss Valente, who was winner of the Metropolitan Opera Auditions in 1960 and of many other awards. This concert will be open to the public without charge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 12,847

MAR 9 1961

Munch Conducts Famed Orchestra

Monday night at John M. Greene Hall the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, presented a mild musical program to a near capacity audience. The program consisted of Honegger's Symphony No. 1, Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op 63, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4, in G major, op. 88. The first two numbers were composed in the 1930's; the last in 1889, so it was definitely an evening for lovers of the contemporary musical idiom.

The Honegger was especially interesting in the rhythmic display of the first movement. The remaining two movements were pleasing, but not particularly noteworthy. The orchestra played with its usual superb skill while Munch conducted in his inimitable fashion, alternately unobtrusive and dynamic.

Joseph Silverstein was the violin soloist in the Prokofiev, a rather unusual concerto. Rather than have the soloist expose and the orchestra develop one after the other, the concerto proceeded apace, with the soloist and orchestra more closely integrated than customary. Unfortunately, at times the solo instrument was drowned out by the orchestra. Silverstein displayed master ful technique in disposing o his difficult part; the more re markable because of the sus tained effort demanded of hin by this form. In toto, this piece was rhythmically and thematically interesting in a pleasant way.

After intermission, the Dvorak symphony captured the audience's attention. The most tonal and melodic piece of the evening, and the most dynamic; it was also the most enthusiastically received. To the ears of the audience, the graceful lines and the full continuous sound, uninterrupted by spastic rhythms, were a relief through contrast to the first two selections.

Both those who prefer modern music to romantic, and those who care only for modern music were certainly satisfied by the evening's renditions, which were not extreme examples of either school. In short, it was a fine program, performed by one of the best orchestras in the world.—D. deB.B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664

MAR 5 1961

MUNCH CONDUCTS BOSTON SYMPHONY AT SMITH MONDAY

NORTHAMPTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch, will be heard in John M. Greene Hall Northampton Monday at 8.15 p. m. as one of the events in the Smith College concert course. The program will include the Prokofieff Second Violin Concerto with soloist Joseph Silverstein assistant concertmaster of the symphony, who lately won the Naumburg Award. Two symphonies will also be on the Boston Symphony program: Dvorak Fourth, and Honegger First.

On Monday at 5 p. m. in Sage Hall, Prof. Emeritus Arthur Ware Locke will give a lecture-analysis of the Boston Symphony program, and this lecture is open to the public.

Next Sunday at 4 p. m. and at 8 in John M. Greene Hall the Bach St. Matthew Passion will be performed in its two parts, by the Smith College Glee Club, under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt, the Amherst College Glee Club, under the direction of J. Heywood Alexander, the First Congregational Church of Amherst Youth Choir, under the direction of Jean Pemberton, and soloissts.

Adrienne Auerswald, soprano, and Charles Fassett, tenor, both of the Smith College Department of Music, will be joined by three visiting soloists: Richard Donohue, tenor, as Evangelist; Thomas Beveridge, bass, as Christ; and Malama Notcholas, contralto. A double chamber orchestra will accompany the Passion.

Mr. Beveridge will also appear as soloist in John M. Greene Hall on Sunday the 19th at 3 p. m. in the Haydn "Creation" with the Smith-Amherst Symphony, under the direction of Marion DeRonde. The other soloists on that occasion will be Benita Valente, soprano, and Johann Karatzas, tenor. Both the Bach and the Haydn performances are open to the public.

On Friday, the 17th at 5 p. m. in Sage Hall, Dean Doris Silbert will give a lecture on the Haydn "Creation," which will also be open to the public.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460
MAR 5 1961

Boston Symphony Appears Second Time This Season

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will make its seasonal farewell here on Tuesday evening in the sixth event of the Woolsey series. Charles Munch will conduct a program which is to feature a guest artist in the person of Henryk Szeryng, the Polish violinist. He is to be the soloist in a rare hearing of Schumann's D minor Concerto, Honegger's Symphony No. 1 and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4, the other works listed, will help to strike a nice balance between "the old and the new" as the orchestra's programs invariably do.

HENRYK SZERYNG

With regard to Tuesday's guest artist, it may be said that the New Haven Symphony scored a "first." Though Szernyng will be making his debut in the Woolsey series at this time, he made his first appearance here two years ago as a soloist with our orchestra. An audience in the fourth concert of the New Haven Symphony's 1958-59 series heard the accomplished fiddler in a scintillating performance of the Sibelius Violin Concerto. Szernyng proved to be a virtuoso of the first rank, with an amazing technique and the ability to make his violin sing in the most ecstatic and passionate fashion. Those who may be hearing this superb artist for the first time on Tuesday evening are in for a real treat.

The Schumann concerto has a rather strange history; in fact, it has been called the "lost concerto" though actually it was more neglected than lost. Completed in 1853, the work did not receive its first public performance until 1937. Schumann originally sent the concerto to the great violinist Joachim who, for reasons best known to himself, never performed the work in public. After Joachim's death in 1907, the manuscript reposed in the Berlin State Library until its first performance by violinist Georg Kulenkampf and the Berlin Philharmonic. Yehudi Menuhin gave the first American performance with the St. Louis Symphony in December, 1937, a few months after the European premiere.

The other two works to be heard on Tuesday will round out a program which offers a wealth of contrasts. The Boston Symphony performed the Honegger symphony here in 1944 and despite the severity of its harmonic indulgences the work was well received. Incidentally, this symphony was composed for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. The Dvorak symphony will perhaps be new to many listeners here. Despite the fact that it is a work of considerable stature, it has not attained the popularity of the composer's fifth symphony, "New World." The New Haven Symphony has performed the latter, of course, but its records indicate that the orchestra has never performed the symphony which we are to hear on Tuesday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will appear for the second time this season in Woolsey Hall, on Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 99,236
MAR 8 1961

Music

BOSTON GROUP GIVES CONCERT AT WOOLSEY HALL

The Boston Symphony made its seasonal farewell here in the sixth event of the Woolsey series Tuesday evening. Charles Munch conducted this concert which introduced to many in the audience the Polish violinist Henryk Szeryng, guest artist. This was not the violinist's first appearance here, however, since he performed with the New Haven Symphony two years ago.

Szeryng, in fact, was more impressive in his earlier performance when he was heard in the Silbelius Violin Concerto. At that time he turned in a beautifully precisioned and tonally charming performance revealing himself to be an artist of consummate musicianship. All of this was not lost on the listeners as was evident from the enthusiastic reception which he received in that Woolsey Hall debut.

By contrast, audience response to the violinist's playing of the Schumann D minor Concerto with the Bostonians was lukewarm. Undoubtedly this was due in great part to the work itself which, despite the undeniable appeal in many of its pages just doesn't add up to the stature of an artistic whole. Schumann was a great composer for the piano but his understanding of the violin was something less than complete. To add to the faults in this concerto the orchestration poses extra difficulties which are not always overcome by soloist and orchestra.

The concerto's weaknesses might have been less obvious with a little more "oomph" on the part of the soloist and a more rugged manipulation of the bowing arm in technical passages. On the other hand his tonal investiture was decidedly redeeming feature of the performance and the violin sang exquisitely throughout. While Szeryng's figurations and runs were technically secure in the opening and closing movements in the nature of things the warmth and richness of his tones in the lovely slow movement provided the more memorable moments in the performance.

Honegger's Symphony No. 1 the opening work, made a lot more sense to this listener than it did when the Boston Orchestra played it here in 1954. Perhaps one's ear has become "educated" somewhat in the interim. Those brutally harsh chords in the first movement seem to be less startling as do the general form and structure of this remarkable work. This music with its compelling rhythms, brash harmonies, and contrapuntal complexities may present problems for listeners but surely none for the Bostonians. This latest preformance was ample proof of the latter.

Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 wound up the program in exciting fashion. Conductor and orchestra were in their "best form" here which is to say that tempos were bright, dynamics were wondrous, and sonorities were tailored to prefection. Dr. Munch brought his scores along for a change, a bit unusual for but then, so was the program! (GEA)

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
MAR 9 1961

170

Music: Schumann's Violin Concerto

Szerying Soloist With Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

ABOUT thirty years ago, newspaper readers had a field day following the details of the Mystery of the Schumann Violin Concerto. It was quite a story, complete with seances, mediums and communication with departed spirits. Yelli d'Aranyi, the grandniece of Joseph Joachim and herself a violinist of some repute, claimed to be in contact with Schumann's ghost. The ghost demanded that his violin concerto be exhumed. Miss d'Aranyi and her sister, Adila Fachiri (also a violinist) made a great to-do about it.

All this was amusing to musicologists, among others, because there was no secret that Schumann had composed a violin concerto. It was well known that it was one of his last works, shortly before he attempted suicide; that Joseph Joachim had owned the manuscript; that he and Clara Schumann did not think it worth publishing. In 1937, Yehudi Menuhin finally introduced the work to America and played it for a time.

•

It has never entered the repertory; and, indeed, its faults are obvious. In a way it is a thing of shreds and passages, with a good deal of writing that is patchy and fumbling. And yet it is not a work that can be dismissed offhand.

For one thing its melodic content has too much beauty. For another, there is a peculiar, intense, poignancy about the score. Knowing the details of its composition, it is perhaps too easy to read things into it; to correlate the desperate writing and the obvious lack of grip with the hallucinations that were chasing through poor Schumann's diseased mind. But certainly the two main themes of the first movement are prime Schumann; and the second movement tries valiantly to rise: a bird with shattered wings. The third is a curious sort of polonaise, rather slow and reflective.

Slow and reflective; but surely not so slow as Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, with Henryk Szeryng as soloist, made it out to be. The movement is marked "lively though not fast," and that does not mean in a funereal manner. The participants last night adopted just about a ruinous tempo, one that did not provide enough contrast with the slow movement, and thus made the score sound twice as long as it should have.

Elsewhere Mr. Szeryng played beautifully. His is not a large style, but it has finish, refinement and unusual technical control. Mr. Szeryng is one of the modern group of violinists who does not believe in a heavy vibrato. He managed to get plenty of color without digging a hole in the fingerboard, and his musical ideas always had taste.

•

Mr. Munch opened his concert with Honegger's First Symphony, a curious combination of angry-young-man violence with Massenet-like sugar. It is one of those scores of the Nineteen Twenties that is far too much of the age ever to transcend it. Dvorak's lovely Fourth Symphony ended the program. In the first movement Mr. Munch made up in speed what had been lacking in the finale of the Schumann. He simply raced through it. Later on he settled down to give a colorful and reliable account of the score.

Henryk Szeryng

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. Henryk Szeryng, violinist. At Carnegie Hall.
Symphony No. 1 ..... Honegger
Violin Concerto ..... Schumann
Symphony No. 4 ..... Dvorak

Dvorak and Honegger Works Also Given sonatas was begun in Town Hall last night by Robert Gerle, violinist, and Albert Fuller, harpsichordist, under the sponsorship of the Clarion Music Foundation. The event was colorful and gratifying to the eye as well as the ear, and if the succeeding concerts go as well as this one, the series will be rich in pleasure.

Mr. Fuller's harpsichord, the chief element of visual interest, is a magnificent construction in black, red and gold prominently bearing Latin inscriptions. Mr. Gerle's violin is conventional, but the music stand he used was handsomely ornamented.

•

Their program consisted of the Sonata No. 3 in E and the Sonata No. 5 in F minor by Bach, along with Mozart's Sonata No. 30 in D (K. 306) and Sonata No. 28 in C (K. 296).

Everything was played with keen attention to color, nuance and variety of emotional suggestion. Music that was brisk and lighthearted sparkled with animation; music of a graver nature took on the dignity, nobility or pathos that became it.

And when Messrs. Gerle and Fuller arrived at the Andante sostenuto of Mozart's Sonata No. 28, they did not hesitate to emphasize the hearts-and-flowers sentiment that gives the movement its delicious charm.

•

There was, though, one slightly disturbing feature about the performances, and that was that occasionally they seemed a bit pressed, or nervous, in execution. As a result, some of the livelier tempos fluctuated now and then. This kept the concert from maintaining the level of total poise that would have capped it perfectly.

ALLEN HUGHES.

Sonata Series Begins

A THREE-CONCERT series of Bach and Mozart

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562
MAR 9 1961

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Munch Offers Romantic Bill

By MILES KASTENDIECK

THOUGH CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony indulged in romantic music in Carnegie Hall last night, they began with a modern work of consequence. The revival of Honegger's Symphony No. 1 served as a reminder of how much this composer's music is being neglected.

Thirty years have dealt kindly with it. Under Mr. Munch's sympathetic exposition the symphony not only sustained interest but rekindled a realization of how fine it is.

True to Honegger's personal style, it has much of the locomotive propulsion characteristic of this period of his writing. It also has a communicative aspect overlooked for years.

This is the jazz influence which exerted itself in the Twenties but somehow became sidetracked during the Thirties. It asserts itself in the syncopated rhythms of the first movement, injects a touch of the blues in the second, and gets in a good brass lick in the finale.

Rhythm of Century

Why composers have not further exploited it in serious music remains a mystery because it is an essential rhythm of the century.

Honegger wanders in and out of tonality interestingly in this work. Except for a few arid passages, each movement has a character of its own, perhaps too much so for the complete unity of the work.

The poetic close of the final movement remains an index to the flowering of his genius in later symphonies.

Schumann's Violin Concerto in D Minor and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 comprised the romantic items in the program. Henryk Szeryng pulled the Schumann out of slough of lengthiness its prolixity creates.

Dullness Avoided

The elegance and eloquence of his tone spun its own kind of magic. His playing was sheer poetry. Thus the songful aspect of the music redeemed a work otherwise musically dull.

The native flavor of the Dvorak made delightful listening in Mr. Munch's persuasive and bucolic interpretation.

He caught the "Grazioso" element of the third movement most beguilingly and the uninhibited gaiety of the finale most infectiously. This music suited him temperamentally last night, while the players felt responsive too.

For solid character, however, the Honegger offered stiff competition. Both works could be played more frequently: The Dvorak as relief from the "New World," the Honegger as an introduction to bringing his music more into the repertory. The performance brought genuine satisfaction.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
MAR 9 1961

MUSIC
Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist, Henryk Szeryng, violinist. The program:
Symphony No. 1 ..... Honegger
Violin Concerto ..... Schumann
Symphony No. 4 ..... Dvorak

By Ronald Eyer

We don't hear any of the works listed on this program very often and it is a pleasure to renew old acquaintance, even though the handshake may be a bit languid for this one or that one.

The Schumann concerto for violin was a new, rather than an old acquaintance for this writer. It is not played very often and somehow I have missed it all along the line—but not very much. It is indistinguishable in kind from the concertos of Mendelssohn, Brahms or any other composer of the Nineteenth Century who wrote stock pieces of this sort for the violin virtuoso. But it is not nearly as good as Mendelssohn, and it is miles behind Brahms. But it is typical in chromaticism, the characteristic sequential development, the bravura arpeggios for the solo instrument and all the other clichés of the form which were clichés even then.

Henryk Szeryng played it admirably. He is somewhat stolid in approach, not much given to bursts of temperament. But he has a warm vibrato, his technique frequently shows brilliance, and he no doubt will become more plangent in style when he feels more confident about addressing himself to the audience rather than the conductor.

Among his best moments were the slow movement which opens with a beautiful statement of the theme by the solo cello followed by the solo violin. It is the most inspired movement of the concerto and Mr. Szeryng made the most of it. It must be said on the soloists behalf that the concerto contains only routine writing for the violin. Schumann knew something about the violin, but he didn't know enough to write with the dash and inventive daring that he wrote for the piano.

The Honegger First Symphony dates categorically from an early period of experiment with the "advanced" music of the Twentieth Century. One of its naivetes is its use of completely diatonic melodic ideas set amid a welter of dissonant harmonies in a Straussian body of opulent orchestral tone. It is nothing like so revolutionary as the composer's "Pacific 231," and in the second movement, the Adagio, he almost completely gives up acute dissonance for a kind of muted impressionism which is mindful of Delius and frequently quite eloquent of tongue.

The Dvorak Fourth Symphony does not possess the individuality of the "New World"—distinguished by its "new world" themes—but it is mellifluous and solidly constructed in the romantic tradition with characteristic Dvorak thematic echo effects. This, along with all of the rest of the music of the evening, enjoyed a benign performance under the Munch baton.

Henryk Szeryng, violin soloist with the Boston Symphony last night.

France-Amérique March 19, 1961

La musique

Munch à New-York

par Edgard FEDER

LA quatrième visite, cette année, de l'orchestre de Boston et de Charles Münch fut l'occasion d'un nouveau triomphe pour ces musiciens d'élite qui, avec leur formidable chef, constituent une équipe symphonique unique au monde. L'on a beau entendre les orchestres réputés les meilleurs, ou les chefs connus pour être parmi les plus habiles: on les admire, souvent sans réserves, avec tout le respect qui leur est dû. Mais lorsqu'il s'agit de la symbiose "Boston-Münch", l'on se trouve transporté dans un monde à part, où les "réalités" musicales aussi inattaquables qu'une montagne de granit servent de base à la plus fertile des spontanéités, où la fantaisie et le rêve se laissent courtiser par le bon goût et où la perfection technique des exécutions semble n'être qu'un prétexte pour rendre l'essence même de la musique plus vivante, plus éloquente, plus accessible, en un mot, plus humaine.

Dès son premier concert, M. Münch dirigea la Symphonie n° I, qu'Arthur Honegger composa en 1930. Vêtement moderne, musical plus riche, plus substantiel, futil exprimé dans une forme structurale plus solidement charpentée; et naturellement, l'exécution en fut d'une plasticité irrésistible.

Quant à l'interprétation de la IVème Symphonie de Dvorak, elle fut digne du joyau qu'est cet ouvrage ensoleillé. Enfin, Charles Münch s'associa à Henri Szeryng, l'un des plus doués — voire le plus doué — des violonistes de la jeune génération, pour offrir au public une interprétation émouvante et techniquement parfaite du Concerto en Ré mineur de Schumann. Ce concerto est la dernière oeuvre importante composée par le poignant romantique allemand alors qu'il était déjà frappé du dérèglement mental qui marqua la fin de sa brève existence. L'ouvrage a des faiblesses telles que Clara Schumann, d'accord avec Joachim et Brahms, refusa d'en permettre l'exécution. Un siècle presque devait s'écouler avant que l'on ne sortît le concerto des cartons de l'oubli auquel il avait été voué. Heureusement, car il contient des trésors inappréciables de tendresse et d'émotion virile. C'est "Eusebius", le doux rêveur qui incarne l'aspect le plus attachant de la personnalité de Schumann, qui exprime la quintessence de son être dans cet ouvrage dont la calme intensité vous étreint la gorge.

M. Szeryng, admirablement soutenu par Charles Münch, en fut l'interprète aussi sensible qu'habile, ce dont tous deux furent récompensés par des applaudissements enthousiastes.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 328,402 S. 262,240
MAR 9 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Honegger Erupts With Bostonians

The eruptions of nature surrounding Carnegie Hall didn't abate last night during the concert of the Boston Symphony inside the auditorium. Wind and sleet were as obstreperous at 10:30 as they had been at 8 p.m.

But the musical atmosphere changed radically, its [illegible] velocity dramatically lessened after the initial movement of the opening piece, Arthur Honegger's Symphony No. 1. The Allegro Marcato of the symphony flaunted its dissonances audaciously, driving toward a dynamic design conceived by a master hand. Honegger was 38 years old when he completed this work and a major composer.

Honegger Builds Brilliantly

At certain points during the Allegro, the thick tone clusters followed each other rapidly with the clipped precision of quickly changing military formations.

Honegger builds his structure brilliantly, ferociously, inevitably until the highest point of climax is reached, then it dies down suddenly to a thread, nipped off instantly. Conductor Charles Munch, a Honegger expert, galvanized its defiance with the drive of cyclonic cylinder.

The Adagio followed with pungent calm. While the danceable final Presto didn't assume the complexity of the first movement, its high-stepping gallop still took pleasure in the challenge of a cobblestone road.

The introduction of a soulful melody at the end of the Presto was a dramatic surprise. Its mood and tempo were the antithesis of what had preceded.

Szeryng in Schumann Concerto

This lyrical close of the Symphony foreshadowed the prevailing quality of the works which followed: Schumann's Violin Concerto in D Minor, suavely performed by Polish violinist Henryk Szeryng, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 in G Major, inspired by the folk elements of the composer's native Bohemia.

Szeryng's beautiful tone and the patrician elegance of his style made the most of the Concerto's lovely, song-like themes. He didn't always succeed in defining the architecture or the rhythm with full intensity, but in general his conception was a noble one.

The weakest movement of the concerto is the last and is probably the main reason why the Schumann family felt strongly that the Concerto should be kept in the archives and never released for performance. It was the final major work Schumann composed, completed a few months before his mental collapse.

Except for this closing movement, however, the consensus today doesn't agree with the family verdict. Though the composer's direction for the ending section states "Lively but not fast," I believe its effectiveness would be increased by a speedier tempo and more abandon than employed by Szeryng and Munch last night.

Music Tonight...

N. Y. Philharmonic Preview, Leonard Bernstein conducting. Hindemith Concert Music for Strings and Brass Op. 50, Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms, Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe," Schola Cantorum assisting in Stravinsky and Ravel works. Carnegie Hall, 8:30. Program repeated tomorrow at 2:15.

Metropolitan Opera: Puccini's "Turandot," Birgit Nilsson in title role, Franco Corelli as Calaf, Teresa Stratas as Liu for first time at Met, Leopold Stokowski conducting, 8.

Carnegie Hall

Nach 24 Jahren zum ersten Male wieder Violinkonzert Schumanns

In einem seiner Briefe an den Komponisten Carl Friedrich Zelter schrieb Goethe einmal: "Es ist ein edles aber undankbares Geschäft, selten aufgeführte Werke aus der Versenkung zu holen. Wenn etwas selten aufgeführt wird, dann hat das oft auch seinen guten Grund". Nun, in den meisten Fällen ist Goethe's Feststellung natürlich zutreffend. Auch das vorletzte Carnegie Hall-Konzert, das die Bostoner Symphoniker in dieser Saison nach New York brachte, bildete leider nicht die Ausnahme, die die Regel bestätigen würde.

Charles Munch versuchte einmal — und das muß ihm hoch oder, wie Goethe sagen würde, als edel angerechnet werden — an Stelle wohlbekannter und todsicherer Musik, etwas weniger konventionelle Kompositionen zu Gehör zu bringen. Es war kein uneingeschränkter Erfolg. Da war zunächst Schumanns Violinkonzert, das der Meister kurz vor seinem Selbstmordversuch fertiggestellt hatte und das Clara Schumann noch lange nach dem Tode ihres Mannes in einer Schublade verstauben ließ. Sie hielt es nicht für gut genug, um es dem Verleger zu präsentieren. Yehudi Menuhin brachte das Werk 1937 erstmalig — und einmalig — vor das New Yorker Publikum. Munch hatte für seine Aufführung in der Carnegie Hall in der vergangenen Woche den Violinisten Henryk Szeryng verpflichtet — einen hervorragenden Virtuosen, der aus dem d-Moll-Konzert herausholte, was herauszuholen war. Besonders im Anfangssatz zeichnete er sich durch das leidenschaftliche Espressivo und die lyrische Tongebung aus.

Als das moderne Werk seines Programms hatte Charles Munch Honeggers Erste Symphonie gewählt. Die Komposition, die in den Zwanziger Jahren geschrieben wurde, läßt sich mit den späteren Einfällen und dem viel reiferen Stil der jüngeren Musik des Komponisten kaum vergleichen.

Sie ist eine Kombination von Neo-Klassik und Modern-Sein-Wollen und entbehrt vor allem jeglicher Ausdruckskraft.

Am besten gefiel Dvoraks liebliche Vierte Symphonie. Aber auch sie ist eines der schwächeren Werke des tschechischen Meisters und daher auch viel seltener aufgeführt wie, zum Beispiel, seine 'Zweite' (d-Moll) oder seine grandiose "Neue Welt".

Munch, dessen sicheres handwerkliches Können ihm seit langem einen geschätzten Platz im amerikanischen und internationalen Musikleben eingetragen hat, dirigierte mit der ihm eigenen Umsicht. Sein Orchester bemühte sich mit gewohntem Erfolg um Klangintensität und Sauberkeit der Linien. Die Freunde der Bostoner Gäste, dankten allen Beteiligten mit viel Beifall, der aber in erster Linie den Musikern und ihrem Dirigenten galt, nicht den Werken, die sie spielten. P. R.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
MAR 9 1961

Music

Bostonians Play at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

The good news at Carnegie Hall last night was the playing of the Boston symphony and its accomplished violin soloist, Henryk Szeryng. The bad—or should one say sad—new, was the Schuman Violin Concerto.

Efforts by at least two dedicated artists have been made in the past 25 years to establish the posthumous concerto in the repertory. Last night's was the latest and best. But the concerto still won't do.

The story is an old one by now—how Schumann wrote it for the great Joachim just four months before he went mad; how Joachim and Clara Schumann refused to give it to the world.

No Help to Famed.

Composed in 1853, the concerto remained in manuscript till the 1930s, when it was performed and published. It was then clear why Joachim and Clara had withheld it. The concerto was no help to Schumann's fame.

One envisioned the hapless Schumann in those last clouded months of sanity, working feverishly against time, eager to please the great young virtuoso with a new score, secretly aware of the malady gnawing within.

There are great, heart-breaking moments in this concerto, heart-breaking because Schumann makes nothing of them. The concerto constantly promises things that never happen—a least in the end movements.

The slow movement is something else again—as if the lucidity of mind and creation were bright and sustained for the last time. That is beautiful music, poignant in its intimations and tenderly scored.

Wealth of Tone.

My own feeling is the slow movement should be played alone on a program with Ravel's "Tzigane" or Chausson's "Poeme." That would rebound to Schumann's credit and the public's benefit.

Mr. Szerying, in his brief American career, was never such an artist as he was last night—applying a wealth of tone and feeling and technic to what was largely a lost cause, and achieving, thereby an added nobility.

Mr. Munch opened the program with Honegger's first symphony, a clamorous relic of the 20s and closed it with an ultra-brilliant reading of Dvorak's Fourth Symphony. Like the soloist, he was in great form last night.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,557 S. 1,033,048

MAR 5 1961

172

Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday evening in annual concert for the Philadelphia Forum.

Peak week in music

Academy offers eight top-flight events; Stokowski conducts 'Gurrelieder'

By SAMUEL L. SINGER

This is the most high-powered week of the 1960-61 music season, with eight events at the Academy of Music, including three performances of Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder," conducted by Leopold Stokowski with the Philadelphia Orchestra and singers; two grand operas, the annual visit of the Boston Symphony and a recital by Birgit Nilsson.

"Gurrelieder" will be given Monday and Saturday evenings and Friday afternoon. Miss Nilsson will sing Tuesday. "Madame Butterfly" will be staged Wednesday by the Philadelphia Lyric Opera Co., starring Renata Tebaldi. Charles Munch conducts the Bostonians Thursday, and the Philadelphia Grand Opera Co. presents "Carmen" Friday night.

The eighth event is a children's concert by the Orchestra Saturday morning.

BOSTON SYMPHONY BILL

Thursday the Boston Symphony gives its 28th annual concert on the Philadelphia Forum series, with Munch conducting. The program will open with Milhaud's "Creation of the World" and close with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

The soloist will be Joseph Silverstein in Prokifieff's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Silverstein, 28, a member of the orchestra's first violin section, last October won the lucrative Naumburg Award of $5000, which carried with it appearances with major orchestras, subsidized foreign and American concert tours, recording and managerial contracts.

Silverstein's several distinguished teachers have included Efrem Zimbalist and Veda Reynolds at the Curtis Institute here. In 1959 he placed third in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium international competition that was won by Jaime Laredo, Curtis student from Bolivia.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D: 236,674 SAT. 171,187

MAR 4 1961

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its annual Philadelphia concert Thursday evening at the Academy of Music.

PHILALADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
D. 695,830 S. 691,530

MAR 5 1961

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

Munch Here With Boston Symphony

INSTRUMENTAL music in Philadelphia will receive added impetus this week from an appearance by Charles Munch and his Boston Symphony on Thursday evening and by the fourth Philadelphia Orchestra Children's Concert on Saturday morning.

The concerts are all at the Academy of Music.

Dr. Munch, a great favorite with Philadelphia audiences, is appearing here under the auspices of the Philadelphia Forum. The French maestro will direct his distinguished orchestra, presenting a soloist new to this city, the young violinist, Joseph Silverstein.

This 28-year-old winner of the Naumburg Foundation competition will be heard as the soloist in Prokofieff's fascinating Violin Concerto No. 2, one of the most attractive of contemporary scores.

Other works scheduled by the Boston conductor are Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor, one of the works that rates top ranking when it comes to popularity, and—of more esoteric appeal—Darius Milhaud's, "Le Creation du Monde."

Dr. Munch is a native of Strassburg, a city famous for its sublime cathedral and its nesting storks. He came to the Boston Symphony in the autumn of 1949, winning instant approval from the sophisticated followers of the great orchestra. Before that time he had been one of France's most prominent conductors, involved with the direction of four great Paris orchestras. —M. de S.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,557 S. 1,033,048

MAR 10 1961

At the Academy

Boston Symphony Excellent in Concert

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its 28th annual concert in the series of the Philadelphia Forum (a division of the Philadelphia Inquirer Charities Inc.) in the Academy of Music on Thursday night. Charles Munch conducted and a capacity audience was on hand.

The distinguished Boston maestro is French by birth and the program was devoted to music by Gallic composers, except for the Prokofieff Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

ZIMBALIST STUDENT

Young Silverstein, a member of the orchestra's first fiddle section, was a former student at the Curtis Institute of Music, a pupil of Veda Reynolds and Efrem Zimbalist. But, though a winner of a number of recent national awards, Silverstein had not previously appeared in this city.

It proved to be an auspicious debut. The Prokofieff Second Concerto, which dates from 1935, is a relatively warm and lyric work compared to the wit, chic and glitter of the composer's earlier music.

The slow movement brings out the solo instrument in its most expressive voice and Silverstein's dealings with it were gratifying indeed. His tone, without being unduly large, is broad, elastic and carries well. It was a most expressive performance in its cantabile phases and, in the Finale, a flashing Rondo, the young artist brought off the appropriate pyrotechnics with brilliant elan. The audience was highly appreciative.

'CREATION OF WORLD'

The evening opened with what was probably the first major performance here of Darius Milhaud's "The Creation of the World," a stimulating and delightful novelty. "La Creation du monde" was originally the score for a ballet first danced in Paris in 1923. Milhaud wrote it shortly after his return from a visit to this country and it bears the lively imprint of the jazz which the French "modernist" heard with fascination in his trips to Harlem and elsewhere.

The composer has said that his music is meant to represent the creation of the world as seen through primitive eyes. And while jazz aficionados might not agree with the precise primitive source of M. Milhaud's inspiration, it makes liberal use of the jazz idiom.

MUNCH RESPECTFUL

There are moods of deepest indigo; there is compulsive syncopation and other African stigmata, including a blues theme introduced plaintively on the oboe. But this is, of course, no epic picture of the dawn of creation seen or heard through anyone's eyes or ears.

Its roots may be primitive, but its flowering is sophisticated as witness, among other things a lively fugue on jazz themes. Mr. Munch's approach to the score had imagination and vitality but he respected the fundamental naivete of the music, and properly refrained from being too orgiastic.

The evening ended with a fine account of that noble classic of French 19th century Romanticism, Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562

MAR 13 1961

Boston Matinee

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony introduced the violinist, Joseph Silverstein, a member of the orchestra, in his first major Carnegie Hall appearance last Saturday.

Playing Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, he qualified as a most proficient fiddler with a fine-spun quality of tone and almost flawless technical execution. How musically involved he was with the performance did not communicate itself forcibly.

Mr. Munch revived Milhaud's "The Creation of the World," reminding listeners of its strategic position before Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" was written.

He concluded with the Franck Symphony, the performance which bore the special imprint of the conductor's personality.

PHILADELPHIA, PA
BULLETIN
D. 695,830 S. 691,53

MAR 10 196

Boston Sy... Is Splend...

By MA...

It is always a ple... come the Boston ... Philadelphia, ... such an occasion ... the Philadelphia ... Academy of M...

A large, but ... capacity crowd ... Charles Munch ... ians in a prog... compositions by D... Serge Prokofi... Franck. There ... ist, violinist Joseph ... a regular member ... first violin section.

Young Mr. Silver... the Prokofieff Violin ... No. 2 with an ... poetic contents. ... large, nor overly rich ... but he is a musici... fingertips and the ... Concerto fares best ... tive bowing and phra...

Dr. Munch ope... gram with Milhaud ... tion du Monde," musi... let composed in 1923. ... haud was attracted b... oms, which are often ... in the composition ... rhythms.

The Boston ... his program wit... and forceful ... Franck's D Mi... Hearing this pie... mind during the ... heard Stokowski's ... Schoenberg's "Gu... eled as a museum ... product of an era ... to an end. Wha... these Milhaud and ... positions, but perh... that there is ... about there being ... more than such an ... should cast a stigma o... opera.

To get back ... unch's ...

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH EXPONENT
W. 44,137
MAR 17 1961

123

MUSIC

MONROE LEVIN

The Boston Symphony

It must have been fully twenty years ago that we last went to the Academy to hear the Boston Symphony. Many more recent events lie obscure in the memory, but we can still see Koussevitzky conducting what was then Shostakovich's latest symphony, the Sixth.

THE VEINS in his temple swelled as the brass blared toward the last page, and with the final chord a group of students in the pit leaped, cheering, to their feet.

No doubt the Philadelphia Forum has had the "BSO" back every one of the twenty years since then, but times have changed. Students don't leap up, cheering, in the pit any more, in fact the Forum has enough trouble filling the hall itself.

Yet the Boston Symphony still gives us music worth cheering about. Under its French conductor, Charles Munch, it came to town last week with a pair of French scores—the Franck Symphony and Darius Milhaud's "Creation of the World" — and a Violin Concerto by a long-time guest of France, Serge Prokofiev.

EVERYTHING THAT happened at this concert reflected on the superb skill of a virtuoso ensemble. Cesar Franck's Symphony always shows off an orchestra's ability to sound like an organ, which is no small ensemble feat, but we were particularly entranced by the sound of the "Boston" in the contemporary works.

Milhaud's cosmic view of jazz, vintage 1923, was given a performance in which not only the control and technical wizardry of a jazz group was present but its loose, almost sleepy calm as well. (The program notes didn't say, but when Milhaud visited Harlem in 1922 it was probably long past bedtime.) Of the many brilliantly-played solo passages, Roger Voison's trumpet jutted out especially like a shaft of silver, or should we say blue, light.

"The Creation of the World," a valued 20th-century score, has lost its shock value for most people. Forum audiences still display an inexhaustible variety, however; behind us a voice greeted the close of the piece with the comment "Very modern, and very weird!"

PROKOFIEV'S Second Violin Concerto on the other hand drew forth unqualified enthusiasm. Less often played than the First, it is a lovely work with an easy, amiable relationship between solo instrument and orchestra. This relationship was underscored by the fact that the excellent soloist, Joseph Silverstein, sits regularly among the first violins. His tone, very civilized and clear, was just right for this conberto, as one imagines it would be for a lot of others by Vivaldi, Bach and Mozart.

To realize that a talent like Joseph Silverstein's is mixed into the Boston Symphony sound emphasizes what everyone knows, that Mr. Munch leads a unique orchestra.

Comparisons with our own Philadelphia are as useless as they are inevitable. We couldn't help thinking of a concert we heard two weeks ago, when the guest conductor was Eugene Ormandy's capable assistant, William Smith. Mr. Smith's precision as a time-beater is in direct contrast to the florid movements of a Charles Munch, and yet what strikes us most about both orchestras is their responsiveness to what lies beneath the beat — the conductor's essential musical conception.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
D. 695 830 S. 691.530
MAR 10 1961

Boston Symphony Concert Is Splendidly Presented

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

It is always a pleasure to welcome the Boston Symphony to Philadelphia; last night was such an occasion, sponsored by the Philadelphia Forum at the Academy of Music.

A large, but by no means capacity crowd greeted dynamic Charles Munch and his Bostonians in a program that listed compositions by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofieff and Cesar Franck. There was also a soloist, violinist Joseph Silverstein, a regular member of Boston's first violin section.

Young Mr. Silverstein played the Prokofieff Violin Concerto No. 2 with an awareness of its poetic contents. His tone is not large, nor overly rich in quality, but he is a musician to his fingertips and the Prokofieff Concerto fares best under sensitive bowing and phrasing.

Dr. Munch opened his program with Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde," music for a ballet composed in 1923, when Milhaud was attracted by jazz idioms, which are often apparent in the composition's catchy rhythms.

The Boston conductor ended his program with a very strong and forceful performance of Franck's D Minor Symphony. Hearing this piece brought to mind during the week one has heard Stokowski's revival of Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder" labeled as a museum piece and the product of an era that has come to an end. What indeed are these Milhaud and Franck compositions but period pieces? Not that there is anything wrong about there being such, any more than such an observation should cast a stigma on a Bellini opera.

To get back to our job, Dr. Munch's conducting of the Franck symphony brought it sharply to life, gave it a living profile, even though some sections came perilously close to being overblown. The Boston players performed with a preciseness of attack that was superb.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 11,909

MAR 11 1961

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15,719

MAR 11 1961

174

MUSIC - ART - DRAMA

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, on Friday evening, March 10, at 8:30 p.m.

The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Caesar Franck.

As his soloist for this concert, Dr. Munch will introduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section, who has gained recognition for himself by his impressive showings in two important competitions. Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last fall.

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Munch will conduct the familiar and beloved staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

Silverstein, still in his twenties, began studies at an early age, his father, Bernard Silverstein, being his first teacher. For nine years, father and son worked together, training for the time when young Joseph could "graduate" to more famous instructors.

In later years, he studied with Josef Gingold, Efrem Zimbalist and Mischa Mischakoff and attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, where only the most gifted students are accepted on scholarship. He has already appeared as soloist with the orchestras of Detroit, Houston, Denver and Boston. He plays a Guadagnini violin.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Charles Munch conducting now are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, and may be purchased at the box-office or by mail order. Check or money order may be made payable to The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 17, and all mail orders must enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of tickets.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562

MAR 5 1961

Boston Symphony At Academy Friday

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening.

The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

As his soloist for this concert, Dr. Munch will introduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section, who has gained recognition by his impressive showings in two important competitions. Mr. Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last Fall.

START OF SHOW

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Mr. Munch will conduct the familiar and beloved staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

Mr. Silverstein, still in his twenties, began studies at an early age, his father, Bernard Silverstein, being his first teacher. For nine years, father and son worked together, training for the time when young Joseph could "graduate" to more famous instructors.

In later years, he studied with Josef Gingold, Efrem Zimbalist and Mischa Mischakoff and attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, where only the most gifted students are accepted on scholarship. He has already appeared as soloist with the orchestras of Detroit, Houston, Denver and Boston. He plays a Guadagnini violin.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Charles Munch conducting now are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, and may be purchased at the box-office or by mail order.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917

MAR 6 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

Boston Symphony to Perform Once-Condemned Work of Franck

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Artistic criticism is not what it used to be. Who, nowadays, is capable of describing a piece of music as an "affirmation of incompetence pushed to dogmatic lengths"?

That is what Gounod is supposed to have said of Cesar Auguste Franck's Symphony in D Minor, to be presented by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony at the Academy of Music Friday.

Franck's music did not always earn such condemnation. At times it was just ignored.

"All true creators," a friend of his explained, "must . . . of necessity be misunderstood by their contemporaries." That certainly describes Franck. Except for a small but devoted group of disciples, he was extravagantly unappreciated.

* * *

Then came his first unqualified public success. It was a performance April 19, 1890, of his String Quartet. "There, you see," Franck told friends, "the public is beginning to understand."

He was 69.

The Symphony in D Minor was first presented in 1889. Ten years later, it was played in Boston. But it remained controversial until well into this century. Today that "Franckian struggle from doubt to certainty" is widely acknowledged as a masterpiece.

Dr. Munch's program also will present Joseph Silverstein, a member of the orchestra's first violin section, as soloist in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Mr. Silverstein, still in his 20s, was a prizewinner in the Queen Elizabeth competition in Brussels two years ago and won the Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last fall. Darius Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde" ballet score will open the concert.

* * *

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879

MAR 6 1961

Munch at Academy Friday

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at an 8:30 P. M. concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn. The program will include works by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

Soloist will be Joseph Silverstein, member of the Boston Symphony's first violin section and winner of the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959 and of last fall's Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award.

Silverstein will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Op. 63.

The Milhaud score for the ballet "La Creation du Monde" and Franck's Symphony in D Minor will be presented.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

APR 1961

Boston Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, winner of the 1960 Walter W. Naumberg Foundation Award and also a member of the first violin section of the Boston Symphony, was soloist in Prokofiev's Second Violin Concert, when the orchestra played in Carnegie Hall, March 11. This was Mr. Silverstein's first major appearance as soloist with orchestra in New York. He is a fine violinist, with a fluent technique and an unassuming style. His handling of the concerto was in good taste, not brilliant but very musical. The program opened with Milhaud's "La Creation du monde," written in 1923 with a strong jazz influence. Surely, Gershwin must have been influenced by this when he wrote his symphonic works. The program closed with a beautiful performance of Franck's Symphony in D minor. Charles Munch was in excellent form throughout the afternoon.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D: 847,979 S: 1,275,193

MAR 8 1961

Munch Back At Academy On Friday

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., on Friday evening, at 8:30 pu. m. The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

AS HIS soloist for this concert, Munch wil lintroduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section.

Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last Fall.

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Munch will conduct the familiar staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879

MAR 6 1961

Brooklyn Music

Kenneth Amaaa, young American pianist who has performed with the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be heard in a solo recital next Sunday, in the music hall of the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Charles Munch, conductor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented in a concert in the main auditorium, Friday night.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
M: 11,909
MAR 11 1961

MUSIC - ART - DRAMA

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, on Friday evening, March 10, at 8:30 p.m.

The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Caesar Franck.

As his soloist for this concert, Dr. Munch will introduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section, who has gained recognition for himself by his impressive showings in two important competitions. Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last fall.

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Munch will conduct the familiar and beloved staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

Silverstein, still in his twenties, began studies at an early age, his father, Bernard Silverstein, being his first teacher. For nine years, father and son worked together, training for the time when young Joseph could "graduate" to more famous instructors.

In later years, he studied with Josef Gingold, Efrem Zimbalist and Mischa Mischakoff and attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, where only the most gifted students are accepted on scholarship. He has already appeared as soloist with the orchestras of Detroit, Houston, Denver and Boston. He plays a Guadagnini violin.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Charles Munch conducting now are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, and may be purchased at the box-office or by mail order. Check or money order may be made payable to The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 17, and all mail orders must enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of tickets.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 571,705 S. 778,562
MAR 5 1961

Boston Symphony At Academy Friday

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening.

The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

As his soloist for this concert, Dr. Munch will introduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section, who has gained recognition by his impressive showings in two important competitions. Mr. Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last Fall.

START OF SHOW

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Mr. Munch will conduct the familiar and beloved staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

Mr. Silverstein, still in his twenties, began studies at an early age, his father, Bernard Silverstein, being his first teacher. For nine years, father and son worked together, training for the time when young Joseph could "graduate" to more famous instructors.

In later years, he studied with Josef Gingold, Efrem Zimbalist and Mischa Mischakoff and attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, where only the most gifted students are accepted on scholarship. He has already appeared as soloist with the orchestras of Detroit, Houston, Denver and Boston. He plays a Guadagnini violin.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert with Charles Munch conducting now are on sale at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, and may be purchased at the box-office or by mail order.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,719
MAR 11 1961

124

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
MAR 6 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

Boston Symphony to Perform Once-Condemned Work of Franck

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Artistic criticism is not what it used to be. Who, nowadays, is capable of describing a piece of music as an "affirmation of incompetence pushed to dogmatic lengths"?

That is what Gounod is supposed to have said of Cesar Auguste Franck's Symphony in D Minor, to be presented by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony at the Academy of Music Friday.

Franck's music did not always earn such condemnation. At times it was just ignored.

"All true creators," a friend of his explained, "must . . . of necessity be misunderstood by their contemporaries." That certainly describes Franck. Except for a small but devoted group of disciples, he was extravagantly unappreciated.

Then came his first unqualified public success. It was a performance April 19, 1890, of his String Quartet. "There, you see," Franck told friends, "the public is beginning to understand."

He was 69.

The Symphony in D Minor was first presented in 1889. Ten years later, it was played in Boston. But it remained controversial until well into this century. Today that "Franckian struggle from doubt to certainty" is widely acknowledged as a masterpiece.

Dr. Munch's program also will present Joseph Silverstein, a member of the orchestra's first violin section, as soloist in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Mr. Silverstein, still in his 20s, was a prizewinner in the Queen Elizabeth competition in Brussels two years ago and won the Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last fall. Darius Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde" ballet score will open the concert.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879
MAR 6 1961

Munch at Academy Friday

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at an 8:30 P. M. concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn. The program will include works by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

Soloist will be Joseph Silverstein, member of the Boston Symphony's first violin section and winner of the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959 and of last fall's Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award.

Silverstein will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Op. 63.

The Milhaud score for the ballet "La Creation du Monde" and Franck's Symphony in D Minor will be presented.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1961

Boston Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, winner of the 1960 Walter W. Naumberg Foundation Award and also a member of the first violin section of the Boston Symphony, was soloist in Prokofiev's Second Violin Concert, when the orchestra played in Carnegie Hall, March 11. This was Mr. Silverstein's first major appearance as soloist with orchestra in New York. He is a fine violinist, with a fluent technique and an unassuming style. His handling of the concerto was in good taste, not brilliant but very musical. The program opened with Milhaud's "La Creation du monde," written in 1923 with a strong jazz influence. Surely, Gershwin must have been influenced by this when he wrote his symphonic works. The program closed with a beautiful performance of Franck's Symphony in D minor. Charles Munch was in excellent form throughout the afternoon.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D: 847,979 S: 1,275,193
MAR 8 1961

Munch Back At Academy On Friday

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., on Friday evening, at 8:30 pu, m. The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vacation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

AS HIS soloist for this concert, Munch wil lintroduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section.

Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed this achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last Fall.

The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Munch will conduct the familiar staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879
MAR 6 1961

Brooklyn Music

Kenneth Amaee, young American pianist who has performed with the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be heard in a solo recital next Sunday, in the music hall of the Brooklyn Academy of Music. . . Charles Munch, conductor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented in a concert in the main auditorium, Friday night.

NEW YORK,
WORLD-TELE
D. 453,331
M

Music

Boston
Perfo
Milha

By LOUIS
It may have prise to man
scribers of Bo
in Carnegie H
Milhaud's "Th World" had n
God and every jazz.
That lively roaring 20s c day to haunt tonians and t patrons with dor and strid
Milhaud tour hot-spots in 19
the same aga
"The effect me was so ov
I could not te he wrote later modernist th pain and prot
in the darke
Negro soul.
Offbe
To Milhaud
lem, moreove
yet been di snobs and e ballet score h
17 solo inst
heard in the employing classical con
Charles M brilliant per offbeat score onstration t best jazz play days at the c ca's major s tras.
A controll reading o minor violin the fine tutor ing qualities Silberstein, w
the orchestra
member.
After Munch reg for a mighty Franck's D a little slow
lessly loud chords pref o, but a t rience on t
Tabaldi
Those w baldi—and mind and will find ing readi

MUSICAL A
NEW YORK,
MONTHLY - C
MAY

Silverstein
With Bosto

Carnegie Hall, N
phony Orchestra
Joseph Silverstein
tion du Monde
No. 2 in G mino
in D minor.

It was a de again at Milha of the Creatio
how sad and the few jazz-
1920s that hav
Munch and the reading and b
bittersweet fee
Joseph Silv
Prokofieff G m a member of tion. In 1959
International
Brussels, the United States
1960 won th
He plays li tone, perfect est, most po
ginable. Th

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D 453,331 SAT. 174,917
MAR 13 1961

Music

Bostonians Perform Milhaud

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

It may have come as a surprise to many matinee subscribers of Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall Saturday that Milhaud's "The Creation of the World" had nothing to do with God and everything to do with jazz.

That lively ghost of the roaring 20s came back Saturday to haunt the proper Bostonians and their New York patrons with its raucous candor and strident syncopation. Milhaud toured the Harlem hot-spots in 1922 and was never the same again.

"The effect of the music on me was so overwhelming that I could not tear myself away," he wrote later. To the French modernist this was music of pain and protest, with its roots in the darkest crevices of the Negro soul.

Offbeat Score.

To Milhaud, this was a Harlem, moreover, that "had not yet been discovered by the snobs and esthetes." In his ballet score he used the same 17 solo instruments he had heard in the uptown cabarets, employing jazz freely in a classical context.

Charles Munch conducted a brilliant performance of the offbeat score—one more demonstration that some of our best jazz playing is heard these days at the concerts of America's major symphony orchestras.

A controlled and polished reading of Prokofieff's G minor violin Concerto revealed the fine tutoring and prize-winning qualities of young Joseph Silberstein, who in 1955, joined the orchestra as its youngest member.

After intermission Mr. Munch regrouped his forces for a mighty reading of Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony, a little slow in places and needlessly loud in the pizzicato chords prefacing the Allegretto, but a truly exciting experience on the whole.

Tebaldi in Book Form.

Those who like Renata Tebaldi—and who in his right mind and hearing doesn't?—will find gallant and refreshing reading in Victor Seroff's biography of her (Appleton-Century-Crofts, $4.

Having made no bones about my own feelings for this great singer and artist, I make none about my lively absorption in every fact, however personal and trivial, Mr. Seroff has unearthed about her since her birth in Pesaro in 1922.

The book is both biography and autobiography—largely an acount of her career but interlarded with charming tete-a-tetes between a persistent portraitist and the gracious lady who sat—and talked—for him.

"When I cannot sing, I don't feel alive." This from a woman who triumphed over polio, knew Toscanini, loved an Italian partisan, lived in a broken home, suffered heartbreak, scrapped with Maria Callas, and met Victor Seroff. In its chatty, well-bred way, the book tells plenty.

1961. Times 3/13/61

SILVERSTEIN HERE AS VIOLIN SOLOIST

Naumburg Award Winner Plays Prokofieff Concerto With Boston Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, 28-year-old violinist of the Boston Symphony, won the Naumburg Award last October. The award is valued at $25,000 because it includes New York appearances, recording and management contracts, American and foreign tours, in addition to cash.

Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, Mr. Silverstein appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony in his first major orchestral appearance in New York.

This honor was in addition to everything listed in the Naumburg package.

Mr. Silverstein was heard with his colleagues in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2. The violin tone was silkily beautiful. Physical effort seemed absent. Every note was in place, and there was no question as to the rightness of what he did musically.

Playing with almost careless ease—earned no doubt through years of hard work—the violinist did not indicate the possession of a striking temperament. Since he gave a faultless performance, barring an excessive vibrato at the beginning of the concerto, it is ungrateful perhaps to want more. Smooth, well-oiled efficiency, though, is not enough.

Charles Munch, leading the Boston Symphony, gave Mr. Silverstein superbly coordinated orchestral support. Before the concerto, Mr. Munch conducted a curious, fascinating performance of Milhaud's "The Creation of the World."

This score, written for a ballet in Paris in 1923, was influenced by the composer's experiences in New York the previous year, when he had first heard true American jazz. It remains one of the best examples of the transmutation of the jazz style into symphonic terms.

Using a reduced orchestra, Mr. Munch approached the music with a kind of Back Bay gentility that possibly gave it its proper flavor. The jazz elements, not stressed, showed up as the abstractions they are, muted and piquantly alien.

In the other work in the program, César Franck's Symphony, Mr. Munch and his orchestra were at their best. This timeworn composition profited from the soft, transparent glitter that marks the Bostonians' tone.

Mr. Munch kept the tempos in a constant state of flux, driving the work in its torpid moments, letting the lyric passages flow gently or soaringly. He avoided an excess of soulfulness and the pseudo-profundity in interpretation that the score invites.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

Tribune 3/13/61

Silverstein Is Violin Soloist With the Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

Joseph Silverstein, the violinist who won the Naumburg competition for strings last fall, appeared as soloist with his fellow-members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in that noted organization's fourth Carnegie Hall matinee of the season Saturday playing Serge Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in G minor. The diversified program conducted by Charles Munch opened with Darius Milhaud's ballet score, "La Creation du Monde," and closed with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tone Is Satisfying

With thorough technical skill, Mr. Silverstein also showed admirable musicianship, with well wrought phrasing and continuity of musical line. His tone, satisfying while not large in volume, was ingratiating in its clear and essentially lyric quality, while this lyricism avoided a sating sweetness and reflected the work's moods and timbres, ranging from melodic consonance to discreetly employed pungency.

In the boldly assertive measures of the finale the twenty-eight-year-old violinist's interpretation needed a rather greater degree of aggressiveness, but his performance of the work as a whole gave an auspicious sense of taste and expressive understanding and a command of fine dynamic shading and subtleties of musical hue; the andante was set forth with persuasive imagination. The orchestral share of the concerto was well proportioned and expressively sympathetic.

"La Creation du Monde," composed after Milhaud had returned to France after visiting this country in 1922, is probably one of the earliest foreign works to be influenced by jazz, and this element is prominent in many parts of the score in ideas, timbres and especially in persistent rhythms; at times there are foretastes of Gershwin's symphonic contributions. The work also offers some measures of a Latin-American savor along with others which seem more French or cosmopolitan, but the result is not a conglomeration, but rather an expert blending of atmospheres in this engaging score. The performance generally did full justice to its spirit, color and rhythmic momentum, even if it inclined to a slight excess of discretion in certain moments.

The playing of the Franck symphony included some opaquely presented or slightly overblown passages, but it had a widespread emotional span and communicative conviction along with high color under a conductor who evidently loves and understands this music.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
MAR 19 1961

Critics' Views Of Recent Music

Victoria de los Angeles, singing last Sunday in Carnegie Hall, showed her ability to make poetry and create mood with single tones. . . . Nicolai Gedda proved to be a real master of his art in his song recital at Hunter College. . . . Aksel Schiotz gave his hearers an unusually rewarding artistic experience when he sang Schubert's "Winterreise" cycle at Town Hall. . . . In her first Metropolitan appearance as Amneris in Tuesday's "Aida," Rosalind Elias' voice was right in timbre and volume for the role, but she did not realize its character. . . . Joseph Silverstein, who played Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 with his fellow members of the Boston Symphony, showed thorough technical skill and admirable musicianship.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 1961

Silverstein Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, March 11, 2:30.—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Joseph Silverstein, violinist. MILHAUD: La Création du Monde. PROKOFIEFF: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63. FRANCK: Symphony in D minor.

It was a delight to be present once again at Milhaud's own personal version of the Creation. This funny, yet somehow sad and touching piece is one of the few jazz-oriented scores from the 1920s that have kept their validity. Mr. Munch and the orchestra gave it a lively reading and brought to the fore all its bittersweet feeling.

Joseph Silverstein, soloist in the Prokofieff G minor Violin Concerto, is a member of the orchestra's violin section. In 1959 he won third prize in the International Music Competition at Brussels, the only musician from the United States to reach the finals, and in 1960 won the Naumburg Award.

He plays like a dream, with beautiful tone, perfect intonation, and the tightest, most poignant use of vibrato imaginable. The considerable technical difficulties of the Prokofieff at no time hindered Mr. Silverstein's music-making; he came through them as clean as paint. The young violinist deserves more than applause.

Joseph Silverstein

Mr. Munch gave his all to the Franck Symphony, as did the orchestra. It was a stirring performance, and even managed to inject a feeling of freshness into this overworked piece. The strings sounded marvelous, while the winds kept their typical French flavor, a sound quite annoying at times.

—Michael Brozen

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
MAR 13 1961

Music

Bostonians Perform Milhaud

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

It may have come as a surprise to many matinee subscribers of Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall Saturday that Milhaud's "The Creation of the World" had nothing to do with God and everything to do with jazz.

That lively ghost of the roaring 20s came back Saturday to haunt the proper Bostonians and their New York patrons with its raucous candor and strident syncopation. Milhaud toured the Harlem hot-spots in 1922 and was never the same again.

"The effect of the music on me was so overwhelming that I could not tear myself away," he wrote later. To the French modernist this was music of pain and protest, with its roots in the darkest crevices of the Negro soul.

Offbeat Score.

To Milhaud, this was a Harlem, moreover, that "had not yet been discovered by the snobs and esthetes." In his ballet score he used the same 17 solo instruments he had heard in the uptown cabarets, employing jazz freely in a classical context.

Charles Munch conducted a brilliant performance of the offbeat score—one more demonstration that some of our best jazz playing is heard these days at the concerts of America's major symphony orchestras.

A controlled and polished reading of Prokofieff's G minor violin Concerto revealed the fine tutoring and prize-winning qualities of young Joseph Silberstein, who in 1955, joined the orchestra as its youngest member.

After intermission Mr. Munch regrouped his forces for a mighty reading of Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony, a little slow in places and needlessly loud in the pizzicato chords prefacing the Allegretto, but a truly exciting experience on the whole.

Tebaldi in Book Form.

Those who like Renata Tebaldi—and who in his right mind and hearing doesn't?—will find gallant and refreshing reading in Victor Seroff's biography of her (Appleton-Century-Crofts, $4.

Having made no bones about my own feelings for this great singer and artist, I make none about my lively absorption in every fact, however personal and trivial, Mr. Seroff has unearthed about her since her birth in Pesaro in 1922.

The book is both biography and autobiography—largely an account of her career but interlarded with charming tete-a-tetes between a persistent portraitist and the gracious lady who sat—and talked—for him.

"When I cannot sing, I don't feel alive." This from a woman who triumphed over polio, knew Toscanini, loved an Italian partisan, lived in a broken home, suffered heartbreak, scrapped with Maria Callas, and met Victor Seroff. In its chatty, well-bred way, the book tells plenty.

1961. Times 3/13/61

SILVERSTEIN HERE AS VIOLIN SOLOIST

Naumburg Award Winner Plays Prokofieff Concerto With Boston Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, 28-year-old violinist of the Boston Symphony, won the Naumburg Award last October. The award is valued at $25,000 because it includes New York appearances, recording and management contracts, American and foreign tours, in addition to cash.

Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, Mr. Silverstein appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony in his first major orchestral appearance in New York.

This honor was in addition to everything listed in the Naumburg package.

Mr. Silverstein was heard with his colleagues in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2. The violin tone was silkily beautiful. Physical effort seemed absent. Every note was in place, and there was no question as to the rightness of what he did musically.

Playing with almost careless ease—earned no doubt through years of hard work—the violinist did not indicate the possession of a striking temperament. Since he gave a faultless performance, barring an excessive vibrato at the beginning of the concerto, it is ungrateful perhaps to want more. Smooth well-oiled efficiency, though, is not enough.

Charles Munch, leading the Boston Symphony, gave Mr. Silverstein superbly coordinated orchestral support. Before the concerto, Mr. Munch conducted a curious, fascinating performance of Milhaud's "The Creation of the World."

This score, written for a ballet in Paris in 1923, was influenced by the composer's experiences in New York the previous year, when he had first heard true American jazz. It remains one of the best examples of the transmutation of the jazz style into symphonic terms.

Using a reduced orchestra, Mr. Munch approached the music with a kind of Back Bay gentility that possibly gave it its proper flavor. The jazz elements, not stressed, showed up as the abstractions they are, muted and piquantly alien.

In the other work in the program, César Franck's Symphony, Mr. Munch and his orchestra were at their best. This timeworn composition profited from the soft, transparent glitter that marks the Bostonians' tone.

Mr. Munch kept the tempos in a constant state of flux, driving the work in its torpid moments, letting the lyric passages flow gently or soaringly. He avoided an excess of soulfulness and the pseudo-profundity in interpretation that the score invites.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

Times 3/13/61

Silverstein Is Violin Soloist With the Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

Joseph Silverstein, the violinist who won the Naumburg competition for strings last fall, appeared as soloist with his fellow-members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in that noted organization's fourth Carnegie Hall matinee of the season Saturday playing Serge Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in G minor. The diversified program conducted by Charles Munch opened with Darius Milhaud's ballet score, "La Creation du Monde," and closed with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tone Is Satisfying

With thorough technical skill, Mr. Silverstein also showed admirable musicianship, with well wrought phrasing and continuity of musical line. His tone, satisfying while not large in volume, was ingratiating in its clear and essentially lyric quality, while this lyricism avoided a sating sweetness and reflected the work's moods and timbres, ranging from melodic consonance to discreetly employed pungency.

In the boldly assertive measures of the finale the twenty-eight-year-old violinist's interpretation needed a rather greater degree of aggressiveness, but his performance of the work as a whole gave an auspicious sense of taste and expressive understanding and a command of fine dynamic shading and subtleties of musical hue; the andante was set forth with persuasive imagination. The orchestral share of the concerto was well proportioned and expressively sympathetic.

"La Creation du Monde," composed after Milhaud had returned to France after visiting this country in 1922, is probably one of the earliest foreign works to be influenced by jazz, and this element is prominent in many parts of the score in ideas, timbres and especially in persistent rhythms; at times there are foretastes of Gershwin's symphonic contributions. The work also offers some measures of a Latin-American savor along with others which seem more French or cosmopolitan, but the result is not a conglomeration, but rather an expert blending of atmospheres in this engaging score. The performance generally did full justice to its spirit, color and rhythmic momentum, even if it inclined to a slight excess of discretion in certain moments.

The playing of the Franck symphony included some opaquely presented or slightly overblown passages, but it had a widespread emotional span and communicative conviction along with high color under a conductor who evidently loves and understands this music.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
MAR 19 1961

Critics' Views Of Recent Music

Victoria de los Angeles, singing last Sunday in Carnegie Hall, showed her ability to make poetry and create mood with single tones. . . . Nicolai Gedda proved to be a real master of his art in his song recital at Hunter College. . . . Aksel Schiotz gave his hearers an unusually rewarding artistic experience when he sang Schubert's "Winterreise" cycle at Town Hall. . . . In her first Metropolitan appearance as Amneris in Tuesday's "Aida," Rosalind Elias' voice was right in timbre and volume for the role, but she did not realize its character. . . . Joseph Silverstein, who played Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2 with his fellow members of the Boston Symphony, showed through technical skill and admirable musicianship . . .

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 1961

Silverstein Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, March 11, 2:30: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. Joseph Silverstein, violinist. MILHAUD: La Création du Monde. PROKOFIEFF: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63. FRANCK: Symphony in D minor.

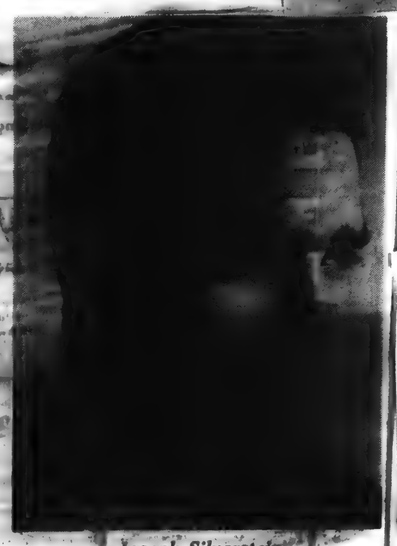
It was a delight to be present once again at Milhaud's own personal version of the Creation. This funny, yet somehow sad and touching piece is one of the few jazz-oriented scores from the 1920s that have kept their validity. Mr. Munch and the orchestra gave it a lively reading and brought to the fore all its bittersweet feeling.

Joseph Silverstein, soloist in the Prokofieff G minor Violin Concerto, is a member of the orchestra's violin section. In 1959 he won third prize in the International Music Competition at Brussels, the only musician from the United States to reach the finals, and in 1960 won the Naumburg Award.

He plays like a dream, with beautiful tone, perfect intonation, and the tightest, most poignant use of vibrato imaginable. The considerable technical difficulties of the Prokofieff at no time hindered Mr. Silverstein's music-making; he came through them as clean as paint. The young violinist deserves more than applause.

Mr. Munch gave his all to the Franck Symphony, as did the orchestra. It was a stirring performance, and even managed to inject a feeling of freshness into this overworked piece. The strings sounded marvelous, while the winds kept their typical French flavor, a sound quite annoying at times.

—Michael Brozen



Joseph Silverstein

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121

MAR 12 1961

Silverstein Is Violin Soloist With the Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

Joseph Silverstein, the violinist who won the Naumburg competition for strings last fall, appeared as soloist with his fellow-members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in that noted organization's fourth Carnegie Hall matinee of the season yesterday, playing Serge Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in G minor. The diversified program conducted by Charles Munch opened with Darius Milhaud's ballet score, "La Creation du Monde," and closed with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tone Is Satisfying

With thorough technical skill, Mr. Silverstein also showed admirable musicianship, with well wrought phrasing and continuity of musical line. His tone, satisfying while not large in volume, was ingratiating in its clear and essentially lyric quality, while this lyricism avoided a sating sweetness and reflected the work's moods and timbres, ranging from melodic consonance to discreetly employed pungency.

In the boldly assertive measures of the finale the twenty-eight-year-old violinist's interpretation needed a rather greater degree of aggressiveness, but his performance of the work as a whole gave an auspicious sense of taste and expressive understanding and a command of fine dynamic shading and subtleties of musical hue; the andante was set forth with persuasive imagination. The orchestral share of the concerto was well proportioned and expressively sympathetic.

"La Creation du Monde," composed after Milhaud had returned to France after visiting this country in 1922, is probably one of the earliest foreign works to be influenced by jazz, and this element is prominent in many parts of the score in ideas, timbres and especially in persistent rhythms; at times there are foretastes of Gershwin's symphonic contributions. The work also offers some measures of a Latin-American savor along with others which seem more French or cosmopolitan, but the result is not a conglomeration, but rather an expert blending of atmospheres in this engaging score. The performance generally did full justice to its spirit, color and rhythmic momentum, even if it inclined to a slight excess of discretion in certain moments.

The playing of the Franck symphony included some opaquely presented or slightly overblown passages, but it had a widespread emotional span and communicative conviction along with high color under a conductor who evidently loves and understands this music.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAR 12 1961

SILVERSTEIN HERE AS VIOLIN SOLOIST

Naumburg Award Winner Plays Prokofieff Concerto With Boston Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, 28-year-old violinist of the Boston Symphony, won the Naumburg Award last October. The award is valued at $25,000 because it includes New York appearances, recording and management contracts, American and foreign tours, in addition to cash.

Yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, Mr. Silverstein appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony in his first major orchestral appearance in New York.

This honor was in addition to everything listed in the Naumburg package.

Mr. Silverstein was heard with his colleagues in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2. The violin tone was silkily beautiful. Physical effort seemed absent. Every note was in place, and there was no question as to the rightness of what he did musically.

Playing with almost careless ease—earned no doubt through years of hard work—the violinist did not indicate the possession of a striking temperament. Since he gave a faultless performance, barring an excessive vibrato at the beginning of the concerto, it is ungrateful perhaps to want more. Smooth, well-oiled efficiency, though, is not enough.

Charles Munch, leading the Boston Symphony, gave Mr. Silverstein superbly coordinated orchestral support. Before the concerto, Mr. Munch conducted a curious, fascinating performance of Milhaud's "The Creation of the World."

This score, written for a ballet in Paris in 1923, was influenced by the composer's experiences in New York the previous year, when he had first heard true American jazz. It remains one of the best examples of the transmutation of the jazz style into symphonic terms.

Using a reduced orchestra, Mr. Munch approached the music with a kind of Back Bay gentility that possibly gave it its proper flavor. The jazz elements, not stressed, showed up as the abstractions they are muted and piquantly alien.

In the other work in the program, César Franck's Symphony, Mr. Munch and his orchestra were at their best. This timeworn composition profited from the soft, transparent glitter that marks the Bostonians' tone.

Mr. Munch kept the tempos in a constant state of flux, driving the work in its torpid moments, letting the lyric passages flow gently or soaringly. He avoided an excess of soulfulness and the pseudo-profundity in interpretation that the score invites. He conducted, instead, with conviction and taste, the best combination where this music is concerned.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121

MAR 13 1961

Silverstein Is Violin Soloist With the Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

Joseph Silverstein, the violinist who won the Naumburg competition for strings last fall, appeared as soloist with his fellow-members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in that noted organization's fourth Carnegie Hall matinee of the season Saturday playing Serge Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 in G minor. The diversified program conducted by Charles Munch opened with Darius Milhaud's ballet score, "La Creation du Monde," and closed with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tone Is Satisfying

With thorough technical skill, Mr. Silverstein also showed admirable musicianship, with well wrought phrasing and continuity of musical line. His tone, satisfying while not large in volume, was ingratiating in its clear and essentially lyric quality, while this lyricism avoided a sating sweetness and reflected the work's moods and timbres, ranging from melodic consonance to discreetly employed pungency.

In the boldly assertive measures of the finale the twenty-eight-year-old violinist's interpretation needed a rather greater degree of aggressiveness, but his performance of the work as a whole gave an auspicious sense of taste and expressive understanding and a command of fine dynamic shading and subtleties of musical hue; the andante was set forth with persuasive imagination. The orchestral share of the concerto was well proportioned and expressively sympathetic.

"La Creation du Monde," composed after Milhaud had returned to France after visiting this country in 1922, is probably one of the earliest foreign works to be influenced by jazz, and this element is prominent in many parts of the score in ideas, timbres and especially in persistent rhythms; at times there are foretastes of Gershwin's symphonic contributions. The work also offers some measures of a Latin-American savor along with others which seem more French or cosmopolitan, but the result is not a conglomeration, but rather an expert blending of atmospheres in this engaging score. The performance generally did full justice to its spirit, color and rhythmic momentum, even if it inclined to a slight excess of discretion in certain moments.

The playing of the Franck

BLANK PAGE

178

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

VERDI ..... Overture to "La Forza del destino"

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Orchestra

I. Introduzione
II. Giuoco delle coppie
III. Elegia
IV. Intermezzo interrotto
V. Finale

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 16 1961

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 18 1961

Thomas Schippers Symphony Guest

Walter Strate

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for its open rehearsal tonight and its concerts Friday afternoon, Saturday night, and Tuesday night.

From Verdian Heights To Bartókian Plateaus

By Harold Rogers

Verdi comes seldom to Symphony Hall, and then usually with his "Manzoni" Requiem. His operatic overtures are rare indeed; Rossini overtures, yes; Mozart overtures, of course; but Verdi overtures, no. Yet they can serve to get a program under way—gloriously so, as Thomas Schippers demonstrated yesterday afternoon.

The Overture to "La Forza del Destino," impregnated with a wonderful kind of blood and thunder, makes listeners sit up and take notice—that is, when played with the right Italian sense of verve and style. This sense is something Mr. Schippers truly possesses, so much so that one Italian in the audience said that it made her feel as if she were back again in her homeland.

The trouble with the rest of Mr. Schippers' concert was that it seldom rose to these preliminary heights.

* * *

It may be that he is essentially an operatic conductor; it may be, too, that he is not yet fully mature as a musician. His reading of Schubert's Fourth Symphony, the "Tragic," was without any distinctive sense of color; and his version of Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra was often a worried, tortured thing. Bits and passages stood out in brilliant relief, as if they were operatic arias; again, bars would go by with a kind of grayness and just plain tough going.

Mr. Schippers' conducting problem is not easily analyzed. Reservations that were lacking when he was guest with the Boston Symphony two years ago sternly assert themselves today. There now seems to be more self concern, more of a personal responsibility to make the music go this way or that—as if he himself were the generating power. The music, of course, includes its own generating power, and a conductor is at his best when he becomes a kind of transparency for the music to shine through.

* * *

It was this sense of hypertension, this desire to concentrate on details, that tended to destroy the organic unity of the Bartók. True, Mr. Schippers has a winning personality and a podium manner that is pleasant to behold. As already pointed out, there were moments when everything took fire as it should. But one was not always convinced that Mr. Schippers had the players on his side. It was as if he reigned over their bodies but not over their souls.

All this may be but growing pains; and it is unfortunate that most young conductors who come to fame early must suffer through these trials while standing before great orchestras. Mr. Schippers is the white hope among young American conductors. He has already passed extraordinary milestones in his career—a career that may well have outdistanced his emotional growth.

He must now find that delicate balance between intellectual control—which he already has in abundance—and a selfless heart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
MAR 12 1961

THOMAS SCHIPPERS will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at the concerts Mar. 17, 18, and 21

Schippers Guest Conductor

By invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, Thomas Schippers will return as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Symphony Hall concerts of next Friday afternoon (2:15) and Saturday evening (8:30), and the Tuseday concert Mar. 21 at 8:30.

Schippers will present the same program at all three—the Overture to Verdi's Opera, "La Forza del Destino," the "Tragic" Symphony by Schubert, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will conduct the concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, this coming Tuesday at 8:30. Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in the Schumann Violin Concerto. The program will include Milhaud's "Creation of the World" and the D minor Symphony of Cesar Franck.

To Honor Liszt

For the Symphony Hall "regular" concerts of March 24 and 25, Dr. Munch has conceived the unusual idea of inviting Byron Janis to be soloist in both Piano Concertos by Franz Liszt, in honor of the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth. Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll" will complete the list.

Bruckner's Te Deum and the Requiem by Faure, preceded by the adagio from Bruckner's String Quintet, will form the program for the Orchestra's Easter concerts. The afternoon concert, by the way, will be played Thursday, Mar. 30, since the 31st is Good Friday. Dr. Munch will conduct; the chorus will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and the soloists will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary McKenzie, alto; John Alexander, tenor, and David Laurent, bass.

178

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

VERDI ..... Overture to "La Forza del destino"

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Orchestra

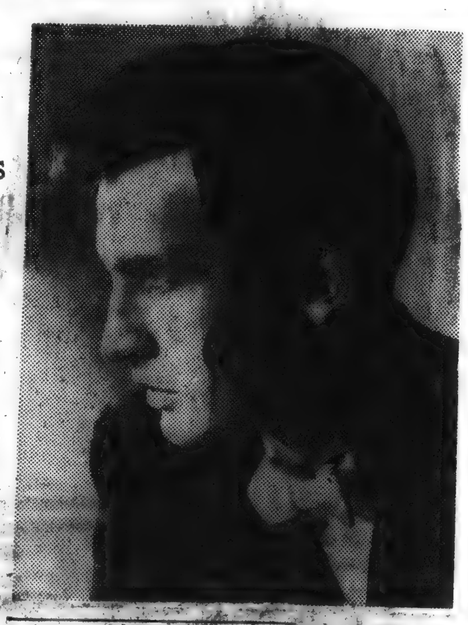
I. Introduzione
II. Giuoco delle coppie
III. Elegia
IV. Intermezzo interrotto
V. Finale

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
MAR 12 1961

THOMAS SCHIPPERS will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at the concerts Mar. 17, 18, and 21



Schippers Guest Conductor

By invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, Thomas Schippers will return as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Symphony Hall concerts of next Friday afternoon (2:15) and Saturday evening (8:30), and the Tuseday concert Mar. 21 at 8:30.

Schippers will present the same program at all three—the Overture to Verdi's Opera, "La Forza del Destino," the "Tragic" Symphony by Schubert, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Dr. Munch will conduct the concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, this coming Tuesday at 8:30. Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in the Schumann Violin Concerto. The program will include Milhaud's "Creation of the World" and the D minor Symphony of Cesar Franck.

To Honor Liszt

For the Symphony Hall "regular" concerts of March 24 and 25, Dr. Munch has conceived the unusual idea of inviting Byron Janis to be soloist in both Piano Concertos by Franz Liszt, in honor of the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth. Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll" will complete the list.

Bruckner's Te Deum and the Requiem by Faure, preceded by the adagio from Bruckner's String Quintet, will form the program for the Orchestra's Easter concerts. The afternoon concert, by the way, will be played Thursday, Mar. 30, since the 31st is Good Friday. Dr. Munch will conduct; the chorus will be the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and the soloists will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary McKenzie, alto; John Alexander, tenor, and David Laurent, bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 16 1961

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 18 1961

Thomas Schippers Symphony Guest

Walter Strate

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for its open rehearsal tonight and its concerts Friday afternoon, Saturday night, and Tuesday night.

From Verdian Heights To Bartókian Plateaus

By Harold Rogers

Verdi comes seldom to Symphony Hall, and then usually with his "Manzoni" Requiem. His operatic overtures are rare indeed; Rossini overtures, yes; Mozart overtures, of course; but Verdi overtures, no. Yet they can serve to get a program under way—gloriously so, as Thomas Schippers demonstrated yesterday afternoon.

The Overture to "La Forza del Destino," impregnated with a wonderful kind of blood and thunder, makes listeners sit up and take notice—that is, when played with the right Italian sense of verve and style. This sense is something Mr. Schippers truly possesses, so much so that one Italian in the audience said that it made her feel as if she were back again in her homeland.

The trouble with the rest of Mr. Schippers' concert was that it seldom rose to these preliminary heights.

* * *

It may be that he is essentially an operatic conductor; it may be, too, that he is not yet fully mature as a musician. His reading of Schubert's Fourth Symphony, the "Tragic," was without any distinctive sense of color; and his version of Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra was often a worried, tortured thing. Bits and passages stood out in brilliant relief, as if they were operatic arias; again, bars would go by with a kind of grayness and just plain tough going.

Mr. Schippers' conducting problem is not easily analyzed. Reservations that were lacking when he was guest with the Boston Symphony two years ago sternly assert themselves today. There now seems to be more self concern, more of a personal responsibility to make the music go this way or that—as if he himself were the generating power. The music, of course, includes its own generating power, and a conductor is at his best when he becomes a kind of transparency for the music to shine through.

* * *

It was this sense of hypertension, this desire to concentrate on details, that tended to destroy the organic unity of the Bartók. True, Mr. Schippers has a winning personality and a podium manner that is pleasant to behold. As already pointed out, there were moments when everything took fire as it should. But one was not always convinced that Mr. Schippers had the players on his side. It was as if he reigned over their bodies but not over their souls.

All this may be but growing pains; and it is unfortunate that most young conductors who come to fame early must suffer through these trials while standing before great orchestras. Mr. Schippers is the white hope among young American conductors. He has already passed extraordinary milestones in his career—a career that may well have outdistanced his emotional growth.

He must now find that delicate balance between intellectual control—which he already has in abundance—and a selfless heart.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 296,246

MAR 18 1961

Innovation! Symphony Plays Verdi Overture

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA presented at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 19th program in the Friday-Saturday series. Thomas Schippers, as guest, conducted the Overture to Verdi's "La Forza del Destino"; the "Tragic" Symphony by Schubert, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

By CYRUS DURGIN

For the first time in its history, the Boston Symphony performed yesterday afternoon, a noperatic overture by Verdi — that to "La Forza del Destino." The man responsible for this innovation is Thomas Schippers, who for the third time is guest conductor of this Orchestra.

At just over 31, Schippers is an operatic old hand, who knows the ways of the theater pit and understands that especial dramatic fire which opera must have if it is to sound right. Yesterday it sounded very right, which is to say, glittering, taut and emotionally uninhibited to the point of sensuality.

This is not comprehended by conductors of purely symphonic persuasion who have not been through the theatrical mill. Music in opera is indissolubly bound to story and characters, to the love and violence which get people into trouble, and it must reflect in performance these emotional extremes.

There is about 19th Century romantic opera, and the realistic type, something raw emotionally, quite unlike the abstract elegance and restraint of symphonies and concertos. Note well, emotionally raw, not technically. The Overture to 'La Forza del Destino' was technically very polished, the sound rich, the detail impeccably combed.

Schippers did pretty well with Schubert's C minor Symphony, unheard at these concerts in nearly a decade. It sang like Schubert, it was neither forced nor sentimentalized. But it was a little tense for this composer, and the dynamic average a little on the high side of loud. What was lacking was that gentle mellowness an older man would produce.

With Bartok's wondrous Concerto for Orchestra, Schippers came into his own—symphonic music of the time and beautifully wrought, conducted by a notable talent of the modern temper.

The structural continuity within the mosaic-like form, the melodic flow, the rhythmic impetus, the clarity and the sheer command of fluctuating speeds were altogether remarkable. Here was modern virtuoso conducting of most difficult music, and in the unconstrained response of the gentlemen of the Orchestra was executant virtuosity of the utmost brilliances.

The Concerto for Orchestra, I venture to think, will be seen ultimately as a near-mid-20th Century masterpiece. It is, perhaps, one movement too long in that it all comes near exhausting even the most willing concentration. But every movement has compelling interest, and the sheerly musical beauty is unfailing.

Schippers was a bit in error, I believe, to put the Concerto at the end of a concert. In fact, the program might have been presented in reverse order, Schubert and Verdi coming after intermission. There is no reason why not. The "Tragic" Symphony is short, and the convention of putting an overture first is not unassailable.

In the theater an overture is the begining of a whole opera. In concert performance it is not the beginning of anything: it is an excerpt which, under the circumstances, is complete in itself.

When Dr. Munch returns next week (he was listening from a seat in the first balcony yesterday, by the way) he will commemorate the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt by conducting both of the Liszt piano concertos, with Byron Janis at the keyboard. The concerts will begin with Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll," and will end with Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

MAR 18 1961

The Symphony

SCHIPPERS REVEALS LACK OF MATURITY

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Thomas Schippers, a talented youngster in his field (though he would be classified as a graybeard were he an athlete or a matinee idol) appeared as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony yesterday, and demonstrated there is no substitute for maturity.

It was, one regrets to record, an erratic performance. Save for the mighty Bartok Concerto where the conductor shone fitfully, the music emerged without personality. Mr. Schippers at 31 possesses the proper technical command of his art; but of the inner authority, the communication of musical emotion, not enough to reveal any special identity.

His faults are those of youth rather than inadequate preparation. His interpretations tend to be earnest rather than persuasive. His dynamics follow a doctrinaire pattern rather than moulding the work to his own prescription. He has, on the other hand, a dramatic temperament, a fiery beat and a judicious sense of rhythm. What he needs, possibly, is more experience in matters of ensemble precision, for he does not yet elicit from the orchestra the kind of response, balance and tone commensurate to his ideas.

Verdi Overture

Yesterday's program was refreshingly imaginative. The Verdi overture was the first ever performed at a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, a fact that one finds not surprising. For decades Verdi's musical reputation lay under the cloud of presumed vulgarity.

He was anything but a coterie composer or a figure of overt intellectual prowess, and in cultivated circles he held the non-U place of a hack of genius. Then, too, he intergrated theater and music so cleverly that one without the other seems implausible. Finally, his overtures, as pure overtures, aren't very good.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas Schippers conducting, presented the 19th program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30, and Tuesday evening at the same hour:

Overture to "La Forza del destino" Verdi
Symphony No. 4, in C minor,
"Tragic" ..... Schubert
Concerto for Orchestra ..... Bartok

Compared to Rossini's or Mozart's with their schematic development, recapitulation and unity, Verdi's overtures are a potpurri of tunes. This is masterful in the opera house, suitable to the stage, a preparation of the audience—and ramshackle outside of context.

"La Forza del destino," however, is one of the few susceptible to isolation; and Mr. Schippers carried the melodies simply and clearly to their destination. Yet the effect was thin. The tone was not Italianate, and if the playing was loud and fervent, the lack of thematic definition resulted in thumping barrel-organ blandness. One scarcely detected the element of darkling fate.

Intriguing Choice

Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, No. 4, so seldom revived, was another intriguing choice; and this received a similarly straightforward reading. Unfortunately, Mr. Schipper's settled on a reduced body of strings to present a work modelled on the scale of Beethoven or Cherubini. Could the conductor be harking to the fact that the Fourth was originally meant for performance by Schubert's Gundelhof chamber group?

In spite of this, the symphony demands breadth and weight and color; if the 19-year-old Schubert created in terms of the 18th century, he was also exploring the idiom of Beethoven. The steadily understated tempos of Mr. Schippers had the virtue of revealing the adolescent gloom in the score. Simultaneously most of the lyricism vanished, too.

There were delightful segments here, especially during the quasi-melancholy andante and the lively finale, but not sustained enough to provide contrast and stave off dullness. Although Bartok's intense masterpiece was allowed an unstringent and powerful momentum, it too failed to reach the coherent good of unified performance.

Opening Sections

Here Mr. Schippers drew out the opening sections and hastened toward the close. The Elegia had irresistable nostalgia, the clusters of concertante instruments stood out, and the considerations accorded phrasing and melodic line were commendable.

The titanic work, however, projected straining after effect; the reading was deeply-felt and only intermittently moving. Alas, Mr. Schippers stayed upon the surface. He is manifestly a promising conductor, and it is from such occasions that promise becomes fulfillment.

Next week Charles Munch returns, and Byron Janis will be the performer in Liszt's Piano Concerto in A minor, No. 2, and E-flat major Concerto, No. 1, honoring the master's 150th year. Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll," and Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture-Fantasia are also scheduled.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 17 1961

Symphony

Thomas Schippers has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall in concerts today, tomorrow and Tuesday.

The program will be Verdi's overture to "La Forza del Destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAR 12 1961

Music Events This Week

Violinist Henryk Szeryng will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony concert Tuesday evening at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge. Doctor Munch will conduct "La Creation du monde" by Milhaud, the Symphony by Franck, and the Schumann Violin Concerto.

Thomas Schippers has been invited to conduct the Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday, Saturday and Tuesday, March 21. Mr. Schippers' program, which will have an open rehearsal on Thursday March 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall, will include Verdi's overture to "La Forza del destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Dr. Munch with guest pianist Byron Janis will observe the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt at the concerts next week in two Liszt concertos for piano and orchestra. Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and the "Siegfried Idyll" by Wagner will also be performed.

TODAY

GLENN GOULD, pianist, Symphony Hall, 3:30 p.m. B.U. Celebrity Series. Sold out.

M.I.T. MUSIC GROUPS—Mozart's Mass in C minor, K. 427, in original version. Professional soloists. Nominal-price tickets at door. Kresge Auditorium, 3:00 p.m.

KING'S CHAPEL CHOIR with Cambridge Festival Orchestra, King's Chapel, 5:00 p.m. Daniel Pinkham directs Boston premiere of Hovhaness' "From the End of the Earth" and other works. Public invited.

READING SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Weston L. Brannen, conductor, Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist, Reading Memorial H. S. Auditorium, 3:30 p.m. Beethoven Concerto and other works.

VASSAR CHOIR, HARVARD GLEE CLUB, Emmanuel Church, Boston, 3:00 p.m. Joint concert marking Vassar's 100th anniversary. Public invited.

TUESDAY

NICHOLAS VAN SLYCK, pianist-composer, on Boston Conservatory Fenway Series, 26 Fenway, 8:30 p.m. Busoni, Martin and Van Slyck. Admission free.

WILLIAM HIBARD, WALLACE HARPER, violin and piano sonata recital, Handel, Ives, Mozart, Schoenberg. Music Lovers' Club, N. E. Mutual Hall, 11:00 a.m.

RUTH LAKEWAY, soprano, Concert Hall, Boston University, 855 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:15 p.m. Artist doctoral recital. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

GREAT MUSIC Series continues with The Collins Singers in "Vocal Chamber Music of the 19th Century." Room 12, B. U. College of Liberal Arts, 725 Commonwealth Avenue. Public invited. 7:15 p.m.

CONCERTO and Concerti Grossi program, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. N. E. Conservatory student program. Admission free.

THURSDAY

SYLVIA ZAREMBA, pianist, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Beethoven, Schumann, Kastle, Ravel, Chopin. Tickets at box office.

FRIDAY

JIULLIARD STRING QUARTET, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. Mason Music Foundation. Admission free by ticket. Rush at 8:30.

SATURDAY

YOUTH CONCERT, Symphony Hall, Harry Ellis Dickson conducts Boston Symphony musicians with student orchestra members sitting in and with young soloists. 11:00 a.m.

VIENNA CHOIR BOYS, Symphony Hall, 2:30 p.m. B.U. Celebrity Series. Varied works and Conradin Kreutzer comic opera, "By Royal Command." Tickets at box office.

CHAMBER MUSIC, Brandeis, Slosberg Recital Hall, 8:30 p.m. American premiere of Roberto Gerhart Concerto, Corelli, Weber, Haydn.

later, Herald 3/12/61

Music Events This Week

Violinist Henryk Szeryng will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony concert Tuesday evening at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge. Doctor Munch will conduct "La Creation du monde" by Milhaud, the Symphony by Franck, and the Schumann Violin Concerto.

Thomas Schippers has been invited to conduct the Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday, Saturday and Tuesday, March 21. Mr. Schippers' program, which will have an open rehearsal on Thursday March 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall, will include Verdi's overture to "La Forza del destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Dr. Munch with guest pianist Byron Janis will observe the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt at the concerts next week in two Liszt concertos for piano and orchestra. Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and the "Siegfried Idyll" by Wagner will also be performed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 17 1961

Conducts Here

THOMAS SCHIPPERS is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at concerts this afternoon, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Herald 3/5/61

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 17 and 18 and again on Tuesday evening, March 21.

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 24, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, at 8:30 o'clock

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... *"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia

LISZT ..... Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2

INTERMISSION

WAGNER ..... Siegfried Idyll

LISZT ..... Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1

SOLOIST
BYRON JANIS
Mr. JANIS uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Fifth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 26, at 3:00 o'clock

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... *"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia

LISZT ..... Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2

INTERMISSION

WAGNER ..... Siegfried Idyll

LISZT ..... Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1

SOLOIST
BYRON JANIS
Mr. JANIS uses the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
MAR 25 1961

THE SYMPHONY

Liszt Concertos And Byron Janis

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"A man who loved his art, despised money, attracted everybody worth knowing in the 19th century, lived through the worst of it, and got away from it at last with his hands unstained."

That was Bernard Shaw's judgment on Franz Liszt, whose 150th anniversary year — the actual birthday is Oct. 22—was observed at Symphony yesterday. The master's two piano concertos were revived, most notably No. 2, in A major, which hadn't been heard at a Friday-Saturday series since November, 1923, when Mitya Nikisch, the son of the conductor, Arthur Nikisch, was the soloist. And Byron Janis, the young American artist who recently won a tremendous succes d'estime in Russia, offered brilliant accounts of both scores.

Living Exponent

One's response to the concert as a whole, however, depends on one's response to the 19th century romantic movement. The program was constructed to honor not only Liszt, but to utter the philosophy of which he was so much the living exponent: the declamatory and sentimental modes, the bracing freedom and lack of inhibitions, the simultaneous vulgarities and superficialities — in short, romantic music in capsule. I will not try either to defend or attack its premises; romanticism is a historical fact, and it serves no immediate practical use to talk about the subject as though Liszt and Wagner were still fighting their battles.

An error of program-making, nevertheless, did mar the opening half of the afternoon. As originally planned, the two concertos came in sequence, with Wagner and Tchaikovsky as the end-pieces. We may assume that Dr. Munch, dis-satisfied with the arrangement, which was scarcely ideal — one concerto before the intermission and one after—decided on the present pattern, breaking up the two and allowing the soloist the climactic portion.

Unfortunately, he chose to begin now with the "Romeo and Juliet." This was a mistake, for it permitted the overture-fantasia's louder, faster and facile moods to overpower the equally bombastic, but perhaps more refined, character of the Liszt. I have nothing against the "Romeo and Juliet" overture (and the performance was properly theatrical), in its place.

Certain Devices

I am stirried by its emotionalism as I am stirred by a brass band, knowing full well the indulgence mingled with surprise at the craftiness of certain devices, as I might during a revival of a Victorian melodrama like "The Drunkard" or "The Bells." But I would not use "The Drunkard" as the curtain-raiser to an O'Neill melodrama, any more than preceding the A major by the Tchaikovsky.

On the other hand, Mr. Janis deserves superlatives for his Liszt playing. Save for two moments when the orchestra got a shade ahead, early in the A major and during the antiphonal octaves of the E-flat major, the balance was very good indeed, Dr. Munch showing a tactful adjustment of the formidable problems involved. To essay a pair of concertos in any concert is a hair-raising feat. Liszt's, for the professionals, are a bit easier than they might appear on the surface; even so, the demands are immense. If they are to get across as virtuoso exhibitions and still express musical values they require the closest rapport.

The orchestra, conductor and soloist had this yesterday. Mr. Janis' warm tone, his wiry rhythmic power, rubato, his lyricism and amazing digital prowess, endowed the music with glittering drama. At no point did I detect him lapsing into labored rhetoric. He didn't need to pound out the accelerando. The cantabile sections found him producing the aura of virtual improvision.

Tone Poet to Fore

His work held the extremes of sonority and sparkle that Liszt imposes, of the pair, the E-flat is the superior work, yet in both one finds Liszt, the tone poet, to the fore. It was this element Byron Janis emphasized, so persuasively that in spite of all the muscular energy expended, the post-concert view still retains an image of delicate and shifting color. It was a memorable interpretation.

Between the concertos came Wagner's Idyll. Charles Munch's treatment was tender, fine-grained and gentle. Yet one couldn't help but to hark to the scene of Wagner conducting 15 musicians from the top of the stairs on Christmas morning, the Idyll in its original dimensions.

Next week is Holy Week, and the concerts will fall on Thursday afternoon and Saturday night. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society appear at these times and the occasion is dedicated to Dr. Archibald Davison. The Bruckner Te Deum and Faure Requiem are scheduled and Dr. Maunch will also offer the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal." The vocal soloists are Phyllis Curtin, John Alexander, Mary MacKenzie and David Laurent.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 20th program of the 80th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Byron Janis, pianist, was the solo artist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia ..... Tchaikowsky
Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2 ..... Liszt
Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1 ..... Liszt

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
MAR 25 1961

Janis Plays Liszt Piano Concertos at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 20th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Charles Munch, music director conducted Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet;" the A major and E-flat Piano Concertos of Liszt, with Byron Janis as soloist, and "A Siegfried Idyll," by Wagner.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Byron Janis is soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week, in not one but both of the surviving Piano Concertos by Franz Liszt. These performances are intended by conductor Charles Munch to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth. Since that will not occur until next Oct. 22, it will be seen that the occasion is being celebrated handily in advance.

The two keyboard works constitute half of a program heavily Romantic in all its components, which does, to use an old New England phrase, make pretty much of a much. Yet, while a little Bach or later Stravinsky would have served a stomachic purpose, no doubt there were very good reasons for shaping this program as it is.

Indeed, there was a fine interest of contrast as well as similarity in being able to hear both these concertos so close together. For all that they are alike in manner and piano style, there is also a good deal of difference. The E-flat Concerto is more nearly a 19th Century display piece, symphonically worked out.

The A major Concerto, in its one-movement, sectional form is closer, I think, to the symphonic poems which Liszt later was to create. The changes of mood and substance, the diablerie of much of this music, suggests a symphonic poem in which the piano is less a solo than an integral but extremely prominent part of the orchestra itself.

No matter how you view these works, they are masterful and exciting, full of color and warmth and ardor; somewhat grandiloquent, to be sure, but powerful and dramatic.

Thus they were played, in some of the finest accompaniment-type conducting that Charles Munch has achieved during his years in Boston. Conductor, soloist and orchestra each seemed to arouse the others to prodigies of tonal splendor, rhythmic emphasis and poetic intensity.

Much is said of the "grand style" of piano playing, in connection with 19th Century music, and a lot of it simply means playing loud and fast. You may nor may not consider Byron Janis' playing a reincarnation of the grand style, but it was extraordinary how he made the most of this music, giving it full flavor and strength without ever sentimentalizing or racing or pounding. Here is Liszt playing admirably suited to this matter-of-abstract-fact 20th Century—and it is so because it is utterly direct and authoritative without old-fashioned attitudes and posings.

At the end of the E-flat Concerto, which came second, there was a sustained and rousing ovation which called Janis back to the stage repeatedly. Munch and the Orchestra also shared largely in the applause and cheers.

Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" began the afternoon with fire and passion in unmistakable three-alarm tumult. Yet the drama was not forced, and the sound was a glorious orchestral resonance, not coarse. Munch conducted "A Siegfried Idyll" most tenderly and beautifully, all the counterpoint clear, the orchestral sonority serene and luminous.

Next week the afternoon concert will be given Thursday at 2:15, to avoid Good Friday. The program will be dedicated to the memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison, and will consist of the "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal"; the Te Deum of Bruckner (first time at these concerts), and the Faure Requiem. The chorus will be the Radcliffe Choral Society and Harvard Glee Club, prepared by Prof. Elliot Forbes, and the soloists will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary MacKenzie, contralto; John Alexander, tenor, and David Laurent, baritone.

AMUSEMENTS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
MAR 19 1961

Liszt Honored at Symphony

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will honor the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt at the concerts in Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, and Sunday, Mar. 26, at 3. Accordingly, he has invited Byron Janis to be soloist in both the E-flat and A major Piano Concertos of Liszt.

The program will begin with Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll," and will conclude with "Romeo and Juliet," by Tchaikovsky.

Thomas Schippers will end his visit as guest conductor with the concert at Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening at 8:30. He will present the Overture to Verdi's "La Forza del Destino;" the "Tragic" Symphony by Shubert, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony's Easter concerts will be performed at Symphony Hall Thursday afternoon at 2:15, Mar. 30 (to avoid Good Friday on the 31st) and Saturday evening at 8:30, Apr. 1. Dr. Munch will conduct the adagio from Bruckner's String Quintet. Bruckner's Te Deum, and Faure's Requiem. The chorus will consist of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Elliot Forbes, and the soloists will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary MacKenzie, alto; John Alexander, tenor, and David Laurent, bass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,063

MAR 24 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,275

MAR 28 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

MAR 29 1961

BYRON JANIS, PIANO SOLOIST with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in its fifth and final concert of the season in Providence, at Veterans' Memorial Auditorium on Tuesday, March 28 at 8:15. Mr. Janis will play both of the Liszt concertos in observance of the 150th anniversary of the composer's birth. Also on the program is Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Presents Final Concert of Series

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played the final concert of its series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Byron Janis, pianist, was the soloist. The near capacity audience had the unusual pleasure of hearing the guest artist play two concertos, both by Franz Liszt, No. 2 in A major and No. 1 in E flat major.

The orchestra played Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60 and Wagner's Siegfried Idyll. The music was familiar and melodious. The musicians were in fine form and the entire concert was of the sort to stir enthusiasm in all quarters for the orchestra, the soloist, the conductor and symphonic music in general. If applause and recalls for Dr. Munch and Byron Janis are an indication of the success of their performance, it rated very high.

The orchestra gave us a lively, imaginative interpretation of Beethoven's charming Symphony No. 4, in which we had heard the wonderful string section at its best. Delicacy and precision gave a razor sharp edge to the phrases which came from each choir in turn. The third movement was like brilliant conversation with delightful repartee tossed about with telling effect. This Beethoven score is not profound. It fitted well into the program.

The lovely music of the Siegfried Idyll can be counted on to work a magical spell on any audience. Last evening's hearing was no exception.

The brilliance and authority of Byron Janis' playing made his Liszt concertos thrilling to hear. Rhythmical to the last note, astonishing in the virtuosity of the octaves and scale passages, yet lyrical and apealing in the quiet spots, the interpretations never forced the tone of the piano nor did they seem to wear the soloist to the point of exhaustion. Control and poise were always in evidence and at no time was

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 37,868

MAR 29 1961

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Concert Features Piano Soloist

Byron Janis, young American pianist, showed a well-restrained pianist power, hard-driven when required but proving that he has an admirable spirit, vitality and natural eloquence of expression for the work at hand last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

✦✦✦

AS GUEST SOLOIST, he also demonstrated that he is certainly qualified as an operator of the two free-wheeling vehicles Liszt's "Concerto In A Major" and "Concerto In E-Flat Major," which he played with a deeply savoured warmth and aplomb. He has a fine sense of cantalena and resonance and an all embracing command of the keyboard. Even if Liszt's eccentricities are liable to sometimes be obtrusive, Janis has a quietly emphatic and highly refined conception of the composer's purpose and meaning.

✦✦✦

AND THE HIGHLY spirited members of the orchestra responded to Charles Munch's direction in a manner that was gallant and thrilling to hear.

The program was well-selected. It opened with Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4 in B-Flat Major" that began with an adagio movement that was solemn, almost ominous, but changed to allegro vivace that gave promise of future merriment. The serene and lyric adagio, second movement, with the woodwind singing in chorus behind the curtain of strings, attuned the capacity audience with sweet tranquility.

✦✦✦

THEN THE LAUGHTER began to shine through in the third movement, a scherzo-like allegro vivace, and the finale was allegro, ma non troppo, that was gay, music buffoonery. The orchestra received an ovation.

The other number, Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," which came immediately after intermission, and before Mr. Janis brought the evening to an imperious climax with the "E-Flat Major Concerti," was a classic ode reminded of all the things we love in life.

The guest artist and Dr. Munch were recalled for extra curtain bows by mad applause that seemed to demand they remain forever.

C.H.L.

C.H.L. recently received the following letter from Irma Rogell, harpsichordist:

"Dear Mr. Leach, I have just had the pleasure of reading your review of my concert of more than a year ago in Providence — on Dec. 7, 1959.

How unerringly you put your finger on the weakness of the Bach French Suite!

I can still remember listening to the tape of that concert and realizing that the courante did not "move" as it should, — that I was so involved at that time within the phrases of the Sarabande that it did not flow as it should — nor did the menuet. Only the gigue was almost right.

You may be interested to know that I worked for months more on that suite before it began to "go," that it changed radically before I played it next in Boston on April 7, 1960, four months later — and kept on changing after that!

How sensitive and perceptive a listener you are! I look forward to reading your criticism of last night's program and hope to learn what needs to be done.

Sincerely,
(signed) IRMA ROGELL
31 Devon Road
Newton, Mass.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

184

BLANK PAGE

185

186

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Twenty-first Program

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, at 8:30 o'clock

WAGNER ..... Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"

BRUCKNER ..... Te Deum for Chorus, Soloists and Orchestra

I. Te Deum
II. Te ergo
III. Aeterna fac
IV. Salvum fac
V. In Te, Domine, speravi

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano — JOHN ALEXANDER, Tenor
MARY MACKENZIE, Contralto — DAVID LAURENT, Baritone

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

FAURÉ ..... Requiem, for Chorus and Orchestra, with Soprano and Baritone Solo, Op. 48

I. Introit and Kyrie
II. Offertorium
III. Sanctus
IV. Pie Jesu
V. Agnus Dei
VI. Libera me
VII. In Paradisum

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano — DAVID LAURENT, Baritone

HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

Performed in memory of
Dr. Archibald T. Davison
(October 11, 1883 – February 6, 1961)

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1289]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
MAR 26 1961

Symphony Easter Concerts In Memory of Dr. Davison

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be In Memoriam for Archibald T. Davison (Oct. 11, 1883-Feb. 6, 1961). Professor of music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954, Dr. Davison was conductor of the Harvard Glee Club from 1912 to 1934 and conductor of the Radcliffe Choral Society from 1913 to 1928.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given on Thursday afternoon at 2:15 (rather than on Good Friday) and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," by Wagner (replacing the originally announced Bruckner adagio) will open the concerts, to be followed by Bruckner's Te Deum and the Requiem by Faure. The vocal soloists will be soprano Phyllis Curtin, Mary MacKenzie, alto; John Alexander, tenor—all former students at the Berkshire Music Center—and bass David Laurent.

The Easter program will have an open rehearsal Wednesday in Symphony Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Byron Janis will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Orchestra in Symphony Hall today at 3 p.m. in the Piano Concerts by Liszt. The program includes Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on tour the week of Apr. 3. On Apr. 5 and 8 the orchestra will give its 699th and 700th New York concerts to conclude the 75th consecutive season of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in New York city.

Berj Zamkochian will give the fourth concert of the orchestra-sponsored organ recitals in Symphony Hall Sunday, Apr. 9, at 6 p.m.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall Apr. 14-15. Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will be the soloists in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 2 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony are on their final tour of the winter season. Among other concerts, the orchestra will give its 699th and 700th concerts at Carnegie Hall to conclude the 75th consecutive season of Symphony performances in New York.

Berj Zamkochian will give the final organ concert of the season at Symphony Hall next Sunday, April 9, at 6 p.m. His program includes Handel's Concerto in F major; three works by Bach: the Partita on "Christ, der du bist der helle Tag," the Chorale prelude "Wenn wir in hochsten Nothen sein" and the Toccata in F major; Franck's Cantabile; Variations by Liszt; and Pieces de Fantaisie by Vierne. Tickets to the Orchestra-sponsored recital, all $1.00, and unreserved, are available at the box office.

Contralto Eunice Alberts and tenor David Lloyd will be Richard Burgin's guests at the concerts on Friday-Saturday, April 14-15, in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." The Mahler work will be preceded by Haydn's Symphony No. 88.

Charles Munch will conduct the Orchestra on April 16 in the final concert this season of the Sunday afternoon series. Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" will open the program, followed by the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven.

TODAY

CAROLS BY CANDLELIGHT—Evangelical Covenant Church Choir, Cambridge, Elmer G. Westlund, director. Carl Nelson, tenor; 8 p.m. Bach; Handel Schubert, Dickey, Shaw, Merryon. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

B. U. CHORAL ART SOCIETY, Allen C. Lannom, conductor; Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Avenue. Stravinsky "Mass," with accompaniment of double octet of wind instruments. Early music included in balance of program. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

GREAT MUSIC Series continues with Wilbur Fullbright in illustrated lecture on the Brahms Symphonies. B. U. College of Liberal Arts, 725 Commonwealth Avenue. Public invited. 7:15 p.m.

FRIDAY

MARAIS AND MIRANDA, international balladeers, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Of Boston University Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes English, Dutch, Irish, Flemish American, African-Bantu, South African and French folk songs and ballads. Remaining tickets at box office.

SATURDAY

JEAN MADEIRA, Metropolitan Opera contralto, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Benefit St. Mary's Infant Asylum. Program includes operatic arias, art songs and spirituals and will feature three arias from Bizet's "Carmen." Francis Madeira, piano accompanist. Tickets at Jordan Hall box office.

Herald 3/31/61

THE SYMPHONY

Exalted Music For Holy Week

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Yesterday afternoon's symphony concert—the series falls on Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening by Holy Week observance—was an occasion of exalted musical character.

Charles Munch could scarcely have selected a program more suited to the season, music of religious ardor and profound contemplation. From beginning to end the expression of various forms of spiritual consciousness was sensitive and radiant.

Honored Music

The conductor, the orchestra, the soloists, the combined chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe, honored this music; and it was appropriate, too, that Faure's "Requiem" should be dedicated to the memory of Archibald T. Davison: the nature of the work, Dr. Davison's services to the Harvard-Radcliffe singers and to music, and the solemnity of the date, all proved appropriate.

But one non-musical aspect was not appropriate, I feel, a rare breach of decorum on the part of the audience who applauded the Te Deum and the Requiem. This is a matter of personal taste, of course; yet as a person who is not easily shocked, I was shocked. You do not applaud a prayer, it seems to me. I am not, I trust, suggesting that music is any substitute for liturgical form; but the Bruckner and the Faure both have specific liturgical aspects, one was a memorial, and, within the limits of art the works manifest sanctity and devotion.

Express Dedication

Bruckner's "Te Deum," which has never before been presented by this orchestra, is expressly dedicated, like the Ninth Symphoney, "to God." The theory that Bruckner intended it for the Ninth's Finale after the manner of Beethoven, is not borne out by the fact that posterity possesses instrumental sketches which the master was too weak to perfect. He only suggested the "Te Deum" in place of the sketches when mortality left him no other choice.

Like the mighty Masses, also seldom heard, the "Te Deum" is steeped in the composer's mysticism. The architecture displays Bruckner's passionate Catholicism, with designs of gorgeous pomp and pageantry contrasting against contemplative lyricism and Gothic-arch motifs rising from progressions of fourth, fifth and octave. It is a work that abstractly distills Max Auer's poetic literary description in its color and scope:

"Altars shining in brilliant light, priests in gold vestments, flying banners, incense, ringing bells, processions on high feast-days; then again utter humility, the penance of fast-days and of advent, quiet meditation in gloomy corners of the church illumined only faintly by the roseate glow of "eternal light"; all this we experience in Bruckner's music."

The Harvard-Radcliffe chorus contributed a lusty and resonant tone, and the discipline in the attacks and releases declared the smartness of Elliot Forbes' training. Of the solo quartet Miss Curtin was outstanding in style and projection; but Mr. Alexander, Miss MacKenzie and Mr. Laurent also offered refined, expressive vocalism. The combined forces, with the orchestra and Dr. Munch, made the "Te Deum" an experience of power and of glory.

Comprehensive View

Faure's "Requiem," that most delicate and exquisite of all scores in this idiom, gave a more comprehensive view of the Harvard-Radcliffe's focus, tonal blend and clarity. Miss Curtin and Mr. Laurent returned and executed their roles with admirable subtlety and finesse. So much depends on texture in the "Requiem," and the chorus, singers and instrumentalists created a shimmering fabric under Charles Munch. This is music in which he excels. He developed a hushed aura of grandeur throughout the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" as well. The detail of the inner voices mingled with a symmetry of soaring outer form to open an exceedingly lovely afternoon.

Next weekend finds the orchestra on tour. Richard Burgin will conduct Mahler's "Song of the Earth," April 14-15; and Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88. Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor, are the soloists.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 21st program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary MacKenzie, contralto; John Alexander, tenor; David Laurent, baritone; and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus was under the direction of Elliot Forbes. The Faure Requiem was dedicated to the memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison (1883-1961). The concert will be repeated tomorrow night at 8:30:

Good Friday Spell from 'Parsifal', Wagner
Te Deum for Chorus, Soloists, and Orchestra ..... Bruckner
Requiem, Op. 48 ..... Faure

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
MAR 22 1961

MUNCH HONORS DAVISON

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be In Memoriam for Archibald T. Davison, professor of music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given on Thursday afternoon (March 30, 2:15), rather than on Good Friday afternoon, and Saturday evening (Apr. 1, 8:30).

The "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" will open the concerts, followed by Bruckner's "Te Deum" and the "Requiem" by Faure.

The Easter program will have an Open Rehearsal on Wednesday (March 29) in Symphony Hall at 7:30 p. m. Tickets for the rehearsal, all $2 and unreserved, are available at Symphony Hall.

186

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Twenty-first Program

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, at 8:30 o'clock

WAGNER ..... Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"

BRUCKNER ..... Te Deum for Chorus, Soloists and Orchestra

I. Te Deum
II. Te ergo
III. Aeterna fac
IV. Salvum fac
V. In Te, Domine, speravi

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano — JOHN ALEXANDER, Tenor
MARY MACKENZIE, Contralto — DAVID LAURENT, Baritone

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

FAURÉ ..... Requiem, for Chorus and Orchestra, with Soprano and Baritone Solo, Op. 48

I. Introit and Kyrie
II. Offertorium
III. Sanctus
IV. Pie Jesu
V. Agnus Dei
VI. Libera me
VII. In Paradisum

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano — DAVID LAURENT, Baritone

HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

Performed in memory of
Dr. Archibald T. Davison
(October 11, 1883 – February 6, 1961)

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1289]

Herald 3/31/61

THE SYMPHONY

Exalted Music For Holy Week

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Yesterday afternoon's symphony concert—the series falls on Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening by Holy Week observance—was an occasion of exalted musical character.

Charles Munch could scarcely have selected a program more suited to the season, music of religious ardor and profound contemplation. From beginning to end the expression of various forms of spiritual consciousness was sensitive and radiant.

Honored Music

The conductor, the orchestra, the soloists, the combined chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe, honored this music; and it was appropriate, too, that Faure's "Requiem" should be dedicated to the memory of Archibald T. Davison; the nature of the work, Dr. Davison's services to the Harvard-Radcliffe singers and to music, and the solemnity of the date, all proved appropriate.

But one non-musical aspect was not appropriate, I feel, a rare breach of decorum on the part of the audience who applauded the Te Deum and the Requiem. This is a matter of personal taste, of course; yet as a person who is not easily shocked, I was shocked. You do not applaud a prayer, it seems to me. I am not, I trust, suggesting that music is any substitute for liturgical form; but the Bruckner and the Faure both have specific liturgical aspects, one was a memorial, and, within the limits of art the works manifest sanctity and devotion.

Express Dedication

Bruckner's "Te Deum," which has never before been presented by this orchestra, is expressly dedicated, like the Ninth Symphony, "to God." The theory that Bruckner intended it for the Ninth's Finale after the manner of Beethoven, is not borne out by the fact that posterity possesses instrumental sketches which the master was too weak to perfect. He only suggested the "Te Deum" in place of the sketches when mortality left him no other choice.

Like the mighty Masses, also seldom heard, the "Te Deum" is steeped in the composer's mysticism. The architecture displays Bruckner's passionate Catholicism, with designs of gorgeous pomp and pageantry contrasting against contemplative lyricism and Gothic-arch motifs, rising from progressions of fourth, fifth and octave. It is a work that abstractly distills Max Auer's poetic literary description in its color and scope:

"Altars shining in brilliant light, priests in gold vestments, flying banners, incense, ringing bells, processions on high feast-days; then again utter humility, the penance of fast-days and of advent, quiet meditation in gloomy corners of the church illumined only faintly by the rose-ate glow of "eternal light"; all this we experience in Bruckner's music."

The Harvard-Radcliffe chorus contributed a lusty and resonant tone, and the discipline in the attacks and releases declared the smartness of Elliot Forbes' training. Of the solo quartet Miss Curtin was outstanding in style and projection; but Mr. Alexander, Miss MacKenzie and Mr. Laurent also offered refined, expressive vocalism. The combined forces, with the orchestra and Dr. Munch, made the "Te Deum" an experience of power and of glory.

Comprehensive View

Faure's "Requiem," that most delicate and exquisite of all scores in this idiom, gave a more comprehensive view of the Harvard-Radcliffe's focus, tonal blend and clarity. Miss Curtin and Mr. Laurent returned and executed their roles with admirable subtlety and finesse. So much depends on texture in the "Requiem," and the chorus, singers and instrumentalists created a shimmering fabric under Charles Munch. This is music in which he excels. He developed a hushed aura of grandeur throughout the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" as well. The detail of the inner voices mingled with a symmetry of soaring outer form to open an exceedingly lovely afternoon.

Next weekend finds the orchestra on tour. Richard Burgin will conduct Mahler's "Song of the Earth," April 14-15; and Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88. Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor, are the soloists.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 21st program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary MacKenzie, contralto; John Alexander, tenor; David Laurent, baritone; and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus was under the direction of Elliot Forbes. The Faure Requiem was dedicated to the memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison (1883-1961). The concert will be repeated tomorrow night at 8:30.

Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal," Wagner
Te Deum for Chorus, Soloists, and Orchestra ..... Bruckner
Requiem, Op. 48 ..... Faure

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
MAR 26 1961

Symphony Easter Concerts
In Memory of Dr. Davison

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be In Memoriam for Archibald T. Davison (Oct. 11, 1883-Feb. 6, 1961). Professor of music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954, Dr. Davison was conductor of the Harvard Glee Club from 1912 to 1934 and conductor of the Radcliffe Choral Society from 1913 to 1928.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given on Thursday afternoon at 2:15 (rather than on Good Friday) and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," by Wagner (replacing the originally announced Bruckner adagio) will open the concerts, to be followed by Bruckner's Te Deum and the Requiem by Faure. The vocal soloists will be soprano Phyllis Curtin, Mary MacKenzie, alto; John Alexander, tenor—all former students at the Berkshire Music Center—and bass David Laurent.

The Easter program will have an open rehearsal Wednesday in Symphony Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Byron Janis will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Orchestra in Symphony Hall today at 3 p.m. in the Piano Concerts by Liszt. The program includes Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on tour the week of Apr. 3. On Apr. 5 and 8 the orchestra will give its 699th and 700th New York concerts to conclude the 75th consecutive season of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in New York city.

Berj Zamkochian will give the fourth concert of the orchestra-sponsored organ recitals in Symphony Hall Sunday, Apr. 9, at 6 p.m.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall Apr. 14-15. Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will be the soloists in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 2 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony are on their final tour of the winter season. Among other concerts, the orchestra will give its 699th and 700th concerts at Carnegie Hall to conclude the 75th consecutive season of Symphony performances in New York.

Berj Zamkochian will give the final organ concert of the season at Symphony Hall next Sunday, April 9, at 6 p.m. His program includes Handel's Concerto in F major; three works by Bach: the Partita on "Christ, der du bist der helle Tag," the Chorale prelude "Wenn wir in hochsten Nothen sein" and the Toccata in F major; Franck's Cantabile; Variations by Liszt; and Pieces de Fantaisie by Vierne. Tickets to the Orchestra-sponsored recital, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the box office.

Contralto Eunice Alberts and tenor David Lloyd will be Richard Burgin's guests at the concerts on Friday-Saturday, April 14-15, in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." The Mahler work will be preceded by Haydn's Symphony No. 88.

Charles Munch will conduct the Orchestra on April 16 in the final concert this season of the Sunday afternoon series; Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva" will open the program, followed by the Octets for Strings by Mendelssohn and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven.

TODAY

CAROLS BY CANDLELIGHT—Evangelical Congregational Church Choir, Cambridge, Everett G. Washburn, director; Carl Nelson, tenor; 8 p.m. Bach; Handel; Schubert; Dickey; Shaw; Marryott. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

B. U. CHORAL ART SOCIETY, Allen C. Lannom, conductor. Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Avenue. Gruenwald's "Mass," with accompaniment of double octet of wind instruments. Early music included in balance of program. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

GREAT MUSIC Series continues with Wilbur Fullbright in illustrated lecture on the Brahms Symphonies. B. U. College of Liberal Arts, 725 Commonwealth Avenue. Public invited. 7:15 p.m.

FRIDAY

MARAIS AND MIRANDA, internationally balladeers. Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Of Boston University Celebrity Series presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes English, Dutch, Irish, Flemish, American, African-Bantu, South African and French-folk songs and ballads. Remaining tickets at box office.

SATURDAY

JEAN MADEIRA, Metropolitan Opera contralto, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Benefit St. Mary's Infant Asylum. Program includes operatic arias, art songs and spirituals and will feature three arias from Bizet's "Carmen." Francis Madeira, piano accompanist. Tickets at Jordan Hall box office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
MAR 22 1961

MUNCH HONORS DAVISON

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be In Memoriam for Archibald T. Davison, professor of music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given on Thursday afternoon (March 30, 2:15), rather than on Good Friday afternoon, and Saturday evening (Apr. 1, 8:30).

The "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" will open the concerts, followed by Bruckner's "Te Deum" and the "Requiem" by Faure.

The Easter program will have an Open Rehearsal on Wednesday (March 29) in Symphony Hall at 7:30 p. m. Tickets for the rehearsal, all $2 and unreserved, are available at Symphony Hall.

187

Easter Concerts at Symphony Hall

Fauré Requiem and Bruckner Te Deum Share Program

By Harold Rogers

There is little doubt that the human race knows far more about hell than it does about heaven.

Take Dante's Inferno, for instance; his Paradiso pales in the face of it. Or Gounod's music for Mephistopheles—convincing indeed as compared to the ethereal blandness he provides for Marguerite's entrance into glory. Offenbach turned out his only masterpiece while enthralled by E. T. A. Hoffmann's evil genius Lindorf; and lovely as is Wagner's "Good Friday Spell," it is not much of a match for the music he imagined for the Venusburg.

When we consider the various Requiems, we must admit that Verdi's "Libera me"—lofty as it is—can hardly compete with the operatic splendor of his "Dies illa." Berlioz, too, is truly terrifying with his depiction of doomsday.

Gabriel Fauré, however, did not choose the primrose path when composing his Requiem. We may not be able to assume that he knew more about heaven than he did of hell, but there is no question that his interests centered more in the upper region than in the nether. His "Dies illa" is only a passing comment, set forth with hardly more than a double forte, as if he wanted to turn away from the distasteful subject as soon as possible.

His heavenly music, on the other hand, is truly heavenly. He falls into no pits, such as the use of tremolo in the high strings to indicate a celestial condition, or a Chinese gong, as did Richard Strauss, to portray the flight of a man's soul to the skies.

When Fauré deals with heaven, he is tempted by no technical tricks. His music pours forth from a heart that is honestly and profoundly aware of the harmony for which all men are yearning. Brahms, too, in his German Requiem, evokes this quality.

There is a place for them all, of course—one would hate never to hear the Requiems of Verdi and Berlioz again—but those of Brahms and Fauré come closer to a true religious experience.

For the Boston Symphony's Easter concerts this week Charles Munch has programed the Fauré Requiem and the Bruckner Te Deum, assisted in both by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. These concerts are given in memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison, who organized these choruses more than 40 years ago and established a high tradition for them that has remained almost intact ever since.

Now under the direction of Elliot Forbes, the Harvard and Radcliffe singers gave as fine a performance yesterday afternoon as they have at any time in recent years; there was that same wonderful blend and balance, that pleasing whitish quality of tone that one finds only with youthful, untrained voices.

Dr. Munch opened with the shimmering harmonies of the Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal"—when "the radiant beauty of the landscape," as Lawrence Gilman described it, was "a sign of all Creation's tender gratitude to the Redeemer on this day of sacrifice and love. . ."

Continuing with the Bruckner Te Deum, Dr. Munch gave us an intensely devotional reading of a score that is, according to the vigorous and childlike mentality of its peasant composer, quite unlike the more gentlemanly expression of Fauré. Dr. Munch was aided by the ringing voices of Phyllis Curtin, soprano, and John Alexander, tenor, who carried the burden of the solo work. David Laurent gracefully sang the little that was given him; and Mary MacKenzie, whose contralto role amounts to hardly anything at all, was unfortunately lost in this sea of sound.

In the Fauré, however, Mr. Laurent had his magnificent day in the sun. His "Hostias" solo was spun out with a refined sense of beauty; the quality of his baritone is especially appropriate for oratorio singing.

Miss Curtin again took the stage for the "Pie Jesu," filling it with all the warmth and artistry that Bostonians have come to associate with her singing during the past 15 years.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657
MAR 27 1961

Boston Symphony Slates Ansermet

Special to the Hartford Times

Boston — Music Director Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony today announced that Ernest Ansermet, one of the world's most distinguished conductors, will be guest conductor of the Boston orchestra during three weeks next season.

This will be the only assignment in the United States accepted during the season by Ansermet, who last was in this country three years ago to direct a limited number of New York Philharmonic concerts.

On the Continent, Ansermet is best known as chief conductor of the Suisse Romande Orchestra, and as guest conductor of Europe's toprank ing ensembles.

While in New England he will conduct the Boston orchestra in a series of Symphony Hall concerts and a limited number in other Eastern cities.

PARKING • AIR COND

Davison Served Modestly and Well

Herald 2/12/61

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"The last five years have seen no marked change in my activities," wrote Archibald Thompson Davison, Professor of Choral Music, for one of his Harvard Class Reports. "The placid but never monotonous routine of teaching has been interrupted by a half-sabatical, and some unaccustomed mental exercise has resulted in the production of a small book, 'Choral Conducting,' Harvard Univ. Press, 1940. For the rest, I can record only contentment and great joy in my work."

The tone is self-effacing; but the operative phrase is "contentment and great joy in my work." For nearly a half-century this dedicated man, who passed away last week, served at Harvard modestly and quietly advancing the art of choral singing. He was university organist and choirmaster, Director of the Glee Club, scholar.

In short, a productive and creative life. It left a mark on generations of Harvard students. The knowledge, personality and devotion of Professor Davison, the joy of teaching, represented the finest academic ideals. Yet his influence extended beyond Harvard: he was, in fact, a revolutionary.

Classic Revival

Before Archibald Davison appeared on the scene at Harvard, choral singing in the American college was a callow and dubious practice. Prior to World War I, undergraduate singing held a place in the academic scheme roughly comparable to the spring hop—ornamental but not indispensable.

It was an era of glee clubs operating as little more than social societies. A day when college musicals were the vogue on Broadway, depicting students, blazers, straw skimmers and wildly plunking mandolins. Nor was this more than a slight George Ade exaggeration of the truth.

At Harvard, for instance, until 1919, the concerts of the Harvard Glee Club were always performed in co-operation with the Mandolin and Banjo Club minstrel-type pieces, lachrymose ballads and sentimental college songs comprised the programs. The cult of fun prevailed.

Archibald Daviosn had a rather diffeuent concept of the function and purpose of the undergraduate glee club. He saw that it could serve a cultural end without sacrificing its gregarious character. It needed to become a less parochial and trivial institution, broaden horizons: the experience of singing together in concert could take on a richness and variety impossible to acquire with a jingly repertoire.

Thus he became the center of the so-called "classic revival" in American choral work. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society (still in technical cooperation with the Mandolin and Banjo Clubs at this period) first appeared in concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1917. The premieres and important appearances of this group have since formed an impressive record.

What Professor Davison did, through precept and imagination, consisted of raising the status of an art fallen into decline. He inspired many, many students to explore past periods of music, the composers of the present, and the challenge of profound masters. One would expect this of a first-rank teacher.

Set Standards

His significance, however major in this way, penetrated eventually into our mass musical culture. First, there was his work at Harvard; and Archibald Davison's revolution there caused other educational institutions to re-examine their choral approach. The academic groups matured, their undergraduates choruses; the example of comoften later entered community munity ensembles affected our musical life generally.

Although the structure of any national art form is too complex to attribute growth to the individual, one might discern in Professor Davison's contribution elements that have silently altered and changed its course—ultimately touching in a democratic society listeners who have never heard of Archibald Davison or of Harvard.

The operative phrase is indeed "contentment and great joy in my work." He set standards, he made tradition

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750
MAR 31 1961

Munch Conducts Choral Memorial to Dr. Davison

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Easter concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as so often during the regime of Charles Munch, are given mostly and appropriately to choral music—the Te Deum of Anton Bruckner, new to these programs, and the Requiem by Faure. From the orchestra alone comes a seasonal preface in Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal."

As usual, the afternoon concert in Holy Week was performed on Thursday, to avoid Good Friday.

In addition to Easter observance, these choral performances are dedicated to the memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison, who created the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society as instruments of serious music. For his high purpose, and his valiant stand against early opposition, may his name be blessed.

Today, Prof. Elliot Forbes, who succeeded G. Wallace Woodworth (the successor of Dr. Davison) as Harvard-Radcliffe conductor, continues in a tradition of choral excellence which has become virtually hieratic. But as a matter of fact, it must be stated that Prof. Forbes is doing so with a quite different technic, one which produces musicianly results, clarity and refinement, but at a cost of intermittent near-inaudibility.

Young choral voices proverbially lack weight but possess a wonderful ethereal quality. Yesterday, the Harvard and Radcliffe singers often sounded like angels, an attribute especially valuable in Faure.

But there were numerous times, some in Bruckner and more in Faure, when this listener, sitting on a floor seat, saw open mouths but heard no choral sound. Passages of the Faure marked piano, came out as the merest wisp of pianissimo.

Dr. Munch may have contributed to this miscalculation of balance, for he treats the Faure Requiem with exceeding gentleness. In its very notes, it is a marvel of delicate writing. Apart from the reservations noted, the Requiem was performed with a truly supernal beauty of sound and tender emotional expression.

Juite different was Bruckner's grand and massive Te Deum, which sings boldly in splendor of solo and massed voices, and the solemnity and weight of a large orchestra. The symphonic Bruckner is evident on every page, with a wealth of superb vocal counterpoint that is real polyphony, not animated harmony.

The soloists were in every case admirable. Miss Curtin's lustrous soprano has never sounded more gorgeous here, and the fastidious care of her work was a great credit to her. Mr. Alexander sang Bruckner's tenor solo with a fine quality of tone and rhythmic flow. Miss MacKenzie was fully equal to the demands of the Te Deum. David Laurent came into his own with the baritone part of the Requiem.

Next week the orchestra will be on tour. At Symphony Hall, Apr. 14 and 15, Richard Burgin will conduct Haydn's G major Symphony, No. 88, and Mahler's "The Song of the Earth." Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will be soloists.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tomorrow night at 8:30, the 21st program of the "regular" series. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal", by Wagner; the Te Deum by Bruckner (first time at these concerts); and the Requiem by Faure, in memory of Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The chorus was the Radcliffe Choral Society and Harvard Glee Club. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Mary MacKenzie, contralto; John Alexander, tenor, and David Laurent, bass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
APR 6 1961

188

SPIRIT OF INQUIRY AT BSO

By ALLAN SLY

The reasons for it may be deeply embedded in our nature from very ancient times, but as the seasons pass we find ourselves reflecting anew on the meaning of existence, the nature of death, the promise of hope, the bestowal of grace. It was ever so and one cannot imagine man ceasing this search for wisdom.

It is in the spirit of such inquiry that the world's religions have achieved great utterance in music and the BSO's program last week seems to have been built by Dr. Munch on such a premise. Wagner's Parsifal may beg the question a little, but Bruckner's Te Deum and the Faure Requiem know no dissidents. Their famous Latin texts open up windows on the Greek and Roman mysteries, respectively, while the compositions run true to form — the former neo-Baroque imperialist, the latter romanticized bourgeois-Parisian. To the initiate, the Wagner excerpt (Good Friday Spell) may be the ineffable vision its composer intended; for others it remains obdurately stage-medievalism.

Assisting the regular forces were Phyllis Curtin, Mary MacKenzie, John Alexander and David Laurent, respectively soprano, contralto, tenor and bass soloists, and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus, now in the third year of Elliot Forbes' regime as conductor. There was glory to spare all around, not overlooking the listeners, who contributed a noteworthy intensity of earnest participation. Many among them doubtless were noting the extraordinary vitality of the Archibald T. Davison tradition at Harvard, for even though more than a quarter-century has passed since the baton went to G. Wallace Woodworth, Dr. Davison's influence was never in better evidence than now. The Faure performance was in his memory and did it great honor, as it also honored, in passing, Professor Woodworth's regime and the felicitous succession in turn of Mr. Forbes'.

To what can we ascribe the effectiveness of the Harvard-Radcliffe singers at a BSO concert? Well, for one thing, while individuals among them reveal idiosyncratic movements of the head and shoulders, giving a visual effect of extreme nonconformity — an effect confirmed by a disregard of heights in their stationing — their singing shows a utter surrender to unanimity of conception. Whether attacking a Bruckner chord, forte, or a Faure unison passage, sotto voce, the corporate voice is almost tangibly present in the room. The splendid Latin syllables seemed to be incarnate right where Dr. Munch could hand them on to the body of the hall, along with the adjusted concomitant from the BSO. At one point, when the singers had to take breath and announce a new thought, a perceptible wave of movement ran like wildfire across the chorus —every vocal score came up a fraction of an inch and the new idea was among us as a living force. One has seen regimented choruses do this and the idea has missed fire. But on Saturday, here was this assembly of individuals, non-regimented, entirely directed from within, handing Dr. Munch material so vital, with such corporate conviction, that even he can rarely have had to work with before.

All of which gave the soloists a very remarkable sounding board for their projection and they made the most of it. Most memorable of all was Phyllis Curtin's Pie Jesu, but there were many fine passages to cherish in retrospect.

April 14 and 15 Richard Burgin will conduct Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde with Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd, after the orchestra's Eastern Seaboard tour.

This may well be the proper time for a belated tribute, in this column, to the BSO's Board of Trustees for presenting a series of four organ recitals at Symphony Hall, the fourth of which occurs Sunday, April 19, at 6 o'clock. Berj Zamkochian, whose sensitive playing last week in the Faure Requiem was noticed by all, will be the recitalist, playing Handel, Bach, Franck, Liszt and Vierne.

Hadassah on the Air

Mrs. Leonard Sheinfeld, president of the Hanna Senesch Group of Hadassah, will be guest speaker this Sunday morning, April 9 on the Ben Gailing Show which is broadcast at 10 a.m. on Station WHIL.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
MAR 30 1961

Symphony Easter Program In Memory Of A. T. Davidson

Performances To Be Given Today And Saturday Evening

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be In Memoriam for Archibald T. Davison (October 11, 1883 - February 6, 1961). Professor of Music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954, Doctor Davison was conductor of the Harvard Glee Club from 1912 to 1934 and conductor of the Radcliffe Choral Society from 1913 to 1928.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given this afternoon at 2:15, rather than on Good Friday afternoon, and Saturday evening, (April 1, 8:30).

The "Good Friday Spell" from Parsifal by Wagner (replacing the originally announced Bruckner "Adagio") will open the concerts followed by Bruckner's "Te Deum" and the "Requiem" by Faure. The vocal quartet will consist of soprano Phyllis Curtin, Mary MacKenzie, altos, John Alexander, tenor — all former students at the Berkshire Music Center — and bass David Laurent.

Byron Janis is soloist with Charles Munch and the orchestra in Symphony Hall today (Sunday) at 3 p.m. Mr. Janis will be soloist in the Piano Concerti Nos. 2 and 1 by Liszt. The

Continued on Page Five

Easter Program

Continued from Page One

program includes Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on tour next week (the week of April 3). On April 5 and 8 the orchestra will give its 699th and 700th New York concerts to conclude the 75th consecutive season of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in New York City.

Berj Zamkochian will give the furth concert of the orchestra, sponsored organ recitals in Symphony Hall on Sunday, April 9, at 6 p.m.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in Symphony Hall on April 14-15. His guests will be Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd in a performance of Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
MAR 26 1961

Symphony Concert Change Announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has changed its regular Friday-Saturday concerts to Thursday and Saturday this week to enable concertgoers to attend Good Friday services.

WGBH-FM will broadcast both concerts live from Symphony Hall. The Thursday program begins at 2:10; the Saturday concert at 8:25 p.m.

Charles Munch will conduct the Adagio from the String Quintet, and Te Deum, both by Bruckner; and Faure's Requiem The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society join the Orchestra for the Te Deum and Requiem.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 28 1961

Symphony Program

This week's Boston Symphony schedule will move the usual Friday afternoon concert to Thursday, March 30, at 2:15, in addition to the regular Saturday performance at 8:30.

The Easter program, which will have an open rehearsal Wednesday at 7:30, consists of Wagner's "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," followed by Bruckner's Te Deum and Fauré's Requiem.

Next week the orchestra will be on tour, concluding the 75th consecutive season of New York appearances with concerts number 699 and 700.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
MAR 26 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch has designated the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Easter concerts to be in Memoriam for Archibald T. Davidson (October 11, 1883-February 6, 1961). Professor of Music at Harvard until his retirement in 1954, Doctor Davison was conductor of the Harvard Glee Club from 1912 to 1934 and conductor of the Radcliffe Choral Society from 1913 to 1928.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in these concerts to be given on Thursday afternoon rather than on Good Friday afternoon, and Saturday evening.

The "Good Friday Spell" from Parsifal by Wagner (replacing the originally announced Bruckner "Adagio") will open the concerts followed by Bruckner's "Te Deum and the "Requiem" by Faure. The vocal quartet will consist of soprano Phyllis Curtin, Mary MacKenzie, alto, John Alexander, tenor—all former students at the Berkshire Music Center — and bass David Laurent.

The Easter program will have an Open Rehearsal on Wednesday in Symphony Hall at 7:30 p.m. Tickets for the rehearsal, all $2 and unreserved, are available at Symphony Hall box office.

Byron Janis is soloist with Charles Munch and the Orchestra in Symphony Hall today at 3 p.m. Mr. Janis will be soloist in the Piano Concerti Nos. 2 and 1 by Liszt. The program includes Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

TODAY

GREATER BOSTON YOUTH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Jordan Hall, 3:00 p.m. Marvin Rabin, conductor. Student soloists, Handel, Lalo, Copland, Tchaikovsky, Wagner. Admission free.

MOTET CHOIR of the First Church in Cambridge, Congregational, 4:00 p.m. David C. Johnson directs "Pope Marcellus" Mass by Palestrina," Schuetz and Kodaly. Soloists, harpsichord and strings. Public invited. Collection.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY CHOIR, John Ferris, conductor, 8:00 p.m. Cantata 131 and two Motets by Bach. Assisted by Bach Society Orchestra, Joel Lazar, conductor.

TUESDAY

MUSICA SACRA, Victor H. Matfield, conductor, University Lutheran Church, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Handel's St. John Passion, Henry Wing, soloist. Public invited.

SAN REMO FOLK FESTIVAL, Symphony Hall, 8:00 p.m. Italian folk songs by ten singers and orchestra. Tony Bruno at the piano.

EARLY PROGRAM MUSIC, Sears Memorial Gallery, Waltham Public Library, 8:15 p.m. Edith Vogl, lecturer; Anne Gombosi, viola d'amore and violin; Edith Stearns, piano. Renaissance and Baroque periods. Admission free.

WEDNESDAY

AKSEL SCHIOTZ, Danish baritone, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Program devoted to Schubert's "Die Winterreise," with Paul Ulanowsky at the piano.

FRIDAY

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, violinists, in Contemporary Music Society Series, Institute of Contemporary Art, Soldiers Field Road, Brighton, 8:30 p.m. Martin Boykan, pianist, Boston Fine Arts Quartet. Works by Imbrie, Fine, Hindemith and Piston. Mr. Piston and Mr. Silverstein will comment on the music. Tickets, AL 4-0614.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 9 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER—It was "a genuine privilege to be in the theater" for "Becket" at the Colonial. "Two for the Seesaw" at the Wilbur "was worth waiting for." The Bradford's new dine-dance-theater combination with "Where's Charley?" started off well. At N. E. Mutual Hall, the Vincent Club's annual show provided "an evening of pleasure and fun."

SCREEN—The documentary, "Primitive Paradise," at the Center was colorful. The Royal Ballet Film at the Beacon Hill was "rewarding." The Fenway's "Bernadette of Lourdes" gained from excellent acting. "The Sins of Rachel Cade" at the Paramount was "strikingly picturesque but too lengthy." "Carthage in Flames" at the Pilgrim "made it necessary to exercise a good deal of patience." "Excitement, fun and neat satire" abounded in the Kenmore's "League of Gentlemen."

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony concert "was an occasion of exalted musical character." Interesting and informative was the program presented by the Contemporary Music Society at the Institute of Contemporary Art.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

190

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

192

BLANK PAGE

Symphony Notes Milestones

The Boston Symphony will climax its last Eastern tour for this season with a concert this Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The occasion is worth noticing for at least two reasons. First, it brings the orchestra to fine round numbers of seasons and concerts played in New York—75 and 700. Second, it adds one more to an already impressive list of New York premières by the Boston Symphony.

The first concert was in Steinway Hall in February of 1887, with Wilhelm Gericke conducting, three years before Carnegie Hall was built; and not a year has been missed from that time to now.

This Saturday's première will be the Poulenc "Gloria," in which the orchestra will be joined by Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica. Among this work's illustrious predecessors as New York "firsts" are the following:

Three important works of Richard Strauss—"Till Eulenspiegel," "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and "Death and Transfiguration."

Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Mahler's Fifth Symphony.

Bruckner's Eighth Symphony.

Debussy's "La Mer."

Dr. Karl Muck, on March 19, 1908, also had the distinction of conducting the first fully American program played in New York by a major orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657

MAR 28 1961

Boston Symphony Concludes Series

New England's world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting will be presented on the Bushnell stage Apr. 4 at 8:15 p. m. in the final concert of this season's Bushnell Symphony series.

Byron Janis

The orchestra will bring as guest artist the young pianist Byron Janis who will perform as soloist in two Liszt concertos.

* * *

THE EVENT closes a series which this season has brought to Hartford: The Philadelphia Orchestra with Ormandy conducting; the Warsaw Philharmonic with Witold Rowicki conducting and Regina Smendzianki as guest pianist; the Cleveland Orchestra with George Szell conduction and Grant Johannesen as guest pianist; the New York Philharmonic with Hans Rosbaud conducting.

Announcement will be made shortly concerning the distinguished orchestras, conductors and guest artists to be presented in next season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

For his upcoming program Dr. Munch has selected: Beethoven's Fourth Symphony; Liszt's Piano Concerto in A major and his Piano Concert in E flat major; Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll."

* * *

ONLY 31, Janis has been a busy concert artist since his mid-teens, and is currently on his 15th coast-to-coast American tour.

He has toured Europe four times. Last year he proved such a sensation in a series of Russian concerts that he evoked a welcome almost as great as that accorded to Van Cliburn. —WIDEM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 108,563

APR 5 1961

Janis Plays Liszt With Symphony

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were presented at the Bushnell Memorial Tuesday night. Byron Janis, pianist, was guest artist. The program:

Fourth Symphony — Beethoven
Second Piano Concerto — Liszt
Mr. Janis, Soloist
Siegfried Idyll — Wagner
First Piano Concerto — Liszt
Mr. Janis, Soloist

Little need to ask, now that the deed is done, what it profiteth an audience to have to have to hear two Liszt piano concerti on a single program. Last night at the Bushenll the merit of such an orgy lay entirely in the performance. With the determination of a bullfighter Byron Janis dispatched the A Major and E Flat compositions in that order and with the indomitable aid of Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. It was a brilliant tour de force and quite possibly a needless one.

Electric Performance

As was inherently necessary, Mr. Janis played with electrifying technical command. All the terrifying problems concocted by the composer lay easily under his flying hands. All that was showy he discharged with the utmost in canny craftsmanship. All that had pretensions to grandiloquence he rescued from this curse with taste and judiciousness. Everything was compacted of intensity. In the big pages, Mr. Janis' keyboard energies continually drew him off the piano bench. In the simpler lyric passages he gave Liszt a becoming poetic glow. How deeply Mr. Janis holds the worth of the two concerti is of course his private concern. His public one was to match the fearsome challenge of the composer and in this he triumphed. With the Boston Symphony thundering along at his heels, Mr. Janis was quite literally loss well heard in the Second Piano Concerto. Like Canute, one cannot stem that tide of orchestration. In the First Concerto, where the piano part is more exposed, his tone naturally seemed larger and more incisive. Into each life some rain must fall.

Huge and Throaty

Mr. Munch and the orchestra gave burnished performances of their share of this Liszt double-feature. In the A Major the reading was like the blueprint for a monumental piece of Baroque architecture, and the playing was huge and throaty. By contrast, Mr. Munch took the E Flat concerto in bright, shiny style, and the orchestra properly made like Chopin or Tschaikowsky or even Liszt—it's all right there in the original recipe. Even the triangle seemed in especially good voice.

Thus the main tasks of the evening. The Beethoven Fourth Concerto was Springish, ebullient, warmly romantic—and frequently pulled into taffylike lengths after Mr. Munch's fashion. The Wagner "Siegfried Idyll" was indeed idyllic in the playing and as endless as usual. —T.H.P.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 148,332

MAR 26 1961

Janis on Piano

Munch Does Finale in '61 Series

With Charles Munch conducting and brilliant young pianist Byron Janis as guest artist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series at 8:15 p.m. on April 4.

For his Bushnell program Dr. Munch has selected four works with broad appeal: Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B Flat major; two piano concerti by Franz Listz, Numbers One and Two, in which Janis will be soloist; Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll."

Fresh from his fifth tour of Europe, and a sensational success in a series of Russian concerts, 31-year-old Janis is now on his 13th coast-to-coast American tour. He has performed with all of the major orchestras in the United States, among them the New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia and Boston, both in their home concerts and on tour. He is widely known for his record-

BYRON JANIS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657

APR 5 1961

Boston Symphony, Pianist Janis Perform Brilliantly

By DON O. NOEL JR.

A capacity audience heard a brilliant evening of bravura piano and polished orchestral performance Tuesday night in the last of the Bushnell Symphony Series for this year.

American Pianist Byron Janis was featured soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch. Their program:

Beethoven, Symphony No. 4
Liszt, Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2
Wagner, Siegfried Idyll
Liszt, Piano Concerto in E flat major, No. 1.

* * *

THE TWO LISZT concerti, presented last night in celebration of the 150th anniversary of Franz Liszt's birth year, are pyrotechnical displays par excellence, exhausting for both pianist and audience when played back-to-back as they were last night.

But Mr. Janis brought them off with full command. He was flamboyant, sure-handed, dynamic, without losing the ability to be poetic in the softer passages.

He and Mr. Munch were in perfect agreement throughout that they should offer dashing, virtuoso readings, and there was never a hint of hestitation between the two.

They received a tumultuous ovation—matching the concerti themselves—at the concert's end.

* * *

IF THE LISZT HALF of the program was primarily the pianist's show, it was balanced off nicely by excellent performances of the Beethoven and Wagner.

The remarkable quality of the Boston Symphony, particularly its magnificent string section, was evident from the opening bars of Beethoven's Fourth. It was a taut, perfectly controlled development of musical tension. Mr. Munch's reading was not showy, but demonstrated crisp, single-voiced responsiveness of his players and solid, satisfying musicianship.

The Stiegfried Idyll, equally well done, was a welcome interlude between the two Liszt offerings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 148,332

APR 2 1961

Charles Munch Here For Tuesday Concert

Charles Munch returns to Hartford Tuesday to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final event of the Bushnell Memorial Symphony Series at 8:15 p.m.

Assisting Munch in two Liszt concerti will be the prize-winning American pianist Byron Janis, 31. Janis is currently on his 15th coast-to-coast tour.

Standing room tickets will be available.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 2 1961

Russians Say It With Gifts

By IGOR KIPNIS

Byron Janis, who will be soloist in the two Liszt piano concerti with the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday, was reminiscing the other day about his five-week tour of the Soviet Union. "There were ten concerts — Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, Minsk and Odessa—but by the time I got through with the encores, it felt to me as though there had been fifteen."

The young American pianist's appearances were part of the cultural exchange and occurred last fall at a time when tension was still running high because of the U-2 incident. When Mr. Janis stepped out on the stage for his first recital in Moscow, there was almost no applause. Before he even played a note, two violent catcalls rent the air. "I waited until the whispering had subsided and then began a Mozart sonata," explained Mr. Janis, who was only the third instrumentalist to visit the Soviet Union from this country, as well as being the first American pianist to appear since Van Cliburn. "The Russians didn't know me, and they are slow to warm up; at the beginning they look you over, and then, if they like you, they really show it."

Hearts and Flowers

The Mozart did the trick. From that first concert on, Janis was acclaimed wherever he went. "They react tremendously to music," the pianist pointed out; "they whisper to each other, discussing individual phrases that they like. These people are so extraordinarily demonstrative and uninhibited—they cry, they throw flowers, they won't leave the hall even after the lights are turned up." The audience often addressed the performer during the recital: "Spasibo" (thank you), was the response after an encore. Requests for encores, incidentally, are written down and passed to the performer on the stage.

Although programs are sold, for the benefit of those who cannot afford to buy them, an announcer gives the name of each selection. Another unusual aspect of Russian concert deportment is the delivering of gifts to the performer right on the stage. Asked what he had been given, Mr. Janis replied: "A lot of music. For example, a bound edition of the complete works of Medtner, a book on Chopin (whom the Russians adore), picture books on Moscow and Leningrad, and many, many trinkets. Oh yes," smiled the pianist, "I also received some mash notes from girls wanting to correspond with me. One young lady sent a bottle of perfume, a picture of herself, and even a pen." Mr. Janis related the incident that had touched him most, "A little boy, about ten years old, brought me some chocolate wrapped in paper—it was all he had."

Soviet audiences are extremely outgoing during the actual concerts, but Janis was surprised at a general reticence to visit him backstage afterward. The pianist noted that, except for the officials, the only persons who would come to see him at such times were those who had been to the United States. He would often be approached, however, outside of the concert hall. At his hotel room one day he answered a knock on the door to discover a small group of people, who anxiously inquired whether the pianist was going to return for more concerts. "I told them I had commitments in Europe and couldn't give any more recitals at that time; they wanted me to play for them right then in my room." On another occasion, Janis received a telegram saying, "We the people of Leningrad shall never forget your concert last night. Please come back." It was signed, "Your new friends."

'Worthy Exchange'

The pianist was thrilled most by Dimitri Kabalevsky's statement concerning the cultural interchange between the United States and the Soviet Union, in which the composer regarded Janis as a "worthy exchange for Richter."

The Russian press was ecstatic over the concerts: "He plays with a temperament of our own school and reminds us of our warmth and emotion not like one of those cold Western virtuosos," none of whom, Janis explained, they have ever heard. The Russians were astounded to learn from the pianist that an artist can make a career in the United States or that an appreciation of culture exists in this country at all. They have heard of only very few of our performers and were astonished when Janis mentioned that he had been engaged for sixty-five concerts the season prior to his U. S. S. R. tour.

Scriabin Museum

Mr. Janis recalled his visit to Scriabin's house, which had been turned into a museum. "It was a wonderful home; all kinds of people walk in from outside to sit and listen to Scriabin's old records that are played by the hour." A seventy-year-old woman was his guide, showing him all the fascinating mementos, the score to Scriabin's unfinished opera, his piano (which he tried), and even the "clavier à lumière," an instrument that when played projects colors, corresponding to the different tones, onto a screen. "It was all there," mused Janis, "but I kept wondering about the old lady who pointed everything out to me with such loving care and with more than usual interest. She was terribly modest and wouldn't tell me her name; I finally learned she was Scriabin's daughter."

The last concert took place on Nov. 2 at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory in Moscow. The pianist played two concerti, Rachmaninoff's Third and Gershwin's in F, for which he had rehearsed the trumpet player personally in order to obtain the proper feeling. "They started yelling and screaming after the first movement; they loved the Gershwin," Janis said of the triumph. A slew of encores followed, and when the lights at last were turned on, Janis had his interpreter inform the packed audience that he hoped to have the pleasure of playing for them again. "Kagda? Kagda?" (when?) came the reply.

'Whenever You Wish'

At the airport, the spokesman for the Ministry of Culture was solicitous when it was determined that Janis' European engagements could not be canceled. "The concert halls of Russia are open to you whenever you wish to return." Was there anything he had to criticize, he was asked. Janis informed the official that he was well treated, the accommodations were excellent, and that he would like to return to play again. "I did mention to him, though," the pianist added, "that I was amazed that the hall in Odessa did not have a regulation concert-size grand." The spokesman, too, expressed surprise and replied that the people of Odessa were "very wrong; they should have one."

The pianist mentioned one listener who spoke to him after one of his recitals; "You know," said the Russian, "when we hear someone like you, we love America." "When you have this sort of genuine response," Mr. Janis beamed, "you are only too happy to give all you have."

Byron Janis in his recent recital at the Moscow Conservatory.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S: 812,836
APR 6 1961

'RIGOLETTO' AT THE MET

D'Angelo in Fine Bow

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ANOTHER AMERICAN soprano made good in an unexpected debut at the Metropolitan last night. Her name is Gianna D'Angelo and she has a coloratura voice quite worth hearing. The Met better hold on to her.

Having been singing Gilda abroad since an unscheduled debut in Rome in 1954, she comes to the Met not only experienced but well-schooled in the Italian style. She produces her voice knowingly, places her coloratura accurately, and sings musically.

Seldom does one hear every note of "Caro Nome" as clearly as Miss D'Angelo sang it last night. Usually such clarity can be associated with a certain coolness of voice. Along with a delightful freshness it has warmth of tone. Thus her Gilda sounded quite human.

Miss D'Angelo distinguished herself with her trills. Apart from generally excellent vocalism she is a good-looking Gilda with fine stage presence. Thus she matched the ease of her singing with naturalness of motion. She gave the appearance of being at home on the stage as both actress and singer. Her Gilda was genuinely stylish.

Cast Well-Versed

This was the eighth "Rigoletto" of the season. The remainder of the cast were well-versed in the opera: Jan Peerce as the duke, Robert Merrill in the title role, William Wildermann as Sparafucile, and Mignon Dunn as Maddalena. Nino Verchi conducted but did little to give the performance any special distinction.

Boston visitor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony played their final evening concert of the season, in Carnegie Hall last night. The feature of the program was the two piano concertos of Liszt with Byron Janis as soloist. It opened with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and included Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

What I heard of the major concerto was a bravura performance to end all bravura performances. Janis takes some kind of prize for dazzling, fast playing. Under the circumstances, it could hardly be called musical, but then the "wow" technical display seldom is.

Mr. Munch felt the urge to get as virtuosic as possible, therefore conductor and soloist whipped up a performance that ended in a swirl of brittle, breathless brilliance. Liszt furnished the vehicle, but this concerto is more than just that

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung und Herold, Dienstag, 11. April 1961

Carnegie Hall

Pianist Byron Janis beweist mit den Bostonern erneut sein Können

Es war eine glückliche Idee des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, für sein letztes Mittwochabend-Konzert dieser Saison den jungen amerikanischen Pianisten Byron Janis zu verpflichten. Janis ist seit seiner Rückkehr von einer triumphalen Gastspielreise durch die Sowjetunion im vergangenen Herbst hier nicht mehr gehört worden, und die Begegnung mit ihm nach so langer Zeit bewies von neuem, daß er ganz ohne Zweifel zu den großen Talenten unserer Zeit gehört.

Für diesen Abend hatte Janis das Klavierkonzert in A-Dur und das Konzert in Es-Dur von Liszt gewählt, und es war wohl das erstemal in der Geschichte der Carnegie Hall, daß man diese Werke an einem Abend gespielt hörte. Und wie gespielt!

Janis brachte die Lyrik, das Sentimentale und das Romantische dieser Musik mit der gleichen Klarheit zum Ausdruck wie das Stürmende und Wilde in ihr. Vielleicht fehlt ihm noch ein wenig von dem technischen Glanz und Schimmer, über den die großen Virtuosen verfügen — aber schon heute spürt man in dem Spiel dieses jungen Künstlers die Größe der Auffassung und der Gestaltung, die die eines echten Musikers ist. Das Zusammenspiel mit dem Orchester war mustergültig; an manchen der langsamen Stellen war eine beinahe kammermusikalisch direkte Verbundenheit von Klavier und Streichern spürbar. Der Beifall war anhaltend und verdient.

Der Rest des unter Leitung von Charles Muench stehenden Abends war der 4. Symphonie von Beethoven und dem Siegfried-Idyll von Wagner gewidmet. Beide Werke klangen farblos, lustlos und trocken, und Muench überhetzte in erstaunlicher Weise das Tempo des zweiten Satzes der Beethovensymphonie, der schon das Adagio der Neunten ahnen läßt.

In dieser Darstellung jedoch fand sich weder die Wärme noch das Gefühl, die in den Tiefen dieser Musik verborgen sind. Eine sonderbare Entgleisung der Bostoner, die eigentlich nicht zu erklären ist und über die das Publikum noch lange den Kopf schütteln dürfte.

St.

Martyn Green heiratet wieder

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 6 1961

Music: Janis' Virtuosity Brings Cheers

He Joins Bostonians in 2 Liszt Concertos

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THE chief point of interest at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony, in Carnegie Hall, was the appearance of Byron Janis in both of the Liszt piano concertos. (Liszt did write several other works for piano and orchestra, but these are about the only ones in the repertory.) It was the first time New Yorkers had a chance to look at the pianist since his triumphant tour of the Soviet Union last fall.

Slim, sleek and romantic looking, Mr. Janis made a big hit last night. His playing was technically adroit, loud and forceful. Often he took complete charge, dominating the orchestra with massive chords and octaves. It was the kind of virtuosity that is bound to bring cheers, and cheers are what Mr. Janis received.

•

Whether or not it was good Liszt playing is another question. With all the impetuous drive that Mr. Janis brought to the music, his playing nevertheless lacked style. The chief drawback was tonal—a combination of an ugly-sounding, over-brilliant piano and Mr. Janis' naturally percussive keyboard attack. And we mean atttack.

The kind of hard, metallic sound he produced, especially in the treble, was not the medium for these concertos. It was more a Prokofieff kind of sound—bleak, powerful and not capable of much variety or nuance.

And while Mr. Janis exploited the virtuosity to the full, he seemed less sure of himself in the lyric passages. He had more trouble in this respect with the more lyrical A major Concerto. In the E flat, he had greater confidence, and the guess is that he has lived much longer with this concerto than the companion A major.

Anyway, Liszt piano music is not necessarily muscular, and it does not have to be banged out. There is such a thing as enormous strength without banging or bleakness, and Mr. Janis, with all of his brilliance, has not yet solved that secret.

Presumably, the coupling of the Liszt concertos on one program was Charles Munch's observation of the sesquicentennial of the composer's birth. He was born on Oct. 22, 1811. Mr. Munch led the orchestra in a carefully adjusted accompaniment. He worked very closely with Mr. Janis: conductor and pianist had a constant eye on each other, and they maintained a high quality of ensemble.

•

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" were the orchestral numbers on the program. Neither received an interesting performance. The Beethoven was routine, rather coarse, and even suffered from some out-of-tune passages vis-à-vis winds and strings. In the "Siegfried Idyll," there was no underlying metrical pulse. The constant tempo changes favored by Mr. Munch ended up defeating themselves.

Byron Janis

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor, with Byron Janis, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Symphony No. 4.....Beethoven
Piano Concerto in A, No. 2.....Liszt
Siegfried Idyll .....Wagner
Piano Concerto in E flat, No. 1...Liszt

Gianna D'Angelo Makes Debut at 'Met'

AT the tail end of its New York season, the Metropolitan Opera is presenting three artists in their debuts—an unusual practice but symbolic of the hectic cast changes the company has been forced to make all year.

Last night's debutante—the first of the three—was a slim, tall, exceedingly pretty soprano from Hartford by the name of Gianna D'Angelo, who is no stranger to the opera houses of Europe but who has sung very little in this country. It is to be hoped that the other two new singers prove as satisfactory and intriguing as she was.

Miss D'Angelo was heard as Gilda in the eighth and final performance this season of "Rigoletto." Her voice, of lyric-coloratura size, is clear and straightforward in quality, luminous when it is used softly, losing some of its perfect clarity when swelled in volume.

What was more important than the voice was the way the soprano used it. She sang with delightful self-confidence, almost triumphantly—and with good reason. Her pitch was faultless, and she could perform all the niceties of the coloratura with accuracy and control. Her turns and trills were charmingly delivered, and she made a lovely crescendo and diminuendo on a high note at the end of the "Caro nome" aria.

Gilda is one of Verdi's least attractive heroines—she is a complete ninny—and it gives little opportunity to judge the acting ability of a singer who takes the role. Miss D'Angelo was, properly, all innocence and girlishness in the second act (as given at the Metropolitan), all grief and horror in the following act. Here she sang with a fire and vehemence that almost carried her away—to the point of making a false entrance and singing a forced high note. But these were immaterial details and actually a favorable indication of temperament. The Metropolitan can use sopranos with her flair.

Miss D'Angelo's presence seems to have sparked the performance last night, for it was one of the better "Rigolettos" of the year. Robert Merrill sang the title role; Jan Peerce, the Duke; William Wildermann, Sparafucile; Mignon Dunn, Maddalena, and Louis Sgarro, Monterone. Nino Verchi conducted.

DisplaysCraftsmanship, Volume and Force

RAYMOND ERICSON.

Joint Recital at 'Y'

MICHAEL TREE, violinist, and Heida Hermanns, pianist, appeared together at the Ninety-second Street Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association last night to perform four infrequently heard works.

These were Tartini's Sonata in G minor, Schubert's Sonatina in D, Bloch's "Poèmes mystique" and Strauss' Sonata in E flat major.

Both Mr. Tree and Miss Hermanns played efficiently, he with the forthright approach and tone that characterize his work generally, she with a careful, subdued pianism that sometimes seemed unduly tame and ladylike.

The entire evening was a trifle on the lifeless side, but this was probably due mostly to the major part of the music itself. Bloch and Strauss are not well represented by these particular works, each of which tends to go on and on, unaided by intrinsically interesting thematic materials.

As a result, one could all too easily give up listening for a moment or two at a time last night, only to find on resumption that the music seemed to be just about where it had been when he left it.

ALLEN HUGHES.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 6 1961

Bostonians Offer Works By Liszt at Carnegie Hall

By Francis D. Perkins

Rather than waiting until next fall to celebrate Franz Liszt's 150th birthday (Oct. 22) the Boston Symphony Orchestra took note of the anniversary in the last evening concert of this season's Carnegie Hall series yesterday, when Byron Janis was the soloist in both of the Liszt piano concertos.

The musicians under Charles Munch's direction began the program with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and also offered Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

Liszt's first concerto, in E flat major, is played here quite often; performances of the second, in A major, are less frequent, but the inclusion of both in a single concert is an exceptional event. It did not, however, prove to be an overdose of Liszt, especially since Mr. Janis played both concertos with a sense of understanding and enjoyment, and the Bostonians gave a similar impression in their share of these works.

To present them in reverse order was wise. Both concertos have readily memorable ideas, a wealth of color, an emotional range varying from appealing and meditative melodic sentiment to proclamative and striking musical oratory, but the A major concerto is less consistently absorbing than its predecessor, more repetition and more passages which seem to be a warming up for what is to follow, although its time span is shorter. But it also has much imposing music, along with opportunities for the display of technical prowess in which a consummately skillful pianist, such as Mr. Janis, can appropriately revel.

His playing had communicative zest along with both imposing maximum sonority and due delicacy in its well graduated dynamic range; there was absolute clarity, a generous array of color and exceptional brilliance. Mr. Janis also understood the works from an internal standpoint, presenting the array of moods with communicative conviction, realizing that this is music of its time, but not limited only to its own era.

The orchestral performance under Mr. Munch had a thorough interpretative rapport with Mr. Janis' playing, in mood, sonority and color and also in its pervasive spirit. There was also ample spirit in the clearly wrought performance of the Beethoven symphony in B flat, which was presented with stimulating momentum, but with a less comprehensive expressive range; Mr. Munch might well have lingered a little longer over the delectably lyric adagio. The "Siegfried Idyll" was played with more uneven merit; its line slackened unduly at times and the orchestra sometimes had an unwonted touch of tonal opacity. But various parts of the work, and especially its closing measures, gave a full account of its expressive resources.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
APR 6 1961

Concertos Link Liszt And Janis

Two mighty hands swept through two mighty concertos at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night. The hands belonged to Byron Janis, the concertos to Franz Liszt.

This was one more brilliant observance of the 150th anniversary of the birth of the great Hungarian composer and virtuoso. The aura of a great tradition hung vividly over both performances last night.

Mr. Janis certainly undertook a heroic assignment. There was also an element of risk. Two dazzling displays of fireworks may seem extravagant these days. But Mr. Janis made them exciting, and different.

There was the sheer technical power of the readings, to begin with. The tone was brilliant and iridescent. But there was more—the twilight poetry and broad repose that helps keep this music alive.

Listening to Mr. Janis play Liszt or Rachmaninoff, one might be tempted to type him as an exponent of the grand style. He is so much more, however—as concert after concert has revealed. Few pianists have his diversity of style.

As if stirred by both the composer and soloist, Charles Munch and the orchestra rose to new heights of virtuosity in the Liszt concertos. Also billed were Wagner's "Siegfried Idyl" and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

L. B.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 1961

1960

Janis Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, April 5.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Byron Janis, pianist. BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 4. WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll. LISZT: Piano Concertos No. 1 and 2.

Byron Janis is certainly celebrating the Liszt Anniversary in a big way—with both Piano Concertos. And it is difficult to imagine a more appropriately volatile pianist for these two show pieces. His was the kind of performance calculated to leave audiences shouting themselves hoarse and they did. His playing was of a savage, let-the-notes-fall-where-they-may genre and his lean, brittle tone sounded as if it might snap at any moment.

Whether or not Mr. Janis' playing was good Liszt or not depends on one's feeling for these pieces. If they are viewed only as effective virtuoso works, then one could ask little more from Mr. Janis.

Charles Munch and the Orchestra found themselves caught up in the wild drive of Mr. Janis' performances and gave him ideal support. As for the balance of the program, the Wagner went well enough but the Beethoven was stiff and unyielding. —John Ardoin

Poulenc Gloria In New York Premiere

Carnegie Hall, April 8.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Adele Addison, soprano. Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred N. Patterson, conductor. SCHUMANN: Overture to Genoveva. MENDELSSOHN: Octet for Strings, Op. 20 (transcribed for full orchestral strings). POULENC: Gloria, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra (New York Premiere).

First of all, let it be said that Francis Poulenc's new Gloria is an enchanting piece of music. Never have his melodic spontaneity, marvelous color sense, economy of style and wit been more felicitously combined.

Some of my readers may raise their eyebrows at my praising a religious work for its wit, but they should remember that Poulenc, like Mozart, Haydn, Schubert and hundreds of lesser masters, does not banish secular elements or earthiness from his sacred music. The 18th century would have laughed to scorn the Victorian conception of religious music as something solemn, stuffy and terribly respectable. Did not Bach use an aria originally composed in praise of the hunt in his B minor Mass?

What matters is that Poulenc never loses his sense of praise and respect, even in the jazzy Gloria and Laudamus Te or the bouncy Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris. The solo sections, like the Domine Deus, are exquisite and in quite another vein. The nature of God must remain an eternal mystery, but I, for one, shall never believe that He is a middle-class snob. We can praise Him in myriad tongues and accents and He will know if there is truth in our hearts.

The performance of this difficult work, with its reflections of Stravinsky, Prokofieff and even Mahler, was superb. Miss Addison is unquestionably one of the most musical sopranos before the public today. No matter where the tricky vocal line took her (sometimes gliding up to a high pianissimo note in a piquant harmonic context, as in the Domine Deus) her tone was always lovely and impeccably focussed. The chorus and orchestra were also brilliant and inspired. No wonder Mr. Munch and his guests enjoyed a prolonged ovation. This is an irresistible score.

Schumann's Overture to Genoveva is one of the masterpieces of German romanticism—as noble and powerful as Brahms and much fresher in lyric spontaneity. If the rest of the opera measures up to this introduction, it is a crime that we never get a chance to hear it. The Mendelssohn suffered from the thickening of texture, of course, but it was still a joy to hear it. Altogether, this concert was one of the most enjoyable that the Boston Symphony has given here in years.

—Robert Sabin

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 6 1961

196

Music: Janis' Virtuosity Brings Cheers

He Joins Bostonians in 2 Liszt Concertos

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THE chief point of interest at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall was the appearance of Byron Janis in both of the Liszt piano concertos. (Liszt did write several other works for piano and orchestra, but these are about the only ones in the repertory.) It was the first time New Yorkers had a chance to look at the pianist since his triumphant tour of the Soviet Union last fall.

Slim, sleek and romantic looking, Mr. Janis made a big hit last night. His playing was technically adroit, loud and forceful. Often he took complete charge, dominating the orchestra with massive chords and octaves. It was the kind of virtuosity that is bound to bring cheers, and cheers are what Mr. Janis received.

•

Whether or not it was good Liszt playing is another question. With all the impetuous drive that Mr. Janis brought to the music, his playing nevertheless lacked style. The chief drawback was tonal—a combination of an ugly-sounding, over-brilliant piano and Mr. Janis' naturally percussive keyboard attack. And we mean atttack.

The kind of hard, metallic sound he produced, especially in the treble, was not the medium for these concertos. It was more a Prokofieff kind of sound—bleak, powerful and not capable of much variety or nuance.

And while Mr. Janis exploited the virtuosity to the full, he seemed less sure of himself in the lyric passages. He had more trouble in this respect with the more lyrical A major Concerto. In the E flat, he had greater confidence, and the guess is that he has lived much longer with this concerto than the companion A major.

Anyway, Liszt piano music is not necessarily muscular, and it does not have to be banged out. There is such a thing as enormous strength without banging or bleakness, and Mr. Janis, with all of his brilliance, has not yet solved that secret.

Presumably, the coupling of the Liszt concertos on one program was Charles Munch's observation of the sesquicentennial of the composer's birth. He was born on Oct. 22, 1811. Mr. Munch led the orchestra in a carefully adjusted accompaniment. He worked very closely with Mr. Janis: conductor and pianist had a constant eye on each other, and they maintained a high quality of ensemble.

•

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" were the orchestral numbers on the program. Neither received an interesting performance. The Beethoven was routine, rather coarse, and even suffered from some out-of-tune passages, vis-à-vis winds and strings. In the "Siegfried Idyll," there was no underlying musical pulse. The constant tempo changes favored by Mr. Munch ended up defeating themselves.

Byron Janis

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor, with Byron Janis, pianist... At Carnegie Hall.
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven
Piano Concerto in A, No. 2 ..... Liszt
Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piano Concerto in E flat, No. 1 ... Liszt

Displays Craftsmanship, Volume and Force

was one of the better "Rigolettos" of the year. Robert Merrill sang the title role; Jan Peerce, the Duke; William Wildermann, Sparafucile; Mignon Dunn, Maddalena, and Louis Sgarro, Monterone. Nino Verchi conducted.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

Joint Recital at 'Y'

MICHAEL TREE, violinist, and Heida Hermanns, pianist, appeared together at the Ninety-second Street Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association last night to perform four infrequently heard works.

These were Tartini's Sonata in G minor, Schubert's Sonatina in D, Bloch's "Poème mystique" and Strauss' Sonata in E flat major.

Both Mr. Tree and Miss Hermanns played efficiently, he with the forthright approach and tone that characterize his work generally, she with a careful, subdued pianism that sometimes seemed unduly tame and ladylike.

The entire evening was a trifle on the lifeless side, but this was probably due mostly to the major part of the music itself. Bloch and Strauss are not well represented by these particular works, each of which tends to go on and on, unaided by intrinsically interesting thematic materials.

As a result, one could all too easily give an listening for a moment or two at a time last night, only to find on resumption that the music seemed to be just about where it had been when he left it.

ALLEN HUGHES.

Gianna D'Angelo Makes Debut at 'Met'

AT the tail end of its New York season, the Metropolitan Opera is presenting three artists in their debuts—an unusual practice but symbolic of the hectic cast changes the company has been forced to make all year.

Last night's debutante—the first of the three—was a slim, tall, exceedingly pretty soprano from Hartford by the name of Gianna D'Angelo, who is no stranger to the opera houses of Europe but who has sung very little in this country. It is to be hoped that the other two new singers prove as satisfactory and intriguing as she was.

Miss D'Angelo was heard as Gilda in the eighth and final performance this season of "Rigoletto." Her voice, of lyric-coloratura size, is clear and straightforward in quality, luminous when it is used softly, losing some of its perfect clarity when swelled in volume.

What was more important than the voice was the way the soprano used it. She sang with delightful self-confidence, almost triumphantly—and with good reason. Her pitch was faultless, and she could perform all the niceties of the coloratura with accuracy and control. Her turns and trills were charmingly delivered, and she made a lovely crescendo and diminuendo on a high note at the end of the "Caro nome" aria.

Gilda is one of Verdi's least attractive heroines—she is a complete ninny—and it gives little opportunity to judge the acting ability of a singer who takes the role. Miss D'Angelo was, properly, all innocence and girlishness in the second act (as given at the Metropolitan), all grief and horror in the following act. Here she sang with a fire and vehemence that almost carried her away—to the point of making a false entrance and singing a forced high note. But these were immaterial details and, overall, a favorable indication of temperament. The Metropolitan can use soprano with her flair.

Miss D'Angelo's presence seems to have sparked the performance last night, for it

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 6 1961

Bostonians Offer Works By Liszt at Carnegie Hall

By Francis D. Perkins

Rather than waiting until next fall to celebrate Franz Liszt's 150th birthday (Oct. 22) the Boston Symphony Orchestra took note of the anniversary in the last evening concert of this season's Carnegie Hall series yesterday, when Byron Janis was the soloist in both of the Liszt piano concertos.

The musicians under Charles Munch's direction began the program with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and also offered Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll."

Liszt's first concerto, in E flat major, is played here quite often; performances of the second, in A major, are less frequent, but the inclusion of both in a single concert is an exceptional event. It did not, however, prove to be an overdose of Liszt, especially since Mr. Janis played both concertos with a sense of understanding and enjoyment, and the Bostonians gave a similar impression in their share of these works.

To present them in reverse order was wise. Both concertos have readily memorable ideas, a wealth of color, an emotional range varying from appealing and meditative melodic sentiment to proclamative and striking musical oratory, but the A major concerto is less consistently absorbing than its predecessor, more repetition and more passages which seem to be a warming up for what is to follow, although its time span is shorter. But it also has much imposing music, along with opportunities for the display of technical prowess in which a consummately skillful pianist, such as Mr. Janis, can appropriately revel.

His playing had communicative zest along with both imposing maximum sonority and due delicacy in its well graduated dynamic range; there was absolute clarity, a generous array of color and exceptional brilliance. Mr. Janis also understood the works from an internal standpoint, presenting the array of moods with communicative conviction, realizing that this is music of its time, but not limited only to its own era.

The orchestral performance under Mr. Munch had a thorough interpretative rapport with Mr. Janis' playing, in mood, sonority and color and also in its pervasive spirit. There was also ample spirit in the clearly wrought performance of the Beethoven symphony in B flat, which was presented with stimulating momentum, but with a less comprehensive expressive range; Mr. Munch might well have lingered a little longer over the delectably lyric adagio. The "Siegfried Idyll" was played with more uneven merit; its line slackened unduly at times and the orchestra sometimes had an unwonted touch of tonal opacity. But various parts of the work, and especially its closing measures, gave a full account of its expressive resources.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
APR 6 1961

Concertos Link Liszt And Janis

Two mighty hands swept through two mighty concertos at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night. The hands belonged to Byron Janis, the concertos to Franz Liszt.

This was one more brilliant observance of the 150th anniversary of the birth of the great Hungarian composer and virtuoso. The aura of a great tradition hung vividly over both performances last night.

Mr. Janis certainly undertook a heroic assignment. There was also an element of risk. Two dazzling displays of fireworks may seem extravagant these days. But Mr. Janis made them exciting and different.

There was the sheer technical power of the readings, to begin with. The tone was brilliant and iridescent. But there was more—the twilight poetry and broad repose that helps keep this music alive.

Listening to Mr. Janis play Liszt or Rachmaninoff, one might be tempted to type him as an exponent of the grand style. He is so much more, however—as concert after concert has revealed. Few pianists have his diversity of style.

As he stirred by both the composer and soloist Charles Munch and the orchestra rose to new heights of virtuosity in the Liszt concertos. Also billed were Wagner's "Siegfried Idyl" and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

J. B.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 1961
1960

Janis Soloist With Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, April 5.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Byron Janis, pianist. BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 4. WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll. LISZT: Piano Concertos No. 1 and 2.

Byron Janis is certainly celebrating the Liszt Anniversary in a big way—with both Piano Concertos. And it is difficult to imagine a more appropriately volatile pianist for these two show pieces. His was the kind of performance calculated to leave audiences shouting themselves hoarse, and they did. His playing was of a savage, let-the-notes-fall-where-they-may genre and his lean, brittle tone sounded as if it might snap at any moment.

Whether or not Mr. Janis' playing was good Liszt or not depends on one's feeling for these pieces. If they are viewed only as effective virtuoso works, then one could ask little more from Mr. Janis.

Charles Munch and the Orchestra found themselves caught up in the wild drive of Mr. Janis' performances and gave him ideal support. As for the balance of the program, the Wagner went well enough but the Beethoven was stiff and unyielding.

—John Ardoin

Poulenc Gloria In New York Premiere

Carnegie Hall, April 8.—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Adele Addison, soprano. Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred N. Patterson, conductor. SCHUMANN: Overture to Genoveva. MENDELSSOHN: Octet for Strings, Op. 20 (transcribed for full orchestral strings). POULENC: Gloria, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra (New York Premiere).

First of all, let it be said that Francis Poulenc's new Gloria is an enchanting piece of music. Never have his melodic spontaneity, marvelous color sense, economy of style and wit been more felicitously combined.

Some of my readers may raise their eyebrows at my praising a religious work for its wit, but they should remember that Poulenc, like Mozart, Haydn, Schubert and hundreds of lesser masters, does not banish secular elements or earthiness from his sacred music. The 18th century would have laughed to scorn the Victorian conception of religious music as something solemn, stuffy and terribly respectable. Did not Bach use an aria originally composed in praise of the hunt in his B minor Mass?

What matters is that Poulenc never loses his sense of praise and respect, even in the jazzy Gloria and Laudamus Te or the bouncy Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris. The solo sections, like the Domine Deus, are exquisite and in quite another vein. The nature of God must remain an eternal mystery, but I, for one, shall never believe that He is a middle-class snob. We can praise Him in myriad tongues and accents and He will know if there is truth in our hearts.

The performance of this difficult work, with its reflections of Stravinsky, Prokofieff and even Mahler, was superb. Miss Addison is unquestionably one of the most musical sopranos before the public today. No matter where the tricky vocal line took her (sometimes sliding up to a high pianissimo note in a piquant harmonic context, as in the Domine Deus) her tone was always lovely and impeccably focused. The chorus and orchestra were also brilliant and inspired. No wonder Mr. Munch and his [illegible] enjoyed a prolonged ovation. This is an irresistible score.

Schumann's Overture to Genoveva is one of the masterpieces of German romanticism—as noble and powerful as Brahms and much fresher in lyric spontaneity. If the rest of the opera measures up to this introduction, it is a crime that we never get a chance to hear it. The Mendelssohn suffered from the thickening of texture, of course, but it was still a joy to hear it. Altogether, this concert was one of the most enjoyable that the Boston Symphony has given here in years.

—Robert Sabin

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (EVENING)
D. 219,463
APR 6 1961

Boston Symphony Has $2 Million Budget

By FRANCIS RACKEMANN

The Boston Symphony, which returns to the Lyric at 8.30 P.M. today as the second bonus for Wednesday series subscribers, gave its first concert on October 22, 1881, in Boston's old Music Hall.

When Symphony Hall was completed in the fall of 1900, the orchestra moved in and has made its permanent headquarters there ever since. Symphony Hall, owned and operated by the orchestra, is about the same size as the Lyric. It seats 2,631.

Today, the orchestra of 101 men and 3 women has an operating budget of $2,000,000. Ninety per cent of its expenses are earned through ticket sales, and revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees.

No Government Subsidy

This percentage of the budget earned through operations is one of the highest of any major orchestras in the United States. The orchestra receives no governmental subsidy for its activities within the United States. Earned income must be supplemented by private means to insure a balanced budget each year.

Additional income is earned through a volunteer organization known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra's winter season extends for 30 weeks between October and April. It is seven weeks longer than that of the Baltimore Symphony.

In its series the Boston Symphony offers 24 Friday afternoon, 24 Saturday evening, 6 Sunday afternoon concerts, 9 Tuesday evening concerts, 11 Tuesday evening programs (6 at Harvard University, 5 in Providence), 5 Wednesday evening and 5 Saturday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall.

7 Rehearsals Open

Seven orchestra rehearsals are open to the public. Tickets for these are sold on a series basis. About twenty concerts are given out of the city each season.

In addition to their winter season schedule, about 90 members of the symphony play with the Boston Pops, May to June, given each night, except Monday.

During July, thousands attend the Esplanade Concerts held in Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River embankment. Chairs are provided, but many sit on the grass or listen from moored boats in the basin. The free concerts are held six night a week.

Thousands At Tanglewood

Thousands of music lovers attend the Berkshire Festival during July and August at the orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass.

In 1940 the Boston Symphony established the Berkshire Music Center, a six-week summer school which operates in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival.

George Henschel served as the orchestra's first conductor from 1881 to 1884.

Charles Munch will conduct tomorrow's Lyric concert in Schumann's "Overture to Genoveva," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D 201,197 S 319 025
APR 2 1961

Music Notes

Two Symphonies To Appear Here

By WELDON WALLACE

TWO visiting symphony orchestras are booked for concerts at the Lyric Theater on successive evenings this week.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, making its last Baltimore appearance this season, will play music by Rachmaninoff Wednesday night, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist and Eugene Ormandy conducting.

The Boston Symphony, under the direction of Charles Munch, is scheduled Thursday night, presenting one of the concerts offered on the Baltimore Symphony's subscription series.

Mr. Ormandy has chosen the following Rachmaninoff compositions for Wednesday:

A transcription of the "Vocalise, Op. 34"; "Symphony No. 2 in E Minor," and "Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, for Piano and Orchestra."

Over a span of nearly a quarter of a century Rachmaninoff made 45 appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra, chiefly as pianist but also as conductor.

This orchestra gave the world premiere of several major works by the Russian, including his "Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini," which had its first performance in 1934 at the Lyric Theater, with the composer as soloist and Leopold Stokowski conducting.

Other Rachmaninoff works introduced to the world by the Philadelphia Orchestra were the first and third symphonies; the revised version of the fourth piano concerto; the tone poem, "The Bells," and the composer's last work, "Symphonic Dances."

Rachmaninoff's final Baltimore appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra took place in 1941, two years before his death, when he played his fourth concerto here.

Audition Winner

Eugene Istomin's career also has been associated closely with this orchestra. He was its guest pianist for the first time in 1943 when he appeared on a student program as a student audition winner. That year he also won the Leventritt Award and filled engagements with the New York Philharmonic and other major orchestras.

His career since that time has included annual tours as orchestral soloist and recitalist in many parts of the world.

Among his recordings with Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra are the concerto which he is to present here Wednesday, as well as Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto" and the Tchaikovsky "Concerto in B Flat Minor."

Thursday Program

The Boston Symphony's program Thursday night will be the fourteenth and next-to-last concert in the Baltimore Symphony's subscription series this season.

Charles Munch has selected the following program for this occasion:

Overture, "Genoveva".. Schumann
Octet for Strings in E Flat Major, Op. 20.....Mendelssohn
Symphony in D Minor .... Franck

Mr. Munch had a distinguished career in Europe before becoming the conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1949, succeeding Serge Koussevitzky.

The United States had had opportunity to become acquainted with him in the fall of 1948, when he made a tour of this country with the French Orchestre Nationale, visiting Baltimore, among other places.

Mr. Munch has traveled widely with the Boston Symphony. He took his orchestra on its first European tour in 1952, which was launched in Paris and which included Strasbourg, where the conductor was born in September, 1891.

In 1953 he and the orchestra visited the West Coast, and in 1956 another tour of Europe included performances in Moscow and Leningrad.

Last spring Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony gave concerts in Japan and other countries of the Far East.

EUGENE ISTOMIN

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 201,197 S. 319,025
MAR 31 1961

Symphony Offers 100 S.R.O. Tickets

Standing-room tickets for concerts to be given at the Lyric Theater by the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic orchestras are now on sale.

Both programs are included on the subscription series of the Baltimore Symphony.

The Boston Symphony is playing here Thursday night under the direction of Charles Munch. The program will include the overture to "Genoveva," by Schumann; the "Octet for Strings in E Flat Major," by Mendelssohn, and the Cesar Franck "Symphony in D Minor."

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the New York Philharmonic at the Lyric April 17, appearing also as piano soloist with that orchestra.

No seats are available for either concert because the Baltimore Symphony's subscription series was sold out at the beginning of the season.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 201,197 S. 319,025
APR 7 1961

Music Notes

Munch Conducts

By WELDON WALLACE

The audience was slow to leave the Lyric Theater last night, lingering not only to applaud but also, perhaps, hoping that Charles Munch would conduct the Boston Symphony in an encore after the orchestra's vitalized performance of Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

This program was presented as the fourteenth concert in the Baltimore Sympohny's subscription series. Few subscribers failed to occupy their seats. The only tickets for sale were for standing room, and a number of persons bought those.

Justly Consigned

The proceedings began with the overture to Schumann's single opera, "Genoveva," an opera long since forgotten and, if the overture is characteristic, justly consigned to obliviou.

The mystery is why Mr. Munch took the trouble to shake off the dust from this score. Even the expert performance could not vivify it.

Next came Mendelssohn's "Octet in E Flat Major," played by the Boston strings. This octet was a prodigious accomplishment for a composer only 16 years of age; yet even Mendelssohn's genius does not compensate for its adolescent traits.

It is monotonous in key, and while its motion is fluent and effortless, it gets nowhere. It is a treadmill.

In this case, too, the polished presentation did not make up for the lack of color in the music.

The Cesar Franck was a different story. Very rarely does one have opportunity to enjoy the merits of this symphony as one did last night.

Too ofter it is performed with an air of solemnity, as if it had the profundity or architectural grandeur of Brahms, or it is presented as if it had the majestic sweep of Wagner.

It is a work of different order. Aand it is quite inventive despite the obviousness of some of its devices, such as the abundance of sequences and the cyclical recurrence of motifs from movement to movement.

It can be sticky if played too richly.

Mr. Munch brought it a welcome Gallic vivacity. He kept it light, so that the winding patterns of chromatic harmonies did not become cloying, but had a certain airy charm, like changing reflections in a brook.

Even the stirring fanfares from the brass were not ponderous but had a quality of the open air. It was all buoyant.

This symphony was a fine piece with which to display the excellence of the Boston Symphony. The orchestra's tone had ample substance without satiety. The instruments responded supply and flexibly to the demands of the conductor.

This listener was reminded, by Munch's methods, of the admonition of Hamlet:

"Speak the speech . . . trippingly on the tongue."

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
D. 230,442 SAT. 212,569
APR 7 1961

MUNCH CONDUCTS

Boston Symphony Thrills Lyric Crowd

By R. P. HARRISS

Hearing two great symphony orchestras—perhaps the two greatest in the world—on successive nights is a heady experience. Those Lyric patrons who heard both the Boston Symphony last night and the Philadelphia Orchestra, the night before, doubtless are now making comparison.

Not to be coy about it, this listener found last night's Boston Symphony concert the more enjoyable, though he is by no means convinced of that orchestra's superiority over the Philadelphia. Ormandy simply chose a poor program. The Rachmaninoff 2nd Symphony is a melodic mishmash; the 2nd Piano Concerto is enjoyable but the soloist Istomin lacked fire.

THE BOSTON'S program was good. It consisted of Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, which introduced the romantic coloring of the evening; Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, in E-flat Major, which gave the strings a wonderful opportunity to show what they could do with this ingratiating orchestration; and Cesar Franck's D-minor Symphony, which gave the conductor, Charles Munch, an even more wonderful opportunity to show what he could do.

Munch is tall, strongly masculine, with a shock of iron-gray hair. Not the dancing-master type of conductor, he stood with feet together on the smallest podium ever seen here—about the size of a beer crate. But in the Franck symphony, when he drove relentlessly to achieve massive effects, he was Boanerges, the son of thunder.

HE HAS the trick of high gesticulation and exalted mane-shaking that used to see the late Hans Kindler through many a triumphant concert with the old National Symphony, when Kindler often made it seem a great orchestra. With the Boston, Munch has an orchestra that can make a conductor great.

The Boston's tone was not so smooth or unctious as the Philadelphia's. There was such brilliance in the first violins as to overbalance the rest. Yet the tonic crispness was invigorating. In the Franck D-minor the pizzicato had clarity and brightness markedly different from the slurred or strumming quality so often heard. The Boston's cellos and woodwinds also were most admirable.

THE BRASS seemed harsh and too loud, not comparable to the Philadelphia's or to the Baltimore Symphony's. In the final movement of the symphony, when Munch encouraged the brass to blow the B. & O. Dark Tower down, they damn' near did it. My left ear is ringing yet.

The large audience was roused to a frenzy, with many bravos and prolonged handclaps. I joined in heartily; for regardless of the too-loud brass, it was a gala concert.

198

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 18,240

APR 5 1961

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays At Brooklyn Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season on Friday evening, April 7, at 8:30 P.M. at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

The Orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn, will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period — Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven. Each composer is represented by a work seldom performed, giving the program unusual musical interest in works by master composers that are fresh and absorbing.

Schumann is represented by his Overture to the opera, "Genoveva", Mendelssohn by his Octet for Strings, in E flat major, Opus 20, and Beethoven by his Symphony No. 4 in B flat.

Tickets for this April 7 concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, priced at $3, $3.50, $4 and $4.50, are now on sale at the box-office.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,000

MAR 1 ? 1961

Munch Returns To Podium With Boston Group

Charles Munch will return to Brooklyn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, tonight, at 8:30 p.m. The noted conductor, who has recently returned from his annual mid-season vocation, will direct a program of music by Darius Milhaud, Serge Prokofiev and Cesar Franck.

As his soloist for this concert, Dr. Munch will introduce Joseph Silverstein, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first violin section, who has gained recognition for himself by his impressive showing sin two important competitions. Silverstein, who will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 63, was a prize winner in the Queen Elizabeth International Competition at Brussels in 1959, and followed his achievement by winning the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in New York last fall. The program will open with the Milhaud score for the ballet, "La Creation du monde." Following the intermission, Munch will conduct the familiar and beloved staple of the Boston Symphony Orchestra repertoire, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the only symphony the Belgian master composed.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200

MAR 3 1 1961

Boston Symphony To Play Final At Boro Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season next Friday evening, April 7, at 8:30 p.m. at Hhe Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. The Orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn, will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period —Robert Schuman, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven. Each composer is represented by a work seldom performed, giving the program unusual musical interest in works by master composers that are fresh and absorbing. Schuman is represented by his Overture to the opera, "Genoveva," Mendelssohn by his Octet for Strings, in E flat major, Opus 20, and Beethoven by his Symphony No. 4 in B flat.

The Schumann work has not been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1951, while Mendelssohn's Octet has not been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than forty years. The Beethoven symphony, of course, is more frequently played but this, too has not been heard in Brooklyn in recent years.

Mendelssohn's Octet, one of the most popular works in the chamber music repertoire, was composed in 1825.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 2,811

MAR 3 0 1961

Boston Symphony Makes Final Bow At Academy On April 7th

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season next Friday eveing, April 7, at 8:30 p.m. at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. The Orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn, will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period – Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven. Each composer is represented by a work seldom performed, giving the program unusual musical interest in works by master composers that are fresh and absorbing. Schumann is represented by his Overture to the opera, "Genoveva", Mendelssohn by his Octet for Strings, in E flat major, Opus 20, and Beethoven by his Symphony No. 4 in B flat.

The Schumann work has not been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1951, while Mendelssohn's Octet has not been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than forty years. The Beethoven symphony, of course, is more frequently played but this, too, has not been heard in Brooklyn in recent years.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W, 12,500

APR 1 1961

Boston Symphony Final Academy Bow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season next Friday evening, Apr. 7, at 8:30 p.m. at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. The orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn, will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period – Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven.

Mendelssohn's Octet, one of the most popular works in the chamber music repertoire, was composed in 1825 for a quartet of violins, two violas and two cellos. This Octet was the first of its kind and since its composition, has been considered a model of the type. Performed by an entire body of virtuoso players as make up the string sections of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the work is a genuine tour-de-force, an exciting cascade of tonal beauty.

Beethoven's Fourth Symphony was completed in 1806, and dedicated to the Count Franz von Oppersdorf. This symphony is typical of Beethoven's even-numbered works in that it has soft beauties.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 836,760 S. 1,195,553

APR 4 1961

Academy to Hear Munch, Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season on Friday at 8:30 p.m. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

THE ORCHESTRA, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's will be conducted by Charles Munch. The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period — Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven. Each composer is represented by a work seldom performed.

Schumann is represented by his overture to the opera, "Genoveva," Mendelssohn by his Octet for Strings, in E flat major, Opus 20, and Beethoven by his Symphony No. 4 in B flat.

The Schumann work has not been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1951, while Mendelssohn's Octet has not been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than 40 years. The eBethoven symphony is more frequently played, but this, too, has not been heard in Brooklyn in recent years.

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,035

MAR 3 0 1961

Academy Features German Composers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season Friday, April 7, at 8:30 p.m. at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. The Orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1880's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period — Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D: 39,650

APR 7 1961

Boston Symphony At Academy of Music Friday Night

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its fifth and last appearance of the 1960-61 season Friday evening, April 7, at 8:30 p.m. at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. The Orchestra, which has been coming to the Academy since the 1780's and whose appearances are woven into the cultural life of Brooklyn, will be conducted by Charles Munch, its Music Director.

The April 7 program is made up of music by three German composers of the romantic period – Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn and Ludwig von Beethoven. Each Composer is represented by a work seldom performed, giving the program unusual musical interest in works by master composers that are fresh and absorbing. Schumann is represented by his Overture to the opera, "Genoveva", Mendelssohn by his Octet for Strings, in E flat major, Opus 20, and Beethoven by his Symphony No. 4 in B flat.

Tickets for this April 7 concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at The Brooklyn Academy of Music priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50, are now on sale at the box-office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
MAR 25 1961

Chorus Pro Musica For Carnegie Hall

The Chorus pro musica, New England's busiest choral group, will board a bus at Copley Square early Saturday morning, April 8, for Carnegie Hall in New York where it has been invited by the Boston Symphony to sing Poulenc's "Gloria."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 7 1961

Symphony Notes Milestones

The Boston Symphony will climax its last Eastern tour for this season with a concert this Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The occasion is worth noticing for at least two reasons. First, it brings the orchestra to fine round numbers of seasons and concerts played in New York—75 and 700. Second, it adds one more to an already impressive list of New York premières by the Boston Symphony.

The first concert was in Steinway Hall in February of 1887, with Wilhelm Gericke conducting, three years before Carnegie Hall was built; and not a year has been missed from that time to now.

This Saturday's première will be the Poulenc "Gloria," in which the orchestra will be joined by Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica. Among this work's illustrious predecessors as New York "firsts" are the following:

Three important works of Richard Strauss—"Till Eulenspiegel," "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and "Death and Transfiguration."

Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Mahler's Fifth Symphony.

Bruckner's Eighth Symphony.

Debussy's "La Mer."

Dr. Karl Muck, on March 19, 1908, also had the distinction of conducting the first fully American program played in New York by a major orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
APR 10 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians End Carnegie Season

Poulenc's "Gloria," which brought the Boston Symphony's 75th season here to a close Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, honored more than it exalted the occasion.

This was the first local performance of the 24-minute work that is scored for soprano soloist, chorus and orchestra. It was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation and had its world premiere in Boston last Jan. 21. To complete the statistics, this was the 700th N. Y. concert by the orchestra.

With Charles Munch on the podium for the Bostonians and the Chorus Pro Musica, New England Choral group, the "Gloria's" joyousness and bouyancy offered a harbinger of the spring that appears to be around the corner but has yet to come into sight. Soprano Adele Addison sang the solo part with excellent musicality and dedication.

As an expression of spiritual ecstacy, however, the "Gloria" hardly fulfilled its purpose. As most everyone knows, its text forms the second portion of the Common of the Mass, Common meaning the sections in which the words remain the same for each Sunday.

Its six short, zestful movements were more a secular expression of the pagan spirit of exuberant rebirth, while the final portion, utilizing the words tu solus altissimus and cum sancto spiritu dispersed into a Debussy-like impressionism that took us right outdoors into the mood of plein air painting that inspired the elder Frenchman's diffuse, sensuous harmonies and languorous, extended phrases.

Master at Setting Words

The earlier part, which eschewed such indulgence, came closer to expressing the glory of God. But even here there was a carefree nonchalance that fashioned graceful, singable phrases but didn't transfigure the text.

As Poulenc is a master at setting words, the vocal lines were always singable and lovely. His music for Domine Deus as sung by the solo soprano, and ending on a dramatic leap from low to high on Deus, was an arresting moment and was handled with sensitive artistry by Miss Addison. The expertly trained Chorus Pro Musica proved an asset throughout.

Poulenc wrote the "Gloria" between May, 1959, and June, 1960, but judging by its superficiality, the composer gave less than his best in time and sweat to its composition. The result, for one of his distinction, was more truly the product of commission than inspiration.

As a whole, this final event by the Boston Symphony rocketed no royal salute to Euterpe. Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," which opened the program, was followed by Mendelssohn's youthful Octet for Strings in E Flat Major, Op. 20, a chamber music piece, overblown to symphonic proportions by having it played by the full string section.

Written when the composer was only 16, the Octet, while giving evidence of genius, hardly merited its place on this particular program. The most interesting movement is the feathery Scherzo which was played with virtuoso stealth by the ensemble. Considering its elfin charm and the breathtaking performance, it was over too soon. The movement is a gossamer precurser of the famous Scherzo to Mendelssohn's incidental music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," written 18 years later.

Music Tonight . . .

Metropolitan Opera: Puccini's "La Boheme" with American soprano Dorothy Coulter making her Met debut as Musetta, Victoria de los Angeles as Mimi, Dino Formichini as Rodolfo for first time here, Frank Valentino as Marcello, Giorgio Tozzi as Colline, George Cehanovsky as Schaunard, Thomas Schippers conducting, 8.

"Belshazzar," dramatic oratorio by Handel performed by the Cantata Singers, Thomas Dunn conducting, first complete local performance, soloists include soprano Saramae Endich, mezzo-soprano Betty Allen, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler, basso Tom Paul, Albert Fuller, harpsichord, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Mary Bothwell, soprano, Town Hall, 8:30.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
FEB 19 1961

Boston Bringing Poulenc's 'Gloria'

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Although Francis Poulenc's "Gloria," which had its world premiere in Symphony Hall on Jan. 21, was originally scheduled only for Boston, it will be heard in New York in the last concert of the Boston Symphony's Carnegie Hall series on Saturday afternoon, April 8. Adele Addison, soprano, and the Chorus Pro Musica, who sang in the Boston performances, will again take part. To quote the words of the orchestra's press representative, Harry Beall, Charles Munch effected a miracle in the rearrangement of a thousand schedules to enable Poulenc's latest work to be performed here.

The composer heard the Boston production of the "Gloria," which was described as exceedingly fine in a review written for the Herald Tribune by Cyrus Durgin, music critic of "The Boston Globe." The Herald Tribune's interest in this work, Mr. Beall intimated, played a considerable part in the decision to bring it to New York.

The April date makes it unlikely that the "Gloria" will suffer the vicissitudes of its introduction to Boston, where the snowstorm made Symphony Hall virtually inaccessible, and forced the postponement of the premiere from the originally set Friday to the following afternoon.

Berliners to Return

Herbert von Karajan and Karl Boehm will share the direction of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra when it makes its third American tour this fall, visiting twenty-three eastern cities of this country and Canada during four weeks. Mr. von Karajan will conduct the opening concert of the tour at Carnegie Hall on Friday night, Oct. 27, and a second program here on Oct. 29. The tour, to be managed by Columbia Artists Management, will end in Baltimore Nov. 22. The Berliners' previous American visits were in 1955 and 1956.

Meanwhile the Scottish National Orchestra may visit America for the first time in the fall of 1962; negotiations to that end are now under way between its conductor, Alexander Gibson, and the Columbia management.

Harvard Travelers

With $105,000 already in hand, the Harvard Glee Club will make its first concert tour of the Far East this summer under the direction of Professor Elliot Forbes. Sixty of the club's 150 members will [illegible] in Los Angeles on June 16 on the way to Japan for a three weeks' visit under the auspices of the Asahi newspaper chain, and will then go to Korea, Formosa, Hong Kong, the Philippines, Thailand and India, flying thence to Greece to sing in mid-August in the international music festival at Athens. The club is confident that it will not take long to raise the $25,000 necessary to complete the tour's budget.

The principal purpose of the trip is to acquaint the peoples of eastern Asia with our Western musical choral tradition, and to increase mutual understanding and good will between the East and the West. Besides regular concerts, plans for the tour include informal concerts with local student choruses, discussion groups, and living with families in each country whenever possible.

The singing student tourists will also illustrate lecture demonstration seminars to be given by Mr. Forbes before local university and musical groups. Before setting out, they will be briefed in weekly seminars on Far Eastern civilization.

Critics' Views Of Recent Music

Inge Borkh, singing the title role of "Elektra," was every inch of what Strauss envisaged in his score. . . . In his Symphony No. 2, introduced here by the Cleveland Orchestra, Easley Blackwood succeeded in holding the listener's attention to the end. . . . Luigi Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra, introduced to New York by the Boston Symphony, are by turns grim, apocryphal and emotionally sentient. . . . Elinor Ross, soprano, proved to be a singer of unusual consequence and promise in last Tuesday's Clarion Concert.

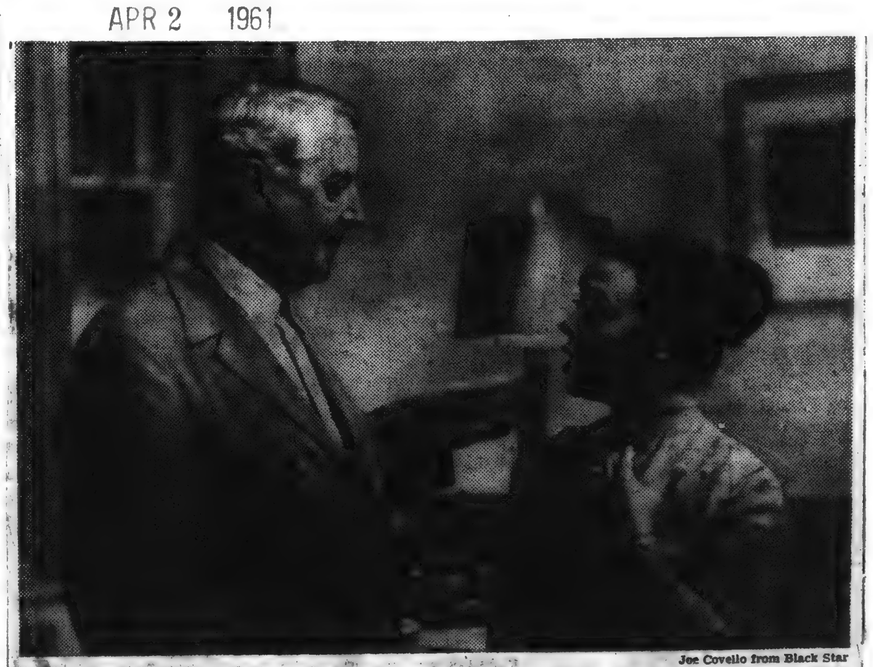
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 2 1961



Joe Covello from Black Star

POINTERS ON POULENC—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, which will give the first New York performance of the French composer's "Gloria" at Carnegie Hall on Saturday, discusses the choral work with the soprano soloist, Adele Addison.

165 Church Street — New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
APR 10 1961

Music

Bostonians Play 'Gloria'

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Though a composer of many moods, including the trivial and the frivolous, Francis Poulenc keeps gravitating towards the religious, like so many other French composers of our time.

The opera "Dialogue of the Carmelites" is by way of becoming a modern classic, and now there is a liturgical "Gloria" that will probably find its way into the repertory of every symphony orchestra.

A local premiere of the new score at the Boston Symphony concert Saturday afternoon spoke well for Poulenc's facility as craftsman and for his refreshing way of handling weighty matters lightly.

Never Pompous.

Not that the "Gloria" is all skill and glib urbanity. Poulenc takes his faith seriously, writes with depth and compassion at times and views eternity with awe. But he never grows solemn or pompous.

This is not to say that the "Gloria" is a wholly satisfactory score. Typically, it promises much in preface after preface to the six sections, only to lapse time and again into shallow commonplace.

What is good about it is the bright contrast of solo, chorus and orchestra, the lively eagerness of theme and the engaging lucidity of texture. Particularly good Saturday was the singing of Adele Addison.

I don't know when I heard that gifted soprano sing with such radiant ease and opulent tone. If Poulenc touched nobility in the solo line of this work, so did Miss Addison. It has been a proud season for Negro artists—proud for us all.

Charles Munch was unusually sensitive in conducting the Poulenc score. Commissioned two years ago, it may be deemed another feather in the capacious cap of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The Chorus Pro Musica brought vigor and finesse to its lines.

Sumptuous Treat.

Although Mendelssohn's "Octet" is doubtless best entrusted to eight strings, hearing it done by the entire string section of the Boston Symphony was like being invited to a small supper and then being regaled with a banquet. Who minds a fesast?

Certainly Mr. Munch and the musicians gave it sumptuous treatment. This is rich, savory writing, full of themes and counter-themes that open readily into larger servings. The crowd ate it up.

I have never known quite how to feel about the first number — Schumann's "Genoveva" overture. It strikes me as one of his brilliant near-misses—a brave misfit prelude to a misfit opera on which he wasted precious time and genius.

A weird by-product of Schumann's "Genoveva" opera is the fact that Offenbach, in his slanting Franch parody, "Genevieve de Brabant," wrote a snappy little tune that many years later became our Marine Corps Hymn.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S: 812,836
APR 10 1961

200

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Bostonians Exit On Joyous Note

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH AND THE BOSTON Symphony ended their 75th season in New York with distinction in Carnegie Hall last Saturday afternoon. They gave the first performance here of Poulenc's "Gloria." It is a beautifully written, expressive work.

Poulenc has composed in a jubilant mood. His religious fervor is infectious, imparted with personal urgency. He adheres to tonality, yet he uses sufficient dissonance to convey contemporary feeling. Indeed the idiom is so nicely fused that the work might redeem some present-day writing from further diffuseness.

The opening fanfare of dissonant trumpets links past and present in preparation for a strong, rhythmic pronouncement of the Gloria. Its measured tread suggests a Stravinsky ostinato more than once. With a feeling of vitalized faith imparted in the first two sections, the music leads to a soprano solo where the mood is much more personal and calm. This "Domine Deus" and the later one with the "Agnus Dei," soar on haunting melodies, reminding the listener of Poulenc's innate feeling for the human voice.

The solo entrance in the final chorus is a stroke of genius. For a religious work this Gloria is surprisingly lively. Some of the lovely melody sounds almost secular but never crosses the line. The music is distinguished for its emotional forcefulness, some of which is very moving.

Impressive Feat

Adele Addison sang the high soprano solos and the Chorus Pro Musica the four choral sections. The purity of Miss Addison's voice contributed notably to the mood of the performance, though she sang a few measures with some strain. The chorus was excellent. Mr. Munch conducted with a fervor complimentary to that in the score itself. It was an impressive performance.

The program began with Schumann's Overture "Genoveva" and included Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings. This extraordinary creation of a sixteen-year-old boy sounds remarkably mature, even today. It is so seldom heard that even an "inflated" performance with all the Boston strings is welcome.

The concert ran a bit short, for the "Gloria" turned out to be a relatively brief work for the second half of a concert. Since this one ended the season, such procedure might not be called altogether timely.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 9 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloists, Adele Addison, soprano; and the Chorus Pro Musica. The program:
Overture to "Genoveva".....Schumann
Octet for Strings in E flat major, Op. 20 Mendelssohn
Gloria for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra (first N. Y. performance) Poulenc

By Paul Henry Lang

To write church music nowadays is to invite a charge of antiquarianism. Francis Poulenc, whose "Gloria" for soprano solo, mixed chorus, and orchestra was given its first New York performance yesterday by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, evidently realizes this and tries to meet it in advance. How far he succeeds is for the individual listener to decide, and his judgment will be influenced by what he personally understands by "church music."

After a good many centuries, individualism in church music, given its rope, contrived after a lot of fuss to hang itself. Now we are moving toward a uniform, stereotyped existence in which adventures will not be encouraged, and from which no living escape will be possible. There seems to be no comfort save in remembering things as they used to be.

However, if poetic sentiment and warmth of expression no longer move us, since artistic fashions have it so, the emotions themselves are constant. This able and brilliantly skillful French composer's appeal alike to the sophisticated and the simple is rendered possible only by his expression of emotions in which to a lesser or greater degree all can share. In his latest work he has once more shown a certain quality of sweet reasonableness which makes him an admirable artist with a capacity for clear and persuasive realization of his intentions.

Mr. Poulenc is not like those famous French poets of the last century who reached a stage where the sole choice that remained to them was between the cross and suicide; a thread of meditation does run through his "Gloria," but he does not write with simulated gravity, and while he is of course no mossback, his sympathy is evidently with the old ways and working craft.

Mr. Poulenc is a spontaneous composer whose chief danger lies in his facility, and one is at times conscious of the craftsman's professional gratification pure and simple without spiritual implications. But is this not true of all music, sacred or secular? The church composer is like the inveterate old bachelor who marries his housekeeper for reasons of expediency.

Theologians have always doubted whether divine transcendence can really be conceived by the human mind on the plane of esthetics. One cannot help feeling that it is perhaps frivolous to attempt with such transparent cleverness an imitation of the highest altitudes of religious art, and yet one must admit that Mr. Poulenc's "Gloria" is not only clever, beautifully made, and effective, but good music.

Mr. Munch, who seemed bored in the first half of the program, a very tepid program, came to life in the "Gloria" and with excellent support both from the orchestra and the Pro Musica Chorus, rendered the composer honest and understanding service. But the highest compliment goes to the soloist, Adele Addison, whose singing was enthralling. In the Domine Jesu the tricky vocalizations were floated with impressive skill and security, and especially her upward inflections were hauntingly beautiful as they ended on an unerringly centered high tone, pianissimo, but clearly audible in the big hall.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
APR 1961

The Boston Symphony has re-arranged its Carnegie Hall program for April 8 and will present the first New York hearing of Poulenc's new "Gloria," with Charles Munch conducting the same forces that recently gave its U. S. premiere in Boston . . . The Mobile Opera Guild, under Fredric Kurzweil, presented Verdi's "Falstaff" on March 14 and 15. . . .

Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra has engaged Zubin Mehta as a conductor for three years, beginning in 1962; Mr. Mehta will share the podium with Georg Solti, musical director of the Philharmonic . . . The contract of Edvard Fendler as music director of the Beaumont (Tex.) Symphony Orchestra has been extended for three more years by the board of directors, after his completion of four seasons with the orchestra. . . .

Mr. Mehta has also been appointed music director of the Montreal Symphony . . . Conductors' contracts recently renewed were those of Fritz Mahler, music director of the Hartford Symphony, for another three years, and Edouard van Remoortel, who will again lead the St. Louis Symphony in 1961-62. . . .

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 9 1961

POULENC'S GLORIA IN PREMIERE HERE

Religious Work Is Played at Carnegie Hall by Boston Symphony Under Munch

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Religion and music may be synonymous. As far back as mankind measures itself, music has been an adjunct to worship. And, coming to our own times, composers have expressed their world in relation to the Deity in as many ways as there are composers. With Handel it was a direct, confident outburst. With Bach it could be introverted and tortured. With Fauré it was angelic, sweet and otherworldly. With Verdi it was melodramatic, fiery and passionate.

The latest composition of a celebrated composer to join that company is the Gloria of Francis Poulenc. A good portion of his output has been devoted to ecclesiastical scores. Even his most ambitious work, the "Dialogue of the Carmelites," is an opera with a religious setting. M. Poulenc's Gloria received its first New York hearing yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Charles Munch, conductor, with the Chorus Pro Musica and Adele Addison soprano At Carnegie Hall.
Overture to Genoveva.....Schumann
Octet for Strings.....Mendelssohn
Gloria (first New York performance).....Poulenc

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony and the Chorus Pro Musica in this performance. The soprano soloist was Adele Addison. Mr. Poulenc composed the Gloria as the result of a Koussevitzky Music Foundation commission. He completed it about a year ago.

It is not too long a work — slightly over twenty minutes. Four of the six sections are for chorus and two are soprano solos, though the soprano also has a brief solo entry in the concluding "Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris." There is a sharp division in mood between choruses and solos. The former are jaunty and even jolly; the latter are introspective, heartfelt and subdued.

Poulenc's idiom is conservative, and this score is full of his fingerprints, even extending to a type of melodic formula that turns up in almost everything he has written. The term "formula" is not used in a derogative sense. Every composer has his formulas; they are what makes him, and they cannot be avoided. The stronger the composer, the more pronounced his personality.

The work opens with a burst of fanfares, strongly Renaissance in feeling. A touch of Stravinsky can be felt here and there, though never to a point where one felt any specific derivation. Perhaps the heart of the work is in its two solos. The first spins a long and piercing melody, with several haunting cadences. The second opens with a rather unusual vocal line (repeated several times later on), in which the words "Domine Deus" rise almost to a shriek.

There is nothing complicated about the Gloria. It is, on the whole, simple, emotionally direct and, in its choruses, surprisingly lively for its subject. It also has those elements of sophistication, chic, and superficiality, too, never very far from Poulenc. How much staying power the score has remains to be seen. On first hearing it was an attractive and beautifully written work, with some melodic sections of unusual distinction.

The performance sounded perfectly finished and assured. Mr. Munch led the orchestra and his fine chorus with fervor and obvious stylistic assurance. And Miss Addison, as always, sang with freedom, taste and clarity.

Otherwise the program was devoted to Schumann's Genoveva Overture and Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, played by the entire Boston string section. Mendelssohn himself may have sanctioned such a procedure, but it still remains in dubious taste; and a full string complement thickens one of the most delicately adjusted pieces of chamber music in the literature.

There is plenty of original music for string orchestra—the Bartók Divertimento, Elgar's Introduction and Allegro, Dvorak's Serenade in E, to mention but three—and a conductor wishing to show off his string section should turn to these, rather than to an overblown quasi-transcription that inevitably must fail.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 818,802 S: 812,836
APR 10 1961

200

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Bostonians Exit On Joyous Note

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH AND THE BOSTON Symphony ended their 75th season in New York with distinction in Carnegie Hall last Saturday afternoon. They gave the first performance here of Poulenc's "Gloria." It is a beautifully written, expressive work.

Poulenc has composed in a jubilant mood. His religious fervor is infectious, imparted with personal urgency. He adheres to tonality, yet he uses sufficient dissonance to convey contemporary feeling. Indeed the idiom is so nicely fused that the work might redeem some present-day writing from further diffuseness.

The opening fanfare of dissonant trumpets links past and present in preparation for a strong, rhythmic pronouncement of the Gloria. Its measured tread suggests a Stravinsky ostinato more than once. With a feeling of vitalized faith imparted in the first two sections, the music leads to a soprano solo where the mood is much more personal and calm. This "Domine Deus" and the later one with the "Agnus Dei," soar on haunting melodies, reminding the listener of Poulenc's innate feeling for the human voice.

The solo entrance in the final chorus is a stroke of genius. For a religious work this Gloria is surprisingly lively. Some of the lovely melody sounds almost secular but never crosses the line. The music is distinguished for its emotional forcefulness, some of which is very moving.

Impressive Feat

Adele Addison sang the high soprano solos and the Chorus Pro Musica the four choral sections. The purity of Miss Addison's voice contributed notably to the mood of the performance, though she sang a few measures with some strain. The chorus was excellent. Mr. Munch conducted with a fervor complimentary to that in the score itself. It was an impressive performance.

The program began with Schumann's Overture "Genoveva" and included Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings. This extraordinary creation of a sixteen-year-old boy sounds remarkably mature, even today. It is so seldom heard that even an "inflated" performance with all the Boston strings is welcome.

The concert ran a bit short for the "Gloria" turned out to be a relatively brief work for the second half of a concert. Since this one ended the season, such procedure might not be called altogether timely.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 9 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloists, Adele Addison, soprano; and the Chorus Pro Musica. The program:

Overture to "Genoveva" ..... Schumann
Octet for Strings in E flat major, Op. 20 ..... Mendelssohn
Gloria for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra (first N. Y. performance) ..... Poulenc

By Paul Henry Lang

To write church music nowadays is to invite a charge of antiquarianism. Francis Poulenc, whose "Gloria" for soprano solo, mixed chorus, and orchestra was given its first New York performance yesterday by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, evidently realizes this and tries to meet it in advance. How far he succeeds is for the individual listener to decide, and his judgment will be influenced by what he personally understands by "church music."

After a good many centuries, individualism in church music, given its rope, contrived after a lot of fuss to hang itself. Now we are moving toward a uniform, stereotyped existence in which adventures will not be encouraged, and from which no living escape will be possible. There seems to be no comfort save in remembering things as they used to be.

However, if poetic sentiment and warmth of expression no longer move us, since artistic fashions have it so, the emotions themselves are constant. This able and brilliantly skillful French composer's appeal alike to the sophisticated and the simple is rendered possible only by his expression of emotions in which to a lesser or greater degree all can share. In his latest work he has once more shown a certain quality of sweet reasonableness which makes him an admirable artist with a capacity for clear and persuasive realization of his intentions.

Mr. Poulenc is not like those famous French poets of the last century who reached a stage where the sole choice that remained to them was between the cross and suicide; a thread of meditation does run through his "Gloria," but he does not write with simulated gravity, and while he is of course no mossback, his sympathy is evidently with the old ways and working craft.

Mr. Poulenc is a spontaneous composer whose chief danger lies in his facility, and one is at times conscious of the craftsman's professional gratification pure and simple without spiritual implications. But is this not true of all music, sacred or secular? The church composer is like the inveterate old bachelor who marries his housekeeper for reasons of expediency.

Theologians have always doubted whether divine transcendence can really be conceived by the human mind on the plane of esthetics. One cannot help feeling that it is perhaps frivolous to attempt with such transparent cleverness an imitation of the highest altitudes of religious art, and yet one must admit that Mr. Poulenc's "Gloria" is not only clever, beautifully made, and effective, but good music.

Mr. Munch, who seemed bored in the first half of the program, a very tepid program, came to life in the "Gloria" and with excellent support both from the orchestra and the Pro Musica Chorus, rendered the composer honest and understanding service. But the highest compliment goes to the soloist, Adele Addison, whose singing was enthralling. In the Domine Jesu, the tricky vocalizations were floated with impressive skill and security, and especially her upward inflections were hauntingly beautiful as they ended on an unerringly centered high tone, pianissimo, but clearly audible in the big hall.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
APR 1961

The Boston Symphony has re-arranged its Carnegie Hall program for April 8 and will present the first New York hearing of Poulenc's new "Gloria," with Charles Munch conducting the same forces that recently gave its U. S. premiere in Boston . . . The Mobile Opera Guild, under Fredric Kurzweil, presented Verdi's "Falstaff" on March 14 and 15. . . .

Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra has engaged Zubin Mehta as a conductor for three years, beginning in 1962; Mr. Mehta will share the podium with Georg Solti, musical director of the Philharmonic . . . The contract of Edvard Fendler as music director of the Beaumont (Tex.) Symphony Orchestra has been extended for three more years by the board of directors, after his completion of four seasons with the orchestra. . . .

Mr. Mehta has also been appointed music director of the Montreal Symphony . . . Conductors' contracts recently renewed were those of Fritz Mahler, music director of the Hartford Symphony, for another three years, and Edouard van Remoortel, who will again lead the St. Louis Symphony in 1961-62. . . .

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 9 1961

POULENC'S GLORIA IN PREMIERE HERE

Religious Work Is Played at Carnegie Hall by Boston Symphony Under Munch

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Religion and music may be synonymous. As far back as mankind measures itself, music has been an adjunct to worship. And, coming to our own times, composers have expressed their world in relation to the Deity in as many ways as there are composers. With Handel it was a direct, confident outburst. With Bach it could be introverted and tortured. With Fauré it was angelic, sweet and otherworldly. With Verdi it was melodramatic, fiery and passionate.

The latest composition of a celebrated composer to join that company is the Gloria of Francis Poulenc. A good portion of his output has been devoted to ecclesiastical scores. Even his most ambitious work, the "Dialogue of the Carmelites," is an opera with a religious setting. M. Poulenc's Gloria received its first New York hearing yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony and the Chorus Pro Musica in this performance. The soprano soloist was Adele Addison. Mr. Poulenc composed the Gloria as the result of a Koussevitzky Music Foundation commission. He completed it about a year ago.

It is not too long a work — slightly over twenty minutes. Four of the six sections are for chorus and two are soprano solos, though the soprano also has a brief solo entry in the concluding "Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris." There is a sharp division in mood between choruses and solos. The former are jaunty and even jolly; the latter are introspective, heartfelt and subdued.

Poulenc's idiom is conservative, and this score is full of his fingerprints, even extending to a type of melodic formula that turns up in almost everything he has written. The term "formula" is not used in a derogative sense. Every composer has his formulas; they are what makes him, and they cannot be avoided. The stronger the composer, the more pronounced his personality.

The work opens with a burst of fanfares, strongly Renaissance in feeling. A touch of Stravinsky can be felt here and there, though never to a point where one felt any specific derivation. Perhaps the heart of the work is in its two solos. The first spins a long and piercing melody, with several haunting cadences. The second opens with a rather unusual vocal line (repeated several times later on), in which the words "Domine Deus" rise almost to a shriek.

There is nothing complicated about the Gloria. It is, on the whole, simple, emotionally direct and, in its choruses, surprisingly lively for its subject. It also has those elements of sophistication, chic, and superficiality, too, never very far from Poulenc. How much staying power the score has remains to be seen. On first hearing it was an attractive and beautifully written work, with some melodic sections of unusual distinction.

The performance sounded perfectly finished and assured. Mr. Munch led the orchestra and his fine chorus with fervor and obvious stylistic assurance. And Miss Addison, as always, sang with freedom, taste and clarity.

Otherwise the program was devoted to Schumann's Genoveva Overture and Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, played by the entire Boston string section, Mendelssohn himself may have sanctioned such a procedure, but it still remains in dubious taste; and a full string complement thickens one of the most delicately adjusted pieces of chamber music in the literature.

There is plenty of original music for string orchestra—the Bartók Divertimento, Elgar's Introduction and Allegro, Dvorak's Serenade in E, to mention but three—and a conductor wishing to show off his string section should turn to these, rather than to an overblown quasi-transcription that inevitably must fail.

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Charles Munch, conductor, the Chorus Pro Musica and Adele Addison soprano at Carnegie Hall.

Overture to Genoveva ..... Schumann
Octet for Strings ..... Mendelssohn
Gloria (first New York performance) ..... Poulenc

N.Y. TIMES IV·19·61

Carter, Foss and Poulenc Works Get Music Critics Circle Awards

Lukas Foss

Francis Poulenc

Elliott Carter

Lukas Foss, Elliott Carter and Francis Poulenc are the winners of this year's awards of the Music Critics Circle of New York.

Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" for soprano and orchestra was the winner in the orchestral category. Mr Carters String Quartet No. 2 was an easy victor in the chamber music category. M. Poulenc's "Gloria" was judged the best choral work. The Circle voted to give no award in the opera category.

The prizes were awarded this year for the best new works in an extended period that included all of 1960 and the first four and a half months of 1961. The Circle has given its awards in the past on the basis of calendar years. The extended award period represents a transition to season awards.

In spite of the longer period and the larger numbers of works under consideration, the decisions were much more clear cut than they have been in recent years. All won on the first ballot.

The Carter work, which was first performed by the Juilliard Quartet on March 25, 1960, received all the votes but one. This was cast for Ned Rorem's Trio for Flute, 'Cello and Piano. The Carter, which has been performed in New York twice since its première, was widely praised and won last year's Pulitzer Prize.

Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" was performed by Adele Addison and the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein on Oct. 20 of last year. It was written for Miss Addison at her request on a Ford Foundation Commissioning Program grant. The work has several unusual features including a passage in which the players of the orchestra softly count out loud.

The work employs a number of different texts in different languages, all referring to time. The composer has indicated that he plans to add two more sections to it.

The Philharmonic performance also included non-vocal sections that were improvised by Mr. Foss, who is a pianist, with an instrumental ensemble. These interludes are considered by the composer to be an optional part of the work. The Circle did not take a position on whether the award referred only to the composed part or included the improvisations.

Other compositions that received votes in the orchestral category were William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, Ben Weber's Piano Concerto, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, George Rochberg's Symphony No. 2 and Gunther Schuller's "Spectra."

Miss Addison participated also in the first New York performance of the Poulenc "Gloria" on April 8. She sang with the Boston Symphony and the Chorus Pro Musica under Charles Munch. The only other work to receive votes in the choral category was Frank Martin's "Le Vin Herbé."

In the opera category, votes were cast for Werner Egk's "The Inspector General," Stanley Hollingsworth's "The Mother" and Poulenc's "La Voix Humaine."

NY HERALD-TRIBUNE IV·19·61

Music Critics Honor Carter, Foss, Poulenc

The New York Music Critics' Circle has chosen two American works and a French composition for its 1961 awards for music performed for the first time in New York since Jan. 1, 1960. "Time Cycle," by the German-born American composer, Lukas Foss, was the orchestral choice, and Elliott Carter's String Quartet No. 2 was selected in the chamber music category. Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" was the winning choral work. The Foss and Carter works were both chosen on the first ballot by a large majority.

Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" was first played by the New York Philharmonic at Carnegie Hall on Oct. 20, 1960, with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Adele Addison the soprano soloist. Mr. Carter's work was introduced by the Juilliard String Quartet in the Juilliard Concert Hall on March 25, 1960, and the "Gloria," by one of France's foremost composers, was presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Pro Musica Chorus of Boston at Carnegie Hall on April 8, 1961, with Charles Munch conducting.

No awards were made in the operatic category. Since the Circle's 1960 awards were for music introduced to New York during the calendar year of 1959, those announced yesterday covered all of 1960 and the first fifteen weeks of 1961.

BLANK PAGE

202

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

204

BLANK PAGE

266

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 15, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in G major, No. 88

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Largo
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ..... "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") for Tenor, Contralto, and Orchestra

I. Das Trinklied vom Jammer der Erde (The Drinking-Song of Earth's Sorrow) — Tenor
II. Der Einsame im Herbst (The Lonely One in Autumn) — Contralto
III. Von der Jugend (Of Youth) — Tenor
IV. Von der Schönheit (Of Beauty) — Contralto
V. Der Trunkene im Frühling (The Drunken One in Springtime) — Tenor
VI. Der Abschied (The Farewell) — Contralto

SOLOISTS

EUNICE ALBERTS, Contralto DAVID LLOYD, Tenor

This program will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICT

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 15 1961

Burgin Conducts Poetic 'Song of the Earth'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 22d program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, presented Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major, and "The Song of the Earth" by Gustav Mahler. The soloists were Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Once again Richard Burgin has put us in his debt, both because he is devoted to the music of Gustav Mahler, and because he conducts it so poetically and so beautifully. This week, spelling Dr. Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony, he has revived "The Song of the Earth." As it turns out, these performances are 11 years to the day since this unique song cycle-symphony last was heard at these concerts. Then as now, Burgin conducted it.

Having heard "The Song of the Earth" nearly a dozen times—and more than that from records—this chronicler is at a loss to understand why there are some who still dislike it. But so it is, and not a few walked out yesterday during its course — though only they could say whether social occasion rather than musical rejection prompted them to leave. Ah, well—de gustibus, etc.

"The Song of the Earth" is both musicians' and listeners' music — a fascinating and extraordinarily difficult tissue of instrumental weavings, crowned with the vocal parts that hover like a luminous halo or emerge in strength and ardor from the depths of Mahler's large orchestra. There is more than that, too, for the melodic intensity of the voices, conveying the Chinese poet's and Mahler's mood of resignation amid the unfailing rebirth of the world at Spring, is a fundamental aspect of the human spirit.

Taking it, and other late music of Mahler, in a larger sense, as Ernest Newman so perceptively did, "The Song of the Earth" may be regarded as a clairvoyant lamentation for the approaching dissolution of civilized beauty which Mahler, dying in 1911, fortunately did not remain to see. His world was consumed in the flames of the first World War, and another world was known thereafter.

But whether taken as general or personal, this unparalleled blend of art song and symphonic procedure is poetic beauty of the greatest intensity and the most profound feeling. Perhaps there never was an ideal performance of "The Song of the Earth," for while there are orchestras to play it, voices of the amplitude and richness to be heard fully with the huge Mahler orchestration, are always few.

Eunice Alberts is a musician who sings with high talent for re-creating poetry, and her voice is one of loveliness. She had some trouble with high notes, and some with the lower reaches of her part, but most of it was set forth very well, indeed. That last passionate outburst, "Die liebe Erde" brought tears to the eyes. What one missed was the power to make just discernible against the orchestra the reiterated cry of "Ewig! Ewig!"

With Lloyd it was all a matter of bright, robust tone, which came over quite well in the first song, "The Drinking Song of Earthly Sorrow." He did not muster much poetry, however, either for "Of Youth" or "The Drunken One in Spring."

In the orchestra from first measure to last, was eloquence and sheer beauty of a great orchestral sound. Burgin has a rare touch for Mahler, complete command of its emotional ebb and flow, its involved contrapuntal weavings, and of the strict balance of instruments and sections which makes this tonal fabric clear. A memorable performance by the highly esteemed associate conductor of our Orchestra!

He also is extraordinarily good with Haydn, whose Symphony No. 88, last heard in these series 15 years ago, made a perfect contrast for Mahler.

Next week, Dr. Munch will perform the entire "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

APR 2 1961

Mahler 'Song Of the Earth'

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next Symphony Hall concerts, Apr. 14 and 15. His program will consist of Mahler's "The Song of the Earth" and Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major. Soloists in Mahler will be Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

This coming week conductor Charles Munch and the Orchestra will make their final trip of the season to New York and other cities.

Dr. Munch will conduct the last Sunday concert of the season at Symphony Hall Apr. 16. The program will be Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, and the Beethoven Fourth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

APR 12 1961

Symphony Programs

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening (2:15 and 8:30) in a program combining Haydn's Symphony No. 88 with Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will be contralto and tenor soloists in the latter work.

Charles Munch will return to conduct final concerts in the Sunday afternoon Symphony Hall series and at Sanders Theater Tuesday evening, April 18. His program at each will consist of Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

APR 15 1961

'The Song of the Earth' at the Symphony

Mahler Cycle Revived by Burgin

By Harold Rogers

Richard Burgin can be counted on to bring us Mahler at least once a season, for which we can never praise him too highly. There is no other composer who strums the lyre of human emotions in quite the same way —a late-romantic Weltschmerz that takes us away to scenes we seem to know well, but have never really known.

Mahler's mysticism is earth-bound; he seldom reaches for the unknowable but for the easily imagined; he brings us to Bulwer-Lytton's "lost land, that soft clime, in the crimson evening weather." His death-wishes burgeon in great heaving sighs, swelling from the orchestra in minor moods made all the more poignant by quavering turns and weeping mordants.

His "The Song of the Earth," featured by Mr. Burgin at the Boston Symphony's weekend concerts, touches the more carefree "Songs of a Wayfarer" with the one hand and the grieving strains of the "Kindertotenlieder" with the other. At one moment the tenor is in a carousing mood (two of his three songs are in roisterous praise of drink) and at another the contralto is longing for heartease (one can easily imagine her staring through the window on a rainy afternoon).

For his soloists Mr. Burgin has selected David Lloyd and Eunice Alberts, both of whom are nobly equipped for "Das Lied von der Erde." It was good to see them again on the same stage yesterday afternoon; for some years they worked together in Boris Goldovsky's New England Opera Theater. Their young voices are now supported by the maturity of experience. Both earned the cheers that rang forth so readily at the conclusion.

True, Mr. Lloyd had to outshout a churning orchestra in the two drunken songs, but he has the lungs for it. And given an opportunity for poetry, as he was in "Of Youth," he has the heart for that, too.

But the loveliest lines fell to Miss Alberts and to her gorgeous contralto. She did not merely sing of "The Lonely One in Autumn"; she herself was the girl; and when she closed with "The Farewell," her voice faded with a hopeless finality.

Mr. Burgin let the orchestra have its head, as he usually does, and the music splashed around a bit. Yet it was good to hear the players a little giddy, as youngsters in a pool when school lets out.

His reading of the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 88, was casual in the same ingratiating way. There are only the two pieces on the program, with Haydn coming first and passing by quickly to leave the time, and the twilight, to Mahler.

266

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 15, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in G major, No. 88

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Largo
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

INTERMISSION

MAHLER . . . . . "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") for Tenor, Contralto, and Orchestra

I. Das Trinklied vom Jammer der Erde (The Drinking-Song of Earth's Sorrow)
Tenor
II. Der Einsame im Herbst (The Lonely One in Autumn)
Contralto
III. Von der Jugend (Of Youth)
Tenor
IV. Von der Schönheit (Of Beauty)
Contralto
V. Der Trunkene im Frühling (The Drunken One in Springtime)
Tenor
VI. Der Abschied (The Farewell)
Contralto

SOLOISTS

EUNICE ALBERTS, Contralto DAVID LLOYD, Tenor

This program will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 15 1961

Burgin Conducts Poetic 'Song of the Earth'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 22d program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, presented Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major, and "The Song of the Earth" by Gustav Mahler. The soloists were Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Once again Richard Burgin has put us in his debt, both because he is devoted to the music of Gustav Mahler, and because he conducts it so poetically and so beautifully. This week, spelling Dr. Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony, he has revived "The Song of the Earth." As it turns out, these performances are 11 years to the day since this unique song cycle-symphony last was heard at these concerts. Then as now, Burgin conducted it.

Having heard "The Song of the Earth" nearly a dozen times—and more than that from records—this chronicler is at a loss to understand why there are some who still dislike it. But so it is, and not a few walked out yesterday during its course — though only they could say whether social occasion rather than musical rejection prompted them to leave. Ah, well—de gustibus, etc.

"The Song of the Earth" is both musicians' and listeners' music — a fascinating and extraordinarily difficult tissue of instrumental weavings, crowned with the vocal parts that hover like a luminous halo or emerge in strength and ardor from the depths of Mahler's large orchestra. There is more than that, too, for the melodic intensity of the voices, conveying the Chinese poet's and Mahler's mood of resignation amid the unfailing rebirth of the world at Spring, is a fundamental aspect of the human spirit.

Taking it, and other late music of Mahler, in a larger sense, as Ernest Newman so perceptively did, "The Song of the Earth" may be regarded as a clairvoyant lamentation for the approaching dissolution of civilized beauty which Mahler, dying in 1911, fortunately did not remain to see. His world was consumed in the flames of the first World War, and another world was known thereafter.

But whether taken as general or personal, this unparalleled blend of art song and symphonic procedure is poetic beauty of the greatest intensity and the most profound feeling. Perhaps there never was an ideal performance of "The Song of the Earth," for while there are orchestras to play it, voices of the amplitude and richness to be heard fully with the huge Mahler orchestration, are always few.

Eunice Alberts is a musician who sings with high talent for re-creating poetry, and her voice is one of loveliness. She had some trouble with high notes, and some with the lower reaches of her part, but most of it was set forth very well, indeed. That last passionate outburst, "Die liebe Erde" brought tears to the eyes. What one missed was the power to make just discernible against the orchestra the reiterated cry of "Ewig! Ewig!"

With Lloyd it was all a matter of bright, robust tone, which came over quite well in the first song, "The Drinking Song of Earthly Sorrow." He did not muster much poetry, however, either for "Of Youth" or "The Drunken One in Spring."

In the orchestra from first measure to last, was eloquence and sheer beauty of a great orchestral sound. Burgin has a rare touch for Mahler, complete command of its emotional ebb and flow, its involved contrapuntal weavings, and of the strict balance of instruments and sections which makes this tonal fabric clear. A memorable performance by the highly esteemed associate conductor of our Orchestra!

He also is extraordinarily good with Haydn, whose Symphony No. 88, last heard in these series 15 years ago, made a perfect contrast for Mahler.

Next week, Dr. Munch will perform the entire "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 12 1961

Symphony Programs

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening (2:15 and 8:30) in a program combining Haydn's Symphony No. 88 with Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will be contralto and tenor soloists in the latter work.

Charles Munch will return to conduct final concerts in the Sunday afternoon Symphony Hall series and at Sanders Theater Tuesday evening, April 18. His program at each will consist of Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
APR 8 1961

Mahler 'Song Of the Earth'

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next Symphony Hall concerts, Apr. 14 and 15. His program will consist of Mahler's "The Song of the Earth" and Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major. Soloists in Mahler will be Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

This coming week conductor Charles Munch and the Orchestra will make their final trip of the season to New York and other cities.

Dr. Munch will conduct the last Sunday concert of the season at Symphony Hall Apr. 16. The program will be Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings, and the Beethoven Fourth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 15 1961

'The Song of the Earth' at the Symphony

Mahler Cycle Revived by Burgin

By Harold Rogers

Richard Burgin can be counted on to bring us Mahler at least once a season, for which we can never praise him too highly. There is no other composer who strums the lyre of human emotions in quite the same way —a late-romantic Weltschmerz that takes us away to scenes we seem to know well, but have never really known.

Mahler's mysticism is earth-bound; he seldom reaches for the unknowable but, for the easily imagined; he brings us to Bulwer-Lytton's "lost land, that soft clime, in the crimson evening weather." His death-wishes burgeon in great heaving sighs, swelling from the orchestra in minor moods made all the more poignant by quavering turns and weeping mordants.

His "The Song of the Earth," featured by Mr. Burgin at the Boston Symphony weekend concerts, touches the more carefree "Songs of a Wayfarer" with the one hand and the grieving strains of the "Kindertotenlieder" with the other. At one moment the tenor is in a carousing mood (two of his three songs are in roisterous praise of drink) and at another the contralto is longing for heartease (one can easily imagine her staring through the window on a rainy afternoon).

For his soloists Mr. Burgin has selected David Lloyd and Eunice Alberts, both of whom are nobly equipped for "Das Lied von der Erde." It was good to see them again on the same stage yesterday afternoon; for some years they worked together in Boris Goldovsky's New England Opera Theater. Their young voices are now supported by the maturity of experience. Both earned the cheers that rang forth so readily at the conclusion.

True, Mr. Lloyd had to outshout a churning orchestra in the two drunken songs, but he has the lungs for it. And given an opportunity for poetry, as he was in "Of Youth," he has the heart for that, too.

But the loveliest lines fell to Miss Alberts and to her gorgeous contralto. She did not merely sing of "The Lonely One in Autumn"; she herself was the girl; and when she closed with "The Farewell," her voice faded with a hopeless finality.

Mr. Burgin let the orchestra have its head, as he usually does, and the music splashed around a bit. Yet it was good to hear the players a little giddy, as youngsters in a pool when school lets out.

His reading of the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 88, was casual in the same ingratiating way. There are only the two pieces on the program, with Haydn coming first and passing by quickly to leave the time and the twilight, to Mahler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

APR 15 1961

Epic Mahler Work Is Deeply Moving

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Confronting that universal human experience, which most of us contrive to keep conveniently inarticulate—the fact of our death—Gustav Mahler distilled his feelings into one of the most astonishing symbols ever conceived by an artist: "The Song of the Earth," which received a deeply-moving performance under Richard Burgin at Symphony yesterday, with Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd as the vocal solists.

Here loomed one of the most absolute scores in the entire realm of music, perhaps the greatest work of 20th century music. Its historical significance is epochal. Never before had a composer successfully blended the lyricism of the song cycle, the emotive power of the living voice, and the architecture of the symphonic form. Never before had a basic motif so subtly infiltrated a score in so many aspects. Ernest Newman was correct in stating that Mahler's "Lied" carries Western music to its limits: it makes the tone-row idea possible.

Decade's Lapse

But in a non-technical sense this music, based on a unified narrative text of exquisite Chinese verse of the eighth century, is exceedingly personal. The listener cannot forget that Mahler, under sentence of death from his physicians, translated his sense of the transitory pleasures of life into a farewell of universal dimensions. It is his version of Donne's "Never seek to know for whom the bell tolls," but more subjectively treated.

That Richard Burgin should choose to revive the difficult cycle after a decade's lapse at Symphony, is a matter for rejoicing. His sympathy for Mahler is well-known. Seldom, however, has he shown a finer grasp of performance during his occasional appearances as guest conductor. The integration of the vocal and instrumental elements, the tempos, the coloristic detail of the inner voices, the knowledge of form, accent and the X quantity—his identification with the content of the score—resulted in a superb account. He undertook a formidable task, and he deserves bountiful praise for executing it so admirably.

Miss Alberts and Mr. Lloyd were faced with no less a challenge. Not only does "The Song of the Earth" require super-human singers (Mahler pits the orchestra against the tenor in the opening verse so that Caruso, Bjoerling and Tucker all rolled into one couldn't surmount the surge of sound), but the utmost in refined expression.

Sustained Role

Of the two, Miss Alberts received the more demanding and sustained role. She disclosed consummate musicianship, indeed. Her dark-hued contralto is an instrument of resplendent beauty through the middle of its range, where its texture of rich, ouplent color has few equals for sensuous display. Her enunciation of the German text emerged as a model of clarity; but even more impressive was her emotional production, her projection of the meaning of the work.

From the seven-fold repetition of the haunting word "ewig," which takes on an incantatory and non-rational impact at the close, to those portions of the text that in turn make the singer a dramatic actress, a Greek chorus and a detached omniscient observer, she caught each nuance. Occasionally her top notes were pinched, which is not surprising in view of the excessive strain. She proved interpretively magnificent while never creating an ugly sound.

Mr. Lloyd suffered from random problems of enunciation and volume; but, he too, explored the possibilities of the cycle with sensitive musicality. Noteworthy, I thought, was his approach to the fifth poem, "The Drunken One in Spring," where the contemplative quality of the whole must be accompanied by the slightest suggestion of slurred declamation and not destroy the mood. He sang throughout, however, with a vivid intelligence and understanding.

Big Effect

"The Song of the Earth" does not make the big effect, the pulse-pounding climax of, say, the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. It is too refined for that. Consequently, the audience response was not as hearty as might have been expected: but one suspects the cycle's poingant atmosphere had made a profuond impression nevertheless.

The familiar Haydn Symphony No. 88, which opened the afternoon, was a good contrasting choice. The reading, amiable and ingratiating, transpired on the slow side, and I would call it neat but fairly routine. Mr. Burgin was reserving his fire for the main event.

Next week Charles Munch returns with a complete performance of Hector Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet Symphony, Op. 17, Rosalind Elias, contralto, Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, baritone, are the soloists.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the 22nd program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30: Symphony in G major, No. 88 . . . Haydn "Das Lied von der Erde" . . . Mahler

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

APR 4 1961

Eunice Alberts April 14, 15, 16

Contralto, Eunice Alberts will be appearing three days in a row in Boston's Symphony Hall. On April 14 and 15 Miss Alberts will be heard with the Boston Symphony in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." On April 16 she will perform the Dvorak "Stabat Mater" with the Handel and Haydn Society under the direction of Edward Gilde

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

MAY 1961

1960

* * *

BOSTON

The late season in Boston offers so much music, on-beat, and off-beat, that one must set it all down into categories or lose track of ambling memories. The better recent concerts of the Boston Symphony seemed to lie under the blue shadow of Romanticism. Richard Burgin, first violinist, took the podium last month for an ample reading of Mahler's Das Lied Von Der Erde with Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd as soloists. His vigorous entreaties brought warm response from his colleagues, and the performance had an air of youthful excess and luxurious abandon that was abetted by both soloists: by Miss Albert, whose colorful contralto has assumed mature lustre, and by Mr. Lloyd, who planted himself feet akimbo, threw his head back, and sang out his world-weary dares as if he were nine feet tall.

One recalls, too, the Easter performance of Bruckner's Te Deum with Phyllis Curtin, always so welcome in her home town, together with the Faure Requiem, under Charles Munch. The latter work, one of Mr. Munch's best-loved hovering places, had the moving effect of suspended animation and a reverence in tune with two worlds.

Among visiting orchestras the Philadelphia under Ormandy brought a large coal to the home bin with Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony in a radiant performance. The work, heartily inspired and strongly made, testifies that its composer likes retirement in Maine at least as well as professing at Harvard, as he playfully underlined the other evening while commenting on a panel on modern music.

Harold Farberman's New Arts orchestra, now at the end of its first season, gave an evening of opera, with Mozart's Impresario serving as prelude to the conductor's own Medea in its premiere. The text by Van Lennup was clean-cut, Horace Armistead's sets were suggestive, and Corinne Curry sang and acted well in the title role. Even an obdurate twelve-tonal idiom proved no hindrance to communication; indeed, it rather enhanced the extremities of the hair-tearing drama. Still, the effect was flat, possibly because the original drama, cropped with an eye on TV performance, allowed the audience little time to warm up to the horror of family-cide, so that they had to take it as melodrama.

The last season concert of the Cambridge Civic Symphony under Victor Manusevitch included a first east coast hearing of Barber's First Symphony and a new Suite by John Bavicchi, which was praised for its expert handling of the brasses. This ensemble is now definitely past its foundling stage and is headed for a healthy future.

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, violist, gave us the six string quintets of Mozart in two beautiful concerts. These subtle and demanding pieces received spirited and knowledgeable readings at the hands of these artists, all members of the Symphony.

It is always a pleasure to enter venerable King's Chapel at Vespers on a stated Sunday and listen to a concert planned and conducted by Daniel Pinkham with his corps of professional singers and players. The latest concert offered a typical harmony within diversity by allowing the first performance of Alan Hovhaness' From the End of the Earth to precede music by Schuetz, Couperin, Bach, and Mozart (his effervescent Missa Brevis in D, K. 194). Both the music and the place have excellence and the ripe effulgence of a long past, which is still much treasured in Boston sanctums like this one.

Among recitalists this season saw its share of harpsichordists, each as individual as the fragile little instrument that they play. (Or is it 'fragile'? I've just seen a brochure from Caleb Warner, of Lexington, Massachusetts, who is making harpsichords of aluminum and plexiglass. They can be thawed out on a radiator and have a knob to turn up the volume for competition with obstreperous violins. Old music is not only here; it's already being remodeled a l'Americaine!) After Ralph Kirkpatrick we had the Latin effusion of Rafael Puyana and the discriminate understatements of Irma Rogell. Miss Rogell has the self-effacing good sense to allow her music to sing, dance, or plead as it will in supple phrases and tempi of settled grace. But there is not enough tattoo in her touch to stencil her music right up to the gallery. This is the sad mischance of fine Hausmusik which blooms so well in the living rooms of friends and seldom survives its transplant to a large hall.

Most distinguished of recent recitalists was the Dane Aksel Schiotz who gave Schubert's Winterreise for the New England Conservatory Scholarship Fund. Paul Ulanovsky was partner at the piano, no mean asset to a singer who had suffered severe injury in an auto accident and was forced to try out his baritone voice after years as a tenor. Maturity there was, in store, and sustained artistry. He reached us from first note to last.

The best choral performance of this period was that of Bach's St. Matthew Passion, done by the Chorus Pro Musica under Alfred Nash Patterson with the Cambridge Festival orchestra.

Sarah Caldwell's Opera Group offered La Boheme, home from tour, with Lois Marshall as Mimi. Opening night accidents marred the transport of time and place, but there was vocal sheen and keen musicianship, especially in the ensembles.

The schools are pouring tunes into the stream of music, too. The first season of the Boston Conservatory Fenway Series, now nearing completion, has provided unusual music or programming on alternate Tuesday evenings. A recent recital featured Nicholas Van Slyck, talented young composer-pianist, in a program of prismatic late Busoni and his own virulent works. The New England Conservatory Symphony under James Dixon, a protege of the late Dmitri Mitropoulos, gave an ambitious program which featured Eleanor Davis as soloist for Mahler's Songs of a Wayfarer. And at Boston University Adelaide Bishop and Ed Thommen staged Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor to a sparkling new translation by Joseph Blatt.

—ROBERT W. DUMM

* * *

Burgin Conducts Mahler Work

Globe 4/9/61

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Friday-Saturday concerts this week at Symphony Hall. His program will consist of the Symphony No. 88, in G major, by Haydn, and "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") by Gustav Mahler. The two soloists will be Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra's final Sunday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall, at 3, Apr. 16, and the last of the Cambridge series in Sanders Theater, Tuesday, Apr. 18, at 8:30. His program will be the same for each: Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn, and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," to be performed complete, will make the program at Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday, Apr. 21 and 22. Soloists will be Rosalind Elias, contralto; Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, bass. These performances will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30, Apr. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 15 1961

Epic Mahler Work Is Deeply Moving

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Confronting that universal human experience which most of us contrive to keep conveniently inarticulate—the fact of our death—Gustav Mahler distilled his feelings into one of the most astonishing symbols ever conceived by an artist: "The Song of the Earth," which received a deeply-moving performance under Richard Burgin at Symphony yesterday, with Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd as the vocal solists.

Here loomed one of the most absolute scores in the entire realm of music, perhaps the greatest work of 20th century music. Its historical significance is epochal. Never before had a composer successfully blended the lyricism of the song cycle, the emotive power of the living voice, and the architecture of the symphonic form. Never before had a basic motif so subtly infiltrated a score in so many aspects. Ernest Newman was correct in stating that Mahler's "Lied" carries Western music to its limits: it makes the tone-row idea possible.

Decade's Lapse

But in a non-technical sense this music, based on a unified narrative text of exquisite Chinese verse of the eighth century, is exceedingly personal. The listener cannot forget that Mahler, under sentence of death from his physicians, translated his sense of the transitory pleasures of life into a farewell of universal dimensions. It is his version of Donne's "Never seek to know for whom the bell tolls," but more subjectively treated.

That Richard Burgin should choose to revive the difficult cycle after a decade's lapse at Symphony, is a matter for rejoicing. His sympathy for Mahler is well-known. Seldom, however, has he shown a finer grasp of performance during his occasional appearances as guest conductor. The integration of the vocal and instrumental elements, the tempos, the coloristic detail of the inner voices, the knowledge of form, accent and the X quantity—his identification with the content of the score—resulted in a superb account. He undertook a formidable task, and he deserves bountiful praise for executing it so admirably.

Miss Alberts and Mr. Lloyd were faced with no less a challenge. Not only does "The Song of the Earth" require super-human singers (Mahler pits the orchestra against the tenor in the opening verse so that Caruso, Bjoerling and Tucker all rolled into one couldn't surmount the surge of sound), but the utmost in refined expression.

Sustained Role

Of the two, Miss Alberts received the more demanding and sustained role. She disclosed consummate musicianship, indeed. Her dark-hued contralto is an instrument of resplendent beauty through the middle of its range, where its texture of rich, ouplent color has few equals for sensuous display. Her enunciation of the German text emerged as a model of clarity; but even more impressive was her emotional production, her projection of the meaning of the work.

From the seven-fold repetition of the haunting word "ewig," which takes on an incantatory and non-rational impact at the close, to those portions of the text that in turn make the singer a dramatic actress, a Greek chorus and a detached omniscient observer, she caught each nuance. Occasionally her top notes were pinched, which is not surprising in view of the excessive strain. She proved interpretively magnificent while never creating an ugly sound.

Mr. Lloyd suffered from random problems of enunciation and volume; but, he too, explored the possibilities of the cycle with sensitive musicality. Noteworthy, I thought, was his approach to the fifth poem, "The Drunken One in Spring," where the contemplative quality of the whole must be accompanied by the slightest suggestion of slurred declamation and not destroy the mood. He sang throughout, however, with a vivid intelligence and understanding.

Big Effect

"The Song of the Earth" does not make the big effect, the pulse-pounding climax of, say, the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. It is too refined for that. Consequently, the audience response was not as hearty as might have been expected: but one suspects the cycle's poignant atmosphere had made a profound impression nevertheless.

The familiar Haydn Symphony No. 88, which opened the afternoon, was a good contrasting choice. The reading, amiable and ingratiating, transpired on the slow side, and I would call it neat but fairly routine. Mr. Burgin was reserving his fire for the main event.

Next week Charles Munch returns with a complete performance of Hector Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet Symphony, Op. 17, Rosalind Elias, contralto, Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, baritone, are the soloists.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, gave the 22nd program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30: Symphony in G major, No. 88, ... Haydn "Das Lied von der Erde," ...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
APR 4 1961

Eunice Alberts April 14, 15, 16

Contralto, Eunice Alberts will be appearing three days in a row in Boston's Symphony Hall. On April 14 and 15 Miss Alberts will be heard with the Boston Symphony in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." On April 16 she will perform the Dvorak "Stabat Mater" with the Handel and Haydn Society under the direction of Edward Gilbert.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
MAY 1961
1960

* * *

BOSTON

The late season in Boston offers so much music, on-beat, and off-beat, that one must set it all down into categories or lose track of ambling memories. The better recent concerts of the Boston Symphony seemed to lie under the blue shadow of Romanticism. Richard Burgin, first violinist, took the podium last month for an ample reading of Mahler's Das Lied Von Der Erde with Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd as soloists. His vigorous entreaties brought warm response from his colleagues, and the performance had an air of youthful excess and luxurious abandon that was abetted by both soloists: by Miss Albert, whose colorful contralto has assumed mature lustre, and by Mr. Lloyd, who planted himself feet akimbo, threw his head back, and sang out his world-weary dares as if he were nine feet tall.

One recalls, too, the Easter performance of Bruckner's Te Deum with Phyllis Curtin, always so welcome in her home town, together with the Faure Requiem, under Charles Munch. The latter work, one of Mr. Munch's best-loved hovering places, had the moving effect of suspended animation and a reverence in tune with two worlds.

Among visiting orchestras the Philadelphia under Ormandy brought a large coal to the home bin with Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony in a radiant performance. The work, heartily inspired and strongly made, testifies that its composer likes retirement in Maine at least as well as professing at Harvard, as he playfully underlined the other evening while commenting on a panel on modern music.

Harold Farberman's New Arts orchestra, now at the end of its first season, gave an evening of opera, with Mozart's Impresario serving as prelude to the conductor's own Medea in its premiere. The text by Van Lennup was clean-cut, Horace Armistead's sets were suggestive, and Corinne Curry sang and acted well in the title role. Even an obdurate twelve-tonal idiom proved no hindrance to communication; indeed, it rather enhanced the extremities of the hair-tearing drama. Still, the effect was flat, possibly because the original drama, cropped with an eye on TV performance, allowed the audience little time to warm up to the horror of family-cide, so that they had to take it as melodrama.

The last season concert of the Cambridge Civic Symphony under Victor Manusevitch included a first east coast hearing of Barber's First Symphony and a new Suite by John Bavicchi, which was praised for its expert handling of the brasses. This ensemble is now definitely past its foundling stage and is headed for a healthy future.

The Boston Fine Arts Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, violist, gave us the six string quintets of Mozart in two beautiful concerts. These subtle and demanding pieces received spirited and knowledgeable readings at the hands of these artists, all members of the Symphony.

It is always a pleasure to enter venerable King's Chapel at Vespers on a stated Sunday and listen to a concert planned and conducted by Daniel Pinkham with his corps of professional singers and players. The latest concert offered a typical harmony within diversity by allowing the first performance of Alan Hovhaness' From the End of the Earth to precede music by Schuetz, Couperin, Bach, and Mozart (his effervescent Missa Brevis in D, K. 194). Both the music and the place have excellence and the ripe effulgence of a long past, which is still much treasured in Boston sanctums like this one.

Among recitalists this season saw its share of harpsichordists, each as individual as the fragile little instrument that they play. (Or is it 'fragile'? I've just seen a brochure from Caleb Warner, of Lexington, Massachusetts, who is making harpsichords of aluminum and plexiglass. They can be thawed out on a radiator and have a knob to turn up the volume for competition with obstreperous violins. Old music is not only here; it's already being remodeled a l'Americaine!) After Ralph Kirkpatrick we had the Latin effusion of Rafael Puyana and the discriminate understatements of Irma Rogell. Miss Rogell has the self-effacing good sense to allow her music to sing, dance, or plead as it will in supple phrases and tempi of settled grace. But there is not enough tattoo in her touch to stencil her music right up to the gallery. This is the sad mischance of fine Hausmusik which blooms so well in the living rooms of friends and seldom survives its transplant to a large hall.

Most distinguished of recent recitalists was the Dane Aksel Schiotz who gave Schubert's Winterreise for the New England Conservatory Scholarship Fund. Paul Ulanovsky was partner at the piano, no mean asset to a singer who had suffered severe injury in an auto accident and was forced to try out his baritone voice after years as a tenor. Maturity there was, in store, and sustained artistry. He reached us from first note to last.

The best choral performance of this period was that of Bach's St. Matthew Passion, done by the Chorus Pro Musica under Alfred Nash Patterson with the Cambridge Festival orchestra.

Sarah Caldwell's Opera Group offered La Boheme, home from tour, with Lois Marshall as Mimi. Opening night accidents marred the transport of time and place, but there was vocal sheen and keen musicianship, especially in the ensembles.

The schools are pouring tunes into the stream of music, too. The first season of the Boston Conservatory Fenway Series, now nearing completion, has provided unusual music or programming on alternate Tuesday evenings. A recent recital featured Nicholas Van Slyck, talented young composer-pianist, in a program of prismatic late Busoni and his own virulent works. The New England Conservatory Symphony under James Dixon, a protege of the late Dmitri Mitropoulos, gave an ambitious program which featured Eleanor Davis as soloist for Mahler's Songs of a Wayfarer. And at Boston University Adelaide Bishop and Ed Thommen staged Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor to a sparkling new translation by Joseph Blatt.

—ROBERT W. DUMM

* * *

Burgin Conducts Mahler Work

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Friday-Saturday concerts this week at Symphony Hall. His program will consist of the Symphony No. 88, in G major, by Haydn, and "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") by Gustav Mahler. The two soloists will be Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra's final Sunday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall, at 3, Apr. 16, and the last of the Cambridge series in Sanders Theater, Tuesday, Apr. 18, at 8:30. His program will be the same for each: Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn, and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," to be performed complete, will make the program at Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday, Apr. 21 and 22. Soloists will be Rosalind Elias, contralto; Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, bass. These performances will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30, Apr. 20.

208

Sixth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 16, at 3:00 o'clock

SCHUMANN ..... Overture to "Genoveva"

MENDELSSOHN ..... Octet for Strings, in E-flat major, Op. 20

I. Allegro moderato ma con fuoco
II. Andante
III. Scherzo: Allegro leggierissimo
IV. Presto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 21 1961

209

Symphony Players Mix Music, Cards, Beer Mugs

Improve on Mozart

A gracious gesture towards Boston Symphony Orchestra staffers developed into an evening of good-natured fun at the Hotel Sheraton Plaza recently.

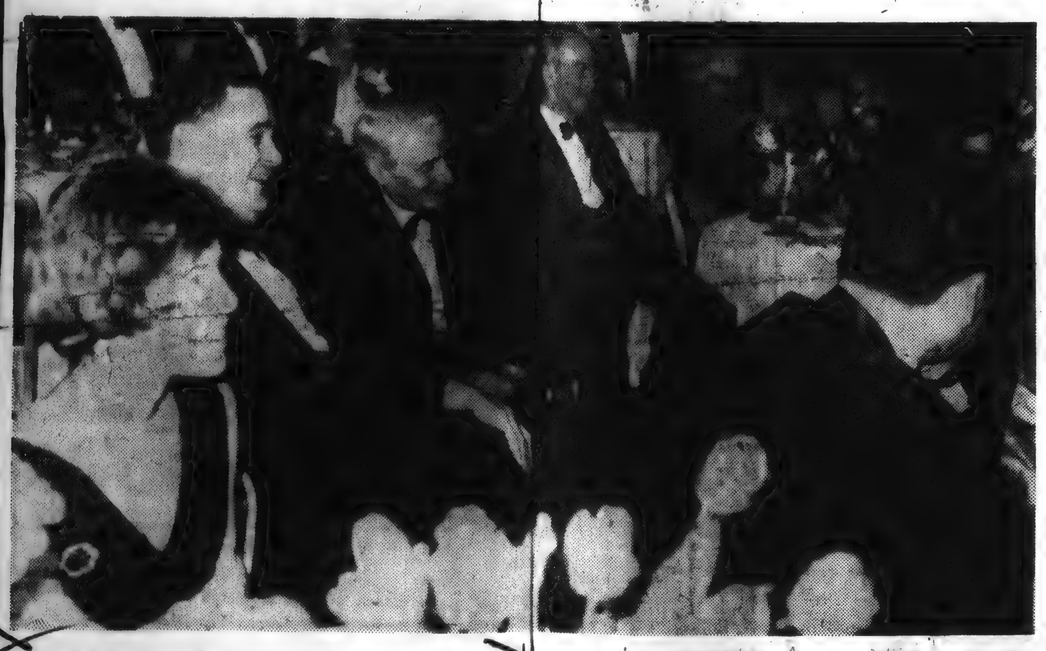
It seems the president of the orchestra's board of trustees, Henry B. Cabot, and his wife invited the Symphony's musicians and the administrative staff to dinner.

To the surprise of the hosts, some of the players appeared in 18th century attire—satin knee pants, brocade coats, white wigs and all.

They performed Mozart's "Musical Joke." Unexpected discords are among the hilarious effects. And their ad libs, between the notes and measures, included games of cards and quaffing of beer. There were good laughs all around.

FAMILIAR SYMPHONY FACES in unfamiliar attire are, from left, George Zazofsky, Samuel Diamond (rear), Rolland Tapley, Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips.

GIN (RUMMY) AND BEER helped fill in "rest" measures for horn players Harry Shapiro (left foreground) and James Stagliano, while Rolland Tapley and Alfred Krips (rear) try repressing grins over their violins.



CONDUCTOR CHARLES MUNCH doubles over in mirth at antics of his bewigged musicians offering original "Musical Joke." To his right are Mr. and Mrs. Cabot.

ORCHESTRA MANAGER Thomas D. Perry Jr. and his wife share in the chuckles at fun-filled dinner.

LAUGHTER BURSTS from Richard Burgin, concert master and associate conductor, while Alfred Krips seems intent—perhaps on watching progress of a nearby game of cards.

STAGE MANAGER Harvey Genereux, in conventional modern clothes, lights candles on music stands with a taper.

210

Twenty-third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, at 8:30 o'clock

BERLIOZ ..... *Roméo et Juliette, Dramatic Symphony, Op. 17

Introduction: Combats — Tumult — Intervention of the Prince
Prologue (Choral Recitative with Contralto Solo)
Strophes (Contralto and Chorus)
Recitative and Scherzetto (Tenor and Chorus)

Romeo Alone — Melancholy — Concert and Ball — Festivity at the Capulets

Calm Night (with Chorus) — The Capulets' Garden Silent and Deserted — Love Scene

Scherzo: Queen Mab, or the Fairy of Dreams

INTERMISSION

Juliet's Funeral Procession (with Chorus)
Romeo in the Tomb of the Capulets: Invocation — Juliet's Awakening — Delirium of Joy — Despair — Pangs of Death
Finale: Cemetery Throng — Brawl of the Capulets and Montagues — Recitative and Aria of Friar Laurence — Oath of Reconciliation

Soloists:

ROSALIND ELIAS, Contralto — CESARE VALLETTI, Tenor — GIORGIO TOZZI, Baritone

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 22 1961

Munch Conducts Berlioz 'Romeo and Juliet'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 23rd program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the entire Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Hector Berlioz. The soloists were Rosalind Elias, contralto; Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, baritone. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, assisted.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Of all the great conducting Dr. Charles Munch has accomplished in Boston—and there has been much of it — the music of Hector Berlioz, his countryman of a century and more ago, has aroused him to unparalleled brilliance. The vast and formidable Requiem, the "Fantastic" Symphony, "The Damnation of Faust," the Overtures and other works have in the last dozen years excited and profoundly satisfied the Boston public.

